These things would continue, breaking down the subject’s will. The programmer would tell the subject, you can eat if you bark. If the subject refuses, they don’t eat. The subject is told to eat food out of a bowl. If they refuse they don’t eat. If they try and use their hands they are shocked.

Dog programming is for sexualized aggression. The subject is aggressively raped from behind. The perpetrator of the rape will say things such as: ‘good bitch’, ‘fucking dog’, ‘you’re in heat’, and will often growl or bark themselves.

As the programming progresses the subject will be trained to attack other kids, and programmers. They train the subject how to attack, how to have forced sex. They do this by if the subject restricts their arms correctly, and subdues them correctly. If the subject does not do these things correctly they are easily over powered and viciously raped.

The programmer will eventually take the subject and pit it against other young subjects who are training to be dogs. The two programmed subjects will fight, biting, at one another until they are broken up, or one is severely injured.

The part (alter) that has been trained does not think they are human. The programmers have insured telling this part, “You are human.” won’t work. During training, the part would be asked if they were human, if they answered, “Yes.” they were tortured. If they answered, “No.” they were rewarded. This would continue until they would say they were a dog.

The phrase: “Dogs of War”? from Shakespeare’s Julius Caesar.

The phrase ‘Dog days of summer’ refers to the rising of the star Sirius. The Egyptians referred to this star as the ‘Star of Isis.’ Sirius is a member of the constellation Canis Major (‘The Big Dog’) this star is brighter and more powerful than the sun. Sirius is also called the ‘Rainbow Star.’

The phrase: “Dog and pony show.” In programming ‘ponies’ are also sex alters. To have a ‘dog and pony show’ means something completely different to a programmed individual.

Here are other uses for dog programming:

Black dog programming, Depression
Bitch programming, subject, sex subject
Brown Dog programming, used for experiments, medical programming
Cerberus programming, guards important doors/gates
Gabriel’s Hounds, demonic layering, German
Pavlov’s Dog, trained of one specific task

Key phrases of Dog programming:

NO or STOP – stop doing whatever they are doing right now.
SIT – sit at their current position.
DOWN – lie down at their current position.
STAND – stand up when it is in the Sit or down position.

OFF – get off the item they are currently on.
STAY – stay at their current position.
GO – start walking or running.
FOCUS – focus on you, and not be distracted.
SPEAK – bark.
QUIET – stop any whining or barking.
HEEL – walk next to you, on either side, at your pace.
BITE – bite into a given object.
OUT or DROP IT – free any item it has in their mouth.
HOLD – hold in their mouth whatever it is biting on.
Off Leash commands
COME – to come towards you.
GO OUT – leave the crate, kennel, room.
GO IN – enter the crate, kennel, room.

End time Programming- When activated the subject's alters will align with their designated sides. They will take a stance of who should be irradiated and who should survive. This will cause chaos within the subject.

F

Ferris wheel Programming- creates compartments shaped like pieces of pie. Each piece is a small part of the pie or a larger structure used to house alters, and fragments. The wheel can be turned to access alters, and to move them in the system.

Flood programming- A coded sequence put in place to punish a system if its internal programming is allowed to degrade or access to an unauthorized individuals, either internally or externally. Flood programming will involve the fragments who hold highly traumatic memories, both emotional and physical, being pushed to the front where the subject is "flooded" with wave after wave of memories. Suicide programming and shattered programming is often layered in with Flood programming. These programmes are triggered to interfere with therapeutic process by overwhelming the subject. This is achieved by triggering the subject to have a flood of painful and frightening cognitive and/or somatic memories enter consciousness simultaneously, thereby significantly increasing post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) symptomotology and suppressing the functionality of the subject.

Flowers Programming-Flowers are placed throughout the system as triggers. The flowers can be utilized from the script. The flowers can also be coded by type within the system to designated times for rituals and seasons.

Formation Programming- Parts are programmed to gather together when a specified code is given. The formations can be protective, ritual, soldiers, animals, spies, or what the programmer desires. The formations can be coded by colour pairing, number pairing, or direct outside trigger.

G

Gamma programming- hold cult loyal alters, and holds more emotion than the other states, except for alpha. Suicide programming will often be layered in, as these alters would rather die than leave their "family". Scholarship programming may be paired with Gamma programming, since they easily memorize by repetition. Several languages may be spoken by different alters under this programming, both modern and ancient languages can being spoken

The system protection and deception aspect of this programming will provide misinformation to individuals, and attempt to redirect any outside intervention. Gamma parts are employed to sow doubt and confusion about the very existence of Programmers.

Gate Keeper Programming- Alters programmed to guard portals and gates throughout the system. The alters impose their reality on other parts within the system by using oppression, judgment, force and deception.

Gender role confusion- Female subjects are programmed with male attributes, and male subjects are programmed with female attributes. For males: (opposite for females) He wants to be a girl.

He desires to grow up to be a woman.

He has a marked interest in female activities, including playing with dolls or playing the roles of girls or women.

He has an intense interest in cosmetics, jewellery, or girls' clothes and enjoys dressing up in girls' apparel.

His favourite friends are girls.

On occasions, he may cross-dress and actually consider himself to be a girl.

Gethsemane Suicide Programming-If subject is captured, silence programming runs, the subject does not attempt to ‘save themselves’ but allows their death.

Governmental programming- the subject is trained to take leadership positions or administrative positions in the government. The subject is trained to network with others in governments, local, national, and international. The Programmers’ stated goal is to infiltrate, and eventually cause the downfall of, all major governments in the world. Government operatives are taught to do this by: infiltrating local political parties running for leadership both locally and nationally working for top leaders, as administrators, financial advisors funding governmental races and backing the individual sympathetic to the programmers’ agenda.

The subject’s selected for governmental programming are usually highly intelligent with native charm, or charisma. They are also skilled in manipulation. These abilities may be enhanced through programming, encouraging the subject to project a personality that will draw subject’s to them.

They are also taught finances extensively. This programming is done by: hypnotizing the subject, whether subject, youth, or programmer (it is usually administered in late childhood in suitable candidates), and inducing deep trance with drugs. The subject is shocked, and given the script they are to follow.

They will learn any languages necessary for the position.

Go insane program-Defence programming. Subject my feel as if they are hearing voices, depression, echoing, high pitched frequencies, spiders and crawling sensation on skin, distorted vision, and other sensory distortion.

God Satan Programming- form of dual programming to insure system balance. The personalities of the deities are switched. Satan/Lucifer has the attributes of the Christian God. God/Jesus has the attributes of Lucifer/Satan.

Gumby Programming- is to make the subject think their body is like Gumby and is flexible to move into any position. The programming is used for sexual techniques paired with Beta programming. Programmers will have male instructors who teach female subjects about the power of seduction. The male and female sexual subjects usually are highly skilled technicians who don’t have emotions attached to what they do.

H

Halt Programming-When activated via code this program stops all activities within the system. The Halt programming can be used if there is a major system breach, the subject's job is cancelled and all alters need to stop immediately.

Hearts of Stone programming- The programmers make the alters believe they have surgically removed their hearts and replaced them with a stone(s) 3. The Programmers will remove the heart for a number of reasons: Black mail, remove fear of death, remove love, remove feelings etc. By removing the subject's hearts, it removes any chance the dark alters will have the capacity for compassion in their heart for anyone. They will be told that they are incapable of having friends or of loving others.

Programmers will promise to return the heart, if the subject obeys, returns home when called, and if they should die and need to be revived.

Programmers can give a part of the heart to a hierarchy alter for proof of safe keeping. The part may be hidden somewhere Temple of Molech, Valley of Death, or torture section of programming.

Honour/dishonour programming is common in military systems. In this, the military parts are told that an "honourable and courageous" soldier will take their life, rather than reveal secrets or leave their unit.

Hourglass programming-two triangles are placed in the system, one with its point upward the other with its point down. The triangles are put on a line so their points will meet forming an hourglass. When the points of the triangle meet the sand will begin to run through the top glass. The programmer can decide what will occur when the hour is up.

Hypno-sleep-suicide program placed in the system during the deepest level of hypnosis.

I

Iceman Programming-Programming that insures the balance of the system is maintained. An internal part must be selected for this programming. This part must have access to system codes and keys. They are programmed with a cold personality hidden deep within the system and placed under guard. Their task is to 'thaw' the system if the system tips too far out of balance in regards to depression, fear, and suicidal thoughts and attempts that aren't triggered.

Intelligence Spectrum Programming-Programming for parts that maintains age specific intelligence. This is to insure a younger part does not become higher functioning that an elder part.

Isolation Programs-Isolation programs are layered in for internal and external purposes. Within the system, alters may be walled-off (via amnesic barriers) from cooperative alters by cult-loyal alters. Beyond the system, subjects may be conditioned to withdraw socially, isolating themselves from helpful resources, etc.

J

Jacobs' ladder programming-A spiritual program that leads to the subject's higher understanding of spiritual beings.
Janus programming-Dual programming. This programming can work as a 'reset program' taking alters back to a previous point in programming. This programming can also be used to insure the subject does not trust others. The subject is programmed to believe in the dual nature of God, individuals and themselves. Individuals are good and bad, sane and insane, trustworthy and untrustworthy etc.
Janus programming can be used with hourglasses for the passage of time, future events and past events can be connected with Janus programming.
Janus 2 (two) programming is used in subjects for facial memory and recognition. This program assists with smoother transitions if there is a switch. The alter who is control may not know the individual they are speaking with but with Janus 2 they will have a sense of recognition.
Jewels programming- Children of programmers will go through either metals or jewels programming. Jewels are considered higher than metals. Which program is put in and when, is dependent on the subject's status, their parent's status, the location of birth, the group subject is born into, and the programmers that work with them. Jewel programming is used to reinforce cult or abuse - group commands such as recall Rubies, emeralds and diamonds are considered powerful alters inside and are in leadership roles, both internally and externally. The subject's sense of identity, and status may be held in these alters.

The jewels are used as reward based programming.

Training for this program often begins between ages two and three. Each step of obedience is linked to receiving a jewel. To earn the designated jewel the subject must:
a.) show sexual adeptness
b.) Pass programming tests
c.) Be rewarded for special achievement (fighting, survival)
d.) be adept at games
e.) show heightened intelligence f.) attributes of trauma bonding g.) Show betrayal skills

Amethyst is usually the first jewel earned, and is linked to keeping secrets, never telling, and passing the first step of obedience.
Ruby sexual alters inside. As the subject is sexually traumatized and survives, or creates sexual alters to please adults, they are rewarded by being allowed to become a ruby.
Moon Stone given to subjects who achieve rank in ritual setting.
Emerald will often come later (ages 12 to 15). This is considered very precious, and is linked to family loyalty, witchcraft, and spiritual achievement.
Morganite Given to child alters who are skilled at their assigned job and hold the body well through training.
Sapphire- Given to subject when they have mastered not wanting anything, remain quiet when their needs are not met and when they are left alone for extended periods of time.

Paraiba Tourmaline-subject has mastered photographic response and memory.
Blood Stone Given when the subject has terminated another subject, participated in a ritual sacrifice without fear, remorse, or other negative emotion.
Melanite- given to subject when they have survived a hunt, and found the hunted.
Hackmanite-Subject shows ability to re-enact programming scenarios with minor subjects.
Cats Eye Aquamarine- Subject completes assigned task and responds to call back.
Diamond is the highest gemstone, and not all children will earn it. It is considered a high achievement may not be earned until adulthood, after passing rigorous tasks. It will be the controlling alters in a gemstone system. A diamond has passed all twelve steps of discipline, plus passed unusual tests and will have highest family loyalty.
Judas Programming.-protective programs. A subject who betrays the programmers is programmed to hang themselves.
Jolly Green Giant programming-(Green Giant)-occult programming to protect detection from outside individuals. The Green Giant protects occult inside territory by inflicting trauma on internal trespassers. The programming will trigger internal occult protectors to threaten and intimidate outside individuals.

K

Kaleidoscope programming-a distortion program that causes the subject to see many faces of one individual. The program will often spin.

Kerberos programming- Linked to Epsilon programming. This programming is a protection program. The dog parts will protect the area and become aggressive if it is tampered with.

Kosem programming-suicide program by hanging.

Lascivious programming-Sexually aggressive programming.

Lilith programming which is given alters who function within the Cabbalistic Tree of Life which is built in during Mengele's programming for the deeper sections (levels) of alters which are trained in Programmers black magic

M

The Man without a Country Programming-The subject is read the story. They are advised they will be rejected by everyone, enemy and friend, if they reveal any secrets of the programming. The subject is isolated for periods of time so they understand the severity of breaking secrets

Mask Programming-Subjects are given a mask as a replacement for their face. The mask could be made of porcelain, paint, or another material. If the subject removes the mask, or the mask is removed they are told they will die. Without the mask they don’t exist and no one can see them.

Mensa Programming-Photographic memory programming. Reserved for subjects with exceptional I.Q.

Melting Pot Program-A program that melts the subject into their programmer. The subject will do anything for the programmer with this program. The melting is blissful feeling that anchors the subject to the programmer.

Metals programming- Metals programming is a type of programming that many Programmers’ children are given. Metals can be from bronze (lowest) to platinum (highest). Metals a form of reward based programming.

Rhoduim-Highest level
Platinum –
Gold - second highest in the metals programming rank.
Ruthenium
Iridium
Osmium
Palladium
Rhenium
Silver
Gallium

Indium
Tellurium-Lowest Level

Military programming-Started by three years of age with simple exercises. The subjects are taught to march in time, stand in a straight line. They are punished by being kicked, shocked with a cattle prod, or beaten with a baton if they move out of place.

The programmers will have ranks, badges and insignia to indicating the subject's level of achievement in the cult hierarchy and military. Badges and medals are given out to indicate the subject's level of training and tests passed

Being killed is considered weakness; being a killer is considered strength.

Prisoner of war camps will be simulated. The "guards" are older subjects who have done well. The "prisoners" are younger subjects or those being punished for not performing well. There is intense pressure to become a guard as this is a power position.

Hunting and tracking games where the prisoners are given a half hour lead are frequent. These may also involve the use of trained dogs taught to knock the hunted down but not kill them. Older children are taught to handle the dogs, and use them. Youth are taught to help the programmers train the dogs.

Microwaves for Programming- a chip is placed in the auditory cortex of the brain. The chip allows someone to speak into a microphone, the microphone then has its sounds coded into microwave, which are sent to the receiver in the brain and the receiver device will transform the microwaves back so that the subject's mind hears the spoken message.

Mirror Programming- There exists a mirror world which is a reversal of the one internal world the subject lives in. The programming creates duplicate reflected images of parts, and internal structures. This causes confusion and parts to become lost if they attempt to leave their area. Mirrors can also be placed in the system as doors and traps. If the mirror is shattered a program can be triggered to protect the system.

Mote Programming-The subject is a mere mote, a small flash in infinite time. When an alter of a subject thinks or goes internally where it shouldn't, this programming is attached to the mind so that the subject loses sight of who they are and feels very insignificant and only a dot. It can also be used as a mass protective program where the mind spreads out like molecules and loses the ability to think

N

Naiad Programming-water programming. Areas of the system can be flooded with water if there is a breach. It can also be used to re-enforce outside water torture for internal parts.

Near Death Programming- Completed by drugging the subject at age 2 or 3. The subject is tortured by, beating, shocking and almost suffocating to create a near death state. While under this duress the subject is brought to consciousness and asked to choose, death or to invite a powerful demon inside. The demon enters; the subject becomes unconscious, and awakens later in clean clothing and a soft bed. The subject is weak and shaky, and is told by their handler in a very compassionate manner, that they died, but the demon brought them back to life. The subject told that if they ask the demonic entity to leave, that they will revert to the near death state they were in.

Another near death programming is the subjects arms, legs, waist and neck tied down. The subject is wrapped in a cocoon with soft gauze; they are fed intravenously, and undergo sensory deprivation. White light and loud noise are used to help disorient the subject then they are electric shocked and drugged. This occurs for approximately two days. The subject is advised they are dying. There handler advises the subject they will not let them die, but their life is owed to them (handler). Recorded messages of being "reborn" into the "family group" are also played on a loop as the subject is brought out of unconsciousness.

A third version is placing the subject in a large recently killed animal large animal. The subject has been drugged and traumatised to heighten their fear. The subject will be told they have been placed in "the belly of the beast" and will die. The programmer or handler will 'rescue' the subject form this death.

Nightmare-Night Terror Programs- Similar to flooding programs, subjects are conditioned to become overwhelmed with terrifying images/memories while asleep. They serve to keep the subject run-down and fatigued. Often, nightmare programs are triggered or tripped automatically when processing forbidden material in therapy.

No-talk programming-subject is programmed to not talk about past events. The programming will trigger pain in the tongue, teeth and jaw.

Nursery Rhyme programming- Nursery rhymes are constructed to activate designated alters that are usually sleepers. A Tisket A Tasket, Baa, Baa, Black Sheep is used for money laundering scripts, and drug money or drug carrying scripts. Bye, Baby Bunting is used with where the subject child is placed within a skin, cocoon programming with a butterfly coming forth or near death experiences. Diddle, Diddle Dumpling, Ding, Dong Bell, Hickory Dickery Dock are used for internal clocks.

O

Omega programming- is designed to make subjects prone to self-destruction, which is both a general social engineering principle and an emergency brake in programming. The corresponding behaviours include suicidal tendencies and/or self-mutilation. The Omega programs prevent integrating the subject, they hold the body programs, and run the computers. If major tampering is done with the System, which threatens to totally wipe out the Omega programs, then one of the backup programs will be triggered.

Octopus suicide programming, an octopus suicide program chokes the subject if they are disobedient.

P

Phi/Theta programming -this represents negative spiritual programming. These are the “dark” ritual alters, who participate in blood rituals, sacrifices, and ceremonies. Internal witches, warlocks, seers, psychics, readers, and occult practitioners will undergo this programming, which has highly developed right brain and deep trance abilities. They will often be colour coded black.

Porcelain Face Programming- Fire torture and melted wax is used to make the subject believe their face has been burned. The programmer gives the traumatized parts a porcelain mask. The part getting the Porcelain face may be given a "gem" hypnotically like Jade and that becomes their secret name. Another use of porcelain masks is to place masks on Pawn alters which were used to guard places by scaring other alters with their fearful porcelain countenances. The alters are placed in mirror mazes so their reflections are scary to others entering the mazes.

Pain Programs-Subjects are conditioned to re-experience the physical pain portion of their abuse memories. Used as punishment, pain programs may also be enacted to "motivate" the subject to carry out other programmed functions.

Potter’s Wheel program-This is the equivalent to a computer utility program. The Programmer pulls the alter they want to work on up on the potter’s. When alters are placed on the potter’s wheel, they can be asked to stand in order. Then the alters will come to the front of the mind on top of each other in their prearranged sequence.

Princess Programming- The princess program which is a back up program functions, if the regular programming breaks down or if the handler loses control over the system. The programming is contained within a box, which is opened. The princess who is kept sleeping by spiders which bite her in a coffin, wakes up and looks for the prince to come. Darkness sets in on all the top sections of alters, and thick walls and pain come, then a webbing much like a body-suit-cocoon will envelope all alters but those loyal to the programmer. It becomes hard to breathe and the alters who had sought freedom from the programming, now find themselves being tranced out. Alters who are cold and in lots of pain are called up by code to torment the body. The Outer Darkness of a System (sometimes called the Rubicon) gets thicker

The system will re-establish its compass.

Prolog Programming- Logic programming for the subject. The programmer will set up scenarios that to an outside individual cannot be true. Due to the subject experiencing the scenario it is true. When an outside individual attempts to logically state what has occurred cannot be true, the programming will state it is true reinforcing the belief.

Puppet programming- In the body feels totally disjointed and controlled by strings. The subject's body is paralyzed by drugs and then electronic shocks are administered to limbs. The programmer will tie ropes to the limbs, and the limb or body part is shocked the programmer will pull the ropes. This gives the programmer complete control over the subjects body. The subject when not being shocked will learn to respond to the ropes without fighting. Puppeteers can be placed internally to control these parts.

Paper doll programming Another is for the subject to think they have been turned into a fragile paper doll. The programming is put in by making the skin very sensitive to any touch, and then attaching that memory to the hypnotic suggestion of being a paper doll. The paper dolls may be burned by the programmer to re-enforce how fragile they are.

Q

Quiet Wind-The audio hallucination of a quiet wind is used to convince the subject that the Holy Spirit is visiting them.

R

Rapid Switching Programs- This program is a system defence, once enacted; a subject may not be able to finish a sentence without switching three to four times between alters. This creates for the subject an inability to function. Dizziness, fainting, aggression, and in extreme cases death may occur. Subject must be 'reset' or heavy sedation administered.

Re-birthing program-The re-birthing program is triggered to remind the subject they have been born for a purpose. The program can also be triggered so the subject can be 'born again' if there is a failed attempt at a task. The program will erase the memory of the failed attempt so the subject will not have self doubt.

Recycle Programs -These are programs which act to quickly re-dissociate memories which a therapist has worked to abreact and re-associate.

Reminder-Reinforcement Programs- Used as a reminder to the subject of vows to the larger group they have made. These programs often triggered by phone or touch (e.g., three series of three taps on shoulder or knee, a rapid series of six electronic tones, spoken phrases, etc.). Program triggers frequently include gifts from the cult given during childhood (e.g., stuffed animals, music boxes, etc.). Visually, specified colours also serve the same purpose. Cult-related colours (particularly red, purple and black) are commonly presented to the subject in the form(s) of a cult-contact's apparel, a letter or envelope, etc.

Re-programming- alters that are degrading in programming can be sent internally to programming sites. Parts can also be designed who perceive themselves as existing in the original sites of their torture within the internal landscape .Defiance of the programmer or wishes by any alters to defy the programmer or handler, can be sent to the internal programming site to experience themselves as being tortured once again.

Reporting Programs Subjects are programmed to routinely contact and report back to their handler. These programs may be time-triggered (every month, full moon, etc.), date-triggered (i.e., corresponding to cult "holidays", etc.), or situational triggered (i.e., host personality enters therapy, reveals cult "secrets," etc.). Such programs keep the handler updated on the subject's daily life.

Return Programs (Call Backs) Such programs are designed to manipulate subjects to return to the cult for rituals and/or further programming.

Religious Relevance and Convictions: The programmer implants posthypnotic suggestions that are clearly referenced in the Bible. The subject may be punished by anything that is referenced in the Bible to substantiate the validity of the Gospels. This process is to provide the subject with an increased sense of fear and intimidation resulting from God's presence and force.

Ribbon Programming Colour Programming-During E.C.T., coloured scarf's coming out of a box are shown to the subject. The alters are then advised they are a specific coloured ribbon using the same technique as colour programming. The ribbons have the ability to travel between the different levels and to transmit messages throughout the system. Ribbon programming consists of several things--where they reside, who they are and what they are to protect.

When a System is accessed by a programmer, one practice is to obtain a ribbon alter and then inform the ribbon what their task is.

Ribbons must protect the computers in order to protect their own life. The Ribbons will be programmed to believe that reversing the computer will reverse the Ribbons' life. The ribbons themselves operate with mechanical hearts (not human hearts).

It's a simple way to organize a subject's groups within. It also strengthens identification with other programming. It can also help with re-accessing the subject's system. They are taught if the trainer wears a specific colour those alters come forward.

River Runs Deep programming- Tells the subject that there is no escape, because the programming runs deep through every fibre of the subject.

S

Sacred Heart Programming- suicide program for spiritual parts.

Scramble programming- These are programs intended to confuse, disorganize and block the subject's alter system, emerging memories, thought processes, and/or incoming information. Often, there are specific alters designated by the cult programmer to perform this function. This programming reduces the subject's ability to switch, speak, write, draw, read, or remember previous sessions and work.

These programs target therapeutic language, and spiritual language. For example, the incoming words or visual images of the speaker may be scrambled or garbled. The effect will be the subject experiences the individual as looking and sounding threatening, abandoning, or incompetent.

Scholarship programming- Subject's with superior memories and natural intelligence undergo specific training and trauma with praise for accomplishment and punishment or being shocked for not doing well. Major areas of scholarship include the history of the Illuminati, especially the subject's particular branch and memorizing genealogies. Learning and becoming fluent in multiple languages modern and ancient, including but not limited to: English, French, German, Russian, Spanish, Arabic, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Egyptian hieroglyphics; ancient Babylonian, ancient Chaldea and cuneiform writings. They are skilled and knowledgeable debaters, and quite verbal about it.

Scorpion Programming- Is given to Monarch sex subjects both male and female. The Scorpion program frequency promotes hostility, aggression, suicide, pain, hurt and assassination. This programming is located at the root chakra and moves up into the reptilian brain. Sex is used as a method of survival with a great deal of trickery, treachery and deception. This vibration is frequently used in satanic rituals. Subjects are consistently belittled and unfavourably compared to others. The young subjects are available to be used sexually around the world as party favours and for blackmailing predators.

Self-Injury Programming Cutting Programs As children, subjects have been taught by the programmer when and how to cut. These programs tend to be triggered as a means of punishment, as well as to reinforce earlier compliance or shutdown. The cutting tools may be gifts from the programmer. Many cutting programs progress to suicide programs as needed.

Self programming-The subject carries out their own programming outside the surroundings of the handlers and programmers.

Shell programming- A form of programming used to create a shell on the outside, that other alters inside speak through. This is a designed to hide the subject’s multiplicity from the outside world, and works extremely well with highly fragmented systems. It also takes a subject with the ability to dissociate to a great degree.

Others inside will then be directed to come next to the shell alters, and use their voice to cover their own. This allows greater fragmentation of the subject, while being able to hide from outside view, since the internal alters will learn to present through the shell. Shell alters always see themselves as “clear”, and will have no colour if colour coding is present in the system.

Silence-Shutdown Programs-When enacted, such programs will cause the subject to "stop talking" and to cease revealing information. Though such programs may be triggered through a wide variety of modalities, enactment via self-touch triggers are particularly common. Some shutdown programs will be directed toward specific alters, while others are meant for the system in general.

Silence Programming- no talk programming.

Soul Transfer programming-The soul, energy and power are passed during the moment between life and death to the subject. This is done with young subjects during Epsilon programming. The subject is tied down, and an animal is bled to death on top of them so the departing soul and energy will "enter" the subject.

Spiritual Dilemma programming-creates Satanic and Christian alters. Having Satanic and Christian alters insures that if they discover each other they would reject wanting to learn about the other. The personality would move into denial and dissociation.

They are told the Christian god rejected them because he didn’t rescue the 2-year-old victim that accepted the love of God. Rejection, retaliation and bondage are the tools used for the non-Christian alters. They are advised only the demon cared enough and was strong enough to rescue or resurrect the young subject part.

Spider web programming-is a linked program having a spider or internal programmer that continuously reweaves and reinforces internal programming and punishments. The web also communicates with other systems and can represent demonic linkages internally.

Spin programming-Designed to spread effects such as pain, painful emotions, and other feelings or urges globally throughout a subject’s personality system for purposes of either designing and building a young subject's personality system, or harassing older subjects and disrupting psychotherapy. Spin programming appears to be based on a combination of physical spinning, cognitive and imagery training, and repetition and practice aimed at creating an internal multi-alter spinning the pain or affective components of numerous traumatic memories simultaneously to large groups of targeted alters.

Signs and symptoms of Spin Programs are global effects, symptoms occurring like a "storm," pressure, dizziness, a sense of spinning inside, physical movements related to the internal experience of spinning, and spinning-related imagery and vocabulary. When a subject is affected by a specifically targeted program, she or he typically experiences one or a small number of alters having emotions or urges or manifesting behaviours, while most or all other alters remain unaffected.

Global effects, The flurries of pain, affect, or impulse tend to grow in intensity, build to a crescendo, maintain that peak for a time, and then gradually diminish before finally subsiding. Nearly every alter in the system is lashed by the “wind and rain” of the storm, often without understanding why these effects are occurring, and doing their best to minimize damages until the storm passes.

Pressure, When spin programs are active, the affected alters subjectively experience high levels of force or pressure, as if they aresitting at the outside edge of a rapidly rotating disc. They feel overwhelmed by this pressure, finding it impossible to resist, and they often complain of symptoms that would be caused by mounting internal pressure, such as headaches that feel like they are going to cause the head to explode from the inside, disruption of speech, vision problems, and similar phenomena.

Dizziness. As the internal spinning associated with spin programming increases in speed and force, subjects frequently complain of dizziness. At these times, they may be literally feeling the sensations caused by the original spinning, because they are experiencing a planned revivification or flashback of that event.

Sense of Spinning Internally. Along with the dizziness, subjects experiencing active spin programs often notice a sense of spinning internally.

Physical Movements. When the internal spinning is at its most intense, subjects often move in ways that a person might move while being physically spun. These movements tend to be rhythmic and repetitive, they may involve any part of the body, and they are subtle and may escape notice. The movements tend to be slower, smoother, more fluid, more subtle, and more regular and rhythmic than typical “nervous” movements.

Spinning-Related Imagery and Vocabulary. When describing their sensations during an active spin program, subjects often utilize imagery or words that are related to the experience of spinning. Typical words used include: vortex, whirlpool, whirlwind, tornado, cyclone, abyss, falling, drowning, sinking, being pulled or sucked down, being blown or shot or exploded out, tumbling, hurling, whirling, swirling, and twirling. Some alters have programmer-assigned names related to spinning (e.g., Spinner,).

Stringer programming- When the alter hits a stringer, they will go through a series of memories, false memories, hypnotic commands, and body sensations that have been attached together in links.

Subliminal Programming- Hidden suggestions that only the subject’s subconscious perceives. They can be audio, hidden behind music, or visual, airbrushed into a picture, flashed on a screen so fast that they aren’t consciously seen, or incorporated into a picture or design.

Suicidal programming- All suicidal programming is put in place to either ensure continued obedience to the programmers agenda; to ensure regular re-contact; or prevent the individual or an outside entity from accessing the subject's system without authorization .

Survival of the fittest programming- Used in Delta programming, and for system protect alters. The program is training for strength, lack of fear, and endurance, and to outlast your opponent.

System access programming-‘Short cut’ codes to the system are placed. (not recommended)
Systems layered programming-Numerous levels in a system are set to send out and respond to a code at the same time. This could be suicide programming, spin programming, fight/flight programming.
Serpent Programming-Used in conjunction with the Ouroboros. This programming has alters that are named after snakes. The snake parts will programmed to awaken the pineal gland, which again results in the opening of the third eye Shatter Programming-Uses the images of mirrors, and glass shattering to assist in splitting the mind. The subject is advised to grab pieces of the shattered glass and put it back together. The subject will cut their hands, knees, and other parts of their bodies in an attempt to rebuild the glass. They will be advised this will happen to them if they attempt to rebuild themselves.

T

Theta Programming- "psychic" programming correlates with the development and use of extrasensory powers and extra physical abilities, including long-distance mind connection with other remote viewing where subject’s could see what a person was doing in another location. It also implies the use of thought energy to kill someone at a distance. Since subjects cannot be consistently given Theta programming, a surgical implant of a sodium/lithium powered high frequency receiver/transducers coupled with a multi-range discharge capacitor is placed in the brains subjects. This gives the handlers the ability to send signals by remote to the subject’s brain. When the receiver picks up the signals they electronically stimulate certain areas of the brain which in turn triggers pre-set programming.
Time programming-Used in conjunction with internal trees, clocks, flowers, hourglasses, and other symbols that show the passages of time. This programming insures the system is coordinated with holidays, call backs, and other designs the programmer desires.
Tinkerbelle programming-Programming makes alters think they are like Tinkerbelle in that they will never grow up or age.
Traps Programming- A trap is a place in a system for handling unexpected or unallowable conditions. These traps can catch parts if they wander too far, or be placed for internal programmers to activate. Traps can look like quick sand, fog, spider webs, or other items.
Twinning programming-The Programmers’ will create twin bonds in child subjects. The subjects are allowed to play with, and become close to one another while being trained. The two are placed together at the beginning of training when they are young. They become twins, and are programmed to die if the other one dies. They are taught to be one in body, mind, and soul. They are bonded in many ways, including torturing each other, and sexual bonding. The trauma bonding that they undergo will consist of: a. being put in life or death situations together, b. given programming scripts which intertwine and fill in to complete each other to make a whole, c. are placed in jobs that require total compliance with the programming in order to survive, d. are bonded together to other subject’s.
Time Travel Programming-for subjects involved in Project Pegasus.
Tin Man Programming The Tin Man programming is all purpose versatile program for whatever the Programmer wants completed. , it means that the subject is a well oiled machine.
Tin Man programming (2)-The subject is advised they are made of tin, have no heart and feelings.

They are programmed to not cry or they will rust.

Tumbleweed Program-where the subject feels like they have become tumbleweed and can't ground and get their bearings. They feel as if they are blown by the wind.

Thor Programming-Headache programme.

Therapy Interference Programs- programs designed to interfere with the therapeutic process which trigger the subject to: (1) not see, (2) not think for self, (3) stay distracted, and (4) become resistant, mistrustful, and/or obnoxious toward the therapist.

Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum programming-This can be used in twin programming so the twins don't contradict one another. The programming can also be layered into quadrants of the system to help maintain balance.

Tornado Program This is a free floating program that moves around areas that the programmers want protected. When it hits an alter(s) it causes confusion, spinning, and switching, as well as a feeling of losing control. It's part of the elemental back up programs.

U

Umbrella programming- protective shield for delta programming.

Upside down programming-The subject is hanging or being suspended upside down for one or two hours. That plays tricks on the mind along with dissociating pain and pleasure sensations get reversed. This is training for Beta programming to get the subject to think that sadistic rapeis pleasurable. With reversals you get 'pain is love' and the sadomasochistic kitten alters will beg for more abuse.

Utility Programs-low level programs that help maintain the systems function. For example if a subject has not slept in 5 days, the program will run to ensure the subject is able to receive rest.

V

Vagabond Programming- applied to teach the alter it doesn't belong to the inside world, nor to the outside world. It belongs nowhere.

Verbal Response Programs- These are programs designed to provide suitable answers to cult-related, system-related or alter-related inquiries which may be asked by outside individuals. Such responses will have been repeatedly rehearsed by the subject and reinforced by the programmer.

Vessel Programming-a subject is sexually opened at the base chakra, drugged and sanctified to receive the essence of a lower astral entity. Then those at the ritual have sex with "the vessel" to get the infused energy of the lower astral entity. Then "the vessel" or subject is sacrificed so ritual participants can drink the blood and hormones of the lower astral entity that entered the vessel. It is believed the energy will assist in specified programming.

Virtual reality programming- (VR) the subject is placed in VR headsets and suit while a disk is used to run the program. It can be used to create 3D and holographic images, and especially is useful in scripted programming, and subject practice sequences for assassin training. Virtually any scenario can be recreated. Images to be "burned in" will be shown on the VR disk, and reinforced repetitively during the programming sequence. Some programmers feel it removes the element of "human error" in training, and use it quite extensively.

Volcano programming-used to restructure a system.

W

War in the Heavens suicide programming-spiritual suicide program.
Water programming-simulated drowning is completed with the subject and linked to silence programming and flooding.
Windsor Programming- A program that intercepts attempts to de-program the subject. The program and parts often live in a castle called Windsor.
Wolf, Bear, Crow, Lion programming-Developed after the meanings of the "Medicine Cards" that are used like tarot cards to discover subject's power through the ways of animals. The programs are based on hunting modules and animal characteristics and symbols. The subject is shown many training films.During programming the subjects are broken into groups of their animals. The groups are all taught first what it feels like to be prey and then how to attack their prey or each other using mental and physical force so your prey doesn't get free or doesn't inform on the subject. Programming teaches subjects to compartmentalize learning and force the subjects to do. Programming relies heavily on drugs, electric shock and trauma. The same things are used to trigger the different stages of the programs and programming.
WOLF, basic training is to build future programs on. First the subject is the prey and learns to be aware of the environment and the target. They become the hunter and learn to hold down the prey or each other to take what they want from the prey. The subjects learn to hunt as a group.
BEAR, Subjects go through strength training. Learn to hunt and survive alone.
CROW, The subject goes through intelligence training and problem solving skills.
MOUNTAIN LIONS, encircle, terrorize, use intricate verbal calls to intimidate and scare making easy and clean kills. They will be attacked and terrorized to the point of death by other Mountain Lion level subjects to make sure they understand the fear and weakness of the prey. Subjects are taught they lead those below them by using fear, surprise, attack and terror. The subject must climb great distances, observe their prey and report back to their programmer. As "prince of the lions" the subject can demand and take whatever they choose from anyone who is in their group.

Z

Zeta Programming typically presents a realistic or cynical view of the world in which unnatural death and human suffering is simply necessary for the system to survive. Zeta programming is used to dull or block empathy, producing "empathic blocks" against the suffering of other subject's, which is necessary. Suicide pacts can be made with Zeta programming.
This programming is intended to make subjects willingly embrace their own death in a ritual.

Glossary

Abreaction- is a psychoanalytical term for reliving an experience in order to purge it of its emotional excesses; a type of catharsis.

Access Codes- Specialized codes, often coded into short messages, or numerical codes, that allows access into the subject's system. These codes may also depend and be set up on sight recognition and voice recognition of the Programmer giving the codes. The system will respond to the codes only if an individual who appears to be an authorized person, such as the subject's handler/Programmer, gives them. This is to prevent unauthorized access or using of the subject by others outside of the subject's defined group.

Ad hoc groups- Adults, who may or may not have had abusive childhoods, come together and form a new group with its own ideology and rituals.

Adjudication- The exercise in judging whether a person can have access to compartmentalized information.

Agent Provocateurs- Individuals who join groups with the purpose of leading the group to do things that will cause it harm.

Agent of influence- - These agents can be unwitting, under mind-control, or ideologically motivated to use their positions of influence to sway the minds of others.

Age Regression- The act of bringing back past memories in a subject though the use of hypnosis. The memories can be very vivid and real in the mind of the subject.

Alter- A dissociated part of the mind which has a separate identity and is given cue codes by Programmers to trigger that dissociated part of the mind to come to the front of the mind. The part's identity may be a gem, rock, a tape recorder, a poodle, a white kitten, a dove, a horse, or even think of itself as a person or a demon. It all depends on the programming.

Alter fragment- a dissociated part of the mind which serves only a single purpose.

Alpha - base-level programming reinforced by scripts. All MKs get alpha programming so that other kinds can be installed later.

Amethyst - part of jewel programming, its goal meant to create an alter that reinforces silence programming by keeping secrets or destroying evidence. See also chi or silence programming

Anaesthesia- is a temporary state that causes unconsciousness, loss of memory, lack of pain and muscle relaxation.

Anchor - a stimulus that influences someone's state of mind.

Anchoring - influencing how a particular stimulus will influence someone's state of mind.

Apotheosis - a central Masonic belief stating that one can become a God.

Assessment- the analysis and synthesis of information, usually about a person or persons, for the purpose of appraisal. The assessment of individuals is based upon the compilation and use of psychological as well as biographic detail.

Attitudinal inoculation- The process of making people immune to attempts to change their attitudes by initially exposing them to small doses of the arguments (opposition) against their position. This process gives explanations to behaviour, arguments, and beliefs of opponents. The explanations may be highly biased and inaccurate but depending on the source of the misinformation may significantly add to credibility of a belief system.

Aversive Conditioning is the use of something unpleasant, or a punishment, to stop an unwanted behaviour.

Axe - see woodcutter

B

B- Is often found doubled or reflected, forming the Monarch Butterfly, which is the signature and main trigger applied in Monarch Mind Control.

Backstopping- an intelligence term for setting up proof to support the cover stories the intelligence agencies give their agents and assets

The Bird- was a name for Fort Holabird, MD where intelligence operatives were trained as well as subjected to mind-control.

Beta--This is the second Greek letter, and it represents the sexual models and sexual alters that the Programmers are creating

Big - an MK mode, generally affecting the confidence level

Bigot- A list of names of those who have clearance to a particular set of information.

Black Angels- Psy-ops assassination team is composed of very intelligent African-American women.

Black - anarchy, destruction, chaos

Blackballing - the process of exclusion, deriving itself from a voting system which took place in the lodges whereby a member of the organization dislikes an applicant. One blackball vote is usually sufficient to exclude.

Black Envelope- A black-coloured envelope used by intelligence to hold the real name of an agent being used. In the case of programmed subjects, a chief of a station might have a blank envelope with the actual name of a programmed subject being used in their field of operations.

Bleep Boxes- Used to tap telephones and in other instances to make free-of-cost telephone calls

Blending- Arranging inside parts using mirroring so an individual cannot tell when a switch has occurred.

Boat - a car.

Bona Fides- Codes to allow two people to meet. Evidence or reliable information about identity, personal (including intelligence) history, and intentions or good faith.

Box - the slave-state of the MK

Bubble gum - an MK, “chewed up and spit out”. See pop.

Butterfly - the #1 symbol of MK/Monarch programming. Signifies an altered state

C

C- Can stand for Controller or Control, which means the individual(s) handling a programmed subject.

Cabman- a device to remotely activate a telephone with a radio beam.

Cage- Mental enslavement

Car - spook-speak for MK

Carotid artery technique- The technique of using pressure on the carotid for access to the mind. The pressure cuts off the flow of blood to the brain causing a rapid coma-like condition -- during this condition, hypnotic control can sometimes be obtained.

Cat - a pejorative term used to describe a female MK, usually associated with beta programming in the common usage, but possibly can contain any other level of programming as well.

Catfight - usually used to describe a fight between two women. Betas are usually female, and the fight between them is usually a breakdown between two high-ranking socialite types.

Che Guevara - Chi trigger, famous MK

Checkerboard - a tiled design of opposing colours, used on the floor or on cloth prints. See duality.

Chi - “return to cult” programming, usually activated when an MK has some type of breakdown or goes rogue. Internal mechanisms built to prevent “runaways”.

Chop - a reference to the woodcutter, usually describing a wish to terminate a member

Cipher - symbols are used to represent letters

Clear Eyes-is a sleeper assassin who is capable of being triggered, i.e. activated. "Clear Eyes", i.e., a fully programmed sleeper assassin, who can commit crimes as serious as murder, and afterwards have no shame, guilt, or remorse.

Clean agents – Subjects that have never been used in intelligence work, so they have no record of use.

Co-bedding- can be when two or more traumatized children huddle together for support, andprotection ,

Co-conscious- When two alters are aware of what each other is thinking.

Code name- A word or phrase used to refer secretly to a specific person, group, project, or plan of action. A code word is any word or phrase that has been chosen to signify a specific message while keeping that message hidden from a third party. Functional codes may contain thousands of code words, some of which may also be code names; however, a code name need not be part of a larger code. It may, in effect, be a code unto itself, comprised of only one word.

Control- the capacity to generate, alter, or halt human behaviour by implying, citing, or using physical or psychological means to ensure compliance with direction. The compliance may be voluntary or involuntary. Control of a subject can rarely be established without control of their environment.

Core splits- intentional traumatic splits created from the core personality. Core splits can be created from severe and psychologically threatening very early childhood trauma. This is done intentionally to create larger and more dissociated systems Command Codes-these are irreversible commands, put in at the limbic level of programming. The first code always put in is the “halt “command, which stops the person in their tracks, and is the first code any new Programmer learns. This will stop the subject from assassinating their Programmer, if they have Delta or other assassin training in place.

Control Signs-which allow them to indicate via a code that they are in trouble

Councils (Illuminati)--The Illuminati have frequent meetings. Some of these meetings are organized to appear "acephalous" and "accidental" in their meetings, when in reality they are structured and planned. The Councils have gone by the following names: MJ-12, the Group, the Special Study Group, the Wise Men, the Operations Coordinating Board (OCB), 5412 Committee, 303 Committee, 40 Committee, PI-40 Committee, and Policy Planning Group (PCG). The Council of 3, Council of 5, Council of 7, Council of 9, The Grand Druid Council, The Committee of 300, and the Committee of 500 (known as Fortune 500). Many of the meetings are conclaves without formal names.

Colours - used symbolically to train MK babies in the pre-verbal stages of development. See individual colours for details.

Creative personal situation interpretation- The process of subtly acquiring enough information to deliver a believable explanation of an individual's personal situation such that it is consistent with a belief system, thus adding to credibility of an individual and swaying others towards their belief system. The motive may be money rather than recruiting a cult member.

Co-presence- two alters can come on top of each other at the front of the mind and hold the body together. This produces some strange behaviour in the subject as different alters synthesize their thoughts.

Creative history interpretation- The act of interpreting history in such a way that it is consistent with the belief system, thus adding to the credibility of a belief system.

Cross Programming - (for instance, a mother and a daughter team)

Cryptonyms- which are two-letter digraphs such as the "MK" of MK-ULTRA.

D

Daddy-master

Datum- a reference point or surface against which position measurements are made. Vertical datums are used to measure elevations or depths.

Dangle-The used word for luring a subject into a provocation. A dangle operation would be an operation to provoke a group or individual into a particular action.

Day - the everyday “front alters out” existence. The public face.

Debriefing-obtaining information by questioning a controlled and witting source who is normally a willing one.

Deep Cover Agent--A programmed subject who has been a long term sleeper agent.

Delta-This is a Greek letter shaped like a triangle which symbolizes change in calculus. Delta teams are 4 person assassination teams which usually are secret teams. Delta Forces is an elite unit that operates under the Joint Chiefs of Staff that is made up of highly trained total programmed subjects. Delta models are subjects whose sole purpose is assassination.

Deliverance ministry- Refers to the activity of cleansing a person of demons and evil spirits in order to address problems manifesting in their life as a result of the presence of said entities and the root causes of their authority to oppress the person.

Delta - used most obviously in the US delta force, this has to do with soldier like skills, such as establishing a communications centre, avoiding detection, escape artist skills, martial arts, armed combat, et cetera.

Disinformation Agent--This is a highly placed agent who passes disinformation to other governments.

Dissociative Identity Disorder- or DID different dissociative parts of a single brain view themselves as separate persons.

Dog - a pejorative term used to describe a male MK, having some ties to the Order, but not necessarily ones that would give him benefits. A dog would receive any combination of programming from alpha to zeta.

Dogfight – Two parts with Epsilon programming are made to fight for dominance.

Dollhouse - A symbol used to represent the compartmentalization of the Monarch subject

E

Eight - symbol of mind control. Turned on its side, the eight becomes an infinity symbol and represents the "thought loop" of a programmed subject that prevents resistance to the handlers.

Eliciting- obtaining information, without revealing intent or exceptional interest, through a verbal or written exchange with a person who may be willing or unwilling to provide what is sought and who may or may not be controlled.

Emerald - as in the Wizard of Oz, linked to family loyalty, sorcery, and spiritual achievement

Epsilon - a base-level obedience programme the individual is programmed to their primal components of food, shelter, and water. Its characteristics often change when paired with other types of programming.

Extra-familiar:- Adults who abuse non-related children. Children can be accessed at day care, schools, church, or through social groups

F

Family or Transgenerational- Adults, who were abused as children, in turn abuse and indoctrinate their own children.

Fear inoculation- The process of making people immune to attempts to change their attitudes by initially exposing them to the consequences (often fraudulently created consequences) of rejecting the initial belief system in favour of another.

Field subject, field operative, field agent- A subject who works in the field as opposed to one who works at the office or headquarters. A field subject can work alone or in a group but usually has a programmer who is in charge.

Fine Tuned- The child can function excellently at visualization, relaxation, concentration, projection, while in the alpha state and can work with their subconscious mind.

Fire Letters-represent fixed electromagnetic codes (patterns of sequentially arranged electromagnetic impulses) that can be arranged in many ways to form "words", or electromagnetic code patterns, that can potentially carry a wide variety of meaning when put together in specific ways.

Five - usually referring to the pentagram, assumed to be inverted (not upright), and referring to Lucifer

Flat State- a flat, non-thinking state. The brain quits thinking and withdraws into a state that it quits thinking except for what the programmers want it to think

Four - base-level animalistic call sign.

Four Faces- refers to pretexts used by agents to get interview.

Friend -- a user of subject/part approved by master

Function Codes- Programmers will place within the subject's systems codes as way to organize the fragments that are related to the job they were trained to do. Often, several will be coded to link together to perform a task. These are usually a letter, such as a Greek alphabet letter, combined with a numeric sequence that corresponds to their place on the internal grid or landscape.

Funny Name- intelligence slang for a pseudonym

G

Gamma - used for disinformation purposes to disguise and mislead others as to the actual nature of the things at hand. Most front alters are gamma-type programming, and are therefore difficult to remove.
Gang stalking - a set of tactics used in counterintelligence operations involving the covert surveillance and harassment of a targeted individual.
Geomancies- used with Fire letters are the building blocks the God Mind uses as the processor of creation.
Ghost rider - a remote viewer
Goat - sacrificial MKs/disposables
Granny- a CIA asset used in the US which is not under their direct funding
Green - see Omega
Group think error- The tendency to accept or continue to accept a belief system due to the overall credibility of the members in a group. This is based on an erroneous faith that an entire group including those who you may trust implicitly cannot be deceived or wrong. This is the strongest influence on credibility of a belief system.

H

Half-life - MKs are supposed to be dead by their 30s or 40s.
Haptic technology- is a tactile feedback technology which takes advantage of the sense of touch by applying forces, vibrations, or motions to the subject.
Hot box – a small, hot room which, due to lack of ventilation, essentially functions as an oven
Hypnoamnesia- Temporary loss of memory due to a posthypnotic suggestion.
Hypnosis - Inducing a high state of suggestibility, often thinly disguised as relaxation or meditation.

I

Illuminati--The Illuminati are 13 elite bloodlines which have manoeuvred themselves into control over all countries. They lead double lives, one for society and a hidden one which is based on a Gnostic Luciferian philosophy which consists of blood rituals. Originally funded by the Rothschilds and run by Weishaupt, this was an attempt to infiltrate and disrupt the power structure through all the major social institutions during the 18th century. Today, the newer, revised definition now refers to the global elite and their agenda to build a transhumanist, eugenicist, and white supremacist society with a lowered and strictly controlled population.

K

K-lines-a habitual way of doing things

Kids - see goat

L

LCFLUTTER- Polygraph, sometimes supplemented by truth drugs: Sodium Amytal (amobarbital), Sodium Pentothal (thiopental),and Seconal (secobarbital) to induce regression in the subject.

Legend -The Intelligence term for the elaborate cover histories they give to programmed subjects to operate as an agent.

M

Malingering-the purposeful production of falsely or grossly exaggerated complaints with the goal of receiving a reward. One example is the case of Ganser syndrome, which is when a person tailors their answers to fake psychosis. This syndrome is also known as approximation, or nonsense syndrome.

May Day Book- exists for Illuminati and Intelligence subjects which allows them to call if they are about to be arrested. A telephone number is left open for just this purpose.

Mensa- The top surface of an altar. A southern constellation between Hydrus and Volans. An international society, membership of which is restricted to individuals whose intelligence test scores exceed those expected of 98 per cent of the population

Micronemes - Such things as a particular aroma, or a particular intonation for which it has no word, but for which it has a series of sensory clues.

Mind Control- The use of subliminal techniques to control a person’s actions, mind state or thoughts. Subliminal techniques may include the use of words or language in a variety of fashions, visual stimuli, a combination of different stimuli, the intentional use or misuse or deprivation of information, electronic stimuli techniques, such as brain wave machines and e-weapons, the deprivation of basic human needs, such as sleep and food, the use of emotions to manipulate thoughts (such as guilt or fear), hypnotic techniques or suggestions, rituals or role plays meant to induce suggestible states, the use of certain drugs, other techniques to induce a meditative mind state (like meditation) or specific movements or motions (like spinning). A combination of these techniques may be used.

Mind machine -A device that uses pulsing rhythmic sound and/or flashing light to alter the frequency of the user's brainwaves.

Monarch Programming--A project carried out by secret elements of the U.S. government and intelligence groups a type of trauma-based mind-control.

Multiplexing- A technique where one signal or code will carry several messages simultaneously.

N

NETS- A group of subjects (agents) working under one handler

Neuralgias- A condition that causes brief episodes of stabbing pain between the eyes and ears.

Neuro-linguistic programming (NLP)- Encompasses the three most influential components involved in producing human experience: neurology, language and programming. The neurological system regulates how our bodies function, language determines how we interface and communicate with other people and our programming determines the kinds of models of the world we create. Neuro-Linguistic Programming describes the fundamental dynamics between mind (neuro) and language (linguistic) and how their interplay affects our body and behaviour (programming).

The Network- It includes the anarchy level of the Illuminati, the various criminal syndicates, the various fraternities, new age institutions and people in power all over the globe. It is held together by fear, blackmail, and common bonds of lust and greed. The network includes atheists, self-made Satanists, opportunists, and many programmed subjects.

New World Order-- The global design for a One-World-Government One-World-Dictator and its constituents. Insiders call themselves the "network" and "the neighbourhood".

Night - the occult world, in contrast to the everyday world, where rituals, programming, and missions take place. Night alters are back, hidden alters.

Notional Agent --A fictitious non-existent "agent" which is created with a real-looking identity to mislead for the sake of an intelligence operation.

O

O - Slang for office, used by gang stalkers

Octo- - see eight

ODO- On-Duty Officer, or officer-on-duty

ODYOKE- Federal government of the United States

Old - the answer given by a mason when asked his or her age

Omicron programming—relates to programming of subjects for the Combination (between Intelligence- the Mafia and Government.)

Omega - self-destruct programming, including suicide, usually t resulting in drug abuse or general recklessness.

One-way amnesia- where A alter knows B alter, but B doesn’t know A. This can be accomplished by setting in one-way mirrors.

Ouraboros- a snake swallowing its tail. A ring with Ouraboros signifies rank in the illuminate.

Our boy - a gang stalking target

Our friend - a gang stalking target

Orange - protects the system by keeping all of the elements in check; a form of paralysis

Overwrite -is a new identity or personality

P

Polyfragmentation -The term comes from the root poly, meaning many, and fragments. In complex polyfragmenatation, the subject will have not only and alter system, but hundreds or even thousands of fragments, isolated parts of their mind created to do a job, and do it well and unthinkingly. The further away from core beliefs, the greater usually the dissociation and fragmentation that must occur.

Pop - Metaphor of bubble gum. The bubble gets larger and larger until it finally bursts, representing the sacrifice.

Posthypnotic Command- Same as Posthypnotic Suggestion. This term "Command" is more commonly used when the hypnosis is forcibly given to the subject and when the subject's will has been broken down though the use of REM Sleep Deprivation and Suggestibility Index increasing drugs like CNS and Cardiovascular Stimulants. The exposure to extreme REM deprivation and select chemical stimulants cause the subject to have no ability to resist the "Suggestion" any longer thereby making it a "Command".

Posthypnotic Suggestion- A subconscious suggestion or command resident and potentially active in the subject following a hypnotic trance or period of direct access to the subconscious mind.

Posthypnotic Suggestibility Index- An index or rating of a subject's susceptibility and sensitivity to hypnosis.

Provocation Agent--An agent sent in to provoke and destabilize the target group to do foolish things

Prism - a device for splitting white light into its component colours.

Puppet Master -name of master for Marionette or Puppet program

R – Gang stalker code for residence

Rainbow - the division between the everyday world and the occult world. Under the rainbow is normal life, over it is occult. The actual effect, which is white light split through refraction into the band of its component colours, represents the MPD state of an MK.

Rapport-is the mental and physiological state that a human enters when they let their social guard down, and it is generally achieved when a person comes to the conclusion that the person they're talking to is like them.

Recognition signal-allows two people to make contact

Recovered memory-memories of traumatic events that are now remembered but had previously been 'forgotten' or unknown, sometimes referred to a traumatic amnesia.

REM DEP-Abbreviation for REM sleep Deprivation or REM Deprivation. A subject deprived from REM Sleep has multiple symptoms i.e. reduced protein synthesis, black circles around eyes, loss of short term memory, confusion, impulsiveness, anger, frustration, diminished self-esteem, increased suggestibility, reduced productivity, apathy, and depression. Long term REM deprivation results in death.

Repetitive Music-Played with a beat close to the human heart 45 to 72 beats per minute. Used during programming sessions as the music helps in relaxation and anchoring.

Ritual Abuse-methodical abuse, often using indoctrination, aimed at breaking the will of another human being. This involves repeated abuse over an extended period of time. The physical abuse is severe, sometimes including torture and killing. The sexual abuse is usually painful, humiliating, intended as a means of gaining dominance over the subject.

Room "Feel" - The way a room feels is essential to hypnotizing unknowing subjects. The room will have special lighting, florescent lights are best because they aren't too dim, but aren't too harsh. Also, Room Temp usually cooler than normal room temperature.

S

Satanic Ritual Abuse (SRA)--This is used to represent all categories of spiritual ritual abuse which would be inspired by the desire to rob, kill, or destroy something worthwhile in a person, especially their freedom of thought. Many groups carrying out SRA do not mention Satan by that name. They may make Pacts to Baphomet, and call upon Rex Mundi, or Belair, or Lucifer, or the Father of Light, God, or Kali or even "Jesus" or "Jesus Christ".

Script – The program placed into a subject to build internal worlds.

Script (2) - A carefully constructed series of words arranged in the form of a posthypnotic suggestion.

Self Programming- different personalities carry out system programming outside the environment of the Cult.

Selective vision- The tendency to acknowledge only those things that are consistent with one's belief system. Anything that contradicts or conflicts with the belief system are irrationally interpreted such that they are consistent with the belief system or entirely disregarded.

Service Facsimiles- computations that you use to make oneself right and others wrong.

Silver arrow - psychic attacks, usually directed at the circulatory system. Seldom lethal, but often debilitating.

Silver surfer - a thought-killer.

Six - black alter call sign, denotes destructive activity

Sleepers-Subjects who are placed in organizations unaware for a convert purpose.

Somnambulatory State- An abnormal condition of sleep in which motor acts (like walking, running) are performed. This state is typically achieved and a prerequisite to traditional hypnosis.

Spider – Placed inside the subject during spin programming.

Spinning - A type of trauma where the subject is spun at a high rate of speed to cause confusion, nausea, and blackouts. Spinning also causes a rapid switching of alters which can cause unconsciousness if done fast and long enough.

Spoon Feeder Agent--Someone who leaks out legitimate information, this is often done to build up a person's credentials (bona fides). The legitimate information is dusted with a measure of disinformation to mislead. Generally spoon-feeders increase their percentage of disinformation once they gain respectability

Starlight Consciousness- Starlight consciousness is the other way of knowing that which belongs to the right hemisphere and it allows the subject to make contact with the "DIVINE WITHIN". The Divine within the subject is actually the generational spirits, which are placed in during the Moon Child ceremonies

Starlight level-The programmers are using the subject's abilities with the 5 acute senses to develop the 6th sense which is the ability to work in the Starlight consciousness. This includes mental activity such as psychic and astral level. It takes specialized training for Programmers to access this level.

Subliminal Implant- A posthypnotic suggestion successfully delivered to the subject's subconscious mind.

Switching--This is when one part (fragment) of the mind takes over from another, or when one alter personality (or alter fragment) takes the body from the alter which is holding the body. Switching can occur via the Programmers' codes for calling up alters, or by external or internal stimuli that trigger an alter to come out. Switching will usually cause at least a flicker of the eyes, and for outside observers, who know the different personalities, they will observe another personality take the body.

System-- Used to refer to a subject of total mind control because the subject consists of alters, programming, implant(s), internal computers, and numerous dissociative states which function together as a system.

System demons- exist as Mind Consciousness System Designs within Humans. It is these Systems that are programmed within subjects and directs their actions, thoughts and experiences. Some Designs programmed into from DNA. Other Designs we programmed into oneself from childhood, through participating in the system designs until they become fully manifested within the physical. Eventually as the systems take over – the subject will find themselves becoming possessed into the System, as it takes over and directs you.

Templates -Young internal subject alters who may be splits from core splits, as the basis for the programming.

Theta - psychic warrior programming, intended for anything paranormal. Usually includes remote viewing, telepathy, psycohtronic attacks, and empathy. Some subjects also indicate other abilities like precognition or remote influencing.

Theta Psychic warfare- Theta programming is a psychic warfare branch of Monarch programming commonly called ESPionage; Military terminology is 'psychotronics'. Theta programming is the synthesis of occult practices/state of the art science.

Three - trinity, usually the “good side” of the masons. Refers sometimes to front alters of an MK

Trance logic- Are those ploys and strategies to maintain a dissociative or hypnotic hallucination.

Transceivers (NSA)- Nearly microscopic electronic surveillance devices that collect and transmit encrypted audio, colour video, and location coordinates from a subject and sent to NSA Satellites that in turn forward it to NSA central intelligence operations. The devices also receive encrypted audio scripts from NSA central intelligence operations through the satellites and deliver it to a subject in the form of a subliminal posthypnotic suggestion. These devices are approximately the size of the head of a straight pin and can be concealed in houses, offices, automobiles, planes, and other places.

Trauma Bonding- One person intermittently harasses, beats, threatens, abuses, intimidates uses fear, excitement, sexual feelings, and sexual physiology to create strong emotional ties to develop.

Traumatology-This refers to the study, development and application of psychological impact of extreme events.

Trusted Contact-A person, who is neither a controller, nor a slave, nor asset, but who consciously advances the desires of the controller.

Tree - an MK

Twinning -Person, doll or puppet or that will be fixed to look exactly alike.

Two - duality, an often referred to indication of Masonic involvement. Refers to back alters of an MK

Vesper - Lucifer, the morning star

Vibrato - is the tremulous effect imparted in some vocal or instrumental music, and the cycle-per-second range causes people to go into an altered state of consciousness.

Virtual reality -a computer-simulated environment that can simulate physical presence in places in the real world or imagined worlds.
Voice Roll Technique- A "voice roll" is a patterned, paced style used by hypnotists when inducing a trance. A voice roll can sound as if the speaker were talking to the beat of a metronome or it may sound as though they were emphasizing every word in a monotonous, patterned style. The words will usually be delivered at the rate of 45 to 60 beats per minute, maximizing the hypnotic effect.

W

Walrus - masonry
White - high level, presidential
White Rabbit – master
Woodcutter - a reference to the Grimm's Fairy Tales, the woodcutter leaves his children in the forest in an attempt to dispose of them at the request of his despicable wife

Z

ZETA- (snuff films) Zeta is the sixth letter, and its ancient meaning was a sacrifice.

Introduction

When it comes to abduction research it's difficult to get a clear handle on what exactly is being done, to whom, how, and most importantly…why. We're chasing after phantoms most of the time, because "they", be it "aliens" or military black ops, are very good at wiping out nearly all memories, planting red herrings and screen memories, and covering their tracks with minimal evidence left behind.

While working on this write up it got to the point where I was about to abandon the endeavor completely…because of the inexplicable nature of it all, and the fact that I can never seem to get concrete answers to anything. It began to seem futile. Having to untangle valid information from what seems like so much disinformation, and encountering all the "he said/she said" finger pointing, accusations, and counter-accusations within the material can make your head spin. And when you research long enough, you may find that inevitably, you start engaging in some wacky logic - what I call "double reverse psychology," for lack of a better way to put it. ;) We know what reverse psychology is – double reverse is when somebody becomes so suspicious of everything they read that they reverse the logic of what's being presented through multiple unravelings to try to get to the bottom of what's going on. I was given some helpful insight though about all of this, which I'll relay here: The fact that there is so much disinformation out there ultimately, points to the information. So keep plugging away and trying to find answers was the conclusion. Don't give up.

Another issue that I've come across while researching abductions and mind control is that there tends to be the same, years-old, and most likely very outdated material being circulated to the mass public. I don't claim to definitively know what's going on, but what I can surmise is this: If it's been declassified and released for the public to know about, then it's outdated, which is exactly why it has been released. Because they don't care if you know. It may have been true and accurate…decades ago. But it's most likely that "they" are not playing by the same rules anymore, and methods of operation would have definitely changed since many of those materials were originally written.

So to say we're all chasing phantoms is putting it mildly. Taking into account the outdated information, the deliberate disinformation, screen memories designed to disguise, random fragments and pieces that don't make sense, and erased memories so there's nothing left at all, then what we have is a whole lot of confusion. But despite "double reverse wacky psychology", I still believe there is something very real happening here, and it's not all smoke and mirrors designed to get us chasing our tails. Some of what the higher realm entities and military factions are doing to humans is merely batting us around the same way a cat will toy with its prey, which I outline in more detail throughout this book; but other times they're doing something very serious and real. So it's imperative that we learn how to differentiate between the two types of activities, discover what exactly they're doing to us as individuals (because it does vary from person to person) then take measures to head things off, and stop as much of it as we can.

Now, a note to the reader: This write up is geared specifically towards those who already know that they're the target of alien/military abductions and mind control and are looking for some additional insight and tactical advise on it all, rather than trying to inform those who have never read anything about these topics or to convince skeptics. So you may notice the lack of thorough background explanation on the history of military/alien abductions and mind control. There are so many other materials out there that amply cover the basics, including government documents, that I didn't want to re-tread over old ground and bore readers by going over material that they're most likely already aware of.

Also, some authors make the mistake of writing on the defensive, preemptively addressing the skeptical and inflammatory comments that they imagine the readers to be thinking as they read along. You won't see that here, because it's a big pet peeve of mine. It's a disservice to those reading the material who already know it to be true, and a waste of time, paper and words. The biggest chunk of the audience reading any conspiracy or paranormal book are going to be people who already believe in it. That's why they picked the book up in the first place. Skeptical critics who can't relate usually aren't going to be reading it anyway, so there's no need to worry about them.

The focus of this write up evolved over time, eventually becoming what primarily amounts to insights and tactical tips gleaned from my own experiences, as well as an attempt to inject a fresh perspective into the works concerning certain topics. This write up is very personal you could say, definitely not presented in a detached, stuffy, academic manner, being that I relay stories and experiences from myself and people who have been close to me over the years. When sharing personal experiences and insights, down-to-earth accessibility is the key. Serious and stuffy just wouldn't work. All of which means you're going to see some of my informal writing style mixed throughout, including email-style smilies and laughing faces to indicate a humorous tone that words sometimes can't convey. ;)

So with that in mind, sit back and enjoy the ride…

Part I
Targeted Groups, Abductions and Mind Control

When I first wrote this book back in 2006 I didn't have knowledge of subjects such as "targeted individuals," "gang stalking" and the like. The only thing I was familiar with at that time were the so-called aliens, and then MILABS, which stands for "military abductions," and the mind control that goes with it. So the focus of the book relied on the term MILABS, since that was the closest thing I could find out there that matched my situation in any way, although I was never fully comfortable using the label. It wasn't like I paraded around declaring myself a "MILAB." I know that isn't entirely accurate, but again, nothing else out there even remotely came close to what I'd been experiencing. So for the time being, "MILAB" was it. All labels are limiting however, as they seek to define us and box us into narrow categories. It insinuates that one has arrived at a definitive conclusion, all further research is done, and one can now rest comfortably and just stagnate. Well for me, research and learning is never done, there's always more to the story going on, and more to learn. And learn I have in the past few years. At this point I'd like to think that I've put more of the pieces of the puzzle together, and hence, this revised version of "Chasing Phantoms." The overall focus of the book is still the same, however, Part I has been overhauled to include new information and insights that have come my way, along with some sections being rearranged. Part II has a few more experiences added, and in Part III some sections have also been rearranged/grouped together, along with new material added. A modified version of the Appendix that used to be in original versions of the book is now back in, and the Recommended Reading section has also been updated. One of the many benefits of self-publishing - you own the rights to your work and can change it whenever the need arises. ;)

In the past few years I've become aware of other groups of people out in the world who consider themselves to be targeted, but who don't label themselves as "MILABS," who maybe have never even heard of the term, and/or who definitely don't think of themselves as being "abductees" of any kind. They just feel that they're being harassed and honed in on in their daily lives. But as I wrote in the original version of this book, the term "abduction" tends to throw a lot of people off. Thanks to decades of UFO lore, the term now has a dramatic, grandiose connotation associated with aliens. I've met people who exhibited telltale suspicious indicators of having been tinkered with via military/government experimentation and programming, but who have shied away from pursuing the possibility or were skeptical of it all because the terms "abduction" and "abductee" sound so extreme. These terms make it seem that a person is in regular ongoing contact with space aliens, being floated out of their room onto UFOs, as commonly portrayed in mainstream literature. This is definitely not the case for many people…and yet there's no doubt that they have funny things happening to them. Anomalous dreams, paranormal happenings, strange synchronicities, markings on the body that weren't there when they went to bed, odd family situations, noteworthy psychic/intellectual talents and abilities that sets them apart from the average person, as well as all around general targeting/monitoring and life interference. Something's going on with them, but the term "abduction" as it is commonly understood doesn't really fit their (sometimes) more subtle situation. As a result, these people may wind up dismissing things and walking away, which is unfortunate because often times there is a story going on. Or in the case of those who call themselves "targeted individuals," they do recognize that something is going on, but they don't believe they're being taken by anything, although they very well might be.

So with that in mind, let's review the various targeted groups and situations that one will encounter within the research…

Targeted Groups

Alien abductees/contactees

This is one of the most commonly known aspects of woo-woo lore over the past 40 years, and which could even be labeled a national obsession considering the number of books, articles, movies, television shows, websites and yearly conferences held around the world for the subject over the past few decades. It involves the idea of non-human intelligences from other worlds making contact with humans. "Making contact" in the stereotypical way often involves sightings of UFOs as well as the UFOs interacting with humans in some way, maybe even landing, or beaming people up into them, known as "abductions." Abductions may also come in the form of visitation by these non-human intelligences, and have been reported to involve everything from medical procedures and experimentation, rapes, and/or the abductee being given information, or shown various things. The beings reported in such activities are wide and varied, but some of the main physical-based ones you'll typically hear about include the infamous "Grays" popularized by Whitley Streiber, as well as Reptilians, Mantids and the blond, blue eyed human looking "Nordics." There are also the non-human intelligences supposedly making contact with humans via channeling, be it trance channeling, ouija boards, and so on, passing along general information, wisdom and insights, or even predictions of future events for the personal lives of the contactees or humanity as a whole….whether truth or deception.

My research has led me to conclude that if there are indeed non-human intelligences running around, taking and probing people, then not all of them are actually flying here in spaceships from other planets as is commonly believed. Many are already here and have probably been here for quite some time. They can be of varying physicality (in the case of the infamous "Grays"), and as with the so-called Reptilians in particular they've probably been here for eons. So in that sense they're not extra-terrestrial. They're sub-terrestrial, and/or interdimensional.

Something I delve more into later on in this book is the idea of the underground/underwater worlds, and realms that co-exist alongside ours but at different dimensional frequencies. What we think we know of "reality" is actually a limited frequency spectrum involving a narrow physical band on the Earth's surface that spans only several miles from the ground up. It doesn't take into effect what's going on under our feet, of which we never see, nor what's under the oceans and in the mountains……let alone other dimensional frequencies. Humans have their narrow band of 3rd density surface world environmental niche, and that's fine, but problems arise when people become complacent, or even arrogant, believing that's all there could possibly be….merely because their lifetime of system indoctrination and thought control has never taught them otherwise. This particular realization is in my opinion the next step up in the awareness of the nature of these oft-reported non-human intelligences. In fact I prefer the term "non-human intelligences" to "aliens" because it allows for this aspect of things. "Aliens" has the connotation of interplanetary space travelers, and limits the definition of the word.

There's also the idea that these beings are not aliens, but are in fact living amongst us, right here in this realm, and walking around in society only barely disguised. The late Mac Tonnes, author of "The Cryptoterrestrials," gets into this concept.

Reasons for interdimensional targeting

Targeting, be it from aliens, interdimensionals, hybrids or what not is a huge subject, and I'm not able to dissect it in-depth due to space constraints. But generally speaking, the targeting of Man has probably been going on for eons. However there seems to have been a surge of….interactions you could call them, with non-human intelligences increasing since the mid-20th century. For those who live in the United States there is a conspiracy theory that says the U.S. government sold out the American people back in the 1940s to these non-human intelligences in exchange for power and technology. They basically gave permission to these beings to abduct members of the American civilian population, with the understanding that the government would get something in return from it, and that they would be in the loop as to who was being taken. Whether this is true or not, I don't know, but it does seem a little strange that there are a disproportionate number of "Gray alien" abductions happening in the United States versus other areas of the world.

The flip side of this argument postulates that the reason so many people in the U.S. think they are being taken by "Grays" is because the U.S. military/government itself is instigating all these abductions, and either using fabricated Gray screen memories, or convincing drugged and hypnotized targets to view a robot – or even worse, a costumed human – as the real deal. Hence, why other countries don't have this problem. While it's apparently true that these human elements do hide behind fake imagery of "aliens" to cover their tracks, something I get more into later on, I personally don't believe this is what's occurring in all situations, as we're talking thousands of abduction claims. So that explanation seems a little too simplistic, not taking into account the complexity and size of the operation, which I doubt the government could pull off. But, you never know I suppose. In fact in Part II of this book I mention a "dream" I once had involving a Gray that turned out to be nothing more than a robot of sorts, leathery skin over a very hard, most likely metallic skeleton, with a computer voice whose thought processes were merely a sensory analysis of its environment. And I also discuss the fact that I have experienced an attempt at the "Grays screen memory" that was quite overzealous. Yet despite these situations I still think that there is something to the whole idea of Gray interdimensionals, only because their imagery pre-dates the 20th century, and I have an anecdote that also confirms this, which I'll get into in a moment. So my theory is that in the case of screen memories, the government is using already existing and known imagery of these interdimensionals to cover their own tracks, something I delve more into later on in the book. (In addition I happen to have a coworker whose father was career Air Force, whom she claims actually saw a dead Gray body sometime in either the late 60s to early 70s, as I recently just learned. Since her father recently passed away she probably felt it was okay to talk about this classified experience he had in the military. I about fell out of my chair when she told me this. She was inspired to talk about it after I showed her a YouTube video of the April 14, 2010 Midwest fireball. After viewing the video she said there was no way that's a "meteor," because of the way it moved, and that it had to be a UFO of some sort. http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jIEKLf8WcZE&NR=1 One thing led to another, and next thing you know she's revealing what her dad saw years ago in the Air Force. She was one of the most unlikely of sources to have such a story, for reasons I won't get into, and she had no idea, and still doesn't, about my side work with my website and book since I'm adamant about keeping my personal life separate from work. Though she does know that I'm open to the weird stuff and have alternative viewpoints on pretty much everything, which was probably why she knew it was okay to say this to me in the first place. But for me, it's additional confirmation from a personal source confirming the existence of actual physical "Gray" bodies, whatever these things are.)

So that's the broad possibility for why, in the United States anyway, targeting of the population may be happening to such an increased degree. On the individual level are there certain types of people that these "aliens"/interdimensionals are interested in? Possibly. Various theories for individuals being singled out include:

- An individual's energy frequency/psychic inclinations. Many people, due to who they are frequency-wise/soul-wise, may gain the attention of "stuff," for good or for bad. And author John Keel in his book "Operation Trojan Horse" discussed the fact that many contactees are people who tend towards psychic abilities, which is probably the reason they're having these experiences in the first place. These interdimensionals seem to hone in on that.

  Relating to this is a theory concerning how, when certain people start waking up and going in a direction that poses a threat to "stuff," they may then receive the smack down you could call it, to try to keep them in line. "Smack down" can take many forms, including negative things being done to a target during abductions, mind control programming, "frequency envelopes" being put around them that cause disruption in their everyday lives, health disruption, and so on.

- Requesting to be abducted. The 35+ year alien and UFO campaign in the media has done an excellent job of indoctrinating the public with the images of aliens as something cool. There are New Age/pro-alien authors and researchers pushing the idea that these beings (whatever they are) are good, so therefore invite them into our lives to abduct us. And their readers often oblige and follow along. Big mistake.

- "You agreed to it." Another oft-reported reason that one will hear, usually in alien material with a positive and/or New Age spin to it, is that we ourselves somehow agreed to abductions/targeting prior to incarnating here. While I don't profess to know everything, I will say that I seriously have my doubts about this. Being that pretty much nobody can remember anything about their time prior to incarnating without the help of hypnosis, how would anybody know? It just seems to me that this is a disinformation ploy to trick the naïve, nice, gullible types who can be easily duped. This is a huge subject it itself, involving among other things, the New Age disinformation campaign that's been in full swing since at least the 1970s to put a love 'n light spiritual spin on the subject of Gray aliens. ("government sponsored damage control" is more like it….)

- Genetics/family line. "Stuff" also seems to have a keen interest in particular genetic bloodlines. As noted by the late alien/MILAB researcher Karla Turner, in her book "Taken," particular racial nationalities pop up again and again in abductee profiles. Irish/Celtic, and Native American are two biggies, possibly for their natural dissociative/trance and psychic capabilities and ability to slip into > other realms. Back in the days of the Romans, the Celts would go into battle wearing nothing but silt/clay in their hair and blue dye on their bodies called woad, and gold neck torques, whipped up into a crazed, trance-like frenzy, totally befuddling their enemies. It was as if they temporarily slipped out of 3rd density and "went someplace else." And the Native Americans as a whole can also be very much the warriors, and known for their shamanic, psychic, trance-state abilities. So something maybe has a big interest in these particular genetic bloodlines.

(For myself, I'm English, Irish, Scottish, Hungarian and Italian. I've been independently told by two intuitive women that there's something going on with regards to my bloodline. One of them specifically noted that there was a "convergence" of bloodlines with me. I have an idea of what both women were talking about, with my mom's Scotch Irish, auburn haired, fair and freckled skin genetics, complete with Rh- blood that was changed over to + via a complete blood transfusion right after she was born back in 1953, and either my dad's Hungarian line, or his English line, which was pedigreed way back when. Don't imagine there's much of anything going on with the Italian line, but you never know.)

Originally I had been tossing around a theory that every (souled, real) person out there is taken at some point during their childhood and tagged in some way (implanted), then released. Everybody. In the same way that a farmer monitors and controls its herd, the negs and interdimensionals are monitoring and attempting to control us. But then I realized that might be thinking too human, because an entity who can pass through walls and who bounces back and forth between this realm and others at will is an entity with the technological capability, or innate ability, to scan the population's frequencies for any sign of a disturbance. So this means at best, they're probably relying on etheric implants and etheric scanning to track the population. (In fact there's a book that I reference later on that gets into this specific subject.) So at the bare minimum the entire population is monitored and "managed" in my opinion, though the how's of it all is not definitively known or understood.

When you stop and really think about it, how would a group of aliens from across the galaxy figure out who's who on this planet to even know who to abduct? I realize that I'm just little old human me, lacking the super sophisticated intelligence that an advanced race might have, but still…. A race of beings flies all the way here (or zips through a wormhole, or shortcuts through a fold in space time, whatever, take your pick) and immediately starts honing in on certain humans, who also happen to be completely genetically incompatible with them, but not only that….they inherently know which ones to hone in on? How? Research has shown that there seems to be patterns towards who they're targeting (certain racial demographs/bloodlines, people with psychic abilities, etc.), which is where the foundation for this questioning comes from. But that level of knowing who to hone in on wouldn't make much sense for recent space alien strangers. Seems to make more sense for beings that have existed alongside us for eons, and therefore are already well versed in who's who and what's what on this planet.

Another big reason that I've come across for why the Grays are targeting the population says that the Grays are actually us in the future, after humanity has had to move underground for countless generations, and after "breeding out" emotions and getting rid of sex/reproduction, because you know, those things just make life so complicated. (I don't even know if there's an explanation offered for why they have no internal digestion system, and a need to absorb blood and fluids through their skin. hmmmmmm. O.o) But see, now they're dying out, and so they've been traveling back in time to abduct their past selves – us - taking our genetic material in order to fix themselves, because apparently they've gone horribly wrong. (to the point of you know, not even being human anymore. cough.) People are free to believe what they will, but this is a flat out manipulative lie in my opinion, designed to target newbies and naïve types. You get people to relate and sympathize with them so they're more willing to go along with things and give themselves up. The "we are you, and you are us" angle seems to be a big tactic that's employed. I've come across variations of it in my own experiences, as readers will see later on in this book.

So what are they here for then? Are they here to "usher us into a new age of love and light!" as the New Agers are so fond of saying? Are they here to take us over? Is there something that either we or the planet have that they want? Even after all these years of research, where I've encountered everything from abduction exams, to the claims of a hybrid breeding program, instilling programming deep into targets' subconscious minds and giving them Apocalyptic visions of the future, their penchant to supposedly fly around in strange aircraft, materializing in people's homes and making guest appearances in underground bases, their telepathic abilities and the both physical and non-physical nature of their bodies, people's claims that their large black eyes are merely coverings for regular reptilian-like eyes underneath and how they're just cybergenetic organisms, to the way that people, including the father of my coworker, have claimed to see dead alien bodies in military installations, as well as repeated claims of "Grays" just being screen memories and drug/hypnosis induced programming…..and on and on….I still can't come up with my own definitive conclusion as to what's really going on and what they want. It's a lot of seemingly contradictory information that doesn't appear to fit together at first glance. The only thing I am willing to tentatively conclude is that these beings (the real ones, not the screen memories and government tricks to cover their own tracks…) come from another realm as already mentioned, not a planet, and that they possess variable physicality. They can project themselves into this realm, and when they do, they become physical. And they may need cattle – or even human – parts and fluids to sustain themselves when in the physical state. (And that's just as far as the Grays are concerned. There are apparently many other beings here at this time as people's various firsthand accounts suggest.) It ties together some of these seemingly contradictory reports.

My conclusion is that whatever is going on with all of this, it's not positive. Since most people have no idea what they're dealing with, and because they don't have all the information, then in my opinion it's best to play it safe and not make the potential mistake of inviting these things in. It's a point I reiterate in other areas of this book, because it can't be emphasized enough. In my "Recommended Reading" section I give some good links to look into for more on this perspective (in particular see Montalk's "Discerning Alien Disinformation" and John Keel's "Operation Trojan Horse") and why it may be the more accurate viewpoint, versus what the New Age (and most of the mainstream UFO/alien gurus) have been trying to convince people, whether naively, or due to purposeful disinformation. The New Age is so fond of claiming that these outside intelligences are coming here (from other planets no less) because of our personal evolution, but this to me just shows the New Age's general tendency towards delusional self importance. As I've written on my website, so many love 'n light New Agers seem to be upper middle class, or outright upper class level people in rich Westernized nations with very cushy, limited, sheltered lives and waaay too much time on their hands. For that reason I don't put much credence in their interpretation of events. :/

The other thing to keep in mind too is that Grays in particular are completely overexposed in abduction/alien/UFO lore, at the expense of other types of beings. Is this by design? Keep everybody's focus endlessly diverted way over there on "the Grays!" who we're told are space aliens flying here from Zeta Reticuli, this way nobody is looking around at other possibilities? In Part II there's an anecdote called "Gray Overlay?" that took place in Portland, Oregon, where it seemed that something (that took the form of a "Gray" according to my brother who witnessed it) started to try to take me over/overlay me while I was laying down in a relaxed state. I could feel this happening, so I don't doubt what he claimed to see. That doesn't sound much like "space aliens" to me. More like interdimensional Neg entity of some sort.

Something that comes up time and again in the research is the idea of "humans as energy food source" for beings in other realms (Robert Monroe termed this energy "loosh") as well as humans serving as a literal physical food source. The epidemic of missing people worldwide, which we apparently hear nothing about in the mainstream media, supposedly ties into this as does the phenomenon of cattle mutilations. Possibly cattle parts have to suffice when human parts are not available. So whatever these things are, this has to be considered as a possibility for what these things really are and where their true motivations lie. Even though I'm still open to the idea of interplanetary space visitors there's too much research showing that these things are a lot more local, with less lofty ideals, and people really don't understand what they're dealing with when it comes to trying to channel them, or when they've found themselves on the receiving end of targeting by these beings. I've been there in my own way, which I'll get into later on in this book, so I don't say that in a holier-than-thou way, I say it because I relate from first hand experience.

MILABS

MILABS, the abbreviation for "military abductions," is a term coined by Dr. Helmut Lammer and is the title of his book by the same name. It involves civilians being tailed, harassed, abducted, interrogated and even implanted and programmed by government/military spooks following on the heels of their alien abductions. The accepted logic within abduction lore being that the military wants to learn as much as possible about the alien presence by abducting and tracking the same people the aliens are.

However, it seems that many people have far more subtle situations happening to them in their lives, so that particular grandiose definition of MILABS wouldn't necessarily be accurate for them. For that reason I've expanded my usage of the term. There are the military personnel and possibly even their offspring and spouses who are being taken and used for mind control programs and various side projects, unknown to them, and probably completely unrelated to anything having to do with aliens. This is something not discussed at all in the Lammers' "MILABS" book, and yet it's one of the more important keys to the puzzle as far as I'm concerned. I will be returning to this point later on. Then there are also the people who claim to have been taken by human military/government agencies and brought to either above or below ground bases where they witnessed military personnel working in cahoots with various types of non-human beings - Reptilians, Grays, Amphibians, etc.; a situation where the military is already well aware and quite knowledgeable about the non-human presence and isn't needing to take people in order to "learn something about them." So for me personally I have expanded my definition of MILABs to include any situation that involves the human military/government taking, experimenting on and programming other humans, whether military personnel and their family, or civilians; and whether they're at odds with aliens, or working right along with them. Any situation where there seems to be a military/government agency connection involved, period. And that's how I'll be defining and using the term for this book.

Causes for MILAB targeting

So how does one find themselves the unwitting target of military/government black ops abductions and/or experimentation? According to research, it can arise from several possible avenues:

1. Being in the government/military, either in the past or present;
2. Having indirect ties to the government/military through a parent or spouse;
3. Society's throwaway kids in jails and juvees and on the street; possibly incarcerated adults, as well and those in mental institutions;
4. And as already mentioned, being abducted by "something else", i.e., so-called aliens, which in turn generates interest from various military factions.

And in doing the research, it seems that MILABs targets are being used for:

1. PSI work. Remote viewing, psychic warfare and psychic experimentation, including telepathy, telekinesis, astral travel, etc.
2. Technological experimentation. Implants, microwave signals, cloaking devises, holographic reality, etc. "Voices in the head", remote thought influencing, what can they get people to believe, how can society as a whole be influenced to go down certain paths.
3. Hallucinogenic mind control experimentation. (Note: Probably more of an interest back in the 1950s-70s than present day.) Testing the effects and potentials of particular drugs and hallucinagens; experimenting to see how the human mind can be bent and shaped and re-worked.
4. Programmed sleeper agents, tools and pawns.. Compartmentalization of the brain via trauma-based mind control, drugs, hypnosis and electroshock. Victims used as agent provocateurs, for criminal work, terrorist activity, assassinations; sex slaves, "Presidential Model" message couriers, the porn industry, Hollywood and the music industry, etc. Somebody who can be programmed to suit any agenda that's needed.

5. Learn as much about the alien presence as possible by interrogating, implanting and monitoring alien abduction victims.

Let's go through some of the items on the first list in more detail:

1. The military abducting/experimenting on its own personnel

Based on my dad's story, which I get into in more detail in the Appendix section, and based on other materials I have come across, my conclusion is that the military is always scoping for talented recruits - those who have certain natural, latent abilities. One of the ways they may be able to discover who's who is through the Military Aptitude Test (MAT). They're not just trying to figure out where to assign you based on your intelligence and natural skill inclination, they could also be trying to figure out What can you do for them? Are you a good candidate for any of their side project experiments?

An interesting excerpt I found in Carla Emery's "Secret, Don't Tell" mentions this very thing (bolded words my own emphasis):

> "The government was pursuing exactly that line of research: creating an artificial-split personality out of an imaginary childhood playmate...An imaginary childhood playmate is a marker for hypnotic susceptibility. It can also be a point of fracture for artificial personality-splitting…."
> "R.J.", a former Ranger and Viet Nam Special Forces retiree told me, in 1991, "everyone who is going into any branch of the military takes the Military Aptitude Test, the MAT. It asks several questions along those lines: "Did you have imaginary playmates?" "How old were you when you quit playing with your imaginary friend?"…Almost ever person who goes into a Special Forces unit has had a childhood imaginary friend. I did. He was a mean guy. He did things I couldn't do." - page 60

In my Dad's situation, he relayed to me that as soon as he took his MAT upon enlisting in the Navy, he was in essence, whisked away you could say. He was immediately assigned to be a Tech Personnel, translating Morse code into type. A very difficult task that most people can't do. Many people can barely type adequately….let alone be able to simultaneously translate Morse code…...let alone translate it at over 80-90 wpm typing speed. But my dad did. And his next four years in the military found him experiencing what could be considered preferential treatment, according to how he described it, strange incidents of psychic surging, close calls with death where he always seemed to have a bubble of protection around him, and even a close encounter with a UFO that appeared over a base in southeast Asia…where he was standing directly underneath it. Based on further details my dad provided it seemed that he was definitely being used for something on the side during his time in the military, and it probably didn't stop after he left. And it probably didn't start when he entered either, though that's a whole side story in itself. See the Appendix for more on this.

Following is an excerpt from a message board posting that was addressed to me on August 19, 2003, regarding one man's experiences when first enlisting in the military. He had been posting his strange and unusual experiences plaguing him throughout his life, including psychic phenomenon and funny phone calls from unknown sources, with a male voice saying very pointed things to him. For someone who has never researched this topic his stories would go right over their head, but after reading some of his posts I recognized what seemed to me to be military mind control experimentation. I took the chance and posted something back to him, broaching the subject, mentioning how his stories have the trademark of such written all over them. Here are the relevant excerpts from the more detailed response that he posted back (content kept as is, including any writing errors, bolded words my own emphasis):

> "If there was ever a direct involvement with what you are speaking of, I know exactly where and when it would have occurred….I will start by saying that I was not in the military for any length of time beyond 12 weeks of basic training. There was some medical problems and I had to be released….I had scored extremely high on my ASFAB aptitude test before entering the service. I was going to go Marines, but opted for the Army at the last minute with a friend. I specifically was going for Airborne and whatever that would lead to. One day, one of the Drill Sgts. read some names aloud and told several of us to get on a bus with blacked out windows. We were driven to a remote location and told to enter some building. We were put in a room and this guy comes in and tells us that we were going to listen to some tapes of a man talking over a speaker system. He was going to speak a foreign language and the tests were going to see if by just > listening to the cadence and inflection in the man's voice, whether or not we would be good candidates to go to interrogation or linguistic training. I am an excellent test taker, but never had an affinity for foreign languages. I mean, I like them, hearing people express themselves, but I really had no interest in learning one.

> "I remember that I stopped answering the questions after only 3 or 4 as I really wasn't interested in speaking a foreign language, but after that, everything else seems blank. Seriously, I don't know if I took the opportunity to go to sleep or what, but I don't remember getting back on that bus to go back to the barracks some couple of hours later. This is about the only instance I can recall of missing any period of time from my life…"

I think it's safe to say that the military has many secondary layers to it, and national defense is only one bit of what they're actually doing with their recruits. And it's a shame too that so many naïve young men and women enlist every year, not realizing what's really going on behind the scenes. They're signing away their bodies and lives, in more ways than one. And even worse is the fact that once you sign yourself away, it apparently doesn't end after your time has expired. It seems that the military believes they own their personnel forever. It really is like signing a contract with the devil when you think about it. Even if you somehow manage to back out, or find an excuse to be discharged before your tour is up they've already got your information and have your MAT/IQ test results, and you've possibly already undergone one or more programming sessions whether you know it or not. You become permanently on record, and there's no undoing that. At this point, considering the documents that have been declassified which flat out admit to the government and military experimenting on unwitting personnel and civilians over the decades it amazes me that people would still enlist at all.

2. Being family of military personnel

This is one of the most important links in my opinion. In particular people seem to get on the radar when they're the offspring of those who work for military intelligence. I don't know exactly why, but it's something I realized through my research and personal experience. Time and again you'll find that so many abductees/mind control targets have/had parents (usually fathers), in the military, and often times working in the capacity of national security and intelligence. Air Force, Army and Naval intelligence, NASA and NSA. My own father was Navy tech personnel, reporting to the NSA for intelligence, aka spying, during Vietnam. Several MILABS/military targets that I've known over the past few years, and ones that I had suspicions about, all had dads and sometimes even grandfathers who were in the Navy or Naval intelligence. Around 2002-03 I came across mention somewhere in my internet travels and research about the Navy targeting its tech personnel specifically for its mind control experimentation research. I wish I knew where I saw this, but it was a major piece of the puzzle falling into place for me considering my own dad's background and our very strange lives.

I'm theorizing that if the military finds a particularly useful personnel subject for their side projects they would therefore be interested in keeping tabs on that person's offspring down the line in case the children inherit some of the same – or better - talents and abilities.

A point worth mentioning here is how I started paying attention to those news stories of women who've flipped out and killed their children and babies because of "voices in the head" driving them mad and telling them to. More than one turned out to be wives of NASA personnel and military intelligence men. Yes there is such a thing as post-partum depression, but this military and NASA pattern can not be overlooked. Something suspicious is going on there. Why are wives of NASA personnel and military men having voices in the head? Mind control experimentation perhaps, extending to the spouses of military personnel? Very well could be. Also pay attention to prominent New Age personalities and channelers, see how many have military and intelligence connections within their immediate family.

I received an email from a woman while originally writing this book back in 2006 who was wondering if her fiancé could have mind control programming. The fiancé's family fit the profile of my ex boyfriend Steve's family, nearly to a T: The father working for the government in nuclear weapons engineering; the fanatical Christian/Catholic mother who was mentally unstable while simultaneously trying to uphold the image of the "Perfect American Family," and the son with the compartmentalized mind, who can't remember his dreams and believes that he doesn't dream, but yet, talks in his sleep. (in fact when I first started reading her email her description so closely matched Steve and his family that my nerves stood on end, wondering "oh my god….is she talking about STEVE??" That's how close the two were at first glance.) Both families did have differences it turned out, and the story of her fiancé is more like a combination of my brother Joe and my ex Steve if you were to mix the two together. But the fact that there could be such a similar profile of sorts was utterly amazing to me. What are the implications of that?

The biggest question she asked though, which got to the core of the issue, was "Why?" Why would the kids of these military personnel be targeted for programming? What purpose does it serve? What are they being used for??

All I can do is theorize, because only the people instilling the programming know why they're doing it and what long range purpose it serves…if any. It always reminds me of the 1997 movie "Cube", where it's revealed that there is no point to the Cube experiment, and there is no one person in charge of it all within the government. I've actually had the thought that it's almost as if they're just creating nonsense work at the expense of people's lives in order to keep themselves busy so they can remain on the payroll. Another major possibility is that somebody out there would like to create what's known in mind control research as an army of sleeper agents, each individual programmed to fulfill the agenda of TPTB years down the line. The only problem with this theory is that to program thousands of individuals who effectively serve as a programmed army means that it's organized, and the programmers know what the long-term agenda actually is, and how it will all unfold. It seems farfetched. The future holds too many unknown variables, and nothing ever goes as planned, even for them.

So another, more moderate theory, which sits neatly in the middle, is the concept of guinea pigs. Forever testing and experimenting on personnel and their families to refine mind control techniques so that later down the line (meaning, right now, and beyond), when these techniques are needed as the agenda unfolds, "they" will already know the most efficient manner in which to go about things from their years of research and work. This is basically saying that somebody like my ex, and the fiancé of the woman who emailed me, as well as hundreds or even thousands of others over the past few decades, were just disposable guinea pigs. And that could very well be the case.

3. Targeting juvenile delinquents and inmates

Several years ago I came across an article that I now highly recommend, "Operation Open Eyes: Mind Control in Amerika - 5 Easy Steps to Create a Manchurian Candidate" by Gunther Russbacher, who apparently used to be second highest in command in the CIA. http://www.rumormillnews.com/operation.htm

In Gunther's piece he outlines the government's process for selecting and programming society's throwaway kids and juvenile inmates to become Manchurian Candidates – programmed sleeper agents designed to be used as assassins, criminals, and all around agent provocateurs. The reason this piece jumped out at me was because I recognized what I was reading as being my younger brother's situation, through and through. My brother Joe spent ages 14 through 17 locked up in various juvenile detention centers and mental hospitals in Connecticut, after going on a convenience store robbing spree at the age of 14. The Joe that emerged from his time in lock up was not the same one who went in. The old Joe was spacey and drifty, in his own world, and struggled in school. He had the criminal potential, obviously, or he wouldn't have been locked up in the first place, but his skills certainly weren't honed by any means. The New Joe was proficient in hand to hand combat and not afraid to kill. This new Joe saw and noticed everything, and when he was out and about in public he was always "on", ready to pounce. He also had inexplicable knowledge of all things relating to radios/scanners and electronics even though he's never studied the subject a day in his life, was pulling A's like it was nothing once he was mainstreamed back into public high school (this, despite not showing up half the time), displayed a split off multiple persona named Shawn Hill (which I get into later on in Part III), and now experienced abduction flashback memories, missing time, and was being followed and monitored by "Them." Our long distance phone conversations were being listened in on, with the accompanying noise disturbance and they would apparently follow him around in cars and such. Something happened to Joe while he was locked up, and when I read Gunther Russbacher's piece so much of it matched up to Joe's situation that I now refer people to read it. Joe was later given agent provocateur assignments…things I had to talk him out of, which I can't even discuss publicly because of the high level nature of it. We're not talking petty nonsense. (Though most of his everyday criminal pursuits were in fact, petty.) He would tell me with glassy far away eyes and a dazed smile what he was supposed to do, for Them, to "prove that he was ready for the next level." It was exactly what Gunther outlines in his article, word for word.

As with my own situation, I don't think there was just one thing going on with Joe. He was probably already an abductee going back to childhood, and whatever happened to him while in lockup and immediately afterwards was just one more layer of a multi-layered situation. All of a sudden "something" became VERY interested in monitoring and keeping tabs on Joe once he was released…and then interested in me, for being so closely involved with him in life as his sister. And of course it was after he was released that he has abduction flash back memories, missing time, and also when he developed his split-off alternate persona, Shawn Hill. So this does seem to be a very real thing happening in America's incarceration system, for both youths and adults, and needs to be mentioned. If you do the research, you will find articles and declassified government docs pertaining to this subject.

On a side note: Tying this back into items 1 and 2, many many people are probably being taken and used (see the section called "Multiple Personalities vs. Multiple 'Personas'" for more on this), and out of all those people that are taken and tinkered with, probably only a small percentage will wind up being useful for them in the long term. Many might be sifted out, due to any number of reasons which will cause them to fall to the wayside - programming doesn't stick, or has damaged the psyche beyond what they can use; maybe their profile isn't right, and so on. So what happens to all the ones that are rejected, discarded, or who just got phased out over time? Well, they're still out there in the world, living their lives. And they probably have a few observant friends, family members or significant others who notice strange "quirks" about them, which initially make no sense…unless they're lucky enough to stumble across books or articles about mind control, which describe these people and their situations and background profiles to a T, allowing for the observant person to begin making some "aha!" connections. Unfortunately though, most people won't cross paths with material about mind control and abductions, so most of these people's stories never got resolved.

4. The military against the aliens

There are two types of alien/military abductions being reported: One where both sides are working together, and one where they are at odds. Regarding the latter, some military abductees claim to be abducted by the aliens first, with the military spooks following close on their heels. This type of abduction often involves military personnel intensely interrogating the abductee for any information they may have regarding their alien abductors. The use of force, intimidation and threats are reported, with the interrogators berating the abductee into revealing what they know.

Taking excerpts from several books regarding MILABS, we see this:

> "After this confrontation the men in the lab coats and military man took her [Melinda] to an interrogation room. She described in detail how they walked through halls with video cameras on the walls and metal doors. Inside this room was a table and chairs. Melinda was forced to sit on a chair and one man in a lab coat gave her a shot in the arm and a strange drink. After this she felt "high". She was very frightened as she felt one of the men grasp her on the cheeks. A man in a white lab coat stood behind her and a spotlight shone on her chair.
> A red-haired military officer asked her questions concerning her alleged alien experiences. Strangely, it appeared that they wanted information about UFO technology. He asked her, "What have they asked you? Tell me about their technology? Tell me about the drive system, the drive mechanism? You tell me about what they told you to do! What did they tell you? What did they ask you to do? Tell me, tell me, tell me. You know you are not theirs, you are ours!'
> After the session she was brainwashed by the same person."
> - "MILABs: Military Mind Control and Alien Abductions" - Dr. Helmut Lammer and Marion Lammer, page 140.

> "It was sometime in the winter of 1993 when they went the farthest they'd ever gone. I lived alone in my own apartment on Milwaukee's east side, when I had one of those waking dreams. But this time something was highly different and not very dreamlike at all.

In fact, I was wide awake in the middle of the night, in a place that was not my bedroom.

I was in a small office with a large pane windows, and I knew that this place was located underground somewhere. There was vomit-green pain bordering the room with a pale yellow or off-white paint on the main part of the cement block walls that surrounded me. I was sitting in an armless chair, in front of desk where a man in his mid-thirties stood. He wore a white shirt with a navy blue tie, and closely cut hair. He was leaning over the desk glaring at me, pounding his fist and demanding at me, "You have to tell us where they are! You got to help us find them!" There was a guard standing directly to my right who was dressed in a typical, military camouflage uniform, holding a rifle.

"Help you? Find who?" It then began to sink in that something was truly wrong here and I exclaimed, "Hold on, where am I?"

Immediately following that statement one of them said, "Oh, she's waking up!" Then suddenly I was out again."

- "The Secret War" - Heidi Hollis, page 131

"A third controversial topic avoided by many researchers focuses on military involvement with aliens and abductees. For Lisa, as is so often the case with abductees, the first memory of a possible encounter with the military surfaced in a dream.

"I was being interrogated by the military," she said, "pushed and made to lie crouched on the ground. In the back were some trucks, and beside them were guys in black uniforms standing watching me. The men asking questions were in regular military clothes. They held me down with the butts of their guns. They told me to give them the knowledge and they said 'at any cost.' I told them I didn't know what they were talking about, and they just repeated themselves "

- "Taken" - Karla Turner, PhD - page 75

In these examples there seems to be a clear delineation between the aliens and the military. Neither group seemed to be working together, and the government interrogators were obviously out of the loop in regards to what was going on. They were always a day late and a dollar short. Another feature is the antiquated methods of information extraction - drugs, threats and intimidation, pounding on the desk and waving a gun around. But if these memories accurately represent what really happened, and these military factions truly had a need for interrogations to extract information, then it's safe to say that they were pretty bottom rung level based on their methods.

Of course when it comes to this subject nothing is what it seems to be, and there could very well be a strong possibility of games, and reverse psychology going on here. When I read these interrogation scenarios they always strike me as being so goofy and over the top. Something seems wrong and off about them, and I wouldn't be surprised to learn that they were all another level of mind games being played on the abductees.

When looking at this issue closer, what I've wondered is:

- Does the military really believe that by holding a gun to an abductee's head, screaming at them and threatening them that this will elicit coherent, calm, in-depth answers about "the aliens"? I don't know about anybody else, but I'd probably be a bit shaky and have my mind go blank if I found myself in that type of situation.
- Do they really think that a female abductee who's been flat on her back on an alien's examination table, being poked and prodded, is going to be able to tell the military spooks what sort of UFO drive technology these aliens possess??
- Then there's the fact that most alien abductees don't remember their abductions, period, unless under hypnosis. And even then it's tricky business. But the military expects that the target will remember these details while awake – and with a gun to their head?

So sure, maybe the military really is that stupid…or maybe these interrogation scenarios are a ruse.

One purpose these interrogations serve is to reinforce and "prove" the idea that there really is a war between the aliens and certain factions of the U.S. military. But what if there isn't? What if the military is in full collusion with them but doesn't want the public to realize this? How convenient would it be then to have abductees running around with memories – which they were allowed to remember – proving that "See, the military really is in the dark about the aliens. They don't have a clue, but they're working hard to get answers!" Again, it's all about that double reverse psychology mentioned in the opening introduction. So much of what's going on in the world of abductions requires multiple unravelings to untangle what's really happening here. Games within games within games.

More researchers and abduction targets could benefit from learning how to think in this manner, scrutinizing and unraveling material and not just taking things at face value.

As an abductee (and I really don't like using that term, or any term, to describe myself) I can say that it's not common to have actual clear, coherent abduction memories. We're lucky if we're left with a three second snippet flash, let alone something as complex as the above three excerpts. So that says to me that maybe, possibly, these women were allowed to remember these incidents, in the hopes that it would somehow make it out there and help prove the idea that the government really is at war with these beings. Because when you do the research, the real story seems to be that not only is the U.S. government working with these beings, but they sold off the American public in exchange for technology and personal advancement.

A sub-issue regarding the topic of the military taking alien abductees for interrogations is: In order to even chase down the abductee for interrogations, how did the military know that the alien abductee was taken in the first place? That part is skipped over in the sources I've read and is an actual plot hole of sorts. Maybe nobody actually knows, or they feel it's already implied and understood.

The major possibility here is implants. Any alien abductee is going to have some sort of implant designed for monitoring and tracking them. So it's possible the government has technological capabilities to sniff out these implants. What sort of technology could be used by even the low rung military factions to locate any abductee, anywhere on the planet? When I thought about this it took me all of about two seconds to come up with "satellites," which is one decent, man-made technology that's been around since the 1950's. Still another possibility is that the government has developed their own technology to detect a "disturbance in the grid," and so when UFOs and non-physical aliens are popping in and out of 3rd density, plucking people up and dumping people off, then the military spooks are sure to follow close behind. From there, it's almost a given that the government/military abductors would in turn implant the abductee using their own implants for their own monitoring purposes. It basically becomes a tug-of-war.

The third possibility is that there is no war between the military and the aliens, which means that if both sides are actually working together then it would be known when any person (in the U.S. at least) is abducted by aliens. So that would negate the entire issue.

In my research I've noticed a bit of conflict regarding the alien aspect of MILABs. Researchers, including abductees and supposed survivors of military black ops mind control projects, can't seem to agree on how aliens fit into the equation – or if they even do at all. I personally believe in the concept of aliens, or rather, non-human intelligences. I don't think we got to where we are today without the help of "something else" along the way, and all the evidence seems to be pointing to non-human intelligences manipulating the affairs of Mankind, and steering the direction of life on Earth in general, from behind the scenes. (And this can include feeding ideas into people's minds without them realizing where they're coming from. It doesn't mean to imply a strictly overt interaction out in the open.) There have been several excellent books that offer up convincing evidence with regards to this whole subject so I won't get into it all here. But considering where humanity has gone in such a short period of time, it almost seems pretty farfetched to believe otherwise. Where did The Powers That Be suddenly get this technology from? I suppose we could have gotten there on our own. But to go from the gritty industrial age of the late 1800s to computers, lasers, genetic engineering, satellites and space flight – just to name a few things - within roughly 70-80 years after existing in simplicity for thousands of years seems oh, I don't know, pretty weird.

Following are two examples of cautious skeptics who believe in covert military abductions and activity, but yet doubt the idea of a military/alien alliance. In the aforementioned book "MILABs: Mind Control & Alien Abductions" by Dr. Helmut Lammer and Marion Lammer, we see an interesting refusal to accept the possibility of military factions working in cahoots with aliens/Reptilians. Bolded words my own emphasis:

> "After the description of the reptoid-like being she remembered how she was raped by this creature. We don't know what this traumatic experience means. We don't think, however, that the military worked with this reptoid creature. It could be possible that Michelle was drugged with an hallucinogen, raped by a human and projected the reptoid as a kind of screen memory, although she > described the skin and other features of the creature quite realistically." - page 49

> "Since many people have phobias about reptiles or snakes it would be logical that they would experience such beings if they were on a grueling LSD trip…" - page 50
> "Delora's (pseudonym) father was a career Navy officer, in the supply corps…She believes that she saw "aliens" and humans performing medical procedures on them…Delora believes that the humans in the capsules were clones. It is more probable that the humans in the capsules were used for secret bio-warfare or chemical warfare experiments, since cloning technology was certainly not well developed during the 1960's. It is more likely that the supposed aliens who worked with human doctors were medical staff who covered their faces with surgical masks or wore bio-hazard clothes." - page 55- 56

The Lammers find it easier to accept the idea that the military was keeping people in capsules for covert bio-warfare experimentation versus the idea of aliens creating clones. Both theories can seem pretty far out there, and neither one is more believable than the other, in my opinion. The refusal to accept one while grappling at the other could show distress/denial, unconscious programming, or a conscious agenda on the part of the authors. What also stands out for me is the faulty, missing the point logic in the last excerpt about cloning technology not being well developed in the 1960s. Well of course humans didn't have that level of technology back then…but aliens /non-human intelligences would have. And that's exactly who Delora was speaking of in these excerpts.

Another example is an excerpt taken from the book "Close Encounters of the Possession Kind," by William Baldwin, Ph.D. Dr. Baldwin is a hypnotist specializing in entity/alien attachments on people and how to rid their presence. In the following excerpt, an attached alien entity harasser is speaking directly to Dr. Baldwin through the hypnotized subject. Bolded words are my own emphasis.

> "These beings were conducting some sort of mind control experiments on many humans, with permission by some human authority, and absolutely refused to cease their operations. As the therapist and facilitator of the sessions, I usually make a demand for > the client's sovereign right of individual freedom and free will in such cases. Usually it works, sometimes not so well. This being disdainfully agreed to release this one woman from the project, but no one else.

> This aroused my curiosity and I asked:
> Dr. B.: "How many humans on this planet are you affecting in this way?"
> The immediate, unmistakable, and ominous reply:
> C.: "Ask your government."
> Father perceived him turning his attention away from us. We were unimportant to him, as was the single female subject he had just discarded from his project.
> There was an unmistakable feeling of malevolence and personal threat. That was enough. While I do not concur with the conspiracy theorists regarding the Government-ET connection, I believe the intelligence agencies are capable of covert nefarious activities involving citizens."

Dr. Baldwin wholeheartedly believes in aliens and demonic entities. He acknowledges his belief in nefarious, covert intelligence agency activities, and later on in the book expands on this topic when he mentions the CIA's MK Ultra mind control experiments. Yet….he can't reconcile the two sides joining forces. Additionally, there's a not-so-subtle message being conveyed by labeling such a belief as being in the realm of "conspiracy theorists." Last time I checked, both a belief in aliens and acknowledgement of covert, nefarious activities on U.S. citizens by intelligence agencies was also in the realm of conspiracy theorists, according to the mainstream world. But never mind that. ;)

"Close Encounters of the Possession Kind" is still highly recommended though, despite that lone, puzzling comment about not believing the conspiracy theorists who talk about an alien/government alliance. However, "MILABs" has always struck me as being a mixed bag. It addresses this clandestine topic, making it seem like it's on the side of the abductees who would be reading it to get answers, only to turn around and subtly undermine people's experiences concerning a military/non-human intelligence alliance, as well as the use of cartoon illustrations throughout. The comic book-style pictures give the book, and the topic as a whole, a silly feel. Maybe someone somewhere realized that in order for the book to be allowed out there it had to be done that way…? Or, it could be a covert agenda, I don't know. All I can do is suggest for people to be alert when reading any material that's prominently out there discussing military or joint alien/military abduction operations. Comb through it carefully, and be perceptive to possible subtle undermining going on – attempts to play down or even flat out dismiss certain sensitive subject matter without any proof of investigation on the matter (just expecting the reader to take the author's word for it that "There's nothing to see here, move it along!"), skipping over material that should be covered while focusing heavily on something that doesn't seem all that important, speaking in authoritarian absolutes, displaying black/white either/or limited thinking, using silly comic book picture illustrations, etc., and so on.

Ultimately, everybody has to make up their own mind about whether there really are aliens…and if there are, whether they are working with factions of the human population. I can only speak for myself, as somebody who has witnessed hyperdimensional happenings and interacted with non-physical entities from other realms. I have my own proof that this aspect of reality is real, so it's not a stretch for me to imagine a merger of those realms with human higher ups. For this reason, I'm going to approach my book from that particular point of view, addressing topics which involve the non-human/hyperdimensional aspect of things.

Ritual Abuse/Satanic cults

Then there are the Satanic groups who abuse people in their rituals, with injuries, rape and outright killing. This is a huge subject, and there has been much material written about it. I'm not going to delve too much into it here only because I lack firsthand experience with the subject. It still needs to be mentioned though as it's one of those reasons why some people have very unusual lives and why they've gotten on the radar for targeting.

Many ritual abuse targets have reported that they live in what outwardly seems to be upstanding families, but yet who belong to these groups in secret, and grew up having to participate in the various rituals where they were injured, raped, forced to engage in traumatizing behavior and forced to witness the ritual killings of animals, babies, children or adults. Frequent childhood sickness and anomalous injuries on the body may have followed them through their life as they live this double existence. This "double life" may be compartmentalized in the brain, creating split off alternate personas, ie, Dissociative Identity Disorder (DID) formerly referred to as multiple personality disorder. I've read of targets who've left or gotten away from these groups but who then find themselves on the receiving end of ongoing monitoring and harassment, due to their earlier (usually unwitting) involvement with it all.

The idea of Satanic groups performing rituals is controversial, and by controversial it means that things become a back and forth finger pointing, "he-said she-said" between those who claim to be victims and former members of these groups, and so-called experts denying that such a thing is possible, coming across to me as if they're merely trying to impose damage control. For me though, common sense says that it's not possible for so many people all over the world to be lying, fabricating hysterical stories that often times match up in their details. Yes, some may indeed be hoaxes and power-of-suggestion hysteria. But……I don't think they all can be.

I've always found this subject fascinating, specifically when it involves claims of high up people in charge of things in our world being involved in these sorts of unsavory activities. Everything about the way this world functions is a negative mess, and any alert, awake person has to wonder why that is. Well, this subject seems to be that missing puzzle piece. Suddenly so many things about all aspects of this world make a lot more sense when viewed through the lens of "serving dark forces."

Gangstalking/Targeted Individuals

Taken from my "Gangstalking vs. Hyperdimensional Matrix Attacks" article on my website: http://in2worlds.net/gangstalking-and-targeted-individuals

> "Gang stalking, according to people's accounts, involves an organized group of people who have been recruited to go after various individuals in the world. Victims of targeting are said to involve a myriad of people, from whistle blowers, activists, people who are > alone, vulnerable and "different" from society's norms in any way (such as homosexuals, single mothers, etc.), among others. One day somebody somewhere decided that tag, the target was it, and suddenly The Game was off and running. Only….nobody filled the target in about what was going on or what the rules were.

> "Gang stalkers have been reported as following targets in cars, vans, on foot or on bikes for weeks, months, sometimes years on end, making sure that the target knows that they're being followed and monitored as they live their life. Targets typically report having their cars/residence/etc. broken into, with things moved around, possibly property destroyed or computers fried out. Phones may be tapped and strange messages left on the voice mail. Slander campaigns might be put into effect to destroy the target's reputation within their community and within any groups they may belong to. The gang stalkers may position themselves at whatever place the target may be going and then say weird random "street theater" sorts of comments to the target, or have loud conversations amongst themselves making sure that the target can hear them saying things that directly relate to the target's personal life that they should have no way of knowing…..again, letting them know that all eyes are on them. The stalkers often move into a target's apartment/condo complex or housing neighborhood to gain closer proximity. Even worse, according to many claims, a target can move around, even locating to other countries to try to escape the harassment and supposedly the problem will continue….which implies a vast network of people worldwide that can be "called on" when needed to go after a target. (more on this particular idea in a bit.) But all the while, doing everything in such a way that it's almost impossible for the target to prove to people that any of it is happening, and to where the target just comes across as sounding completely crazy."

I went on to note that:

> "Oddly enough, the description of the gang stalker modes of operation matched several things that I described in Part II of my book, in the 'Sidetrack Circus Diversion'… section. Random street theater comments directed at me? Check. Somebody apparently in my apartment when I was at work, things messed with and changed around to let me know somebody had been there? Check. Tapped phones and phone interference? Check. Bizarre messages left on my > answering machine and then-cell phone voice mail (including the sounds of marching jackboots of all things) when almost nobody even had my phone number? Check."

My conclusion about the gangstalking phenomena as noted in that article was as follows:

> "Gang stalking, in my opinion, actually involves a mix of several things that have been mistakenly lumped into the same category: 1) Hyperdimensional attacks from non-physical entities outside this realm who hone in on individuals over the course of their life either because the target poses a threat to the Negs, and/or, because the target is a guaranteed disempowered, low frequency food source, and then 2) Physically-based groups and syndicates who often times have government ties, targeting people who pose a threat to the negative elements in charge of this reality and the establishment. Both can overlap in my opinion, as it seems that the non-physical demonic Negs can also work through these syndicates and gang stalkers, using them to do their bidding. And finally, 3) a person's personal frequency and the way they interface with reality, especially if they've gotten into habitual mindsets of fear, paranoia and disempowerment, can help perpetuate and escalate harassment by drawing more of it to themselves due to conscious and unconscious expectation.
> "Based on much of what I've read of people's accounts online, so much of what is being labeled as "gangstalking" is, in my opinion, actually a case of synchronicity. Amazing coincidence, but where the person(s) involved are not knowingly trying to perpetrate something on the supposed target. I encounter synchronicity in my own life on a regular basis, as evidenced by other write ups on this website including comments made by people around me and general situations that match up uncannily to thoughts I've had. But this does not mean "people are reading my mind" or "everybody's watching me and are in on it." Unfortunately that mindset runs rampant within much gangstalking material that's out there as I've seen. The reason for this I think is because the proponents of the "strictly physical-based gangstalking" theory have no knowledge of hyperdimensional stuff, neg entities and so on, and have never researched the subject of synchroncities. They're working with a puzzle that's missing most of the pieces, so you really can't blame them for coming to wrong conclusions about things. They don't have the full story. Sometimes > their effort to make everything fit into the physical-based gangstalking explanation becomes totally silly, with the explanations getting increasingly more far fetched in order to try to pound that square peg into a round hole. […] Both the idea of physical based targeting and hyper-d happenings and synchs/glitches have validity in my opinion. The key is for the target to be aware of both, and then be able to differentiate what events fall into which category.

The big emphasis of that article was on the hyperdimensional component of it all, which seems to be the key factor being overlooked in most material floating around out there on the subject. Mentally ill/schizophrenic people aside, for what many of the legitimate targets are reporting there is just no way that many of these happenings that are being attributed to gang stalking could be coordinated and orchestrated by physical humans alone. A related aspect of hyperdimensional forces working through people to affect a target would be the way in which they could also affect the target's own personal frequency, to ensure that the target is disombobulated and off kilter and thus, attracts in situations and people that always seem to work against them. I get into the role of personal frequency more in depth in both my gangstalking write up, as well as this book.

Several of the targeted individuals I've heard from in emails really had a problem with my particular take on this subject, one of them even going as far a to stubbornly argue againast the idea of hyper-d reality and seeming to have an actual agenda of sorts to get me to change my mind, and adhere to a strictly physical-based, human coordinated source behind all gang stalking activities…..which I would not do. Conversely I've heard from other targets who were excited to find somebody else out there corroberating what they themselves had concluded about the matter.

As mentioned I was not aware of the term "gangstalking" for the first few years that this book was out, or of the related phrase "targeted individuals," but once I learned of it I realized that much of what I talk about in Part II of this book falls into that category. It was classic targeted individual harassment tactics as I realized in reading through various websites and blogs. Yet, in the same way I'm uncomfortable using the term MILABS for myself, I wouldn't go and label myself as a "targeted individual" or "victim of gangstalking" either. Those labels aren't entirely accurate only because I have a lot more higher up paranormal/metaphysical stuff happening in my situation then the average gangstalking target reports. So as mentioned elsewhere in this book, it's a case where my own situation has many overlapping features of a particular classified group, but yet, isn't a 100% match.

"The experiment"?

"The Earth is a farm. We are someone else's property." – Charles Fort, 1915

Out of the various groups who report having been used and abused, and targeted and harassed in some way, MILABS has components that overlaps all of them. Be it aliens, abductions, physical experimentation/tampering, the government/military involvement, mind control, rapes, general life monitoring and harassment - MILABS is a group that covers the whole gambit. And that was something I realized only after coming across a chart that had been posted on a now defunct blog called "The Fine Art of Discernment," which cross compared the traits and reported experiences of alien abductees, ritual abuse survivors and gang stalking targets. (I would post a link to the chart so readers can see but again the blog no longer exists, though I did manage to print out all the blog entries before the author took it down.) In reading over the chart I realized I had elements in my life that matched all three groups, but the one that wasn't on the list yet at the time – MILABS – was the one that encompassed aspects of all of them, and thus most closely matches my own situation.

The comparison chart really got me thinking though, and brought me back to the ultimate question of, "What is actually going on here??" For the every day gang stalking targets dealing with the skeezy looking low level physical based people syndicates, as well as the gang stalking targets experiencing hyperdimensional forces working through people, for those who call themselves MILABS with the Naval/Air Force/NSA and military intelligence connections in their immediate family along with strange "alien" and paranormal, psychic and PSI experiences, for the Monarchs/MKs and ritual abuse survivors, seriously, what is going ON here?? For those of us who have definitive proof that "stuff" has happened to us and are not crazy, it's obvious that this is real. But when you actually stop and think about it, and look at what we're claiming has gone on in our lives, the sorts of things we've witnessed, it sounds ludicrous. Just completely farfetched and crazy. It's just so big, so bizarre, that how can it possibly be?! It doesn't fit in with the world as it's been presented to us, at all.

Which is exactly it, right there. The world….."as it's been presented to us." Because what's been presented to us isn't necessarily how things actually are, as many of us have learned firsthand.

One of the big issues/questions that arises with this subject is the obvious, "Why you?" Again, mentally ill and schizophrenic people aside who are truly experiencing delusions and unwarranted paranoia, for those who are legitimately being monitored and toyed with in some way, and/or are experiencing paranormal reality and can furnish proof of it all, then the obvious question is Why? Why are they so special? Why do these things happen to them, and not others?

This question was addressed on the aforementioned defunct blog, The Fine Art of Discernment. Back when it was still up, the author had this to say:

> "You may ask, well what makes you so special that you're singled out in this way? I'm not. I believe that everyone is "singled out" but not everyone is aware of what's happening. It's such a natural part of our existence that we consider it normal."

I thought that was good, although I'd revise that slightly to mention the fact that not everybody is actually singled out, because there are those walking among us that are not what we think they are. Be it "aliens," or people who are lacking their soul spark/spirit. In those cases they don't need to be targets. But for everybody who is real and human and fully there, then maybe this is happening to all of them in some way, yet only some people have actually noticed it. Along the lines of what The Fine Art of Discernment blog noted, so many people have lives that are already negative and chaotic, would they actually notice deliberate acts of manipulated negativity occurring around them, or would it all just be one big blur? Another idea is that maybe some people are waking up more than others, and therefore now find themselves being honed in on more than the person sitting next to them. I tend to favor that explanation more than the others. Asleep people who conform to the matrix, even if they're real, wouldn't need targeting. Only the ones who start to stick their neck out might. Another thing to keep in mind is the direction a person is going, and who they may be in the future…which is something that hyperdimensional stuff would know about. Hyperdimensionals have a vantage point that we lack. So in that way targeting of certain people may be a pre-emptive strike, where stuff tries to head things off at the pass and cut something short before it even gets off the ground. Then there's also the people who've gotten on the radar through their parents' military involvement as mentioned throughout this book.

The following is an excerpt from a C's channeling session from 1994 that seems very relevant for what I'm talking about here. Questions posed to the C's are noted with "Q", followed by a letter in parenthesis indicating the first letter in the name of the person who asked the question. The C's answers are indicated with "A." I reference them again later in the book, at the end of Part II. (For a description of how the C's channeling process worked, for those who are curious, click on the following link and see post #8 specifically: http://forum.noblerealms.org/viewtopic.php?id=1369&p=1 It's my firsthand account of what I witnessed when I sat in on one session back in 2002.)

> "Q: (L) Let me ask this one before the tape runs out and we take a break. What is the "ultimate secret" being protected by the Consortium?
> A: You are not in control of yourselves, you are an experiment.
> Q: Do you have anything else to say on that subject?
> A: Up to you.
> Q: (T) When you say this is the ultimate secret, that we're being "protected" from by the government, are we talking about the ultimate secret of humans only here?
> A: Basically.
> Q: (T) The ultimate secret of the human race is that we are an experiment that other humans are conducting on the rest of us?
> A: Part.
> Q: (T) Okay, does the other part have to do with the Lizards?
> A: Yes.
> Q: (L) Other aliens also?
> A: Yes.
> Q: (T) Okay, so, are the humans who are running the experiment, do they know that they are part of the experiment also?

A: Yes.
Q: (T) And they're doing this willingly?
A: They have no choice.
Q: (L) Why do they have no choice?
A: Already in progress.
Q: (T) What is the experiment about?
A: Too complicated for you to understand.
Q: (J) I hate it when that happens! (T) Okay, is this part of, is this about the experiment the Lizzies are doing of dominating us and sucking us dry?
A: Yes, but there's much more than that, you will understand at level 4."

"We are an experiment," which means we're living in an experiment, surrounded by experiment, and this is the ultimate thing that "stuff" doesn't want us to know. And humans are definitely involved in it all. Interesting. At this point in my life I can believe it. In fact I get into this again in Part III, discussing how my brother was told by human "thems" during an abduction that many aspects of our lives were an "experiment" of sorts. He told me this before I'd come across other sources corroborating this idea. So that's supposedly what our reality is on the mass, macrocosm level. And now after hearing or reading so many other people's personal stories of the things that have gone on with them, I'm seeing proof for this on the smaller, individual microcosm level as well. It's like this reality is one giant experiment, or farm, being conducted by who knows how many groups with who knows how many agendas. Just a giant free-for-all.

I have a memory of some sort, a dream, I'm not sure because I can no longer remember, but it occurred sometime after we moved to Virginia. And in this memory it was the afternoon and I was standing in our living room, being told by a male "them" that I never saw, only heard off to the side, about how this reality was basically an "alien ant farm" you could say. He used that exact phrase. His voice was kind of smirky, with the same superiority and disdain going on as they always seem to have. As I said on my website about this subject: "Things happen, and we don't understand why, or what's going on…..same situation as the ants in the ant farm should you pick it up and say, shake it around. They'd have no idea what's going on. They couldn't conceive of the reality that lies beyond the plexiglass……..the fact that they're in an ant farm that "belongs" to something else. Their organized society that's really the personal property of other beings in a world so large they couldn't fathom it. But which in itself is but a speck in the never ending fractal…."

Another great analogy that I've become fond of is fish in a tank. The fish in a tank have no idea who or what you really are, and they can't conceive of the world that you live in. They're going about their business, swimming around, sleeping, mating, then you come along and dip your finger into the water….sprinkle food flakes on the surface….dip the net in to clean things out…..you could also wreak havoc with their environment if you were so inclined…and none of it makes sense to them. These disturbances good and bad periodically invade their world from a source that they can only barely perceive through the glass, let alone understand. Maybe that's analogous to us. That's what I keep hearing, anyway.

Readers may be familiar with a 2005 movie called "The Forgotten," which was about this exact subject of humans-as-alien-experiment. Humanity being experimented on by an alien intelligence, and government agencies were in line with them, because as one NSA agent explained, "We have no choice. Cooperate or die." So either the writer(s) lifted their idea from the publicly accessible C's transcripts from 10 years before, or, somebody directly knows something (thus, validating what the C's said), or else unconsciously tapped into something without realizing when writing it. Another really good related movie would be "Dark City," from 1998. It's up there as one of my all time faves, concerning alien intelligences who occupy the bodies of human corpses, experimenting on a large human population who've been taken from their original world to go live out their lives in a constructed reality, at the mercy of the controllers' whims who play them like puppets.

This also reminds me of the 1997 movie "Cube," where a huge cube death contraption was built by various compartmentalized government agencies. Everyday people are abducted from their homes then wake up in the cube and have to figure out how to get out alive……..which is the game/experiment. At the end it's revealed that one of the abducted characters had unknowingly taken part in the design of the cube, one of the many compartmentalized government agencies just doing what they were told to do, riding on the paychecks that the project provided. He tells one of his fellow cube victims (who believes it's all a well oiled masterminded plan) "Don't you get it? There is no conspiracy! Nobody is in charge. It's just a headless blunder operating under the illusion of a master plan!" For some reason that whole scene has always stayed with me from the first time I saw the movie. People taken and messed with for experimental purposes. A headless blunder. Nobody is in charge. Illusions of master plans. Governmental agencies just doing what they're told. Creating experiments out of thin air and playing games in order to justify their existence and keep themselves employed. "Fly this helicopter here over this target's house, follow that target there as they go about their day, break into this target's apartment, listen in to that target's phone calls…." The more I've researched MILABS and gang stalking and targeting, the more it feels to me like this is kind of how it is. Does anybody out there responsible for this stuff even know why they're doing what they do? Do they even know who's in charge? IS there anybody actually in charge? And even better (the schizophrenics aside) are we somehow helping to create it to some extent?

This last point is something I get into in great detail in Part III, in the section called "Fear in relation to the abduction experience." A relevant writing that I came across, which ties into this, was from Rayelan Allen, author of Rumor Mills News:

> "I wonder what would happen if we all just stopped playing their games? How could we do that? Turn off the television? Stop talking about things that aren't in our own backyard? I don't know. I think the only people who can ever stop playing their games are the ones who become hermits and live in caves.
> "The saddest thing about being able to read their minds was knowing the way they viewed us. We were less than rats in a maze. The closest thing I can compare us to would be ant colonies. And the controllers just threw a colony of black ants into a colony of red ants. And they were cheering and betting and they watched the black and the red destroy each other." http://www.rumormillnews.com/cgi-bin/archive.cgi?noframes;read=131227

She goes on to conclude that the presence she calls "the controllers" could actually be made up of all the souls on earth. In other words…….us. I don't know about that myself, though it's certainly possible. I have read elsewhere something along the lines of what she's saying, which was that we all created this reality as a way to experience and interface with physicality, so we could learn and grow, however the program grew "self aware" and hijacked the game. Now it needs to be powered by negative emotions to keep going, and hence keeps us trapped in a reality that's geared towards generating fear, hate, anger, and other assorted low frequency emotions. I don't know if that's accurate either, though it's interesting to ponder. I will say that I have definitely experienced higher positive intervention and help/feedback in my own life, some of which was apparently coming from my own higher self. So all hope is not lost it seems. There is higher positive stuff at work, getting in when it can. So I don't talk about all this with the intent of depressing readers or making them feel like things are hopeless. It's definitely not.

At this point in life I'm realistic about the idea of never getting concrete answers, because I don't know if they even exist. The truth could be different for everybody, depending on who you talk to. Instead I'm just concerned with what I can do on my end to reduce the influence of these forces in my own life as much as possible, and then pass along what I've learned to others. And that's what this book ultimately is.

Detecting Abductions

Foreshadowing

Abductions are not completely unavoidable and undetectable. And when you become adept at reading the clues surrounding an impending abduction then you'll probably become very good at dodging them, as well as not succumbing to the programming that comes about as a result. Traditional material that I've read doesn't put an emphasis on how to spot – and thus dodge – an impending abduction. For that reason, this is a very useful subject to get into:

- Urges to go lie down, sleep, or even drive somewhere. Feeling uncharacteristically tired out of nowhere with an urge to "go lie down" can be a tip off to an impending abduction if you know that you're an abductee. More unusual and suspicious is the urge to drive someplace you'd never normally go, with no logical explanation for why you're doing that. I get into this a bit more in Parts II & III. Also getting the urge to take an unusual route when traveling, a lonely road late at night, etc. That's why being aware and alert is so important, so we can question urges or ideas that we get, instead of just blindly responding to them like puppets on a string!

- Intuition/Sixth Sense. Some people have a natural psychic ability and a highly attuned third eye that can clue them in when something is wrong. I've experienced the "bad feeling" before an attempted abduction or when an entity was around in the area, lurking in the wings. So always pay attention to your gut intuition if something feels off or wrong before going to bed, or in any situation.

- Number sightings/ear tones/synchronicities. Can be hyper-dimensional precursors as well as post-abduction markers. An abductee may begin noticing that during particular times, certain numbers will keeping popping up around them, or that they'll get ear tones, a spate of synchronicities, deja vus, and so on. Ear tones – if you can rule out tinnitus and other possible explanations – may often be the result of monitoring if you're an abductee. And number sightings, deja vus, synchs and so on can indicate hyperdimensional timeline maneuvering/manipulation. Being that abductions are often hyperdimensional in nature, they leave markers in their wake – happenings that seem beyond 3rd density. I expand on number sightings, synchronicities and ear tones later on in this write up.

- Pets acting strange. Cats, dogs, horses, etc. have been known to exhibit out of character behavior when something unnatural is amiss. Many times when an entity has been around in the vicinity my cat has been known to act wacky. Animals are highly telepathic and psychic - cats especially - and have the ability to see things that humans cannot. So if you're an abductee, pay attention when and if your animal companion(s) exhibit strange and unusual behavior.

- Patterns to your abductions. Discussed later on in this piece, but often times, especially for MILABS targets, their abductions seem to run on a schedule. So if you've discovered what yours is, then be on the ball during those times of the month.

After effects

Since abduction memories are zapped and/or naturally or artificially compartmentalized, you have to look for other indicators after the fact that show "something" has happened. The following list includes a few of the main symptoms to be on the look out for, and runs the gambit from physical to psychological. Some of these items will be familiar to those who've studied up on the subject…some however will not. I haven't seen some of these things mentioned anywhere else, although they are compiled from my own personal experience or from other abductees' experiences:

- Heightened psychic abilities/psychic surging. Reading minds of those closest to you, knowing about things before they happen, premonitions, etc., but specifically when you're suddenly doing this all day long out of nowhere, and/or when it lasts for several days in a row. I have a theory that it could partly be the residual after effects of being used for psychic/remote viewing work in the instance of MILABs. Could also be the natural residuals of abductions in general.

- Psychological agitation and stress. Feeling traumatized and stressed out, nerves on edge, being skittish and jumpy – when nothing has happened that you're consciously aware of that could explain the feelings. On a side note, if your pets are unusually skittish, jumpy or agitated at the same time you're experiencing it as well, this means something. It may not always be in regards to abductions, possibly you (and your pets) are psychically tuning in to something else that's non-abduction related. But if you are an abductee, then it's something to keep in mind. There have been times where both my cat and I were jumpy/traumatized during the same several days' time period. It always makes me wonder whether she can remember what I can't.

- Programming urges. Covered more in depth later on in this write up, but feeling urges to do things that are out of character. An urge to drive somewhere or go someplace you wouldn't normally visit, or engage in an action that is unlike your normal behavior. Can be indicative of post-hypnotic, post-abduction programming commands.

- Personality shift. Feeling markedly different from your normal self for no logical reason.

- Being in a blank daze, stupor. Feeling like you could just lie around and stare at the walls and do nothing for abnormally long stretches of time, no motivation, creativity or will to do anything, with no reason for it. Repeatedly slipping into a trance-like state way too easily throughout the day. These can all be signs that you were recently in a deep trance and may not have fully emerged from it, or possibly were drugged, programmed, etc.

- Physical ailments and anomalies. Waking up feeling drugged, or like you were "run over by a train" as I put it; having pink eye, nosebleeds, and pains in your body; anomalous bruises and geometric shaped markings, punctures, scoop marks, rashes, lumps, burns or scratches that weren't there before you went to bed; if you're a female, experiencing pains in your uterus area and other abnormal problems with your reproductive organs. There is a section on my website that expands more in depth on these anomalous markings, and includes photos of some of my own marks for illustration: http://in2worlds.net/anomalous-markings

- Missing time. One of the most commonly known indicators. Either arriving someplace with several hours missing that can't be accounted for, or waking up feeling as if it's only been several seconds/minutes since you went to bed, when in fact it may have been 10-12 hours and you have no dream memories in between. And more so if you normally don't sleep for that long and normally have dreams, and especially when you have some of the other telltale abduction indicators going on in conjunction.

- Strange dreams. Having strange and unusual "dreams" – and I put that in quotes for a reason - can be an indicator of having been taken. Dreams are sometimes anything but, so examine your dreams closely, and if they occur in conjunction with any of the indicators on this list, then it's definitely suspect.

- Reversed in bed. Little kids seem to experience this more than adults, but it seems "something" either has difficulty getting the coordinates right when putting somebody back in their bed, or they're deliberately putting people back reversed in their bed, outside the covers. I have my own experiences with this as a kid, relayed in Part II. Related to this is when abductees wake with their clothes on backwards and/or inside out, items of clothing missing that they were wearing when they went to sleep, or even having grass and mud on their night clothes, as if they had been outside.

- Waking up suddenly, gasping, as if just plunked back into your bed; Waking up with a cold body even if the room is warm, or feeling as if drugged, even though you're not sick and haven't done anything to create that feeling; Waking with residual images of aliens and other suspicious images in your mind; Waking up after having only slept for several hours but feeling as if you never slept at all, full of clear headed energy, with no memories of dreams. (This last item is a definitely an indicator of being taken if you're somebody who normally does dream, and/or feels groggy and tired upon waking.) These have all happened to me.
- Number sightings/ear tones/synchronicities. Can be hyper-dimensional precursors as well as post-abduction markers. I've gotten number sightings and ear ringings both before and after an abduction.
- Things tampered with. Noticing that stuff around your living quarters has been moved around or tampered with in some way, and you know that you didn't do it; extra miles put on your car as if you were driving it even though you have no memories of doing so. I haven't experienced the car thing luckily, but it's been mentioned in other people's writings so I'm mentioning it here.

Methods for Taking the Abductee

There are several methods that I'm aware of for taking a MILAB. The first two that you'll see in the following list seem to get all the focus at the expense of the other two – which are actually the ones that may be more common than we realize. Let's review:

"Smash and Grab"

Pretty much the only method I've seen mentioned with regards to MILABs – but which I know is not the only one - is what I've nicknamed the "smash and grab" method. This is where, according to the research, military Special Forces type personnel burst silently into your home, guns drawn, and stealthily make their way over and grab you. From there, they haul you outside and toss you into an awaiting van, then drive to a helicopter and fly to the base, or just drive directly to the base itself.

It seems like a lot of work, but yet, that's practically all we ever hear. For the past several years I scoffed at this idea only because to me, it seemed rather antiquated. Later I did eventually recall my own possible "smash and grab" memory from 1995, which confirmed that maybe this does happen. But more on that in Part II.

Drive to them

Another snagging method I've discovered involves getting the abductee to come to them, or at least, as close to them as they can get. The abductee suddenly experiences an urge to take a trip to some place on a whim that just so happens to be located near a base. Now that the target is in such close proximity to "them", possibly the targets gets a smash and grab visit. It's something to keep in mind if you're an abductee, and a good reason to pay close attention to all your thoughts, urges and ideas, which I reiterate several times throughout this write up. It's because they may not be your own.

"Beam me up…"

The most interesting method of taking a MILAB is the one we're not hearing about. It's the one involving "Beam me up" technology. Maybe abductees just aren't aware of it, or possibly it's deliberately being suppressed. But I believe it exists and that it's in use, and it's one way in which I, and my brother have been taken. I do have one experience that occurred in Portland Oregon in 2001/02, which seems to illustrate the existence of this technology. And a few times while living in Florida I had the roundabout indicators of having arrived suddenly back into my bed.

"Beam me up" technology wouldn't work in the sense of breaking somebody down to the molecular level and then moving those molecules to another location. When I thought about it several years ago I came up with a (very basic) scenario that seems to better represent how this technology might actually operate. And keep in mind that this is coming from a person with absolutely no science or physics background, so, I'm not professing to understand it on a complicated level. !!! But possibly what happens is they tune in to your body and change your frequency, shifting you to a frequency that matches the receiving end, allowing you to slip through a doorway or portal, and emerge on the other side. How that portal is created is in itself a whole side topic, implying some nifty high tech quantum physics capabilities. I had an intuitive insight/image in my mind that accompanied this realization, which I doodled on a notebook at the time, showing portals in realms lining up enabling the person to "slip through." So possibly it's all about frequency adjustment, like changing the radio dial. The dial has to be changed if they're going to pull you to them.

Soul/"subtle body" abductions

Growing up, the only type of abduction I'd ever heard of were physical examinations taking place onboard a UFO. Later on, it was physical "smash and grab" style military abductions. Only at the age of 27 did I hear for the first time about something called "soul abductions," where your subtle body/astral essence is removed from your body and brought to another realm. From there, etheric implants can be attached, programming can be done, and so on. At first it sounded so farfetched that I was immediately skeptical, like, yeah, right, sure. How to you implant and program energy?? Eventually I had to consider the possibility once I began experiencing more overt abduction harassment that involved me clearly being pulled out of my body (discussed in Part II). And then I eventually did come across some better material on the subject, namely the work of the late Karla Turner who talked about aliens plucking people's energy essences, transferring them to cloned bodies, and so on. So, while people very well may be taken onboard a UFO during an abduction, soul/subtle body abductions seem to be a very real concept as well, but you won't find reference to it in most sources. Having knowledge of this mode of abductions may fill in some holes for people out there who know that they're being taken, but yet, know that their experiences do not fit in with the standard UFO lore as we've been taught. I'm also wondering if the advanced human black ops factions have figured out how to do this, being that they seem to be involved in some other, really far out "stuff."

Mind Control Programming

In this section I will review the basic methods for programming and compartmentalizing a target.

Trauma-based mind control

Once we know who's getting targeted, and by whom, and the possible why's, we have to look at how programming of a subject is accomplished. There are enough (now outdated) materials floating about in the world which amply cover the subject of the government's secret mind control programs over the past few decades, so I won't re-tread over a well worn area. But I do want to provide a brief overview into what government/trauma-based mind control is, taken from my website http://in2worlds.net/mind-control-themes-and-programming-triggers-in-movies and based on various materials I've researched, for those who are new to the topic:

> "The premise of government-sponsored trauma-based mind control is to compartmentalize the brain, and then use techniques to access the different sections of the brain while the subject is hypnotized. Entire systems can be embedded into a person's mind, each with its own theme, access codes and trigger words. Some of the most common and popular symbolisms and themes in use are Alice in Wonderland, (illusion inversion dream world) Peter Pan (never grow old) and The Wizard of Oz (over the rainbow), mirrors, fractured mirrors/glass, porcelain/harlequin masks, the phoenix/phoenix rising, rainbows, butterflies, carousels, cages, keys and locks, puppets/marionettes and dolls (dehumanization, you're not in control of yourself), trees (and willow trees in particular), tornadoes, spirals/helixes, castles, rings, hexagons/honeycombs (the honeycomb compartments of the mind), hallways and doors, elevators and stairs (especially spiral). (The halls, doors, elevators and stairs represent accessing compartments in the mind.) Numbers, colors and music are also heavily used for additional programming and accessing specific compartments of the brain, and are just as important.
> Programming centers around the concept of inverted reality and illusion, where nothing is at it appears to be, where up is down, yes is no, pain is pleasure, and reality and dreams are blurred. Not being able to determine what's real and what's illusion/dream/fake is a big > theme used in mind control to get targets to give up on reality and succumb to alter-ego programming. Word play and puns also factor in heavily.

> A mind splitting into alternate personas usually occurs when the victim is subjected to repetitive abuse and horrors it can't cope with. The mind fractures into compartments designed to "house" the traumas that the main personality can't handle. These alternate personas can be brought to the forefront of the mind when needed to take on whatever trauma is happening. The abuse can happen to a person (usually child) in the every day real world, (usually at the hands of abusive parents and caretakers).
> However there are certain "Powers That Be" who have perfected the technique of artificially splitting and programming people's minds through the use of technology, drugs, hypnosis, electroshock and trauma. In this case, the targets are said to military personnel (usually Intelligence) and their immediate family used for experimentation, and the closely intertwined MILABS (military abductees); society's throw away kids, teens and young adults who were plucked from detention centers, the streets or sold into programs by their own parents; entertainment industry performers, etc., among the various people and groups used. The artificially split mind is run exactly like a computer program, complete with its own theme and trigger codes and access words. It can be turned on and off like a switch, and the programmer/handler has complete control over what the system themes and trigger words will be. The alternate persona won't emerge unless the trigger word/song/phrase is given. The victim is fully functional in society and won't even know they have this aspect of themselves buried within their subconscious…."

In addition to all of the above, mind control programming will often times involve instilling repetitive commands into the target's mind, with reinforcement of the commands. And as overly simplistic as the method sounds, it's actually pretty effective. Any hypnotist knows and can demonstrate the power of a post-hypnotic suggestion, so imagine that in conjunction with drugs and even electroshock reinforcement. However, this type of programming doesn't have to be accomplished in person, apparently. In Part II I mention my own instances of waking up and catching them in the act of instilling repetitive programming in my mind…while I slept, taking advantage of my suggestible sleep state, possibly via implants or beaming technology.

Something I was recently pondering on is how I apparently show signs of having multiple "personas" (versus full on personalities), and at one point experienced an accident emergence of one of those personas while at work (mentioned in Part III in the section "Multiple Personalities vs. Multiple Personas) so it clearly seems that this programming is going on in my life, especially factoring in everything else around it, as mentioned in this book. And yet, growing up I did not show outward signs of physical trauma being done to me, the way many mind control targets will who will have markings and injuries on the body (burns, cuts, etc.) and illness. So at first glance it seems ludicrous for me to think I could have ever experienced something of the sort. At best, I've only experienced anomalous markings on my body as an adult, bruises, light scratches and such that weren't there when I went to bed the night before. So what gives? And not to sound like I'm trying to make something fit here, because trust me, nobody "wants" to be a target of this, but one thing I've realized is that trauma-based mind control wouldn't have to involve actual physical trauma. If a target has to be out functioning in the world, not drawing attention to themselves then the deed can be accomplished in other ways. Putting the target into extremely stressful lose-lose psychological situations is one that comes to mind, probably involving harm coming to somebody/something else, rather than themselves, and where they can't cope and just break down and fragment off. That's very easy in fact, probably easier than the use of straight up physical pain I'd imagine. So that's something to keep in mind. Mind control targets are varied, some are kept primarily behind-the-scenes where markings and the resulting physical harm and illness of the body is "okay," while others have to be out there in the world, and not have overt indications that would trigger unwanted attention. All of which means, techniques may vary, depending on who they're dealing with.

When you do the research, you'll come across a lot of references to trauma-based mind control in the older generation, the "Monarchs," if you will. When reading books on the subject as well as perusing message board threads, I've noticed a proliferation of people who were being taken and programmed this way as kids back in the 1950's and 60's. Parents selling their kids to government programs thinking they were being patriotic, stories of being herded out of school in the middle of the day and put on busses to be taken to programming facilities, kids who were abused through their churches and high up "Illuminati" circles, people who claim to have been programmed by Josef Mengele himself, aka "Dr. Green" and so on. Really eye opening, shocking stuff. Whether true or not, I don't know, but Project Monarch is a biggie…but it's also going to be outdated, keep in mind. We need to find out how they're doing their operations now, in the present. While some groups/factions may still be using the old fashioned, "Project Paperclip/Nazi holdover" style of hands-on trauma programming, keep in mind that technology has come a long way in the past 30-40 years, and has probably replaced much of the old methods.

On a side note, this is probably as good a section as any to address the fact that those who've undergone programming, as covert and under the radar as it may be, will probably still have various personality quirks and behavior/mood issues going on. So one of the things I've wondered is whether mind control (and being messed with in general) may cause many of the same traits as various psychological disorders. And I don't say this to try to blame mind control and abductions on everything, invalidating the idea that some people out there really do have imbalances going on. But maybe some people who've been diagnosed as having certain disorders really don't, and in fact, are MILABS and mind control targets. As noted elsewhere in this write up, mind control utilizes technology that allows "voices" to be beamed into targets' minds, mimicking a trait commonly associated with schizophrenia. Residual amped up energy from abductions, depression from negative programming, delusions of infallible grandeur due to criminal agent provocateur programming, etc. all mimic various traits of bi-polar disorder. There's also the idea that programming possibly could be cleverly hidden behind pre-existing chemical/hormonal/psychological issues within the target, or, genuine chemical/psych issues may in turn be aggravated by programming, becoming magnified when they otherwise wouldn't. So, something to consider.

Then there's the issue of deprogramming. I don't even touch on that in this book, because honestly I know nothing about it, and it's a huge subject that's better left to people who know what they're talking about. I still have yet to go under hypnosis to try to retrieve my own abduction memories. I'm not entirely sure that one can be fully deprogrammed and patched back up. An attempt at something like that would require enormous amounts of time, money and energy with a skilled hypnotherapist who's well versed in navigating through compartmentalized systems and alters. Not to sound pessimistic but, good luck there. It's not exactly like you can find someone like that by flipping open your local Yellow Pages.

My belief is that if somebody would like to get started right now, for free, making some sort of progress on themselves, then start first by removing sources of triggering from your life, be it toxic situations and people, the media (which is a BIG avenue of triggering), etc. Those are two important biggies right there. And then work at becoming more mindful in life, alert and aware of all thoughts, ideas, and urges. Question and analyze everything you think or do in order to make sure you're not acting on programming. The more you do this, the more you strengthen your mind, and the more control you gain over yourself.

Soul Fragmentation

Something else that seems to create the same effect as trauma based mind control is the phenomena known as "soul fragmentation." Not everybody believes in a soul, or things relating to spirituality, so this could be considered controversial. But the concept of soul fragmentation is exactly what it sounds like – the soul fragmenting off, due to traumatic life events. In mind control research the concept is typically understood as the mind fracturing and compartmentalizing into different personas, but in fact it may be the soul fracturing off, and/or being joined by other soul fragments, known as soul/entity attachments. Several books that I recommend for further research into this subject would be:

Remarkable Healings – A Psychiatrist Discovers Unsuspected Roots of Mental and Physical Illness - Shakuntali Modi, M.D.

Soul Retrieval – Mending the Fragmented Self – Sandra Ingerman

Spirit Releasement Therapy – A Technique Manual – William J. Baldwin, PhD.

I'm sure there are other works out there relating to this subject, those just happen to be three that we have on our bookshelf here at home that provide an excellent starting place. At this stage in my research I tend to think that what's actually happening with mind control and multiple personas/personalities involves the functions of the soul, more so than the brain, although there's definitely the possibility that it could involve a mix of both psychology and soul. The reason I tentatively conclude this is because psychology has never really been able to solve the problem of fully integrating a fragmented and traumatized personality. However, the practices of soul retrieval and spirit releasement apparently have, with great success. So this may be the viable alternative to seeking out costly and time consuming psychological integration therapies. From what I've read, if done right with a skilled shaman or practioner, soul retrievals can produce results within only one session, and even better, the shaman/practioner doesn't need to be knowledgeable in the subject of mind control in order to do it. But I leave it up to the reader to draw their own conclusions after doing the research.

Blocking and Erasing Memories

In the case of MILABs, the research is showing that drugs, hypnosis and electroshock are the common modes of operation not only for programming, but for wiping out the abductee's memories of the event. However, memories do manage to make it through despite that. In my own experience there's what I call memory surging, which I haven't read about anywhere so far. It's where you know that "something" has happened, and the memory repeatedly tries to surge forth, but it can't fully come out due to blocking techniques that keep things compartmentalized and under the surface. I describe a good example of this in the section called "Manipulated Jobs" in Part III. Still other times, bits and pieces of memory flashes do manage to leak through, illustrated in Part II, under "Actual Memories."

Let's start first with an overview of drugs, electroshock and hypnosis in eliminating memories, and their pros and cons:

- Drugs. From Fritz Springmeier's "The Illuminati Formula for Creating a Totally Undetectable Mind Control Slave": "The CIA/Illuminati programming centers have more than 600-700 different drugs at their disposal...they can make a person feel like he is in heaven, or burning in hell. The drugs are at times used with elaborate light, sound and motion shows that produce whatever effect the programmer wants to produce. They can make a person believe he is shrinking, or that he is double (with mirrors) or that he is dying…"

Fritz goes on to name a comprehensive list of drugs that are supposedly in use, notes that there are new synthetic versions now available for some, and also mentions that Cannabis, aka Marijuana, is "not used much in Monarch Programming because it IMPEDES mind control." Interesting.

I imagine the cons of drug use in programming and memory erasing is that an abductee who is put back into the "real world" may have residual after effects of drug usage, which would clue the target in that something has happened to them. Not good, or practical, if the abductee needs to work and function in the real world and/or if "stuff" intends to keep the situation as covert as possible. In Part II I recount how residual drug leftovers seems to have happened with me on at least one occasion.

- Electroshock. Again, from Fritz : "…Stun guns, staffs with hidden electric cattle prods, and cattle prods are frequently used on the slaves. Electroshock is used to create the dissociation from trauma during the programming, and later it is used to remove memories after the slave has carried out a mission, or to instill fear and obedience in a reluctant slave. A slave often shows electroshock marks on their feet, or back, or buttock or legs after they have been used. An owner of a slave will ordinarily carry a stun gun. This is perhaps a 120,000 DC volt stun gun to erase & compartmentalize memories, but some of the stun guns go up to 200,000 volts DC….After giving programming instructions they will usually give a high voltage shock to the base of the skull to imbed the instructions deep in the subconscious. They often use hypnotic cues along with the shock…The shock destroys and scrambles the memory which is still stored in the short term memory section of the brain. They must shock the person within 24 hours, to insure that the short term memory doesn't get into the long term memory as a coherent memory…"

I bolded that last part in light of one of my own post-abduction situations where I was in a blank stupor for a whole week, left with a lump on the base of my skull, and how when I touched it I immediately had the very loud instruction/cue of "IT'S JUST A SPIDER BITE!!!" yell through my mind, complete with an image of a black and yellow orb spider. (more details about this coming up later.) So it all uncannily matches up to what he's saying. He goes on to describe one way that these electroshock prod marks can appear on the body: "The bruise on the buttocks will be black and blue spots about 1 ½" diameter each." I found all of this interesting because of my own anomalous circular, deep purple colored bruises that have periodically appeared on (hidden) areas of my legs, usually following a suspected abduction. My bruises are a little smaller than what Fritz describes though. On one occasion, one of them was coincidentally surrounded by highly sensitive leg hair stubble that was painful to the touch and sticking straight out. The other leg stubble was normal.

- Hypnosis. Hypnosis is a very convenient way to instill programming into somebody's mind, requiring trigger codes to access the blocked off areas…but it may not be the best way to ensure total elimination of the programming session memory itself. As mentioned in Carla Emery's "Secret, Don't Tell", unless the programmer covers all bases, every time, they are bound to slip up sooner or later, allowing for memories to get past the target. For that reason, drugs and electroshock are added to the mix with a military abductee, and possibly the joint military/alien endeavors, to ensure proper compartmentalization.

It kind of surprised me to read (and have personal evidence for the fact) that "they" would have to resort to good old fashioned drugs, zapping and commands considering the advanced technology at their disposal. I would have thought that they would have devised more sophisticated methods. But if it isn't broke, then don't fix it I guess….

Dreams, reality context and the "assemblage point"

An interesting concept relating to abduction memory loss that ties into metaphysics, and may be something that occurs during MILABs/alien abductions, is what's known as "shifting the assemblage point." The assemblage point, as taught by those who practice the Toltec path, is where our normal awareness lies during our every day lives. Through our lifelong experiences, as dictated by our parents, peers, school and society as a whole, we become locked into a particular set view of reality – known as our assemblage point. It's the reason we aren't usually able to see the other realms, or why some children start out being able to see spirits and auras, and over time, lose that ability. We get squelched down and stifled, discouraged and pushed into a box that locks us into a set way of seeing and viewing reality. When we dream however, our assemblage point naturally shifts slightly, enabling some of the strange nocturnal experiences that many people experience. A Toltec warrior, through the help of a nagual (similar to a shaman) practices being able to shift their assemblage point at will – while they are awake – to be able to access those other realms that are not normally available to us. There's one catch though, as noted by author Carlos Castaneda – when shifting back into the normal assemblage point position, the memories of everything that was done, said or experienced while in the altered assemblage point position state is forgotten! Only when shifting the assemblage point back again can those memories be accessed. And then it becomes a situation of "How could I have forgotten everything I did the last time I was 'here'!" Carlos experienced that amnesia split and mentions it in several of his books.

Does this sound familiar? Sounds very much like the whole compartmentalized mind thing to me. So possibly another aspect of what's happening when an abductee is taken during alien/MILABs encounters involves a natural shifting of the assemblage point. If abductors are taking targets to bases or locations that are straddling different densities or realms, putting the abductee into an altered state of awareness and consciousness, then those targets may very well experience a natural shifting of their assemblage point, which would further help to compartmentalize their memories and experiences.

I tend to actually think this may be a big part of what's happening, and my boyfriend Tom, a lifelong abductee, remembers experiencing this as a young child. At the start of his abductions he would be confused as to what was happening, but as soon as things would begin kicking in, all the previous memories would come flooding back to the surface, leaving him with the feeling of "I can't believe that I forgot!" Each and every time this would happen. Kind of like that other reality is put on hold while he was back in "the real world." It's identical to what Carlos Castaneda describes when remembering his compartmentalized experiences while in his various assemblage point positions.

Memory surging

As mentioned earlier, there's what I call "memory surging." This is when the memory of an abduction event is trying desperately to break through to the surface of the conscious mind, but feels as if it's repeatedly running into a "roof" or "ceiling." The knowledge of the event is there, and it nearly comes through…you can even get a feeling around it, manufactured positive, or outright negative…but it's impossible to access the actual memory. I've experienced this on two particular occasions, and it creates a maddening feeling. I'm not sure what causes "surging," versus memories being completely wiped out without a trace. Possibly it's the technique being used – maybe certain techniques for memory erasing are more effective than others, and have different results.

In other cases, actual memory flashes do manage to pop through, not triggered by anything in particular – only to immediately disappear back under the surface again. I've experienced this a couple of times and have heard other abductees describe it. And these memories may spontaneously pop back up to the surface yet again at a later time, reminding you that Hey!....you had this memory before, but lost it! It's just amazing to see the effects of programming at work like that, and the tug-of-war struggle going on in the brain. My suggestion is to carry a little notebook and pen with you wherever you go in case you experience spontaneous memory recall, this way you can jot it down before it's lost again…which it usually will be. You may find, like I did, that you have strong programming instilled to deter you from focusing on the fact that you're having this recollection – but I think this can be conquered. Once you're aware that you're occasionally remembering random flashes, but have programming instilled telling you to ignore them, then it's just a matter of combating it by honing your awareness and mental alertness.

Admittedly it's not going to always work though, like the incident that happened to me recently. I was lying in bed and started to remember something about another life that I lead (possibly programmed compartmentalized alter?) It was there, popping to the surface, a veil of amnesia was lifting and I could touch the beginnings of memories of another double existence. The impression I got in that brief moment was like dream-time compartmentalization. When I'm "over there" in that life, whatever it is, this life here is like a dream that's not real. And when I'm over here, I have no conscious memories of that one over there. But then just as suddenly as it rose to the surface it was gone, and I couldn't get it back. Totally maddening!! All I was left with was the intellectual knowing that this had happened.

And then I've had my own actual abduction memory flashes that emerged due to something triggering the recall, instances of which are detailed in Part II. How can this happen, how would a memory make it past the erasing process? Well, what I've noticed is that in most of my memory flashes, what defined these flashes was that something very specific was attracting my total focused and curious/frightened interest, independent of "their" direction.....and sometimes in spite of it. And maybe that pulled me back up into conscious awareness during the abduction just long enough to make an indelible stamp onto my brain that even the erasing techniques couldn't later eliminate…? Either that, or it pulled me back into my normal, conscious waking life's assemblage point position, as explained in the previous section, which is why I could remember the memory flash – ie, access it – during normal waking life.

Screen memories

There's a notable aspect to military abductions: using "aliens" as a screen memory to cover their actions. I've come across talk of an increase in rogue military units abducting people, programming/abusing them, then using alien screens to mask the activity. If the military black ops want to snag you but they don't want you to remember anything that might incriminate them, then using an alien screen is perfect cover. Some people actually enjoy the idea of being taken by aliens, and so if they believe they're being taken by the Grays, then they may willingly allow it to happen again and again and put up no resistance to being abducted…not realizing of course, that they're actually being taken and programmed by humans. For others it's the exact opposite - the idea of coming forward and admitting to anybody that they were possibly taken by "space aliens" is so humiliating and unacceptable that they will just keep quiet. It's "alien screen memories as built in no-talk insurance."

This whole subject can get a little screwy, because a screen memory could be the military abduction using "aliens" as a screen memory, or maybe an "alien" abduction using the "military" as a screen memory. Basically a situation of "stuff" tricking people into believing they had experiences that they didn't…which then can lead to abductees going out into the world to propagate what they believe they know to be true about their situation, and then promote the things they were told or shown during their abductions. It's in my opinion that this is actually a big part of what's going on with regards to the pro-alien authors and channelers out there in the world. I don't think their experiences are always what they'd like to believe they are.

I've had my own experience with what seems to be Gray alien screen memories following my first ever consciously realized abduction in October, 2001, coming up in Part II. The images of Gray alien faces were like literal wallpaper in my mind's eye, and every time I closed my eyes I was inundated with images of Grays from all angles. This lasted for several days before finally trickling off. I knew something had happened and that I'd obviously been abducted, but something felt off and wrong about these non-stop images. It seemed forced. Like something desperately wanted me to believe that I'd been taken by "Gray aliens!" They were trying too hard, and in their overzealousness to get me to see "Grays!" they overshot it and only wound up making me suspicious. Which leads to…

Overzealous programming attempts

Sometimes I've encountered programming attempts that left me shaking my head, like, Did they actually think I would fall for that…?! Wow. But then I had to realize that the reason they did it was because it does apparently work…on others.

The modes of operation of humans in abductions often times reminds me of the way neg entities operate. Neg entities have a formulaic blue print that they go by, using the same tactics on everybody across the board. They lack creative capabilities, and so don't vary their attack/harassment strategies to custom fit you, the free thinking individual with a complex personality. I noticed this on my own regarding neg entities, and later read confirmation for this in the highly recommended book "Practical Psychic Self Defense" by Robert Bruce. And the same mode of operation often times goes for humans/hybrids in military/black ops abductions…surprisingly.

My aforementioned Gray screen memories that went overboard to the point of ridiculousness are probably typical of how they attempt to brainwash a subject to have images in their mind that will reinforce particular ideas.

Several days after another abduction in 2002, which I'll expand on in Part II, I discovered a painless lump on the base of my skull; I unconsciously went hunting for it, my fingers searching under my hair until I found it. And when I did, I had the very loud and immediate commanding thought that "IT'S JUST A SPIDER BITE!" accompanied by a very large and sudden image in my mind of a black and yellow orb spider. !! Talk about obvious. Hello. But again, the reason they did that is because it means it does work…on other people. People, somewhere, are obviously just believing what they're being programmed to believe. They're lacking the alertness and strong conscious mindset required to stop and notice and question things. "Oh, okay, yeah, huh, spider bite, okay…" and they're off to the next thing, in a dazed stupor.

Since the original writing of this book I've received an email from a woman who identifies herself as a MILAB, saying she has experienced the "IT'S JUST A SPIDER BITE!" voice/programming in her own mind. It was in response to touching a lump on her skull, as well as a mysterious puncture wound on her neck. She said there were other things I discuss in this book that she has also experienced, but she focused on that in her email because it's so specific and unusual. I could tell from her tone that it was exciting for her to read that. She's the only other person I've heard this from, but even if it's just one other it means it's definitely something. It validates for me that this book really can be helpful in providing corroboration for people.

I've also woken up to catch them in the act of programming me with negative thought patterns, also outlined in Part II. This can be accomplished via implant and/or microwave technology I imagine, though there may be other methods. This is very important to be aware of because these negative thought pattern programs are designed to go straight into the subconscious. You won't consciously remember them, but their detrimental effects will become obvious in your waking life as moods may plummet, or there's an attitude change towards one or more relationships in one's life, or one no longer has the enthusiasm for things they used to have, or begins developing a negative self image, etc. I happened to be lucky enough to wake up in the middle of it on two occasions, otherwise I would have had no clue that something like this was happening. It doesn't mean that every single shift in mood or personality fluctuation should be blamed on programming, you don't want to fall into that paranoid victimization habit. It just means be mindful of this as a possibility when things shift and change. If a shift/change is very sudden, happening overnight, and lasts beyond something that could be excused as hormonal or health-related, with no apparent cause, then it's certainly suspect.

So, be on the lookout for their overzealous programming attempts. They're not as all powerful as one might imagine them to be if they're blatantly getting caught like that. Keep your mind alert, and question everything. Get in the habit of scrutinizing and questioning, if you don't already. They don't like aware, alert people, because an aware alert person is one with higher instances of failed programming attempts, and who can even wake up in the middle of programming, as well as consciously overriding programmed urges. So be that person. It is possible.

Virtual reality/dream time programming

The article "MILABS Operations" by James Bartley, listed in my "Recommended Reading" section, gets into one component not often heard in the research – the virtual reality/dream time programming of MILABS targets. I get into it more later in this book with regards to how it's used for "end times programming," but for this section I want to talk about MILABS who claim to have memories of being used for dangerous black ops reconnaissance type missions. I've come across several references now to MILABS who've supposedly had this sort of thing happening to them, where the shadow government is using its mind controlled subjects to do illegal dirty work in other countries in Central and South America for instance. The MILABS are supposedly used to go after drug lords, or to do some sort of rescue operation, wielding automatic weapons where they get to put their training to use, dodging bullets in crazy shootouts, and so on. On the surface it sounds plausible – these people are being given training, so, it must be for a reason. And the government can't use its own legitimate paid personnel for illegal clandestine operations in other countries. So, that's what the MILABS could be used for…right?

Well, I don't know. I have my doubts.

In reading these accounts – which are always taken at face value by the targets as having been real experiences that they lived through in their alternate double life – my intuition always kicks in and leaves me thinking, "ummm….nooooo….I don't know about this…." I don't necessarily believe these women are lying (although of course you never know….) and they come across as if they really believe these things happened to them. The accounts are very detailed and full of high action. It's just that I don't think that they really happened. Call me skeptical, but I just don't think that these women, even with the best "secret training," could survive through what they supposedly are put through. In one book in particular the female author's high action secret operative account disintegrated into a very dream-like quality, and didn't feel real to me at all when reading it. Which brings us back to James Bartley's article where he discusses the dream time and virtual reality component of MILABS programming.

> "A grey area exists as far as determining whether certain training experiences are conducted in the dense physical state or in the astral state or in the dreamscape. Sometimes the training may be a literal "theater of the mind" wherein the milab is physically sleeping in his bed but a complex and vivid virtual reality scenario is playing out in his or her mind that seemingly involves a lot of physical activity. The milab controllers, like the aliens and reptilians before them, can create extremely vivid "stage managed dreams" within the minds of sleeping people.
> "Even seasoned milabs with a high degree of conscious awareness and dream lucidity can't always be sure if a particular training session is in the dense physical state, astral state or if it is a virtual reality scenario."

Further in the article he writes:

> "One milab described running up a hill with two female milab friends. They were being pursued by two men wearing dark woodland pattenr camouflage uniforms with black ski masks pulled over their faces. They were armed with automatic weapons. The male milab received the telepathic message that the two gunmen are part of a "Serbian Assassination Group." [….] As the milabs ran uphill towards a large number of boulders and relative safety, one of the milab women was shot in the head.

> "The male milab looked down at his close friend and noticed that the top of her head was blown off and was clearly dead. The other female milab was wailing in anguish and wanted to stay with the body of her friend. The male milab knew there was nothing they could do for their friend [....] As much as it pained him, he grabbed the surviving female milab by the arm and pulled her up towards the safety of the boulders. A couple of days later, the three milabs spoke on the phone about this training experience. The gal who had her head blown off didn't remember the experience while the two "survivors" did. (This training exercise was obviously some kind of virtual reality training experience.) The two who remember their friend getting killed were emotionally overwrought during the training scenario. The male milab even remembers telling himself over and over during the experience that he hoped it was some kind of training scenario he was involved in and "was not real."

I bring attention to this because the virtual reality/dream time aspect of MILABS programming isn't really being discussed by anybody else that I'm aware of, and for that reason it needs all the highlighted attention it can get. Most MILABS aren't aware of it either, as evidenced by some of the books I've read where authors took their experiences at literal face value. So it's something to keep in mind when reading MILABS supposed accounts of clandestine black ops reconnaissance missions in exotic countries being presented as actual physical experiences that they really lived through. Things are not always what they seem to be. Dream programming and manipulation is a whole subject in itself, and so I expand on the subject in Part III, in the section called "Dreamtime Manipulation."

Implants

I believe that every abductee is implanted. It goes with the territory, so it's a useful subject to look into. But admittedly I'm no expert on the subject, other than I'm aware that there are both physical and etheric implants, and that they serve a variety of purposes including: monitoring, influencing or controlling a target's behavior/actions, implanting thoughts into minds which are not people's own, and/or even creating the "voices in the head" phenomena, and affecting a person's energy/chakras in order to impact their health or even their psychic abilities. Other than that, I'm not much of a help. All I can do is refer people to some starter sources that seem to have something useful and insightful to say about it all.

As with any material that I recommend, it doesn't mean I agree 100% with what's being said, or the way in which an author may write or present their material, or even that I support their views on other things they write about. It just means there was enough of something interesting and informative in the one specific piece to make it worth passing along. The works that I mention here represent what I felt was a sampling on the topic, from very different people who tackle the subject in their own unique ways, but who all have the common goal of educating the public about what's happening. But as always, the reader needs to discern for themselves.

On a side note – as with all things relating to MILABs, we're probably going to have very little current and accurate information on the cutting edge technology being employed with implants. So when you embark on implant technology research, keep that in mind – you may be getting outdated, decades-old information.

Wave Beaming Harassment

Microwave/scalar targeting/harassment is another component of abductions. In my own life, my boyfriend Tom and I experienced this while living in Fort Lauderdale Florida, both in his apartment and my own which we would later jointly share. The situation was so bad that it was causing headaches, lethargy, impaired mental state, and even disrupted sleep and nightmares. The dull aching in my head and disrupted sleep state was especially distressing for me being that I normally don't have issues with headaches, as a lot of other people apparently do, and I very much enjoy my sleep! Tom has a little gadget that detects electronic signals and he was able to determine that the electronic wave size matched that of cell phone/microwaves. But it turned out to be a lot more than just random cell phone wave pollution, as I will show in a second.

Because of the debilitating mental and physical effects these microwave/cell phone waves were having on us, up went the electrically grounded, aluminum Mylar sheeting on some of the walls. We purchased the Mylar "space blankets" (emergency blankets) for camping that anybody can buy for $2.99 at their local sporting goods store, and Tom already had the wires and alligator clips on hand to ground them electrically into the wall sockets. And while I was dismayed at the prospect of how this would cause my apartment to look – forget the idea of cool decorating when your walls are lined in Mylar – we had no choice in the matter. The situation was that bad.

Two main walls of my apartment had to have this Mylar sheeting, because those were the angles that the waves were getting us from. The third wall was shared with our next door neighbor. And we couldn't do anything about the fourth wall in the kitchen, or the kitchen area in general, because of the way things were set up. That was alright though, the most important area was where we slept, worked on the computer, and did our reading, writing and research. From the first night that we buffered the apartment with the Mylar the disrupted sleep and nightmares stopped. I slept calmly and peacefully, was headache-free, and back to my usual energetic self, able to focus clearly. I can't imagine if Tom didn't have awareness about this and didn't have the electronic gadget to detect the waves, or the knowledge of what to do about it all. How many other people are being targeted like this every day, effectively being put out of commission…due to lack of awareness?

But what's even more interesting is the experiment that Tom performed back when he lived in his own apartment, where he used his signal detector to determine a) that there were waves beaming in, and b) where they were beamed in the apartment. Then he got on the floor, sandwiching himself between the stove and the counter to hide. Giving it a few minutes he finally got back up and checked around with the signal detector.

There were no microwaves coming in anymore.

However, within several minutes of being back up and moving around his apartment, the signals came back, as indicated by the detector. It was like he was being "triangulated."

Now, what are the implications of that? This is showing that these are "smart signals", with an intelligent source driving them. It means that it wasn't just random cell phone pollution. They were definitely being beamed by somebody or something, and for a specific reason…and only when that "something" could sense Tom's presence moving around in the apartment.

Another experiment involved determining the source angle for where the waves were coming in, putting up Mylar sheeting, then waiting for about a day or two and checking again.

The signals had shifted now, attempting to go around where they were being blocked. So again, proving there's an intelligent source behind the signal, whether automated technology or actual humans.

Microwaves being beamed at abduction targets seems to be a classic harassment tactic that I've encountered when doing research, but we don't have to be victims of it. People have no idea what just a couple of three dollar sheets of Mylar can do. I've read cases where people had to keep periodically moving once the harassers located them and resumed their beam attacks. But it doesn't have to be that way. A noteworthy must-read for further information on this subject would be the following, which also includes links for where to obtain the signal detector mentioned here. http://montalk.net/conspiracy/55

"Sickness beams"

For lack of a better term to refer to this, sickness beams are something you'll hear about when you do the research into MILABs harassment. They can be beamed in various ways, but one technique involves hovering helicopters. The target in question will soon find themselves developing some debilitating, and/or life threatening ailment to stop them in their research and take them out of the picture.

To many, this is the ultimate in fear. The sense of powerlessness it creates, and the God-like abilities that these military spooks wield is incredible. You can't beat that…right???

Wrong.

For more elaboration on this, please see Part III, "Fear in relation to the abduction experience." I elaborate in full detail about this, and other fear/harassment/elimination tactics. We are not the helpless victims they would have us believe. We have full control over what happens to our bodies and our lives, not them. Even when it comes to sickness beams. I don't care what you believe you know about how things are, I'm here to tell you that we've been programmed with self-defeating limitation, living in a reality that has been carefully manipulated at every turn to strip us of our natural abilities. You CAN fight back against even sickness beams, in my opinion. And if the reader remembers only one thing out of this entire write up, let this be it. Skip ahead to Part III if this is a topic of interest for you.

The World Underground

Ah, no alien/military write up would be complete without mention of the underground bases and tunnels. Hyperdimensional realms aside, there is supposedly a whole secondary layer to our reality going on now, right under our feet. Literally. There's the la-la land surface world where we're kept amused and distracted with entertainment, the media, drink/drugs, materialism and consumerism, debt, poverty and daily struggle, political distraction and wars, and then there's this whole other behind-the-scenes reality going on that most will never even get a glimpse of. If the reports of the dozens of underground bases with their cross-country connecting subterranean tunnel transport systems and alien hieroglyphics on the signs are correct, then it's safe to say that "something else" has officially taken over.

This is a topic that fascinates me the most. When I was roommating with my brother Joe (a MILAB) in Portland, Oregon in 2001, he relayed an experience of an abduction that he claimed took place in an underground base in October of that year. Here's what he relayed to me about what he saw, but as I mention in my section about "Untangling Disinformation," I'm not endorsing what he said or promoting it as gospel. I simply relay it for the reader's consideration, and also in case anybody out there has experienced something similar. It also needs to be mentioned as well that Joe wasn't a normal "MILABs" by any means, so when I'm recounting things that he saw, keep in mind he wasn't just some innocent wide-eyed MILAB target. It appears that he was re-animated, and piloted by other "stuff," making his situation above and beyond anything that most people will ever experience. It means he was a pawn of sorts, and for that reason I don't get too much into his story in this book only because I don't think the average abductee has somebody in their life that's to the level that Joe was. It was pretty extreme and out there, and would be considered the fringe of the fringe.

At any rate, Joe claimed that he was taken to a base – instant beam transport from his apartment in Portland - where he recalls seeing aliens and humans working side by side. The temperature in the base was cold, and he was being escorted down a hallway by two human males. They passed by a 6 foot + tall Amphibian creature who eyed up my brother suspiciously as they passed by. It was more like an Amphibian humanoid, and came across as being highly intelligent. Joe even imitated the way this thing eyed him up…with eyes that were more towards the side of its head. He said that everybody seemed busy, everybody had something to do. I asked him if he recalled seeing any Grays…or even Reptilians, since that's what I had just recently been reading about in David Icke's book. He said no, just these Amphibian beings. That surprised me because I'd never heard of such a thing as "amphibian aliens." It sounded ludicrous. But, the idea of amphibian beings would later be corroborated in my research, as well as bizarre genetic crossbreeding experiments in underground bases using human DNA and various creatures. So who knows.

He also recalled being taken into a room where the lighting situation was unusual. He couldn't find a source for the lighting, no light bulbs or fixtures like you might find in the "real world." Instead the walls themselves seemed to glow, lit up from within. That was interesting to me, but again, I had no way to prove any of it. Not until almost four years later in 2005, when Tom came across a channeling source called Cosmic Awareness that corroborated this particular detail with regards to lighting in underground bases:

> "All is controlled by advanced magnetics. That includes a magnetically induced (phosphorescent) illumination system. There are no regular light bulbs…"
> "…This Awareness indicates the lighting system used as that which is painted upon the walls, or placed on the walls in a kind of paint which is affected by an electromagnetic charge that is applied, which causes the wall to light -- this affecting the paint on the walls and the substances that are in that painted material."

There were also hieroglyphic characters on the walls my brother reported, various symbols that he claimed to have been doodling for awhile. Later on I would find myself talking on the phone to an old blind psychic woman named Maryann that Tom had put me in touch with. She was very knowledgeable of the UFO/abduction subject and underground bases, and she asked me, "Does your brother ever doodle triangles inside circles?" I was sitting on the floor with the phone to my ear, and as she asked me that, my eyes traveled upwards to the wall in front of me with all the graffiti stuff my brother had scrawled everywhere…including a big spray painted circle with a triangle inside it. "Yeah, he does actually…I'm looking at one right now…"

During this abduction Joe claims that a wrist injury he's had since he was twelve was fixed through surgery. Back story: When Joe was twelve he broke his right wrist after falling off a swing. It was set incorrectly, so the doctors later performed a surgery to go in and re-break it and re-set it when he was thirteen. And it was never right after that. By the time he was roommating with me in California between 2000-01 he was always wearing a wrist brace, nursing a wrist and hand that were swollen red/purple and rendered almost completely useless, causing him to rely on his left hand. However when I moved up to Oregon to roommate with him in late 2001 the first thing I noticed was that his ever present wrist brace was gone. Not only that, but he was using his right hand unimpeded for the first time in years, and everything looked perfect. Surprised, I asked him about this. He just smirked with that glossy eyed smirk he'd always get and said that They fixed it for him [during this October abduction, it turns out]. He showed me the reddish surgical line on the side of his wrist that was probably no more than a half inch in length. I think it was the outer side, but I can't remember now. Joe had no money and definitely no medical insurance to have gotten any kind of surgery or mainstream world doctor's assistance with his wrist. In fact he'd been living out of his car until only recently. But there was no doubt his wrist was perfect now, in a way it had not been since he was twelve, and in the rest of the time I knew him he never had issues with it again. I tried taking a picture of this mysterious red line scar on his completely healed wrist and was unable to. The camera I had at that time would not allow for close up shots like that. It's a very frustrating thing, that's all I can say. I could kick myself for not getting some sort of documentation of this. For that reason I did not include this anecdote in original versions of the book, because when referring to physical based woo-woo happenings I like to talk about things I can provide photographic proof for, and for this incident I have none. But regardless, I'll go ahead and mention it now because it's another important part of the story for what Joe claims to have experienced when taken to this "base" during an abduction.

Whether his experience happened or not, I can't verify, considering that he was a pawn of sorts. Possibly the base he was at was nothing like what he thinks he saw, and he was implanted/programmed with false memories to corroborate what "they" knew I would later come across.

The idea that there is an entire secondary world happening, underground cities and roadways and the whole set up, right under our feet (or within mountains), is pretty significant. Keeping that in mind actually explains a lot of what's going on in this world. You hear people complaining about how bizarre things have gotten in the world zoo we occupy…but guaranteed, most people are not keeping the idea of this other layer of reality in mind as they complain. The average person wouldn't know about it anyway, but even the conspiracy researchers tend to forget. Until I had a dream that took place in an underground base back in 2000, I had absolutely no comprehension of "surface world" versus "underground world." So what we're seeing on the surface isn't all there is, and it helps to keep that in mind when trying to make sense of why things are the way they are in the world. I would recommend looking into this subject if it interests you – underground/underwater bases, tunnels and highways, and bases built into mountains - as it's always good to expand our view of what we think we know about reality. One author in particular to start with is Richard Sauder, who's written a couple of books on the subject including, "Underground Bases and Tunnels: What is the Government Trying to Hide?" and "Underwater and Underground Bases." It's another step in detaching from the herd and gaining the much needed bigger perspective about things.

Part II
My own experiences

I've learned that the best way to get to the bottom of things is by trading personal experiences. Putting what you've seen and heard and learned out there for others to read, so they can compare it to what they've gone through. For myself, reading abductee's personal stories were always the most helpful and useful, due to their wealth of specific details, versus the emotionally detached, intellectual dissertations on the government's "Project This" and "Project That."

In adding my own experiences and theories to the pile maybe somebody out there will read what I've written and experience that light bulb "aha" moment, and get possible needed corroboration, answers, or realizations, or at least use it as a launching pad of sorts. This is how you begin to figure out what's what, and find those missing pieces.

When trying to get answers to what's happened to you, you have to first know what questions to ask. The biggest issues to figure out are:

Who's abducting you? (And is there more than one source?)
When did it begin? Which leads to…
How were you discovered or targeted?
Why are you being abducted? What's being done to you?

Maybe you're one of the lucky ones who has clear answers to when and how it all began for you. Some people seem to have what I call a "by-the-book" abduction scenario, where it's clearly defined that a) abductions are happening to them, b) who's doing the abduction, c) how they're taking them d) what's being done during the abduction…and it seems to be the same story as everybody else's.

These people seem to have way more memories and far less plot holes going on than I do. Whether positive or negative, at least they remember and know what's happened to them.

I, unfortunately, am not one of those people.

My first known and overt abduction experience didn't happen for me until October of 2001. ("Coincidentally" the same month that my brother was also abducted and taken to a base for his first ever fully realized and remembered abduction/meeting with "Them," as relayed at the end of Part II.) I was 27 years old by that point. Talk about arriving late to the game.

Or did I?

As I later had to realize, this stuff usually doesn't just erupt for a person overnight. If they were able to find me and snag me at 27, then it means they were already well aware of who I was before that. And that's when I had to really start looking over my life and begin to try to make sense of what was basically a bunch of mish mash indirect evidence. As it was, even with the one overt abduction experience, I still didn't have clear answers as to who took me, how, to where, and why. I certainly know what they wanted me to believe – that it was Gray aliens, and it was good, so invite this into my reality so it can happen again! - but it doesn't mean that was the truth of the situation.

And that's where things got frustrating. The very basic questions outlined earlier – Who's taking me?? How was I targeted, and when did it start?? Why am I being taken?? - I had no answers for. Totally clueless. The abduction and mind control books I began looking at to help in my research and quest for answers were great and all, but I couldn't help but notice how the people being featured in these materials were so confident about what their situation was. They had concrete answers. When you have answers you can speak with some authority on the subject, or you can at least be held up with confidence by the authors who are writing about your story.

Additionally, my situation didn't exactly fit or match up with anything I'd been reading about in my research, since most research tends to be focused on aliens, with little mention of human/military rogue abductions and programming. That's slowly changing though, as this subject begins to get more exposure. For the most part though I've had just a whole lotta confusion in my journey, as do most MILABs targets.

What I eventually wound up doing, a variation of which you'll see in this particular section, was to sit down and begin documenting everything and anything I could think of that was either obviously abduction related, or highly suspect. And this is a good idea for any abductee to do. In doing so, you're rounding everything up and getting it all organized, which can help bring up other memories and incidents that may have been forgotten. For me, I typed up anything I could remember going as far back as I could, putting my memories into loose categories, and then looked over everything to see what it was all pointing to. Patterns, the bigger picture, and so on. People will be different though, so use whatever documenting system/method works for you. You have to start somewhere, and writing stuff down (or typing it up, or talking into a hand held tape recorder, etc.) is probably the best place to start. And then if you still can't get definitive answers, or have holes that need to be filled in, then possibly consider other avenues - meditating in a contemplative state, hypnosis with a trained and trustworthy person who is familiar with abduction cases (and who won't ask leading questions…) and so on.

You may notice though like I did that once you begin the process of trying to document your experiences, more memories will begin to surface. So as mentioned earlier in this piece it can be a really good idea to carry around a little notebook or pad of paper with you in case you remember something while out and about.

Actual Memories/Flashes

(Note: The key to these memory flashes is either something directly triggering them, or being in a relaxed, open state, not thinking about anything, which seems to be conducive for allowing "stuff" to come up to the surface. And as you can see, there aren't that many. But, I'm glad for whatever snippets I do have.)

Metal Gangways. Back in 2000, while living in SoCal, I had a flash one evening while resting on my bed where I suddenly saw myself standing in what seemed to be a windowless installation facility thing that has these metal grating walkways/gangways and stairs and stuff. It looked similar to the NORAD facility in some ways, featured in the movie "War Games." Same sort of look to it. In the memory I'm standing on the metal grating walkway at the top of some stairs, looking around in a (drugged? hypnotic?) daze. In the snippet it was as if I was stumbling about, like I was either allowed to wander off (maybe because it didn't matter since I was drugged out of my gourd and in an enclosed facility….really, how far would one be able to go anyway, right?) or I was trying to get away.

I had this flash while resting, and not thinking of anything at all. I wasn't sleeping, just relaxed, and then I spontaneously saw myself in that scene, which surprised me. I was embroiled in paranormal happenings at this point (as documented in my write up called "The Vortex" on my website) but I didn't realize at this time that I was an abductee, and certainly had never heard of anything concerning "MILABs", so I didn't understand why my mind would generate an image like that out of nowhere. I knew that my brother had the "thems" in his life, but I was in a state of obliviousness that it could also be spilling over to me.

(Note: An excerpt that I later came across several years after this memory, taken from the book "MILABs: Military Mind Control & Alien Abduction" by Dr. Helmut Lammer and Marion Lammer has this to say:

> "Diane (pseudonym) has had ongoing alien abduction experiences since her childhood. As she grew older she got flashbacks of human kidnappings where she was taken to military underground research facilities. She reports elevators, halls and gangways, like many other MILAB abductees. She also reports that she was taken on a tour of part of such a facility by a man in a white lab coat…"

Reading that was interesting in light of some of the memories or suspicious "dreams" I've had of people in white coats, elevators, gangways, wandering down the hallways of hospitals and such…)

The coma? I decided to put this one in here only because it happened during the same time period when I had the metal gangways glimpse, so it may be indicative of something. I can't remember all the details surrounding when I saw this, other than I think I was once again in a relaxed state on my bed when I got a glimpse/impression, don't know how else to describe it, of being on a bed somewhere, and where it seemed I was in some sort of "coma" type of state. I was laying there with my eyes closed, so I couldn't see anything going on around me, I could only hear. But the impression I got was that I was in a room with people, and I was on a bed, and I was unable to pull myself awake. It felt how I imagine being in a coma must feel like. Just under the surface, and able to hear everything…but unable to break through. It was very brief, and there was no strong emotions linked with it. Afterwards I relayed this to my brother, and he perked up, saying he'd had the same exact experience, of being in a bed somewhere "in a coma" type of thing. After that we'd joke that maybe we really were trapped in some matrix-like reality, where our real bodies were somewhere else, in a coma. At this point, with knowledge of MILABS and mind control I wonder if this was an abduction flash.

The sun mug. In another flash I'm sitting at a table in a small windowless room. Everything seems to have a slight yellowish tint to it. I'm sitting across the table from a Caucasian woman who's wearing glasses, with dark brown hair pulled back tightly. She seems to be wearing something white, possibly like a lab coat? And she's writing something down, not looking at me. For that reason I don't know exactly what her face looks like. I get the feeling that whatever she's writing concerns me. I'm just sitting there passively, as if in a drugged state. My eyes slowly drift aimlessly around until falling on the coffee mug that sits next to her, to her right. It's dark in color, like a navy blue, with a gold sun/rays on it. Suddenly I realize, "heeeeeeyy that's an illuminati symbolism…" and this is what triggers me to start pulling out of my stupor, and where the memory ends.

I remembered this flash while stopped at a red light on Broward Boulevard in early 2003. I glanced over and saw the sign for a "Sunoco" gas station. And it was the word sun in Sunoco that triggered me to remember the sun image on the coffee mug, and that entire flash of memory just…came out, right there, as I sat in my car. This image was an actual memory, but the woman in the memory has also appeared in two of my dreams. I was able to see her face a little better in one of the dreams, and she seems to have thin lips, big eyes, and a fixed expression. In one of those dreams I had total rage towards her. Whoever she was, she apparently was involved with some unsavory activity because she pissed me off as much as the mere sight of "the gray alien" did in another dream. (coming up later in the "Dreams" section.) Figures that in any of these snippets I always seem either totally drugged up or in a hypnotic daze. It's the only way they seem to be able to do their business. Letting me roam about undrugged and unhypnotized would result in stuff getting destroyed and people getting the beat down. ;D

Residual arm irritation. Sitting on a chair in a room with that same yellow hue to everything. Although here the yellow tint was even more pronounced. Again, I seem to be in a passive, drugged state. I'm slowly scratching at a spot on my lower left arm with my right index finger. That spot is irritated, and as I scratch at it in a daze, purple spottiness appears, like with burst capillaries.

I had this flash while sitting at Einstein Brothers Bagels (Fort Lauderdale) on March 22, 2003. This was the afternoon following a suspected abduction, and I had been receiving indicators that something had definitely happened. And as I sat at my table spacing out, boom, this memory just flashed into my mind. Without even thinking about it I immediately grabbed at my left arm and turned it, looking for the spotty purple coloring, fully expecting to see it…and it was there. It was fading, but it was there, in that exact spot, and it was real. I was stunned, like, "Holy shit…"

Flashback. A flash one morning back in early 2004 maybe, while lying in bed. I saw myself laying down, possibly on a table or something, in a brightly lit room, and there are several guys standing over me, leering and jeering at me. One leans in, he's white, with brunette hair, and he's right up in my face, laughing and mocking, and then scratches under my chin. [Mind control author Fritz Springmeier mentions the "sex kitten programming" trigger of scratching under the female's chin. Whether that's what was going on here, I don't know.] I just lay there in a daze, although I feel that even in my muted state I'm scared. But I don't seem to be able to do anything about it, like maybe I can't move. Their faces are blurred, and I seem to be drugged in general.

The flash was intense and sudden, very unexpected, and jarred me out of my relaxed state. I didn't like it at all, and my first thought was "WHAT THE HELL WAS THAT?!?" Although I did know what it was, even if I didn't consciously remember the incident.

The mantid. I didn't used to include this snippet in original versions of this book, but recently decided why not. But one night while laying in bed in Virginia in late 2004 I think, I had a sudden flash in my mind of a Mantid being face. Not a still frame image, but the wedge shaped head actually turning and looking at me, as if my mind was suddenly remembering having seen that at some point. It wasn't small and bright green like seeing a praying mantis insect in your garden, it was bigger, and maybe a little more brown, as if belonging to an actual large mantid being of some sort, and there was a clear feeling of it looking at me, seeing me. On the one hand it sounds goofy and doesn't indicate anything, but on the other hand, why would somebody have an image like that go through their mind? Very odd. Since I'm not prone to having flashes of memory-like events go through my mind, I've decided to include it here, along with those other few instances I've had in life.

Overt Indicators as a Child

Something I noticed straight away was how many of my logged incidents began with the words "When I was five…" "Around the age of four…" "About five years old when…" Four and five years old, over and over again. And recently, I just came across some corroborating insight about this that made me want to fall out of my chair. In the book "Future Memory" by author P.M.H. Atwater, she says "…fascinating that between the ages of four and five is when most childhood cases of alien abductions and alien sightings are reported to occur…" WOW! No doubt, I had a LOT of activity at those ages, something was definitely happening.

This is also the time when the lifelong issues between my mom and I really kicked in. I never realized that until doing this write up though, which is why writing stuff down is such a good idea. My entire life I'd just tell people, "Oh, me and my mom have NEVER gotten along, going back to when I was really little, we just always hated each other…" But when I did this write up I began to realize it started when I was about four to five years old as far as I can tell.

Also worth noting is that I have many memories of my childhood, going back to when I was still a baby, crawling, in diapers, sleeping in a crib, and eating from a high chair. I took it for granted for most of my life that I could recall being a baby, toddler and small child, only to discover that there are many people out there who scoff at the idea that anybody can remember anything of their life before the age of five. !!!!! To me this is completely ridiculous. Nobody can use themselves as the ultimate gauge of how all humans are, but that's what those types are doing. So in case it seems odd that I make mention of memories from such a young age, just know….I actually have memories from even younger. o.O (my boyfriend as well. We have that in common.)

Reversed in bed. An incident at about five years old when we lived in Westfield, Massachusetts - my mom had a funny feeling about me in the middle of the night…so much so that she got up to check on me and found me lying outside the covers, reversed on my bed, arms at my sides, with my eyes open, unblinking, staring at the ceiling. She leaned in close, watching me to see if I was breathing or blinking, and then I came to. I blinked a couple of times, and turned to look at her. She gasped and jumped back and said "OH MY GOD I thought you were dead!" She was really weirded out about the whole thing. Tucked me back in the right way, looking scared. I had no memory of why or how this happened, I only remember it from the point where I came to and turned to look at her, like, huh? what's going on? and seeing her jump back away from me. Being reversed in the bed is one of the noted child indicators when you do the research. It seems like "something" can't get the coordinates right when putting people back in their beds. Factoring in my mom's funny feeling and this incident definitely indicates something unusual going on. This happened a couple of more times after we moved to Connecticut where I would wake up and find myself reversed in the bed and outside the covers, not sure how I got that way, but no more incidents that my mom was ever aware of. It has never happened to me as an adult.

Iodine from procedure? Woke up one morning around the age of five in Massachusetts feeling something funny going on "down there." When I inspected myself, I found a strange amber colored stuff on me. I picked it all off, mystified. And it's never happened again since. Later I reported it to my mom who frowned at me, completely taken aback by me reporting such a bizarre thing. I was only five, too young for gynecological issues. It made no sense. She looked, but found everything to be normal, with nothing at all unusual happening down there, and gave me more frowny looks, like thinking, What are you talking about? Ideally I should have left it all on there so she could see for herself as proof, instead of picking it off, but I was only five and didn't think about that.

While living in Portland in late 2001 to early 2002 with my brother Joe, I relayed this story to him, and he immediately nodded knowingly and said, "Yeah, that was dried iodine."

REEEEaally, I said. What for?!?! He looked off into space, his eyes glossing over as he saw something play out in his mind, and said, "They implant girls through that area sometimes. See, there's this long silver stick with a ball at the end of it, and the implant is attached to the ball. They insert it in, inject the implant, and when they pull it back out again, they push a button that's on the stick, and it squirts an iodine solution to disinfect the area as they remove the stick."

When he was done relaying this, there was silence. Finally I broke it by asking the obvious. "How do you know this?" He turned to look at me, shaking himself out of it. Then furrowed his brows and had an intense look on his face. "I don't know. I just know." He paused, thinking about it. "I've seen it done," he realized. "I've seen them do it." He explained that they do this to females, especially female children, because it will go completely undetected on their body. Whether that's what was actually going on, I can't say. But it was definitely something.

People in white coats. Memory of being on a table lying on my stomach in a windowless room with doctors? in white coats - about two or three years old? I'm nervous, but alert and awake. Now, I had meningitis when I was one and a half years old, this could be the memory of me just prior to getting my spinal tap, where I would have been lying on my stomach. Thing is, I don't remember ANYTHING about when I was first sick with meningitis and admitted to the hospital. From what I was told, I had a fever of 104, I was vomiting, in and out of consciousness, and couldn't turn my head…but I don't remember any of it. My memories of my bout with meningitis don't start until I was recovering in my hospital room. At the point where I would have had my spinal tap, I was literally, near death. And in this memory, I don't seem to be sick like that, at all. So, is this a memory of when I was going to get my spinal tap? Or something else? I have come across one lone reference to MILAB abduction programming that describes something like this, where programming is done to abductee children.

> "The room inside the warehouse-like building is set up to work on the subjects. It has a table, a light, and equipment. The room is apart from the activities going on outside, so that others will not be distracted by what we do here."
> http://www.greatdreams.com/political/media03.html

Interesting. Especially in light of my "warehouse" dream, relayed below…which had somebody in a white coat. Despite the fact that the woman who wrote this is considered a sketchy "insider," there were several details mentioned in her write up that stood out for me, surprisingly. But the fact is, I was on my stomach, just like I would have been for my spinal tap. So who knows, maybe that's all it is.

Abduction programming facility? This was a "dream," but I'm going to put it in this section, to keep all these incidents from this age together. But I had a "dream" about the age of five, where I'm in some large (warehouse type, in retrospect) facility, standing around, waiting for some adults nearby in white (coats?) to lead me where to go next. And my Mom is there. (!!) She's talking to one of the people in white. To me it sort of seems like a supermarket, because it's so big with the tall ceilings, but I guess it's not. I'm just standing there, calm, looking up and around at everything. Up where the wall meets the ceiling there is a row of squares that are shiny solid black, each square framed in shiny silver/chrome. It gets my attention because of the geometric pattern, and it's the reason that I even remember this scene at all. This always felt more like a memory to me rather than a dream, due to the realistic feeling it had and the unusual subject. It doesn't seem normal for a kid to dream about something like this.

When I ran this by my brother Joe in Portland in 2001, he said it was indeed a base/facility that I was in, and that the black squares were made of mica, designed to filter ultraviolet radiation. Since people living in these bases have no exposure to the sun they have to give them artificial doses of it to prevent sickness, and it was passed through these mica block/filter things. My first response was a big scrunched face, very doubtful since the mica I'd seen growing up was pretty transparent. Not black. In fact I was so doubtful about what he reported that I didn't even include Joe's explanation of this in the original versions of this book. But when I later researched mica I found pictures of it that showed thick sheets of mica….that were a smoky gray to black color. The thicker the sheets, the blacker it gets. But most importantly, years after being told this dubious piece of information, it was confirmed to me that the idea of mica filtering UV rays is actually valid…you can do a search on Google and turn up research papers on it, as I discovered. Apparently mica filters out the harmful spectrum of UV rays, and allows the beneficial ones to pass through. So, yet one more thing that Joe told me way back when, which was put on the backburner, until surprising confirmation eventually did come in. And as mentioned in other places throughout this book, Joe wasn't somebody who was educated or who spent time reading the sorts of material that would have taught him this stuff, or used the internet to gain insight. He had no interest in the internet, and spent pretty much most of his free time when I was last around him in 2001/2002 engaged in criminal pursuits, not being academic. But yet he knew this, right off the top of his head, didn't miss a beat. Now, it doesn't prove that what I saw in my "dream"/possible memory fragment really was mica, or for the purposes that Joe claims. But if anything it showed me that this kid was walking around with knowledge that he shouldn't have had.

Frequent nosebleeds as a kid in Massachusetts. Frequent nighttime nosebleeds as a child have been mentioned in abduction research as a possible indicator of "stuff." They'd always only happen for me in the middle of the night, spontaneously erupting out of nowhere. Never once did I have one during the day that I can remember. I remember spending nights with my mom in the bathroom soaking up washcloths of blood, and my pillowcases had brown blood stains on them. The last nocturnal nosebleed that I remember occurred in Connecticut around age eight, and that was it. (I remember it only because I was standing in front of my dresser mirror taking care of it on my own, and blood dripped onto one of my knick knacks, permanently staining it.) Never got them again after that.

Skin scraping. Had a flashback at the age of four or so while eating vegetables at dinner one night, of a skin scraping on my left arm. There were these little red pepper pieces in the vegetables, and as I stared at them on my fork, I suddenly had this flash of a memory pop into my mind of seeing a bright red scrape thing on my upper left arm.

And I think something about a stainless steel table, the same room from the previous entry with the people in the white coats. But when I looked at my arm, there was nothing there. It was confusing to me as a kid, to have a "memory" of something and not know where it came from. But as an adult, I of course now know about abductions and skin scrapings. I'm not sure how skin scrapings work, if they're supposed to actually draw blood like that, or if they just lightly rub the skin to take dead surface cells or what. I have no scar on my arm for this. (although a few scratches or scrape scars that I've received in the last fifteen or so years have also faded out to where I can't find them anymore, so the fact that I don't still have this particular one from age four doesn't disprove anything.) So who knows. I'd be liable to dismiss it, except for the manner in which the memory appeared - it was triggered, and appeared in a flash, exactly as buried memories resurface. And also, where does a four year old even come up with something like that?

The little "ghost" girl. And Burger King. Westfield, Massachusetts. This was probably about age three, since I was now sleeping in a bed. I was lying in bed in the middle of the night when an all white little ghost looking girl floated into my room. I wasn't scared for some reason. But she looked my age, and was dressed to match just how I looked at that time – T-shirt, little shorts, and pig tails on each side of her head with bangs. She carried a ball with her. She floated to a stop inside the doorway, looking at me, smiling. Then she tossed her white ghost ball at me through the air. I smiled and reached my arms up from where I lay in the bed and "caught" this ball as it floated towards me, in silent slo-mo. I could see that I caught it and was holding it…but I couldn't feel it! What fun! ☺ I smiled and tossed it back to her. It floated in silent slo mo through the air and she caught it, and tossed it back. We went back and forth like this three times…..but then I dropped the ball. It went over my head and "landed" silently behind the headboard between the bed and the wall.

That's when things turned negative.

Her whole face changed, and it went from looking like a smiling little girl to getting twisted, like a monster. She charged straight at me, silently and quickly, enraged. My eyes bugged out like, "AHHH!" As she got near, several feet away, I ducked under the covers to hide. I didn't know what else to do. I stayed under there for a little bit, listening, waiting. Nothing seemed to be happening so I finally peeked out to see if she was still there. She was gone. Whew!

Some may say this was a dream, but I know for a fact I was wide awake. This was not a dream. Nor was I one of those kids prone to fanciful visions and hallucinations. And I didn't have any imaginary friends – because I didn't need any, I had lots of real friends. And I was definitely not a kid who got carried away in fantasy make believe. I was very practical minded. (way more than most normal kids in fact.) So, that's why I know that I didn't just invent this fanciful hallucination of some one-time imaginary ghost girl friend that turns into a monster. It makes no sense, based on who I was as a kid.

Right around this time period I was visited by the "Burger King" – another all white smiling ghost figure who floated into my room unexpectedly in the middle of the night as I laid there in the dark, wide awake. (my mom put me to bed way too early at that age, so I would periodically find myself wide awake in the middle of the night, just looking around the room like, doo dee doo dee doo…bored.) Burger King had the robe and the crown and the beard, smiling all pleasant…but when I looked at his feet from where I laid in my bed, I saw that he wasn't walking, he was floating, which was interesting to me. Hmm, I thought. And I don't remember what happened after that. There's no conclusion to this incident. One minute he was floating into my room, and the next…nothing. Blank. But I do remember trying to tell my mom about it in the morning at breakfast, "Mommy, Burger King was in my room last night!" But she paid me no mind. She looked at me like, Uh huh, sure, and continued with prepping and arranging breakfast.

"Split mind" crying. Strange incident in kindergarten, five years old when we lived in Massachusetts. I would walk home from the elementary school every day since it was only a few blocks away. Sometimes I walked with friends, sometimes I was alone. And one day after walking home by myself, I got in the door, then spontaneously started crying……but I had no idea why. My mom kept asking me what was wrong. But I didn't know! I felt like part of me was upset and traumatized, but yet I didn't know why. Another time in first grade, around age six or seven, this happened at school. We were getting ready to leave to go home, putting on our coats and gathering up our lunch boxes and stuff, and I started crying with that weird split thing happening. I was watching myself cry, but not knowing why. One little girl asked me what was wrong – was I crying because I was happy maybe? The teacher had just been reading a story to us, so she figured maybe the story was affecting me and I was crying with happiness? (future psychologist. ;)) I shook my head no, confused. I felt embarrassed because I didn't know what was wrong with me, why I seemed to not be in control of myself. Those are the only two incidents like this that I remember as a kid. The one thing these two incidents do have in common is that they both involved walking home from school. Either having just arrived home from school, or, about to head out to walk home from school. So…….something very upsetting and traumatizing happening or maybe about to happen during the time I left school – alone – and walked home, but which I couldn't consciously remember.

Bedposts. I was terrified of my bed posts around age three? Four? Called them "The Woodens." They were small and round, and looked like bald headed creatures to me, and if I looked at them long enough at night while lying in bed, I'd get hysterical and start screaming and panicking until my parents would come and calm me down. What did they remind me of - "aliens" of some type?

[Update: After the original writing of this book I experienced a spontaneous, involuntary memory flash involving being a little kid in Westfield, in my bed in the middle of the night, surrounded by little bald headed "aliens" around my bed. The memory popped up out of nowhere one night while I was in bed, and in this dream/memory thing I WAS a kid again, I was back in my little kid body with my child mentality and all. I could feel myself lying there in the dark in my old bedroom, seeing these bald headed creatures moving around me. A couple of faint whimpers came out of me and I thought "i want my mommy…" That's all I could do was whimper, due to the fear. I don't take anything at face value though, so this may or may not be something real, although it certainly seemed very convincing, that's all I can say. I had no sense of myself as an adult, because this was apparently a real flashback putting me back into my child body/mentality with how that felt. Something that we normally can't tap into as adults. But, who knows.]

The butterflies. Weird incident about the age of five when "butterflies" appeared on my bedroom wall. My mom was downstairs with the TV on, talking to somebody who was visiting. Meanwhile, I'm upstairs in my room, lying awake in bed, and suddenly what seems to be all these black and white "butterflies" appear on the facing wall, moving and fluttering about. I immediately went totally HYSTERICAL. I jumped out of bed and stood there, facing the wall, screaming and going ballistic at the "butterflies" until my mom came running upstairs. I don't know why these butterfly things caused such an immediate hysterical reaction from me, but my attitude was I wanted NO part of it. But they stopped as soon as she got there. Of course. She finds me crying about "the butterflies on the wall!! The butterflies!!" and of course there's nothing there.

My bedroom was on the second floor, so it was impossible for the fluttering butterflies to have been caused by car headlights or something coming in at ground level. It's also interesting to note that years later, at the age of 27, I would find myself decorating the wall over my bed with dozens and dozens of butterfly cutouts. (expanded upon in a little bit.) Butterflies are also one of those things I've been attracted to in general, and one of those things that people give to me, for whatever reason.

Spirals. I became obsessed with elevators and spiral stairs at the age of thirteen. To the point of ridiculousness. Always doodling DNA looking helix-type spirals and ribbons on my notebooks at school, dreams about spiral stairs and elevators, obsessing about riding in elevators and wishing to find a pair of spiral stairs. Spirals, helixes, ribbons, and elevators are all major symbolisms / systems / techniques used in mind control programming.

Overt Indicators as an Adult

The following incidents are not actual memory flashes, but, they are pretty obvious indicators of something very unusual occurring in my life…

My first known, overt abduction - October, 2001, Orange County, CA. I had recently come across a really realistic picture of a "Gray" which intrigued me. It was fun to stare at and contemplate the idea of meeting Grays, and the picture's realistic nature made that easy to do. I sat on my couch with the picture in my hand, staring intensely at it for what was probably like twenty minutes. I stared so hard and for so long that I was pretty much almost in a self-imposed trance.

After the twenty minutes or so I noticed that the background noise had muted. I couldn't hear my roommate Todd's TV down the hall anymore. Curious, I looked up.

Snapping out of my thoughts didn't make the sound of the TV come back. In fact, there was now the feeling of a veil of control descending on me. I jumped up, alarmed. I was wide awake, standing in the middle of my room, and literally felt my willpower and ability to control myself slipping away with every second. It was VERY quick and very powerful, whatever it was. I still couldn't hear Todd's TV though, due to the muting effect around me. I spun around wildly, and inside some part of me was yelling "NO! NO!! RUN!! RUN!!! LEAVE THE ROOM!! GET OUT OF HERE NOW!!" But I couldn't do it. I was actually arguing back and forth with myself:

"Just go lie down and wait. They'll be here shortly."

"RUN!! GET OUT OF HERE NOW!!! GO!!!"

"Go lie down. It'll be alright. They'll be here shortly."

I had this back and forth panicked argument, my fight-or-flight reflex attempting to be overridden by this calm thought form telling me to go lie down. It'll be okay. They'll be here shortly. Just go lie down.

In the end I conceded. I wish I hadn't. I should have run like hell.

I changed into clothes to sleep in as fast as I could, knowing that I was under control, and not able to even fight back. No willpower. I was literally like a puppet, and I knew it. I knew I was acting like a crazy person. But I obeyed anyway, turned out my lights save for my purple Christmas lights, and climbed into bed. I had a full pot of green tea in my system (translation - caffeine) and so I was wide awake. I peaked out from under the covers, feeling like a crazy person. It was 11 p.m.

And that was the last I remember. I blacked out after that, despite the caffeine.

Ten hours later, Saturday morning, I started to wake up in my bed, feeling like I had been run over by a train. Felt like absolute crap. I kept resurfacing like I was in a drugged out stupor, then I'd fall back under again, unconscious. This resurfacing and sinking back down went on for several hours. This is not how I normally wake up. I was finally able to wake up after 11 a.m. I felt like it was 5 a.m. though and I was STUNNED when I finally looked at my alarm clock. My first thought was "Where did the night go?!?!?" The sun was out and the day was in full swing. I sat up in bed, like lalala. No concerns.

I got up from my bed and saw my cat sitting in the middle of my floor, and I reached out to pet her, saying Hi. She recoiled from me, her back hunching up, then hissed. Shocked, I tried to pet her again. Now she actually took a swing at me, trying to scratch me and hissed even louder and darted under my desk, hiding from me. She'd NEVER done that before, to me or anybody. !! She was normally a very friendly, affectionate, sociable kitty who likes people.

Still oblivious I was like, Huh. Okay. I left her alone, and proceeded to get dressed and set about my day. I was feeling neutral and emotionally calm. I did not question anything that had happened the night before, or anything happening right now that morning, didn't make any connections. Just total programmed oblivion.

After brushing my teeth and getting dressed and all that I sat on my couch and saw the alien pic still sitting on the arm of the couch, where I'd left it the night before. I picked it up. But when I looked at it I instantly recoiled and tossed it aside. I had this knee jerk reaction and thought, "Don't EVER look at that picture again!" My subconscious knew.

So, I reached for a book to flip through instead. lalala. Oblivion. As I read I noticed that my glasses were blurry. Kept taking them off and wiping at them. After awhile I began to realize the problem was with my actual eye itself. My left eye was watery/runny. In the mirror I saw it was pink. Funny because it was fine before I went to bed.

At this same time I also began to realize there were pains happening in my uterus and ovaries area. But I wasn't getting my monthly. I had never had pains like that in there before. So this was certainly a first. I curiously pressed in on my uterus/ovaries area to try to alleviate the pain.

Then the images started. I soon realized as I went about my day that there was a constant barrage of "Gray alien" faces in my mind anytime I closed my eyelids. Gray faces from ALL angles, three dimensional. Staring straight ahead, faced to the left, to the right, large, small, all kinds. Sometimes just the large, black slanted eyes, no face. Anytime I blinked or closed my eyes, it was there. Nonstop. Like internal wall paper for the mind. At first it was a novel thing. By the end of the day, twelve hours later, I was a wreck, because it would not stop.

I ran into one of my roommates, Denise in the kitchen in the afternoon. She smiled and apologized for the fight that had happened the night before outside my door between her and Todd. I looked at her blankly, and shook my head back and forth. I had no idea what she was talking about.

She frowned and said, "You know, the fight we had. You couldn't have missed it. We were right outside your door!" She told me how Todd had come home at 3 a.m., loudly throwing open the front door, going down the hall to his room and turning on the TV full volume and leaving his door open so he could hear it while he cooked food in the kitchen, banging pots around all over the place, whistling super loud. He woke her up and she came out of her room, pissed off, and they totally got into it there in the hall right outside my door, yelling at each other.

I had NO idea what she was talking about. When I told her so, she started to get annoyed, thinking I was jerking her around. She was really sensitive and didn't like people playing her. "Carissa...don't lie, you had to have heard it! Come on! Please!" She said they even tried to call me through my door, saying "Carissa? Carissa? Sorry about all the noise..." but I never answered. They thought it was a little weird because I'm a light sleeper and hear everything.

By this point in the afternoon I was putting things together and starting to realize what had happened the night before. As Denise stood in front of me telling me about this huge ruckus that I somehow missed, I realized - I wasn't there. That's why I didn't hear this. I wasn't even there. But what was I supposed to say to her?! So I just played dumb and quickly changed the subject and diverted her attention.

By night time, around 11:30 p.m. I was a wreck because the images of Grays would not stop in my mind. It was as strong as ever, every time I blinked or closed my eyes. I was curled into a ball in the middle of my floor, crying silently, because I thought I was going crazy. I believed I was truly losing my mind and descending into madness. Something was trying very hard to convince me that what I had experienced involved the "Grays." Yet, somehow I knew that it was all wrong. Something felt off. I KNEW deep down that I hadn't been "abducted by aliens!" even though I've so heavily researched the matter and had all the symptoms of an abduction.

Two days later, on Tuesday night, all of us roommates got into it with Todd, yet again. He was always making problems and we were always mad at him. :D He had me SO annoyed that I stomped off to my room and went to bed all angry and riled up. I lay there in my bed, totally fuming, and suddenly in my mind, I wasn't in my bed anymore. I was laying flat on my back, on a table, under a light…surrounded by three Grays. It wasn't a still frame image, it was a moving flashback memory. They were surrounding me, peering down at me. I saw one tilt his head slightly to its left (my right), and lean in slightly, peering at me closer. They weren't gray in color, and they didn't have those exaggerated round heavy looking bulbous heads. They were porcelain white, with the black slanted eyes, the slit for a mouth, and thin necks and bodies and arms. Their faces were long. Very elongated, but with that slight upside down teardrop shape to them. And they seemed so WISE. I just lay there, completely blank and passive, like I was in a drugged stupor.

I was so scared at this sudden shift in my mind that I gasped and yanked myself out of the flashback. WHAT the HELL was THAT?!?! My first memory of what happened on Saturday night, that's what! Finally, a memory! Something to confirm all the other roundabout evidence. It was about time! It didn't occur until I was emotionally worked up about something else. Like my mind needed to be diverted and focused on another emotionally intense experience before slipping in a glimpse of that one.

During the week when I was at work, I had the most wonderful feeling that something fantastic had occurred the past weekend, something which was there just under the surface of my brain, but which I couldn't access anymore. It drove me NUTS. I wanted so badly to remember the experience, and I could feel it, right there, but just couldn't pull it up.

The only way to get to it and get it back was to do it again. Have another abduction.

I mentally asked for one several times, wishing to do it all again this upcoming Saturday night. Also, the mild case of "pink eye" lasted most of the week, in my left eye, but faded out on its own. The pains in my ovaries/uterus persisted off and on during the week. The images of the Grays in my mind lasted fully into Tuesday. And my cat refused to let me within several feet of her until well over a week later, something that my roommates noticed and commented on. But again, what could I possibly tell them.

However, by Thursday, I changed my mind about being abducted thanks to some outside input. I had told Tom, via email, about this experience, and he warned me about the negative nature of Grays and abductions. What's interesting is that one concerned warning was all it took to snap me out of it. My subconscious knew and recognized the truth of his warning right away, even if my conscious brain was programmed to think otherwise. So I mentally changed my mind about it.

Saturday night arrived, and I wasn't even thinking about the abduction anymore. I figured I had changed my mind and that was that, that's all I needed. It's over.

Nope. Sorry. Doesn't work that way.

I sat there on my couch, reading again. Todd was down the hall in his room, his TV going loudly. His two little boys were over for a visit this weekend, since he was in the middle of a divorce. I listened to their voices as I read. Then suddenly I realized that Todd's TV was being muted and all background sound was now gone. Alarmed, I tossed my book aside and instantly jumped up without even thinking. I looked around, panicked.

The veil began descending on me, and I felt the same identical thing as the weekend before. My willpower was being squelched down. With every second it slipped away more and more and I knew I didn't have much time. Fight!! Fight back! I had the thought to *RUN!! GET OUT OF HERE NOW!!! followed by the same argument to just go lie down...lie down and wait, they'll be here soon…go lie down…

So I ran.

I flung open my door and ran down the hall and into the bathroom, closed the door and looked around. But I could still feel the veil. Panicked, I thought about hanging out with Todd and his kids across the hallway, but I knew that was useless. I "knew" that they could and would get me anyway, even in Todd's room. I ran out of the bathroom, back down the hall and peered into my room. Nothing had "arrived" yet. But I could still feel that blanketing pressure veil thing on me. I ran into the kitchen. Still there. Everywhere I went in the house, it was there on me. I kept mentally screaming "NO! NO! NO!" the whole time. I REALLY did NOT want this anymore.

Finally in desperation I threw open the front door and ran down the steps, down the walkway…and halfway up the street into the night, like a crazy person, trying to get away from that veil of control thing. I got halfway up the street and I felt it sloooowwly subsiding. I would have kept running as long as I had to. I wasn't going ANYWHERE that weekend, with anybody. I was determined. I did what I should have done the weekend before. Cautiously, I turned around and headed back to the house. The veil was completely gone now.

Such an overt attempt to take me while I was wide awake never happened again. It only works if you allow it to and can't/won't fight back and resist. After that they resort to covert methods.

The laser "beam me up" line? While living in Portland, Oregon, and roommating with my brother, I glimpsed what I theorize might be technology for beaming somebody up. It happened around 7 p.m., when my brother was at work and I had the tiny apartment all to myself, along with my cat. Kitty (her name) was uncharacteristically scared and clingy that night, sticking close by me wherever I went. If I got up to go to the sink she followed and jumped up on the counter just to be as close to me as possible. When I went back to my bed and sat down, she jumped down and ran with me, and crawled into my lap, curling into a scared ball. I noticed this, and thought huh, I wonder what's up…? as I pet her. Her tail flicked around with agitated energy. After a few minutes of me reading my book while petting her, we both had the urge to look up at my brother's bed at the same exact moment…and that's when I saw this white laser line looking thing appear about a foot over his bed, horizontally over the spot where he would normally lay. My cat froze up when that happened. Her tail stopped in mid-flick, and she just stared at it, bug eyed. The line appeared out of thin air, was about 2-3 feet long, glowing white, and slightly thicker in the middle than at the ends. It glowed brightly for several seconds over Joe's bed, reaching its peak intensity, then faded back out again. It never made any noise. No other phenomenon accompanied it. Afterwards, I called my brother at work to tell him about it, and see what he thought it was. He just laughed and said "Damn! I missed my connecting flight!"

"Astral Pow Wow"/Abduction? April 2002 I believe - Tom was still back in Iowa at this point, and I was living in Fort Lauderdale. He was going to be moving down to Florida in June, after school finished, but by that point I just couldn't wait to see him. The feeling of wanting to see him was so intense that I apparently made it happen. I brought him to me. I woke up in the middle of night, finding myself lying on my left side on the carpet in the middle of the room, with my right arm around him. He was physical but I wasn't in my body. I soon realized this when my hand touching his skin was buzzing. My whole "body" was buzzing in fact. I realized this straight off, but despite being out of my body, and despite the situation - something I had NEVER experienced before - I kept my wits about me and had my usual sense of humor. I joked to myself, "Well, I went to bed alone, and woke up with a guy in my apartment!" :D Words don't convey the level of happiness I felt though. I "sat up" in my astral body, gazing down at him, feeling the most incredibly pure love I think I've ever felt for anybody. I reached my hand out and laid it on his chest, and that's when he started to wake up. His head moved suddenly from his right to the left, taking a big breath, and as he awoke, the connection broke. I started involuntarily floating up and away from him, towards the ceiling, with my hand reaching out to him. Rapid scene switch, and now he's gone from the apartment, and I'm sliding backwards from that spot on the middle of the floor, back into my body. I felt and watched as I slid and adjusted my way back in!! Had to wiggle around a few times to get "back in." And then I opened my physical eyes, but I couldn't see clearly for a few seconds. My vision was distorted, and I had to blink blink blink to get my proper vision back. I just laid there, SO happy. Even if I was only able to see him for a few seconds, that was okay. The next day I emailed him and asked him if anything unusual happened to him last night, and he said Yeah, actually, it did…he woke up with the remnants of a nosebleed, and the feeling that "something really sublime" had happened.

Well, if you're an abductee and you do something like this, don't think they won't notice and come for you. A stunt like that is absolutely off the charts.

The very next time I laid down to sleep, which was the following night, they apparently took me. And whatever they did to me put me out of commission for an entire week. I had no actual memories of the events, I only had the physical after effects.

I was able to go to work just fine and drift along through my day, but when I'd go home, I would just lay and stare at the walls and do nothing for hours. I don't recall eating - some of the food I had in the fridge went bad as a result - I don't think I even showered. I had no desire or will to do ANYTHING. I was fried, blank, numb. I'd just lay there and stare at the walls or ceiling, for hours, day after day. On Thursday of that week I was in the bathroom standing at the sink, staring at nothing in a blank stupor, feeling lost, when my hands absentmindedly reached up like they had a mind of their own and started hunting around under my hair, at the base of my skull. Like I was searching for something. And I knew it when I found it. A large lump on the base of my skull/top of my neck, about the size of a quarter. It didn't hurt…but as soon as my fingers touched it, I had the immediate commanding thought, "IT'S JUST A SPIDER BITE!" with the corresponding image in my mind of a black and yellow orb spider on a web to reinforce it. The image in my mind was large, like seeing a picture or an image on a screen.

As soon as I saw that image in my mind I knew. That's programming. Some procedure was done to me, and my subconscious remembered and knew EXACTLY where to find the residual lump without my conscious even having to think about it…and as soon as I found it, the programming kicked in to try to convince me it was "just a spider bite," complete with convincing spider imagery and everything. "Move it along folks, nothing to see here, move it along, nothing to see…"

At any rate, after a full week I began to finally pull out of my blank stupor and come back to life, regaining my personality and energy, back to eating and living normally.

Unexplained cold. Woke up another time in the morning very suddenly with my body all cold, as if I'd just been standing in a refrigerated room, or someplace with some mega air conditioning going on. My blood flow was fine, and I wasn't cold internally, it was just the surface of my skin that was cold to the touch. But I was in south Florida. In August. With no A/C on. There was no logical reason for me to be this cold in my hot and humid apartment. It seemed to be another case of being plunked back from someplace that possibly was very cold or air conditioned, or possibly the transport process in itself can do this, I don't know.

Nocturnal programming commands. Woke up one morning in Florida right in the middle of somebody programming me. Heard a male voice saying in my mind, "YOU WILL ONLY SEE WHAT'S WRONG AND UGLY IN THE WORLD! YOU WILL ONLY SEE WHAT'S WRONG AND UGLY IN THE WORLD!" It was alarming, that's all I can say. And I'm glad I woke up in time to catch it, and be aware that this type of programming was trying to be instilled in me.

Woke up another time hearing a male voice repeating over and over, kind of loud and intensely "YOU WILL NOT REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE NO MATTER WHAT ANYBODY SAYS TO YOU!! YOU WILL NOT REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE NO MATTER WHAT ANYBODY SAYS TO YOU!!" Yikes.

More programming. This one's weird – it seemed to be a vivid dream of an actual abduction occurrence, and because it's very obvious, I decided to group it in this section. But around April 2002 I "dreamed" that I was lying on a table under a light, feeling like I was in a drugged daze, and hallucinating on top of it that I was seeing all these little gecko lizards pouring out of my Xyphoid Process area of my chest. I could feel that there were humans standing around me, but I couldn't see them. I just stared at all the lizards rushing out while a male voice off to the side informed me in a hypnotic voice that these lizards represented my "reptilian genetics." When I pendulum dowsed this I've always gotten that No, I don't have "reptilian genetics" and that I'm not a hybrid either, however…I have, supposedly, been a non-human in other past/parallel incarnations. But the fact that I was lying on an exam table, drugged up and hallucinating about lizards coming out of my chest is enough for me to know that it's not true. So it's important to point out that there is programming to get abductees to believe things about themselves that are not true – including that they're alien or Reptilian hybrids, or have those genetics in some way. It's a huge avenue of deception because it can be used for many malicious purposes.

Remote viewing? Woke up one morning, hearing the voice of a guy saying "1-4-1-4-1". 141 is a number that has followed me everywhere since my brother back in 2002, documented in detail on my website in the "Number Sightings" write up. And here it was being used like a code almost, programming, a trigger, not sure. I sort of saw, or at least imagined, the source of this voice as having a beard and glasses, neutral personality, not angry, not happy, just neutral and non-emotional in a pleasant but firm way. I get the impression that in this "dream" I was remote viewing for somebody. I can feel that just before I was triggered to pull out, I had been doing something, looking for, or at, something, for somebody else's benefit. It's just a fragment that I can remember, but that's definitely what I know of from what little I can remember.

When I was halfway in and out of consciousness, slowly waking up after hearing the "1-4-1-4-1" command, sensing the guy behind the voice, right then a thought form cut in on the line you could say. Very distinctly, sounding like me (in my "higher self" way) and in a neutral but firm way it told me, "They have the ability to use you now when you're sleeping without having to physically take you." It sounded like it wanted me to know this, as a head's up FYI. I filled in the blanks and concluded it would be due to implant technology, so "they" might be able to connect to my brain while I sleep, using the program trigger codes to activate whichever portion of the mind they need. Tell me what to look for, and then, due to the two way implant, they would see whatever I see in my mind's eye. What I see, they see, instantly and automatically. VERY ingenious…if that's what's going on. This type of technology was actually later confirmed for me in the writing of Fritz Springmeier.

Programming script. I woke up another morning in Florida catching a male voice in the middle of doing what I can only describe as reading from a script, telling me something that I'm not going to repeat. He was calmly, methodically telling me that certain sexual things had "happened" to me in life, which I highly doubt, especially considering the fact he sounded like he was reading from a script. But the effects of believing something like that would be traumatic on the psyche. In fact, were you to do the research, such ideas could…and do…cause an involuntary mind fracture.

Later on after the fact I came across Carla Emery's "Secret, Don't Tell", her book regarding unethical hypnosis and government mind control projects, and surprisingly discovered that the concept of reading a script to a drugged and vulnerable target is absolutely something that is done, and involves related subject matter of what was said to me. And it's done with the intention of causing the mind to fracture. So I imagine the same technique could apply to a target via their implants. I'm sure it wouldn't always have to be done in person, with the target drugged, possibly being in a susceptible sleep/trance state would suffice just as well.

Out of body. For a period of time in 2003, February - the summertime - I was having trouble staying in my body when I'd lie down to sleep, and also, I would periodically wake up not knowing where, or WHO, I was. ! When I'd lie down, as soon as my body would relax, I could feel myself slipping out of it and rising up several inches over my body. I'd have to pull myself back down, only to slip back out again the second I started to drift off to sleep. Curling up in the fetal position would finally thwart it. I was being abducted a lot during this time period it seems, so maybe this was having an affect on being able to stay in my body. I've since learned that an after effect of being out of the body like that will, for me anyway, involve temporary amnesia when back in the body again, lasting about 30 seconds.

An Almost Soul Abduction. Had an incident where I went to lie down for a nap and "something" tried to yank me out of my body. As I lay there, a rapid spinning in circles sensation began, with wind blowing around and the feeling of being tugged upwards, out of my body. I'd pull myself out of it and try to fall back to sleep again, only to have it repeat. This yanking went on like six or seven times in a row. I allowed it to go on as long as it did because I wasn't scared, and was curious to see if this was going to lead anywhere. Was I finally consciously witnessing an abduction?? But then, I heard something funny, some kind of audio, this voice, noise, something, that sounded like it was coming from the end of a tunnel or tube, and THAT got me alarmed. It didn't sound like anything I can describe. I just know that the second I heard it, my eyes bugged out in my mind, there was subconscious "recognition" going on, and that's when I freaked out. I mentally yelled out "NOOOO!!! NONONONONONONONO!!!!!!" I abandoned the nap plans. As I sat up in bed I noticed that my body had an electrical tingliness happening, mostly centered in my arms. And within an hour afterwards, I developed another one of those small purple circles ("EM energy surge burns", according to the C's), on my lower left arm. I grabbed a photo. http://in2worlds.net/anomalous-markings

"Astral Giraffe." Went to bed one night in early 2003 while living in Fort Lauderdale, but something didn't feel right. Had a slightly fearful feeling, although I did my best to squelch it down. Did a small intention for protection, then zonked out. Well I awoke like an hour later (laying on my stomach, my head faced to the left) to the sounds of wind whipping around, and me spinning clockwise, around and around and around. Everything was getting faster and faster, the spinning, the wind, all the while as I lay there, paralyzed, unable to snap out of it. The wind got so crazy I had the sensation of my hair blowing all over the place, and I was actually getting physically sick from all the spinning. It finally culminated with me screaming out in my mind "NOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!!!!!!!!!!!!!!" (which actually had this bizarre, echo effect happening on top of the wind!) Then I was finally able to pull myself free from the spinning and wind, and unparalyze myself. As I did so, I "turned" and looked over my left shoulder and was startled to see a big giraffe face, staring right at me. I mentally jumped. At first I thought it was a deer, then I realized as I stared at it that no…that's actually more like a giraffe. [NOTE: Giraffes, owls and deer are all screen images common in abduction scenarios.] When I say "turned" and I "jumped," I didn't do it physically. I wasn't fully in my body, because I didn't feel the covers or the bed. It was astral. Then I was back in my body again, feeling the bed and covers. When I snapped back in, I didn't know where I was for a second or two. I didn't even recognize my surroundings. Talk about disorientation! It took me a second or two to adjust back in, remember where I was, even who I was, and what was happening. My heart was racing and my nerves were all standing on end, and I could STILL HEAR the remnants of the wind around me, and feel the effects on my body, even though I was now awake. Very loud, surrounding me over my head, whooshing this way and that. I pulled the covers over my head to drown out the whooshing wind noise, like, AHHHHH!!! Shut UUUUP!!! I need to get back to sleep!! I have to get up for work!!! I don't have TIME for this.

So I wonder what would have happened had I not fought this off, and allowed myself to be taken out of my body. Where would I have gone?

This experience resulted in yet another one of the round purple circle marks that I sometimes used to get on my (left) arm. I snapped a photo of it, which can be found on my website in the Anomalous Markings section. http://in2worlds.net/anomalous-markings For me, the small round purple circle marks on my arms always seemed to happen after fighting off something trying to pull me out of my body.

"Practice" confrontation. In the middle of the night (February 6, 2005) I felt my body starting to swirl and move about, and pull upwards, like a soul abduction possibly, where I began to get pulled out of my body. Then I mentally connected with the presence behind it, which was VERY frightening. When feeling it face to face so to speak, I was overcome with fear. Couldn't get a grip on myself and combat it with non-fear, love, neutrality, positive thoughts, or any of the tactical goals I'd had in mind at that time. I just fell apart and panicked. Was also slightly paralyzed. I mentally thought "no!no!no!no!no!no!no!…" and forced myself out of the paralysis and the panic, my heart racing, nerves on end.

But I immediately heard a friendly, kind, warm thought form cut in, which sympathized and told me, "Don't worry…with practice you can do it." "It", as I telepathically understood it to be, was the ability to override the fear and face the abductors head on and pull myself out of their grips without completely losing it. REALLY interesting and weird to get that feedback…

Suspicious Stuff as an Adult

When looking for indicators of whether or not you've been abducted, you have to look at everything, no matter how seemingly trivial or stupid it initially appears. This is because they wipe out memories, so all there is to go on are the covert, very subtle indicators that "something is amiss." So really nitpick and scrutinize. Don't forget, we've all been raised on Hollyweird movies, where everything is DRAMATIC and EXAGGERATED and OBVIOUS. Well, real life is a lot more subtle. Which is why people tend to miss so much of it. They're waiting for big exaggerated drama and stuff to be spelled out for them that they completely overlook stuff that's happening right under their nose. (myself included, I'm definitely guilty of having done this too many times to count, which is why I know enough now to pass on the tip.) So I recommend making a list of ALL suspect events, no matter how silly it may seem to be. Sometimes even the littlest things can point to something. Some things will turn out to have a logical explanation and can be either discarded, or at least put on the backburner. But some may not. And those are the incidents and events worth focusing on. From there, look closer, and expand your scrutiny into the rest of the aspects of your life. I've experimented with a pendulum, dowsing answers to confirm whether my own incidents were what I thought they were. For your experiences, do what works for you.

"Smash and Grab." In April or May of 1995, age 20, I was at that point living in one of the rooms at the hotel I was working at. It was a temporary situation, being that I was planning to leave on a cross country road trip with my then-boyfriend Gary in June. I was renting one of two full size, regular nice hotel rooms that happened to be located in the basement level, down the hall from Housekeeping. They were there for employees to use, basically. The hallway led to the parking garage, giving it outside street access. It was a bizarre time period for me, full of emotional highs and lows, periods of exhilaration and depression/despondency. So one night I'm lying on my bed, in the dark, going through another one of my extreme emotional lows, feeling suicidal and despondent. The only light in the room came from the parking lot lights that shone through the small window up by the ceiling, which was on the level of the parking lot. But it was enough to see around the room. And as I was lying there, wishing to die and feeling very despondent, I had this sudden "hallucination" of what appeared to be a military looking guy silently bursting into my room, automatic rifle drawn and pointed at me, rushing silently right up on me…and that's where I pulled out of the "hallucination," gasping and sitting up in bed, like AHHH! WHAT WAS THAT!!! I had NO explanation for this, as I was NOT somebody prone to hallucinations. It made no sense. But I soon put it out of my mind, then forgot about it altogether.

Years later while reading up on MILABs research, I continually came across references to what I term the "smash and grab" method of taking an abductee, discussed in Part I of this write up. And as mentioned, I always thought this method of operation seemed a bit ridiculous. My hotel memory was still obviously buried, forgotten. Until one morning in 2004 when, while questioning my Flagstaff Arizona incident (coming up after this incident) I wondered whether I had ever had any tell-tale funny happenings in any of the hotels I'd ever stayed at during my travels.

Then this memory resurfaced. A full ten years later. And I literally pulled a "Home Alone" in the mirror. My eyes got HUGE, my mouth dropped open, my hands involuntarily went up to my face, clutching it, adrenaline surging. It was a look of horror that I can't duplicate now, funny enough. It was like the floor dropped out from under me. I just could not BELIEVE that I could have forgotten this incident!!! I'd been reading about MILABs for the past two and half years by that point, and never once did I remember this hotel incident. If ever they were going to snag me via Smash and Grab, that period of living at the hotel was absolutely opportune. I was living at a hotel, in the basement, with a hallway that had parking garage/street access. Hello. Coming in through the unlocked parking garage door in the middle of the night, down the hall and into my room which at that point used the old fashioned metal key locks – not electronic – and then grabbing me and hauling me out, unseen, would have been a piece of cake. It was almost too easy in fact.

This "hallucination" of a military guy bursting in to my room was probably not something that happened to me at the time that I saw it in my mind, while lying on my bed. Rather, it was more likely a flashback memory of something that had recently taken place, and it was bubbling up to the surface as I laid there, in a blank, numbed, depressed stupor. In fact, I'd theorize that abductions/programming was causing me to fluctuate into these inexplicable depressed stupors in the first place. Upon quick glance the emotional ups and downs I described sounds a lot like Manic Depression/Bi-Polar Disorder. But I don't think that was the problem, since I was/am very functional, unlike how Manic Depressives tend to be who often require meds to get through life. As mentioned elsewhere in this book, I wonder if the side effects of mind control and abductions masquerade as known brain/psyche disorders – Manic Depression. Schizophrenia. Etc. 1995-1996 was a time period where I obsessed about my death, as well as continually putting myself into dangerous situations that would get me killed. I went through another similar period back in 1991 - 1992, always fantasizing about guys having a gun to my head and killing me. Not normal. Sounds like MILABs stuff to me, now that I've studied up on it all. In fact there's a cartoon illustration in the book "MILABS" by Dr. Helmut Lammer showing a girl sitting in a chair…with military guys surrounding her, guns pointed at her head. Interesting coincidence.

Possible Flagstaff/Sedona, Arizona abduction. In July of 1996, while living in Orange County, CA I decided one day on a whim that I was going to drive out to Flagstaff/Sedona Arizona on my two days off from work. I had no idea why I wanted to do this, the idea just popped into my head, and I went along with it. My coworkers, roommates…even my boss Edwin, who I was buddies with, were all like, "Why?!?" I don't know, was my response. Sounds like fun! Why not! And so I did it. Drove the eight hours from Orange County to Flagstaff, and got a room for the night at a Motel 6. I got dinner at McDonald's, then wandered around outside the motel on the train tracks, kicking rocks around, looking up at the stars, wondering huh…now what?? What am I supposed to do?? I remember looking at the star Betelgeuse, or maybe even Mars, red and prominent, hoping to see a UFO, since I was in "UFO country." No such luck though. It was ten p.m. and I didn't know what the point of all this was. I was tired, and so decided to just go to bed. Once in bed, I remember lying there, doing some sort of praying, trying to see if I could feel a connection to any sort of anything spiritual, God-ish, angel-like, or whatever. Felt absolutely nothing, which was a bit of a let down. I realized I really am completely alone here in life, totally on my own. Oh well. No surprise there. Then that was it, I was out for the night.

In the morning I was unable to wake right away, feeling unnaturally groggy and wiped out. So much so that I couldn't get out of bed in time for the 11 a.m. checkout. Had to get an extension to 1 p.m. and even then I had to force myself to get up. As far as I can tell I had no memories of waking during the night, although that may be incorrect, I'm not 100% positive on it. At the time I didn't think anything of it, figured I was just tired from all that driving the day before. Finally just got up, got dressed, and checked out. Took a spin down the 17, but nothing too exciting. I didn't know how to get to the actual town of Sedona, so never got that far. Bought pair of earrings from a roadside Indian woman, and finally left to make the eight hour trek back to Orange County.

Knowing what I know now about the Flagstaff/Sedona area, and the fact that there are bases and a huge amount of alien/military activity happening there, and how sometimes "stuff" will get you to drive to them makes me seriously question this entire episode.

Gray overlay? After moving up to Portland to roommate with my brother Joe, he had made me aware of our joint status as supposed alien abductees. There was a strange incident that occurred one night while I was lying on my sleeping bag. Joe was sitting on the edge of his bed to my left, flipping through something that he was reading, while I lay in my own bed, under the covers, staring at the ceiling. And that's when I suddenly felt like I was slipping under water. It felt like I was sinking down, slipping away, and through my eyes things looked as if they were moving away from me. It became hazy and heavy and dream like. As I slipped down, I saw my brother glance up at me as he read…then do a "Holy shit!!" double take, eyes bugging out. He had genuine shock and actual fear on his face as he looked at me, like he couldn't believe what he was seeing. And this was a kid who was absolutely fearless by that point in life. Finally he managed to sputter out something about how he'd seen me "turning into a Gray!"

His voice yanked me out of this dreamy, slipping-under-the-waves trance state…and for a split second "I" felt slight annoyance, for some odd and interesting reason.

I turned to look at him, coming back into myself, and he excitedly explained what it looked like to him. I was lying there, and then….my face morphed into a Gray face. I knew my brother long enough to know when he was being sincere and when he was bullshitting, and right now, he was being sincere. Whether I really had actually started to turn into a Gray, I don't know, but I knew that he truly believed that he'd seen that. And I definitely felt something really strange going on at the exact same time that he did that "Holy shit!!" double take, so, I don't doubt that this happened.

Shortly after that incident I was handing something to my brother, and for the first time I consciously noticed my fingers as I reached toward him. I was gripping the object with only three fingers, my pinky and ring fingers bent down, as if they were superfluous. I stopped in mid-air, frowning at my hand. Then I resumed giving it to him and mentioned it to him. I realized that I'd been doing this with everything in fact for a little bit of time now…since my October abduction two months before, actually. I didn't like it, because what was THAT supposed to mean?? Gray attachment? Also I only recently remembered that during this particular time period of living in Portland I was experiencing constant facial muscle discomfort. I was always rubbing and massaging at my face, particularly my cheeks and the sides of my face. Something felt off with my face. Whatever it was, it's gone now though. No more three fingers or Gray overlays.

"The pen from nowhere." A great example of an artificial synchronicity: It was the final week at my temp job up in Portland, and several of my coworkers who liked me had suggested that I should apply to work for the company permanently. For kicks, I went to the HR department to get an application even though I was planning to move to Florida. In the elevator ride back up to the office I stood there against the right wall, holding the application, wondering "What exactly am I doing here? Am I going to stay in Portland and use my money to get an apartment downtown somewhere? Or am I going to move to Florida? Should I fill this out or not? I mean seriously, what am I doing here??"

And right then as the elevator stopped to let a guy out, a silver Cross brand pen slid across the elevator floor, spinning with force and coming to a stop right at my feet, perfectly.

I looked down at the pen at my feet, my eyes wide.

I looked behind me, from where it came – the back left corner of the elevator.

Nobody was standing there. The only other person in the elevator was a woman standing against the opposite wall. She too looked at the back corner, wide eyed with disbelief. It was she who said, "It's the pen from nowhere!"

I bent down and picked it up, like, Huh…will you look at that. I'm standing here contemplating whether to fill out this application, and something tosses a pen at me, landing at my feet. It was such a government agent "Them" pen too. Heavy weight, smooth silver Cross pen. Nice. ;) [And on a side note…the exact kind of pen my dad always liked when I was growing up…]

I debated about the meaning of this unbelievable coincidence. Either "They" want me to fill out the app and go for the job and stay in Portland…because it's actually bad for me – so, sabotage - or, this really is a sign from something good that I should stay here and forfeit the Florida idea.

I decided to go to Florida. As I now know, positive forces don't work by generating artificial synchronicities. Plain and simple. If it's a farfetched artificial synch…then it ain't good. Move on.

Power outage phobia. Not too long after moving into my new apartment in Fort Lauderdale, I realized I had an actual phobia about the power going out. I'd never experienced that before in my life. But on one occasion when the power glitched I had an immediate anxiety attack, looked around wildly, heart racing, and made a beeline for the front door, bursting outside like a nut. Getting outside was "safe," I knew. I could run to freedom. Being caught in a closed in apartment in the pitch blackness was very, very dangerous. This became so much of an issue that I set up flashlight lanterns around the apartment in the event that this ever happened while I was not near the front door. I had NO intention of being caught in the pitch black, unable to know or see what was going on around me. So I had lanterns in the bathroom, in the kitchen, and another right next to my bed. This isn't normal! But interestingly enough, I encountered another alien/MILAB female on a message board who was the exact same way. She also had flashlights set up around her apartment, due to an issue about being suddenly caught in the dark. This means something, in my opinion, and is indicative of something possibly very negative happening at night, in the dark, or something cutting the power and swooping in, I don't know. I once had a dream, relayed in the Dreams section, regarding insectoid aliens cutting the power in my old house in Connecticut and stealthily swooping in to come get me.

Sudden return. Had several incidents back in Florida of waking up very suddenly, gasping, at 6:59 a.m. on the nose, like I was put back literally a minute before my alarm was to go off. One of those times I came back with my adrenaline still going. Couldn't remember anything, yet, I had total residual after affects of MAJOR stress, anxiety, and trauma. Felt REALLY frazzled. It stayed with me all day, and even my co-workers knew something was wrong with me. When I was saying something in a frazzled way to my buddy Ryan, he joked, "Hey, calm down, before you give yourself an aneurism." My personality by this point in life is normally very easy going and relaxed. So this was completely out of character for me.

Residual drugs? Woke up one morning in Florida in 2003, feeling "drunk" except I hadn't been drinking. I was SO dizzy, I could barely stand up, and it lasted for half the day, well into the afternoon. There was nothing else wrong with me, just a feeling of being drunk, but, without the drunk. I didn't even think to take a pee sample first thing after waking, because I had no idea where to go with it or what to do with it. Now I know to do this…so of course, now they don't let this happen anymore. Things openly happen when they know you're not on the ball and won't do anything about it.

Symbolisms. (It would be useful to read the section regarding "Trauma Based Mind Control" in Part I to get more of a background on the supposed Illuminati and mind control symbolisms to better understand the significance of this entry.) I've had this penchant for being attracted to all the "Illuminati/Brotherhood" and mind control symbolism going back to about age 21 - Pyramids, suns/Ra, eyes of Horus, ankhs, white owls, phoenixes, Alice in Wonderland, 'shrooms, butterflies, big cats (leopards, cheetahs) porcelain masks, etc. etc.…even back before I knew what any of it meant. Back in '96 while living with my old group of roommates and long before I'd ever even heard of any of this stuff I used to have the big poster of Ra that I bought at a new age shop, a painted pottery sun that I bought in Venice beach, a big 'shroom candle (ties into alice in wonderland programming), a pair of porcelain masks on the wall that an ex-boyfriend had given me (who, in retrospect, seems to clearly be a case of "alien love bite," but, that's a whole side story in itself…) and then to top it all off developed an obsession with wanting to find Alice in Wonderland imagery. (wasn't able to…which in retrospect was probably actually for the best.) I was just surrounded by the imagery, even back then. And I think the Alice in Wonderland interest happened after taking a trip to Sedona (mentioned before this entry) but I can't be sure. Also have my black cat named Kitty, same as "Alice Through the Looking Glass" and was told in 2004 that I had "Alice in Wonderland hair," since it was long and (strawberry) blonde with bangs. (It's different now.) As far as jewelry goes I still have the silver ankh necklace I bought back then, tucked away in a box, and for years had a penchant for wearing choker necklaces. Only after realizing their significance in mind control slaves did the interest gradually wane. Roses, which in the research usually equates to "bloodline," or "silence" has been another biggie with me. Rose necklaces, including a rose choker ;) rose rings, clothing with roses on them, you name it. Back in '93 I stole a silver rose ring that I didn't have the money for, such was the intense drive that I had to have it.

Years later in Florida I took several Butterfly World booklets and methodically cut out all the butterflies in them, one by one, until there was probably almost a hundred of them, and then taped them all up on my wall over the head of my bed. Interesting in light of the strange incident when I was about five when the "butterflies" appeared on my bedroom wall, eliciting an hysterical reaction from me. Also had the big cat imagery on my walls, with an overall idea in my head about "being a cat" and a penchant for stuff designed with cat print. There was lots more 'shrooms and sun imagery going on, as well as some of the Aleister Crowley Thoth tarot deck cards taped on the wall. And then when I came across a dollhouse miniature at Pearl Arts and Crafts store of a white owl, no, I didn't resist. At first I did, knowing by that point in life what it represents in many circles – "Moloch", Illuminati, etc. – but in the end I caved in. The feeling of having to have it!!!!! was so intense that two days later I made the trip back and bought it, overriding intellectual knowledge trying to counteract it. And despite knowing what the phoenix means in mind control (the alternate persona rising up from the fractured core mind and taking over, being born as a new person), again, the drive/compulsion to use "Phoenix Rising" as part of an internet handle name was so strong I couldn't resist.

After reading the works of David Icke, Fritz Springmeier, etc. and learning what this symbolism can represent and what it's often used for within mind control programming, I took some of this stuff down. In particular the butterflies surrounding my bed, not good, and the Thoth tarot cards, and again, stopped wearing choker necklaces so much. Don't have "Alice in Wonderland hair" anymore either. But admittedly I couldn't part with all the sun and 'shroom imagery, or the white owl. And I'm still a sucker for the butterflies and the big cat print. Ra's long gone though, got lost in the shuffle in my many moves over the past eight years. Each thing taken individually doesn't mean anything, but when pooling it all together and looking at the behavior and compulsions driving it, then it's definitely suspect. I've also started paying more attention to females around me, you know, in case this is just symbolisms that most females are attracted to or surround themselves with. And the answer there is a big, um, No, apparently. ;D

But just as important are any symbolisms or imagery that one has an inexplicable aversion to. Since I was a little kid I've detested anything having to do with Peter Pan. Anytime I encountered the Disney cartoon image of Peter Pan I just felt like, "grrrrrrrrr!" for no logical reason. And then my mom had bought me this little girl's "Tinkerbell" nail polish and I remember frowning at the image of Tinkerbell on the bottle, feeling more "grrrrrrrrr!" Years later I learned that Peter Pan and Tinkerbell are part of "never grow old" programming in mind control. My childhood aversion to Peter Pan and Tinkerbell imagery doesn't prove anything, but it's certainly strange, and a little suspect. And if there's one thing that has absolutely defined me in this life it's the fact that I do not look my age. Never have, sometimes to the point of freaskishness. And I don't act it either. My good friend Mike R. told me in 2000 shortly before I left California that, "You haven't aged at all in the eight years I've known you." (I am actually aging, just not at the same rate as others I take it.) And I've read that mind controlled people with their various alters will often times look years younger than they actually are. When I was 25 I had a boss at my drug store job line me up next to her boyfriend who was also 25, because she couldn't believe the shocking difference. I was petite at 5'3", 105 pounds and looked like I was a teen, while he was about 6'5", big burly, gruff and worn out, and looked in his late 40s, easy. He looked like he could have been the old gruff dad, and I was the kid. Yet we were born only months apart. Guys my age who liked me would initially stay away from me in my 20s because they were convinced I was jailbait, meanwhile as 15, 16 year old high school boys were hitting up on me, then getting embarrassed when they found out how old I really was. I'd get carded, of course, but sometimes the store clerks were convinced it had to be a fake i.d. When people would try to guess my age they'd guess 10+ years younger than I was. So at 30, 31 I had people guessing I was 18, 19. And treating me accordingly. ie, talking down to me as if I was stupid, or being outright rude, dismissive, and condescending. Too many stories to get into here. There have been a few times where I've accidentally either silenced a room of people, or silenced the one-on-one person I was talking to by revealing my age. Always the same stunned and confused looks. If there's more than one person they always do the same thing where they look at each other, confused and weirded out. Sometimes they act like they can't handle or accept it, actually seeming a little irritated, haven't figured that one out yet. Don't know if they think I'm lying, or if they think I'm a freak, ;D or they feel like the balance of power just shifted (if they had always perceived me as being "below" them, only to realize that I'm actually older than them by a number of years, then maybe that causes a kneejerk reaction of upset and irritation, I don't know.) And now with the invention of Facebook, where you can find anybody you've ever known so long as they have an account there, it's become even more obvious. I see pictures of people I used to go to school with, ex boyfriends, former coworkers, roommates…….and it's like watching them pass me by. People that were younger than me, including one of my ex boyfriends, now look up to ten years older than me sometimes. So, "never grow old" indeed. :/ My internal mindset and way of projecting myself to the world also matched how I've looked externally, as well as my choice of dress and accessories, and still does for the most part even in my mid-30s. The voice too. Most women in their 30s have these loud "mack! mack! mack!" voices as I call it, projecting a strong ego outwards, talking over other people, being very aggressive and "LOOK AT ME!" Then there's me. I sound like I'm about 15, 16, something I've heard from multiple people, including an actual 16 year old girl. A lot of ways it's not anything like a "mature woman." Does "mind control programming" or "never grow old" account for this? Considering the concept of "multiple personas," which I get into later on in the book, and my serious "grrrrr!" aversion to Peter Pan, it's certainly a possibility. Could also be genetics, diet, the way life events have shaped me, or just plain luck. So who really knows. I am aging, and some things have happened that are right on cue for my age (35…that's when a lot of health and aging things seem to kick in for everybody like clockwork) including gray and white hairs ;) but again, it's apparently not what other people feel is normal.

I still don't understand how all of this works, but I imagine that surrounding oneself with the symbolisms and imagery used in creating a programmed mind would help to reinforce the programming. Many of these symbolisms directly tie into actual systems that are instilled in people's minds apparently, according to the research. [And on a side note: when it comes to the symbolisms being tacked all over the performers in the entertainment industry I almost see it as a form of Illuminati branding, indicating who their masters are that own and control them. The same may apply to every day sorts of people, unfortunately, or again, it's to reinforce programming. Not all the performers have it, but the ones that do REALLY do, namely the females; they're personally tattooed with the symbolism on their bodies (in particular look for owls, keys and locks, butterflies, roses, ankhs, pyramids, suns, eyes, etc.) their videos are dripping in it, their CD artwork is riddled with it, and all their promo pics prominently feature it.]

"Sidetrack Circus Diversion" Harassment

In the opening introduction to this piece I mentioned that oftentimes, higher realm entities are toying with us in the same way a cat will bat around its prey. But sometimes they're doing more, and so it's important to learn the difference. And that's where this section comes in. In February 2002 after I made a break in life from my brother (who was a heavily programmed MILABs target) and moved to Florida, I hooked up with my current boyfriend Tom and life became….very strange, to say the least. Life had already been strange anyway, but before all this it had been more paranormal strange, with the beginning glimpses of MILABS. Now it was getting "aliens and UFO" strange! Tom runs a website on all things relating to metaphysics, conspiracy, abductions, and hyperdimensional manipulation in human affairs. Because of who he is, he's been a lifelong target of alien abductions, and possibly MILABs as well. So when I hooked up with him in life, "stuff" took a huge interest in our affairs and I suddenly became a marked target as well. Not just because of my involvement with Tom, but also for parting ways from my brother and possibly breaking from programming. I apparently wasn't supposed to do that. So suddenly, eyes were on me.

All throughout 2002 and into 2003 we both began experiencing what I've now termed "sidetrack circus diversion/fear and paranoia generator!" incidents (cue circus music here) designed to do exactly as it sounds – send us into a tailspin of fear and paranoia, obsessively going in loops about these distracting incidents…and even hopefully break us up, if all went well. Had we been different people, and had the situation been left unchecked, it could have easily disintegrated into the type of paranoia and craziness one sometimes finds with abductees. The thing that ultimately saved me was also one of my weaker points - my ability to tune stuff out, turn away and go back about my business and put it all out of my head. It's one of my big downfalls because it's kept me in a state of obliviousness or denial over the years with regards to certain things waaaay longer than necessary, but yet it's also the same response/behavior that kept my frequency leveled. Being relatively level (regardless of the reason), versus being worked up, paranoid and terrorized probably prevented far worse things from happening to me, which carried me through until I finally gleaned my big moment of insight regarding "the fear frequency" in April of 2003. http://in2worlds.net/the-higher-self

Once I was told about the fear frequency, and heard that this is what was being done to me all those months, I stopped whatever fear I did have literally, overnight. And consequently, most of these random weird events stopped as well, reflecting that shift in awareness. I couldn't take any of it seriously anymore, and so they no longer had a use for doing that stuff. And as of this point, Tom and I rarely if ever get incidents like this anymore. That's pretty astounding in its implications. To go from there to here means something pretty big changed. That something was our mindsets, and it's something more abductees could benefit from realizing. I want to stress again though that remaining in a state of denial – ie, head in the sand - about things wouldn't have worked forever. Ignoring stuff will only get you so far, as I outline further in Part III. But again, it at least helped carry me through until I could get to a place of awareness that enabled me to tackle it all straight on, with no fear.

So with that in mind, the following incidents are the kind of random, crazy sounding, harassment/fear generator/distraction tactics one often hears about with MILABS abductees:

Alien in the Cloud. March of 2002. Not too long after moving to Florida I was lying on the beach one late afternoon with my head resting on my backpack, just relaxing and enjoying the sound of the waves and the ocean breeze rustling the palm fronds. I had a thought form as I call it go through my head, urging me to look at the clouds, saying, "You could look for shapes in the clouds!"

In response I thought (before even realizing that I was arguing with a thought form in my head), "Uh, yeah, I could, but, that's not something I would normally do." Just kind of sarcastic. I'm not into fanciful stuff like looking for shapes in the clouds. ;) To which it responded back with, "Look!! You'll see an alien face!!" So, I looked. Still very calm, not questioning this whole exchange at all. And sure enough…there it was. Straight up at 12:00, an absolute perfect alien face sculpted from a cloud that was connected to a neighboring cloud. A white tear drop head, big slanted blue eye cut out of the cloud, a blue blip nose and blue slit mouth. Absolutely stunningly perfect, in every way. Man alive if I'd only had a camera with me to grab a shot!! The thought form voice was happy and giddy about this too, proud in a childlike way. Like it was saying, "WOW!!! This is so COOL!! Look what I did! Look! Look! hehehehehe!" The alien face in the cloud dissolved away very quickly.

This incident may sound nuts, but the work of Fritz Springmeier has been the only source that I've found which confirms - within back to back sentences no less - their ability to "sculpt clouds" using energy, and to "communicate" to their abductees using ELF waves. These externally generated thought forms are meshed nearly seamlessly with your own, which is why for instance I didn't question what was happening and answered back. It felt like it was my own thought.

> "Various types of "non-lethal" weapons have been created and are now being used. Directed energy can be used to sculpt clouds. ELF waves can be used to place thoughts in people's minds without using implants." – Fritz Springmeier

And from the book "MILABS" by Dr. Helmut Lammer and Marion Lammer:

> "Dr. Frey's work in this field, dating back to the sixties, gave rise to the so-called "Frey Effect," which is commonly known as microwave hearing. It is noteworthy that alleged alien abductees and mind control victims report that they sometimes hear voices in their heads, although they are not schizophrenic." – page 98

More "voices." So, speaking of hearing a "voice" in the mind…shortly after moving into my new apartment in Fort Lauderdale, I was thinking one night about how close I'd come to actually bringing my brother Joe with me to Florida. I had almost rented a trailer and a hitch to attach to my car too, in order to haul his belongings. Stupid in retrospect, but my programming was strong. However, I managed to break from the programming and parted ways with Joe in Oregon, never to see him again.

So I was thinking about all of that, frowning, having very negative ideas about Joe and feeling extremely grateful that I'd ditched him in life, and then decided to bring the trash out to the dumpster. Out to the sidewalk and into the parking lot, I walked past the cars parked next to my building and accidentally slammed my thigh into something jutting out. Looking down I saw it was a trailer hitch on the back of one of the cars. I turned to continue towards the dumpster, in pain, rubbing my leg and carrying the trash bag, when I then heard a male voice in my mind command, "Stop!…Look at the license plate!"

I paused, frowning curiously, but started walking again towards the dumpster.

"STOP!" he commanded more forcefully. "Look at the license plate!!"

I stopped yet again, actually turning halfway around, lowering the trash bag…but then changed my mind and started walking again.

"LOOK AT THE LICENSE PLATE!!!"! he screamed at me now, really pissed off.

Alright!! I thought, whirling around and going back over to the neighbor's car, squatting down in front of the plate. Like the "alien in the cloud" incident, this voice meshed nearly seamlessly with my own thoughts, so I just responded to it without really questioning it.

I stared at the plate. Alright…it's from Michigan, I noted. Looking, looking. I know I'm supposed to see something here, but I don't get it. The numbers and letters didn't mean anything to me. But there's obviously something here…looking, looking….

Then I saw it. The license plate frame.

It simply said Joseph.

The trailer hitch which smashed my thigh. On my neighbor's car with the plate frame that said Joseph. Right after thinking intensely about how glad I was that I didn't get that trailer and hitch and actually bring Joseph to Florida with me. And then "them" screaming at me about it all. Okey dokey. And I continued to the dumpster to toss in my bag.

In retrospect one has to wonder how this amazing synchronicity was orchestrated.

Beeping noises in the air. For a period of time in Florida in 2002 and into 2003, I would hear these electronic beeping noises in my apartment that would happen in mid-air, coming from an invisible source of some sort. Later an episode occurred with Tom there as a witness. It happened up in the air by the vent in the wall…and then beeped twice more, moving down the hallway…actually echoing, like there was a real "something" there, in the apartment, invisible, moving about. And the fact that it echoed between the walls was amazing.

Invisibility. …but even weirder was the time when "somebody," who knows what, "arrived" in my closet. I was by myself in the living room, reading, when I heard a loud thump in my closet/laundry room. And then what sounded like a person in the closet, losing their balance and falling over. Just this thumping and banging around, like somebody - the size and weight of an adult human - had materialized there and then fell over and was rustling about. And it wasn't my cat, because she was in the living room area with me. The closet door was open slightly, about six inches, but I didn't get up to go investigate. I nervously went back to reading with my back to the closet. Within a minute or so I saw something moving around out of the corner of my eye, and looked over to see a really faint, barely visible black shadowy thing moving slowly about over in that area of the kitchen/hall/closet. Whatever it was, it was trying to be quiet and go unnoticed. Problem was, I heard it arrive, and I could see it with my peripheral vision. So despite their cloaking, their presence was known. Now I was spooked and got up, grabbed my backpack, and left the apartment for several hours. I returned later, not worried about anything though. That was so me back then. Just…put it out of my head, lalala, and move on with things.

Side note: From the website "Alien Jigsaw" I recently found this very interesting tidbit (bolded words my own emphasis):

> "Another interesting paper concerning "Information Warfare" is classified and only individuals with appropriate security clearances can obtain a copy from the Defense Technical Information Center in Fort Belvoir, Virginia.[27] However, you can read in the abstract that this paper explores holographic image projection, cloaking devices and multispectral camouflage which will provide enhanced military deception capability….It is just possible that MILAB victims are being used as the guinea pigs for these research programs. Because they are secretive, they are not under congressional oversight."

Strange voicemails and phone call interference. My first experience with anomalous phone happenings occurred while still roommating with my brother in Portland, approximately January 2002. I dialed into my cell phone voicemail one morning while at work and found a message that went on and on for several minutes….the sound of marching jackboots. That's it. Nothing else. Barely anybody even had my personal phone number, and the few of people who did wouldn't do something like that. It was bizarre, and actually creeped me out. If I'm not mistaken, this message actually happened TWICE. But I wasn't documenting things back then, so I don't have dates. But the same day that I received the first message, my brother claimed that the Nissan he was driving, which I'd given him for free back in California, had caught fire, or experienced some kind of explosion within the engine that actually blew off the hood of the car, causing a fire. So the car was gone, burned, and had been towed away. This in itself was a set up, attempting to cause a situation of my already penniless and unemployed brother to have to further rely on me to keep taking care of him in life. I have zero proof that this really happened to Joe's car…but he did tell me the story before even hearing about the jackboots phone message.

The next anomalous message occurred after moving to Florida, in about April of 2002. It was strange, like a whooshing wind noise, and these random, weird, far away sounding blips, and finally the distorted, possibly electronic voice of a little girl saying "Bye!" and hitting one of the number buttons on the phone. Tom figured out it was the 9 button. What it all meant, I had no idea, but it was bizarre, and I'd never heard anything like that before. (or since.) I had loads of "stuff" going on during this time, so it fits right in. I still have a copy of this message, and Tom has run it through all sorts of filter programs to see what he could find.

A third really odd one was a sentence fragment featuring a man with a southern drawl saying, "…manufactured hearts and kidneys and….hello?!....and limbs and things." That's it, message ends. Still have a copy of that one as well. Some people may be dismissive of these messages as being wrong numbers or crank calls, but the interesting thing is they only ever happened during those crazy times when I had a lot of negative abduction activity occurring, and when I was in a vulnerable position in life. So, that's an important factor in determining whether or not it as a sidetrack circus diversion/fear and paranoia generator event.

Then there's phone call interference, which has happened to me on four separate occasions that I can remember, with only two people in my life - once while talking to Joe back in 1999, and three times with Tom. Phone interference as I've experienced it seemed to be for the purpose of announcing their presence, let us know we were being listened to, and possibly instill fear too, I'm sure. When it happened to me and Joe, the noise scared the crap out of me. One second we were taking, the next there was a very sudden and loud blaring crazy noise that caused me to jump and pull the phone away from my ear, heart racing, nerves standing on end. It went on for a good ten seconds too. It's actually very similar to what happens in the movie "Mothman Prophesies," where Indrid Cold creates a blasting noise that causes Richard Gere/"John Klein" to jump and pull the phone away from his ear. My incident happened in '99 though, two years before the movie. With Tom, it's always been like distorted electronic beeping. The three times with Tom were during times when he was back in Iowa for family stuff while I was by myself at home. One of those phone calls was a very big deal, where we this close to breaking up, and where the outcome would affected the timeline of our lives (and other people's as well) in a major way. Not only did we experience the distorted electronic beeping interference announcement during that particular call, but I also had two ear tones in the middle of it all. So, something was definitely listening in to THAT conversation using all possible angles!

The "Gray" homeless guy. This was during the summer/fall of 2002, when all kinds of strange and bizarre events were happening to me and Tom. We were idling at a red light at Broward and Federal in downtown Fort Lauderdale when a homeless guy wearing the bright pink Sun Sentinel T-shirt approached Tom, who was driving, and began chatting casually with him through the open window. Homeless people selling the Street Sheet for donations or the Sun Sentinel newspaper were commonplace at that particular intersection, so this was normal. So they're chatting, and I'm over in the passenger side in my own world, not paying much attention, then the light turns green. As the cars in front of us begin to slowly pull forward, homeless man suddenly changes you could say. He goes from easy breezy casual, to getting a sort of intense, serious look about his face, leans in through the window, staring intently at me – honing in on me for the first time - and gives me a big "V" sign with his fingers.

It was at this point that I really noticed how he looked. The guy was barely 5 feet tall, if that, probably about 90 pounds soaking wet, meaning, very tiny, and with a very pronounced triangular shaped face, and large alien-looking pale blue eyes, and very thin lips/small mouth. He looked like a barely disguised Gray alien in human form. And the way he was intensely staring me down, giving me the V, leaning partially into the car window was just bizarre. I just stared back at him, like, Huh?? then he pulled back out of the way, and Tom began moving forward. Tom and I were both like, What was THAT?? Damn!

Finally seeing "Them." August, 2002. Tom and I decided to go to Denny's in the middle of the night, around 1:45 a.m. At first we chose the one on Federal Highway. But we get in there, and there's like, no people. We're pretty much the only customers, and not only that, but our server is this older woman with a bad cold. We heard her hacking and coughing up a lung before she even got to our table. We ordered our Cokes and when she went to get them, hacking and coughing, we took off and bailed out, in search of a more happening Denny's. One with people, and better servers. !!! We headed further up Federal Highway and wound up at the Denny's on Commercial and Federal, which was jumping. Loads of people. We took our seat, ordered our drinks, and were waiting, chatting, and people watching.

I was looking towards Tom when I suddenly felt them approaching, before I ever saw them. I looked up and see two suits coming down the aisle in our direction…and both of their eyes were locked right on me, and only me. I stared right back, which isn't something I did at the time. Have to emphasize that. At that time I didn't stare down strangers, or lock eyes on people like that. The way I felt was that I couldn't NOT do it, even if I wanted to. I was frozen. They were dressed impeccably, looking just like government agent types. One of the guys was Caucasian, tall, over six feet, with meat on his bones, just a big and tall guy. He had thinning/balding light brown hair, pale skin, was clean shaven, and was wearing a full suit, with jacket and tie included. The jacket and pants were dark gray, the shirt white. His face was plain white guy. The other guy was shorter, probably no more than 5′ 8″. His skin was tan, and his hair darker, and he had more hair than the other guy. His features were heavier than the other guy, a bigger nose, a heavier brow bone. He was also clean-shaven. He wore a crisp bright white dress shirt, gray pants, belt, a tie, but no jacket, unlike the other dude. He was the one I really looked at first, because that's the one I felt the draw to. He was staring me down intensely, with a little smirk on his face. The vibe was sexual. And I also "recognized" him. I had no conscious recollection of him, but I knew him. There was recognition. My attention then turned back to the other, taller guy as they walked by me, and that guy was also staring me down, but in a different way. His look was a mix of contempt and disdain, but also curiosity. Like "hmm." I didn't "recognize" him, and I knew that he was only seeing me for the first time as well.

As they passed by our booth I took another quick glance back at the other guy who I recognized, then looked down at our table, still frozen in place. The only feeling going through my mind was "uh oh…" like a little kid. I knew I'd "done something wrong" and had that feeling of being in trouble. I was definitely not doing what I was "supposed to be doing," or what somebody wanted me to be doing, that's for sure. Part of it I think involved being with Tom. They do not like him, that much I've figured out, and did not want me with him. The plan had apparently been to get me to stick with my brother at all costs, no matter what he was doing or how nasty he got, thus enabling him to carry out his various criminal/agent provocateur programming commands while simultaneously sabotaging my own life in the process; then, turn my back on my budding friendship with Tom and never make it out of Portland, Oregon. Instead, I permanently ditched my brother, made a break for Florida without him, and hooked up with Tom.

I was still staring at the table, frozen, when Tom finally said "What the hell was THAT?? Why were those guys staring at you like that?!?" He was frowning and watching them as they supposedly stopped at a booth behind us. I never saw that part though since I felt unable to turn around. He had no idea what was going on. I was finally able to tell him from my perspective.

According to Tom, who was facing them, they paused first at the booth behind ours, of course, while I sat paralyzed in place. Then the shorter guy that I recognized pulled out a cigarette and lit it up. Then they moved further back, to a booth against the back wall of the restaurant. Tom said that in regards to the cigarette dude, his mannerisms and vibe in general was that of power. Like mafia. Just the way he lit his cigarette and carried himself. Total power.

Then the shorter darker mafia power cigarette guy, the one I "recognized", decided to head to the restroom, as an excuse to do another buzz by probably. I didn't see him head to the restroom, but, again, I "felt" him when he approached back around again. I intuitively looked up, directly at him. His eyes were locked on me from over fifteen or so feet away as he neared, again, with that smirk and sexual vibe.

So, yup, that was apparently "them." Or, some of them, anyway. I had requested prior to this incident to be able to see some of "them" while I was out and about in the real world…and be able to know that it was them. Well, guess I got my wish. They picked the optimal place and time to do it, too. A Denny's diner at two in the morning is perfect. Nobody is going to be dressed like they were at a Denny's, in the middle of the night. They totally stood out. Then factor in the telepathic tug, the way they were staring at only me, the one guy's inexplicable disdain/contempt, the subconscious recognition and the feeling like I knew I'd done something wrong, and well, there you go. There was no doubt in me and Tom's minds who we were looking at. If it had been during the day, during working hours, it could be dismissed.

It's interesting to note that we started out at a completely different Denny's…and bailed out to come to this one at the last minute. This begs the question – and you know, maybe I'm missing something here, but - in order to cross paths with "them" at the second Denny's, the situation had to be set up to get us to leave the first Denny's. So…is this saying that events were somehow arranged? If so…how? Who, and what, are these "people" and what in the frickity frack is going on here anyway?

The thermostat. During this same exact time period where we saw "them" around August of 2002, I came home from work one afternoon to find several of my apartment windows cranked open. It was August in South Florida, which means I had the A/C going for my cat and had closed all the windows as a result. Also, the bathroom door was now open when it had been closed when I left, since I didn't want to waste A/C on the bathroom.

Frowning, I closed the windows and bathroom door again, then went over to the A/C to look at the temperature gauge. Normally it was always set between 72 – 75. Now it was set down to 69 degrees, exactly. So, someone had been there, and made their presence known. (see the "Number Sightings" subsection in Part III for more on the number 69 in relation to MILABs activities.)

Voice from the radio. September 2002. Tom and I had just returned from an overnight trip (to a C's channeling session in fact, an excerpt of which appears at the end of Part II) and we were unloading Tom's car, making several trips back and forth into the apartment. I had turned on the radio inside the apartment while we unpacked. As I walked inside carrying something, I heard a male voice say from the radio something really……vile. I won't repeat it here, but it was something nobody would say over the radio, nor be allowed to by FCC regulations, let's just put it that way. Also, what he coincidentally said matched up to yucko abduction related memory fragment that I experienced when I lived in Portland, which I discuss in the "Dream Hijacking" section. I could hear the smirk behind the vile words too.

It stopped me in my tracks, and I turned and looked back at the radio, holding my stuff, thinking, "Did I just hear what I thought I heard?!? Am I imagining this???!"

And as if to answer my question and dispel any sort of doubts about what was happening here, the voice went on to say something else that was ten times worse. But I can't remember it now. It was so disturbing that I immediately froze up and went into denial/rejection mode. He said it, shocked me into mental meltdown and I just….blocked it out. Then I turned away from the radio, feeling numb, and went back to my business. So all I have is the knowledge that something was said, but what was said I can no longer remember. It's been "deleted." And the fact that I even have such a capability says something in itself, to me. Kind of reveals some things.

Power repeatedly surging. On Halloween night in 2002, Tom was trying to set up our newly purchased web cam so that we could have it on, monitoring us while we slept to deter abductions. Well "coincidentally," the power kept repeatedly surging/going out that night – six times in fact – interfering with the entire thing. Admittedly, it scared me to no end because that was my mindset back then. Plus I also had that newfound phobia about the power going out. I'd occasionally experienced power glitches in that apartment…but none like that, to that extent. And there hadn't been any in awhile…not until the night we were trying to set up the new web cam.

The Black Helicopter, Round 1. November 18, 2002. Something woke me up at 7 a.m. on the nose. As I sat up, squinty eyed, thinking "huh??" I realized what it was - there was a very loud military-sounding helicopter outside just going, and going, and going, and going. Hovering. Right next to my building. As I got up to go investigate, walking across my apartment to the front door, my nerves were standing on end and my stomach was sinking, because I already knew. This had to do with me. BUT, before I jumped to any conclusions I needed to see for myself. So I opened the front door and stepped outside and looked up into the bright and sunny and cheerful looking morning. Sure enough there was a large, unmarked, matte-black colored military looking helicopter hovering over the leasing office building across from mine. Pointed in a beeline, straight at my front door. (Later research on the 'net would show that the closest match to the body shape of this thing is a Comanche helicopter.) Oooohhh-kay, I thought, looking around to see if anybody else was hearing this. But there wasn't a neighbor to be found anywhere. And I promptly went back inside and shut the door.

It continued to hover outside and make a racket. As I came back inside, shaken, Tom sat up from bed and asked what was going on. I told him that there was a military helicopter hovering over the next building, pointed at my front door. "WHAT??" He sat up. He wanted to go out and look at it with his binoculars, but I requested that he not do that. I didn't want him to go out there and put himself in the middle of what I felt was something that had to do with me. Although they already know who he is anyway. But still, there's no point in going out there and showing himself unnecessarily. I wanted to lay low, not go out there and antagonize anybody. [Different mindset back then. ;)] I kept saying "this isn't good, this isn't good…" really scared. The helicopter hovered for about another 30 seconds, then took off. It didn't hover any other buildings, and it didn't circle the neighborhood. It just came in, pointed itself at my front door, and hovered there for several minutes until I went out and showed myself and acknowledged it. Then it left, with no further business.

What's unusual about this incident: 1) You don't normally hear about black helicopters flying about urban areas in broad daylight, harassing people. 2) Nobody else noticed this helicopter. Nobody else came out of their apartment. Not one. A huge black military helicopter was hovering over our buildings making an absolute racket at 7 a.m., and nobody even poked their head out to see what was up??? Actually, it kind of doesn't surprise me.

Black Helicopter, Round 2. May 7, 2003. Tom was back in Iowa at this point, about to hit the road in a few days to drive back to Florida. He'd been back in Iowa for almost five months helping with family issues, so I was back to living alone with my cat. I was getting ready for work, and at 8 a.m. on the nose I heard the distinctive sound of a helicopter approaching outside from the back of my apartment…then stop, hovering very close by. Just going and going and going and going. My heart stopped. ohhhhhh shiiiiit, I thought. I went out the back door to go look, and found a shiny, all black, unmarked helicopter, with a large cross shaped thing sticking out from the back end, hovering low. Even the windows were tinted black. It was pointed in a beeline at my back door this time. oh shit, I thought again. I ran for the phone and called Tom in Iowa. I was like, PLEASE answer your phone, PLEASE answer your phone…and luckily, he did, even though it was 7 a.m. his time. I held the phone up in the air outside so he was able to hear the ruckus that it was making. Talk about two worlds colliding - I'm supposed to be getting dressed for work, figuring out what to wear, meanwhile, there's a black helicopter pointing straight at my apartment back door. I stood outside, on the phone talking to Tom and narrating the situation while staring up at it. At one point, it turned slightly to its left to look at me better. It looked like an insect when it did that. I was also freaking out that NOBODY seemed to even notice that this was happening, nobody was coming out of their apartment, just like the last time. Then I noticed that wait, there was a black guy standing in the parking lot, with his hands in his pockets, gazing curiously up at it, kind of like, "WTF??" and then looking over at me. Yay! Let's hear it for witnesses! :D

Finally I went back inside and told Tom that I had to go, I have to get ready for work, forget this. We hung up. I was shaking and scared…then I heard the helicopter move so that it was now right on top of my apartment, hovering loud and intimidating, right over where I stood in my kitchen. I tried to go about my business like normal, pretending this wasn't happening, lalala! hoping it would go away. But I felt lost and panicked, wondering why I didn't have some sort of forewarning about this from my intuition, or "higher self." Something this bad should have come with a little bit of warning…right?! I felt abandoned.. I was panicked about what they planned to do, and why they were here. I kept thinking, I didn't DO anything!! I didn't DO anything!!!! Then I was saying to my higher self, "Why didn't you tell me?? Why did you let this happen!!! Why did you let this happen!!!!"

Then I got an answer. What I assume to be my higher self responded, since that's who I was addressing, and it sounded calm, mature, and slightly amused. "Because nothing's going to happen to you," it said. It also sounded like me, btw. My own voice. Female, only older, and more mature and maternal sounding, the way my higher self always sounds. The exact quote of what it told me was: "Treat this like you would an entity attack. Move to the center of the room and treat this like you would an entity attack, and watch what happens."

Okay, I thought. I was standing there, staring down at the floor, brows furrowed, interacting with this thought form without really thinking about it. That's the only way it seems to happen, I've noticed. It's when I'm not consciously focusing on what's happening, and am distracted. When I'm conscious, I tend to lock up and then things can't get through. So I did what it told me to do, and I turned from my spot in the kitchen and moved to the center of the apartment, the "living room" area, and stood there. It sounds corny, but, I remembered the scene at the end of the first Matrix, where Neo fully realizes that it's all an illusion, and he's the one in control. I thought about him stopping the bullets, and saying "No." Like, I'm not having this. No. This isn't my reality. Sorry.

I closed my eyes, outstretched my arms to each side, took a deep breath. The heli was still hovering and harassing, directly overhead. Then I changed my frequency, basically. That's the only way to describe it. Like changing the radio dial. I had the mentality of No. I'm not having this. Sorry. And I did exactly what I would do during an entity harassment, repeating NO. NO. NO. NO. Over and over again, firmly, and really and truly believing it and feeling no fear, whatsoever. Just a completely different mindset, one where I felt connected to my higher self, not having this situation.

And it immediately stopped. That heli pulled up and took off, getting out of there ASAP.

I slowly opened my eyes, realizing that it was leaving, and very rapidly, too. A grin spread over my face. I became giddy, realizing I had the power to make this stop and go away. It had worked. Whoever that thought form was gave me good advice.

A note about the time when this happened: The first time in November it was 7 a.m. on the nose. This time it was 8 a.m. exactly. Then I realized…Daylight Savings Time. Back in November DST was over. So whoever they were, they don't go by DST.

Black Helicopter, Round 3. May 10, 2003. Tom was now currently en route back to Florida, from Iowa. I had gone for a walk on Fort Lauderdale beach, and there had been a police/patrol helicopter flying up the coast, over the water. I thought about my black helicopter sighting from earlier in the week and compared the two helicopters, noting the differences in colors and body styles. I was focused heavily on the black helicopter incident almost as if expecting to see another, even though I'd never had such an experience at a public beach of all places. I went back to my car as if I were going to leave but then remembered…Hey, the point of me coming here was to go for a walk AND read my book afterwards on my beach chair. So, I grabbed my beach chair out of the trunk and headed back out to the sand and set everything up. I had just finished applying some sun tan oil and was settling in with my book when I heard another helicopter coming up the beach, from my left.

Before even looking up, I knew. I recognized the sound of it, or else picked up on its frequency. Sure enough, approaching slowly up the beach was a glossy, all black, unmarked helicopter with black tinted windows. It was barely over the water line, pretty close to the sand where the people were sitting. But nobody seemed to notice it. As it approached where I was sitting it slowed down noticeably. I fixated on it as it passed by, thinking over and over to myself, "Come on…come back…come back…show me what you're made of…come back…come back…come on, show me what you're made of show me what you're made of…" Over and over. By "show me what you're made of," I was referencing the ability for them to read my thoughts. There was no fear, only me daring them with this manic, giddy glee.

And so they did.

The black helicopter immediately swung tightly around to the left in a U-turn, and did an even slower fly by right over where I was sitting. I stared up at them, still fixated. At this point I felt a little fear, I admit it. Partly I couldn't believe that they really could read my mind, and partly I was surprised that they responded, and did exactly what I asked. I was like, Whoa, holy shit…! Uh…yeah, okay…

They continued their super slow fly by, and again, nobody around me seemed to notice it at all. Finally when it was far enough away it picked up speed and took off at a regular pace up the beach, and was gone. So, two black helicopter sightings in one week. This was the same week that Tom was en route to come back to Florida from Iowa. Seems as if that was generating some attention. Also, going to the beach in the morning on the weekend is not normally something I do, but, I had the urge to do it this day.

Helicopters, Rounds 4 & 5. The final two episodes involved a new mode of operation: flying in huge circles over our apartment building, as well as the fact that these helicopters weren't solid black. Rather, they were a very dark blue color. For those two reasons I didn't think (at first) that they were black helicopter harassment, but several things indicated that it seemed to be the same thing:

Round 4 was on July 16, 2003 at 7:24 a.m. (You'll see in a minute why the time is important.) Just before this thing showed up I had been having a dream about "thems" in a helicopter; they showed up in my dream, looking for their "three way radio." My mom was there, of all people (I don't have any sort of relationship with her), and she had lost this three-way radio thing. They were annoyed, and wanted the three way radio back…whatever that's supposed to mean (?!?!) and for whatever reason, she of all people was involved in it all. I can only guess. At the moment when the real helicopter was approaching our apartment in real life, my dream took a violent turn. People in my dream began attacking each other, hitting each other with frying pans. (kind of funny actually.) I then woke to hear the sound of a real helicopter beginning its repetitive circling overhead. When Tom went to go out and take a picture of it (dark blue in color, no markings) I felt like the wind had been taken out of my sails, deflated, passive, like I couldn't do much of anything……and even admonished him not to take pictures of it! (programming I suspect – because I wouldn't do that now.) Our apartment was on the outer edge of the circle it was flying in, but as soon as I stepped foot outside it "coincidentally" swung by right over where I stood. We went back inside, listening as it continued circling outside, and I realized I was getting more and more scared. Not good. So finally I told Tom, "Give me a moment…" and I lay on my bed, closed my eyes, and pulled another "Change the Radio Dial." Within seconds of me doing that the helicopter coincidentally flew off, and abruptly ended its circling.

Round 5 occurred on August 6, 2003, at 8:24 a.m. Exactly one hour to the MINUTE of Round 4. This one looked identical to the last one, and as soon as we saw it matched, I looked for any abduction bruise markings on my legs. Sure enough, found the telltale perfectly round, deep purple bruise on my calf below the knee. It hadn't been there the night before. This time instead of flying in repeated circles, the helicopter flew all over the place with no rhyme or reason to it, at all. It would circle over the apartment then fly move off and circle about in the distance, angled sideways, looking in our direction, then circle back over us, then move off again. Tom started immediately grabbing photos, and this time I overrode the urge to not take pictures! and grabbed for my own camera. Only problem was…the battery was missing. Somehow the door casing had popped open, the battery had fallen out in my backpack, and the door had closed tightly again. I needed a butter knife to pry this thing open to put the battery back in! This had NEVER happened before in the two years I'd had that camera!!! I got the battery back in and finally got a couple of shots, then nonchalantly decided to head off to work now. As I drove off down the street, the helicopter abandoned its random circling and followed me behind the tree line. When I got to the 4-way stop, it too stopped…and pointed directly at my car. I took my camera, hung out the window and got another shot of it. Then nonchalantly drove off, smiling, listening to CDs, and singing. What a difference a few months makes, that's all I can say. (Tom confirmed that this helicopter stopped its circling after I left and drove off to work.) And we never had another helicopter harassment again. That afternoon we did experience one of those tremendous "black clouds of doom" though, documented in my Weather Anomalies section of my website. http://in2worlds.net/anomalous-weather

Coincidental debunking article. On a side note, I have to mention this. But shortly after Round 4 and 5 I just so happened to be glancing through the Sun Sentinel paper at work and saw what of all things but…an article talking about flight school helicopters that will fly in repeated circles over residential neighborhoods in Fort Lauderdale, annoying people. "Nothing to see here folks, move it along…."

It would seem on a surface level that "See, it was all just flight school helis, that's all…" But is it? Just a simple review of the circumstances surrounding Rounds 4 & 5 indicate to me that they were something woo-woo, and not just "flight school helis." I think it's rather amazing that flight school helis could coincide with negative dreams that also involved a helicopter looking for a "three way radio," feeling passive and deflated, having the battery pop out of the camera in my bag and then the casing closing back up tightly as if trying to prevent me from using my camera when something like that has never happened before, and then the heli following me up the street behind the tree line and waiting for me at the four way stop…..then abandoning its "flight school flying" the second I left the vicinity to go to work. The article actually sounded a bit like something straight out of "The Truman Show."

The bright "camera flash." I decided recently to add this one in after re-reading the book "The Mothman Prophesies" by John Keel and seeing an exact description of this incident, verbatim. At the time it originally happened it struck me as really weird, but completely nonsensical, so therefore not worth mentioning in the same breath as the rest of the more obvious and interesting incidents of weirdness going on during the same time period. Now I realize I should mention it. But one night in 2003 I think (not sure because I didn't log it) Tom and I were exiting our apartment and walking towards my car to go out somewhere. As we got to my car and I was approaching the driver's side door, with Tom standing at the passenger door, a sudden very bright, blue-white colored light double flashed from across the parking lot. It was like a camera flash, as if somebody had just taken our picture, which was my split second immediate thought. But yet the flash was VERY bright, a bit blinding, enough to be noticed around the entire parking lot, and definitely blue white in color. A "burst" you could call it, exactly as John Keel describes it as we'll see in a moment. So something about it was a bit "off" for being just some normal camera flash. The even weirder part was we didn't stop to investigate it. We both noticed it…then I slipped into the front seat, leaned over and unlocked Tom's door, and he slipped inside and I started the car, backed out, and we just…drove off. "lalala!" Like it was nothing. Didn't go over and investigate, or even try to scan the darkness to see if there was somebody with a camera. I can't describe how I felt other than a mix of knowing something woo-woo unusual had just happened, that it wasn't just somebody's camera flash, yet, while being in a passive daze and where looking closer didn't even seem to exist as an option. Disregard it and push on, as I so often did back then. Or else, something made me feel like I shouldn't pursue it, I don't know. I didn't even log it because it seemed so trivial compared to everything else that had been going on in my life. Bursts of blue white light in the parking lot right as Tom and I showed up? What's that all about? Seems so petty. And years later when re-reading "The Mothman Prophesies" I found this bit:

> "The ["phantom photographer"] phenomenon takes yet another form. The witness is stepping out his door, or getting out of his automobile, when there is a sudden burst of light "like a flash gun going off." No photographer or camera is visible. There is no sudden paralysis or ill effects. The witness just scratches his head in bewilderment and goes about his business. However, those who see these flashes have usually had psychic experiences previously. They have seen a UFO, a monster, or a ghost, or they are gifted with ESP or precognition."

The last bit describes Tom and I to a T, and the description of the experience itself matches verbatim, down to the sort of situation it occurred in – stepping out the door, and in our case, getting into an automobile, and our responses, or rather, lack thereof, also matches to a T. What it means, I don't know, but for John Keel's research it's just one more bit of confusion that contactees experience in life, going nowhere, never any answers. (The whole point of his book is basically discussing his numerous investigations into what I nickname "sidetrack circus diversion/fear and paranoia generators" and how it plays out amongst UFO contactees and those who have paranormal experiences, which is why I always recommend his book for anybody who's interested in the weird.)

Another "Them"? December 24, 2002. I wasn't sure what to make of this back when it happened, and I still don't. But considering what had been going on with me all this particular week – I had more mysterious bruise marks on my legs, pains in my uterus, ear tones, and strange dreams - it probably is what I think it is. I was at Walgreen's on Broward Boulevard and I was in the magazine aisle, excitedly reading an article in Newsweek about the upcoming Matrix sequels. ;) So yeah, I was way excited, like really giddy, because I'm just a dweeb like that.

As I was reading the article I got a whiff of some perfume stuff which didn't smell good to me. I frowned to myself and looked up to see the source. I saw a well dressed, corporate looking older white guy who appeared to be in his 50's, who had just breezed past me down the aisle. He was the source. I only saw him from behind. He had all white hair, and a bright white clean crisp dress shirt and gray slacks, a belt, shined dress shoes. No jacket though. But impeccably dressed, spotlessly clean and unwrinkled. Almost too perfect. Stood out in this particular ghetto-y Walgreens. The downtown office buildings are only a mile away, but still, everything surrounding the store was black ghetto. (Two words: Sistrunk Boulevard, one street over.) My first assumption was that he'd just gotten off work, being that it was 5:15 p.m., and like I said, downtown was close by. I immediately dug back into the article, not giving him another thought.

A little while later I heard a really pointed and sarcastic voice say to me, "Reading anything INTERESTING?" I glanced up to my left to the source of the voice and saw that it was the same white haired corporate looking dude breezing past me, this time going the other direction. We were the only two people in the aisle now. Everybody else had cleared out.

He never slowed down. He never looked at me. He didn't wait, or want for, any sort of a response, unlike every single other harasser I'd encountered since moving to Florida. A harasser harasses you because they want that response, and even more importantly, they want to see your reaction. He on the other hand could have given two shits about what my response was. Total disdain.

Even more interesting was my reaction. Normally if somebody were to say something like that I would have gotten annoyed. Possibly even yelled something sarcastic back in response. This time, as I stood there watching him breeze away from me it felt like the wind had been let out of my sails and all I could do was just stand there in a passive, childlike daze, watching him go. I was numb, blank. Unable to say something back even if I had wanted to, like mental control had been exerted on me to shut me up.

Factoring in a) what had already been happening to me that week, with b) how this guy was dressed – it was identical to the two "Thems" at the Denny's four months earlier; c) the fact he had the same disdainful contempt for me as they did; d) the fact that his cologne registered with me in some way, causing me to frown while reading, and e) my inexplicable inability to talk or respond to his comments, and I'm liable to think that this was another Them, making their presence known.

Both encounters also involved what I consider to be telepathic exchange. In the first encounter, I felt them before I saw them, and was tugged to look up both times that they passed by me, as well as feeling paralyzed in some way, being unable to not look at them; the second time I was rendered unable to speak and could only stand there, in a blank daze. And to be honest, I can't confirm that what I heard him say was actually spoken out loud, because I never actually saw him say it. I've demonstrated the ability on previous occasions to clearly hear people's thoughts, so, who knows.

"MIA…" This one seems so trivial and unimportant that I was liable to dismiss it…until encountering somebody else who claims to have experienced the same thing. But one time I was walking into the aforementioned Walgreens in Fort Lauderdale, and as I walked towards the front doors I see two grungy guys standing off to the side, smoking cigarettes, and one of them (who had a moustache) calls out towards me, "Looks like we got ourselves another MIA."

I knew he was saying it for my benefit, being that he was staring me down as he took a drag off his cigarette, so inside I was like, what the hell?? I mean what is that supposed to mean? Another MIA? Another "Missing in Action"? If that's what it even means. Okay. Fort Lauderdale was littered with crazies, the whole "Street Theater" thing, so it wasn't surprising. But still, that was pretty pointed and strange. So much so that I filed it away in the back of my mind instead of dismissing it.

Like I've mentioned before in my writings, corroboration usually comes around eventually, if you're patient. Sure enough, about a year or so later I mentioned this in passing on a message board forum and surprisingly, one of the regular members, a female from Boston who's had a lot of her own weirdness in life, posted that she's gotten the same exact comment. "Looks like we got ourselves another MIA…." Go figure. But nothing surprises me anymore.

The "Dreams"

Dreams are often anything but. Sometimes they are actual memories of events, coming out while we sleep, screen memories of suspect abduction events, or symbolic messages given to us in regards to abduction happenings, fed to us by our subconscious mind. If you're an abductee, then one of the first places you should be looking at are your dreams. Even if you have hardly any actual memories, you'll most likely receive indicators when you sleep. Following are some of the more bizarre and highly suspect dreams I've had over the years. Some may be actual memories, and some seem to be highly symbolic messages being conveyed through the subconscious. Another important aspect of these abduction-related dreams that I've noticed is that when "something" is around in the astral realms honing in on me, maybe planning to snag me, my dreams will take a sudden negative turn, reflecting this. Either the dream will suddenly turn morbid, or I'll see aliens and/or UFOs. It seems to act as a head's up warning system that the crosshairs are on me. I delve more into this in the "Dream Hijacking" section.

So whatever these dreams are, they're worth mentioning to give the reader an idea of what one could be looking for.

The UFO. UFO dream when I was 13 - a UFO hovering/parked over our house in Connecticut, at night. I was out in the cul-de-sac, off to the right side with the streetlights providing light, just standing there calmly, watching it. The weirdest part was that the Joe Walsh song, "Life's Been Good" was playing, almost like a soundtrack of sorts to the whole scene. It was specifically the middle part of the song, where the lyrics cut out and it's just that trippy, sci fi-ish sounding synth music part that goes on and on.

More UFOs. Dream sometime in my teens, of me chasing frantically after a UFO. Even though I was a teen, the dream took place in the field behind an apartment building in Westfield Massachusetts, where we lived until I was three. I was in the field in the middle of a sunny morning with hazy summertime looking sky, and there's a UFO overhead, and it's taking off…without me!!!!!!! I panic and run after it as fast as I can, tearing through the field, like NOOOOOOOOOOO, absolutely desperate. It's so intense, and I'm so determined, that they finally relent and I feel myself lifting up into the air, being brought into the UFO. As soon as my feet leave the ground I go limp in absolute bliss, completely happy and content. I can feel what it feels like to be suspended in the air while moving upwards. It's an awesome feeling, like flying. The second dream where this occurred I was at a gas station in the middle of the day, with a blue sky, and there's a UFO overhead, again, taking off without me. I start to mentally think NOOOO, and chase after it, and get pulled (happily) up towards the UFO. Not normal!

The underground base. Until this dream in 2000 I had no concept of the idea of "surface world" versus "underground world." I was smack in the middle of living out my adventures in "The Vortex" paranormal apartment in Rancho Santa Margarita when this dream happened, and it stayed with me for months afterwards. The dream centers around the idea of my brother Joe having "accidentally" discovered, through his many nocturnal adventures of poking around/trespassing, the entrance to an underground base facility located underneath a local mall…and then coming back to show me and bring me along. In real life Joe was nocturnal and spent every night out exploring whatever city we lived in, poking around where he shouldn't be going, breaking into places, trespassing, stealing, etc. and making some interesting discoveries in the process. So this dream played out exactly as it would have in real life had this really happened. It was so real and so much fun that I could not shake this dream off for months afterwards, and wanted very badly to experience this again, and be in this world that I'd been witness to. I'd listen to Death in Vegas while imagining myself back in this place. "68 Balcony" "I Spy" and "Flying" if you'd like the personal soundtrack for this. ☺ I'll try to summarize it as concisely as possibly, omitting the non-relevant details, but taking many parts directly from a write up I did right after this happened. So you'll note the wide eyed, innocent voice of it all, I'm sure. A bit different from the way I am now.

"It started where me and Joe were standing next to a lake which was supposed to be similar to the lake here in Rancho. The sky was gray white overcast. The next thing we know we're watching a minivan drive slowly, head first, into the lake. It kept right on going until it was completely under. The engine didn't get flooded or stall, because it wasn't a normal minivan. It was made to be able to go into the water in order to access the secret entrance to an underground government facility. There were a couple of quick cut close up scenes of me next to the lake edge, looking down into the water at another submerging vehicle, going down into this secret entrance.

Next scene cuts to a mall that's in the vicinity of this lake, but it's a mall that's been built the equivalent of two stories underground. It's a novelty thing to everybody in suburbia who goes there, but who don't realize that it was built as a façade, right on top of the underground facility. So I'm in the mall now next to an escalator, staring up at a skylight in the ceiling above the escalators (same as the Laguna Hills Mall actually) – which is really the ground level of the world above - looking at the gray white overcast sky beyond, when Joe comes up to me and tells me to come on….he wants to show me the entrance to the facility from right there in the mall!

I snap out of my gazing thoughts and excitedly jump and dash after Joe, through the mall, into this dark hole-in-the-wall type looking restaurant/bar tucked into a corner nearby. No lights are on in the place. The only light is the bright white gray overcast natural lighting pouring in via the skylight of the mall that comes in through the front doorway.

[…] I catch up with Joe who is standing next to this rickety looking elevator in the back corner of this restaurant/bar thing next to a maintenance type of closet. We get in, and the elevator starts to go down, slow and rickety, like you would expect by looking at it.

I was filled with this overwhelming excitement and anticipation, my nerves standing on end for what was yet to come. I asked Joe, Did we bring any film?? Just as I realized we didn't. I made a little DOH type face, and specifically thought to myself that I need to pay very close attention to the details I was about to see, because I didn't have any film to record it. I was exhilarated because I knew we were about to embark on something we weren't supposed to know about. We'd be doing some serious trespassing.

When the elevator got as far down as it was supposed to go…….there was actually more to it. Joe showed me the trick he discovered, since he'd been through this all once before. You have to push one of the buttons down again, he showed me, and then……..he reached up and pulled at this little white string dangling from the ceiling corner. And that's all it took. The elevator dropped, going from slow and rickety and taking you nowhere to suddenly rapidly descending, strong and confident and with a purpose.

It descended rapidly, going down, down, down, down, down, at super high speed.

Onto something else.

My nerves were still on end, I had chills almost because I couldn't believe how cool this was. I looked up and watched the walls moving up as we moved down, hundreds and hundreds of feet. There were outcropping shapes sticking out of the walls, thick half circles and thick half squares, alternating between the two, evenly spaced.

When we got to the bottom the elevator thing didn't stop. Instead, some part of it must have split off because we were now traversing along horizontally, being carried by something. (Dream logic I guess ;) Or something that really can happen, who knows.)

We were now in this absolutely huge gigantic cavern room. A completely self-contained underground facility removed from the world of the surface. It was completely surreal. The woes of the surface world didn't exist down here. Politics, the environment, national borders, wars, starvations, materialism, disease, work, school, family, loved ones. None of it. It was calm and quiet and still and enormous. We rapidly began to ascend in height up and sideways into the air, traversing along on whatever it was that was carrying us, formerly part of the elevator car. The lighting wasn't bright fluorescent, it was more like really bright firelight. Hard to describe. And it wasn't actually a cave, although I never got a good look at the wall structure. I was distracted by us lifting up into the air, and getting a whirling, almost panoramic view of the gigantic room below……including these enormous incinerator furnace fireplaces that were below us. Pot bellied stove furnace things with smoke stack chimneys that went up, up, up through the ceiling and onto whatever above that. These stove furnaces were enclosed in their own room that had this plexiglass-ish transparent wall material so you could clearly see them, and Joe excitedly explained to me that the stoves burned some combination of carbon dioxide and bleach. (??) I watched the fires roar silently from inside the rounded pot belly bottoms of these incinerators, behind the transparent enclosure. There was no signs of life in this huge cavernous room. No windows either, obviously. The air was still and warm.

Just then we found ourselves surrounded by a tingly energy type force and it took hold of the thing we had been traveling on, and it lifted us up so we were free flying through the air on just a small seat/bench sort of thing, up, up, slightly wobbly but completely controlled by some force [electro magnetic force field Joe would later tell me in the waking world] that had become aware of our presence and was not too happy. It wanted to see us and deal with us. We continued to free float, and I was nervous but completely EXHILERATED, all at the same time. What an adventure I'd gotten myself into! I gripped Joe's arm as we talked about how this energy force felt, while I nervously glanced down at how high up we were. (even in my dream, my fear of open, unprotected heights was there, adding to the realism!) I could feel the unseen presence behind the force field as being male. His own personal psychic power or something.

The scene then cut to another part of this self-contained underground world. There never was any big confrontation scene between us and the invisible male presence. It was a large room that was sectioned into smaller areas by furniture, like couches, tables, and free standing bookshelves, and decorated with rich tapestry carpets on the walls, and fireplaces with their chimneys going up and up. Turns out, I've seen this scene before in another dream where I was free flying over these same giant partitioned rooms. I have that sometimes, where I re-visit particular dream scenes. But I wouldn't have remembered it were it not for this dream. I just know that when I revisited those tapestry lined, window-less fireplace rooms in the latest dream I felt the same way as the first time I saw it. Awestruck, taking it all in, a completely new experience. And it's interesting that in this particular world I'm always able to free-fly.

And that's when I woke up.

Very bummed, I will say.

I woke to the sound of rain tapping on the metal gutters and fan units outside my bedroom window, in the dark, with a slight breeze and a chill in the room. And after being in the dream of the self contained world removed from society, with no windows, natural light or breeze, just that warm stuffy pressured air…..let me tell you it was quite a shock. I lay there in bed for a minute trying to adjust from what was basically an abrupt switch from being deep underground to being on the surface. My heart was still pounding and my nerves were on end. I've never thought about the weather in terms of "surface life"………until now. Because I've never experienced anything different. Now I have that comparison."

[As an afterward side note – back in 2002 I came across references in one of David Icke's books to lake/water entrances to underground bases, which floored me as I figured this part of my dream was nonsense.]

Insectoid Gray Aliens. Really strange, creepy dream involving terrifying Gray/insectoid aliens cutting the power in my old house in Connecticut and swooping in to get us. In the dream, I was in my parent's bedroom and there was a corpse in a coffin, and a pukey green colored rose on the coffin, and a bunch of other morbid nonsense which indicated that "something was around" hijacking my sleep state. Then the power went off in the house in my dream. I went for the light switch, flicking it up and down, up and down, to no avail. I tried another light switch, and another, and finally realized, "uh ohhh, here we go…!" I knew "they" were coming to get me.

I left the room and went out into the darkened hallway and opened the door leading downstairs. From the light coming in through the front door downstairs, I could see the silhouette of a REALLY creepy alien making its way up the stairs for me. It had a bald, round head, and really long limbs. To picture the way this thing moved, stand up, then squat down a little. Now, imagine walking up stairs very quickly in that same squatting position with your knees sticking out like that, hips swaying a bit back and forth, with the long thin arms. Well that's how this thing moved. I've never seen anything like that in any movie, so it didn't come from Hollyweird. When I saw that coming up the stairs, I knew…there's nowhere to run. You can't hide from them. You're cornered, and they're going to get you. And so I decided - if I'm going down, then I'm taking it down with me. Fuck them. And instead of running, or just freezing there and letting it get me, I hurled myself at it with my arms outstretched, to grab it and go head to head with it. As I fell through the air, silently in the dark, the alien disappeared. I fell through it. I turned around in mid-fall down the stairs, so I was facing the door at the top, where I had just been standing. My last thought as I fell slowly through the air before awaking was "I bet something like this really happened to us when we lived in Connecticut…"

Time Travel and the UFO. I was living in Fort Lauderdale and I found myself having a "dream" one night where I was suddenly sitting on a rock alongside a stream/creek somewhere in south Florida…500 years ago. Sitting to my right on the rock was a (Native American?) woman. I sat there in a dazed awe, looking around like "Wow…!" and somehow knew that it was the early 1500's. It was morning and the sun was out, the sky hazy and kind of thick, the sky had a yellow white hue to everything. There were no buildings around. Just the stream in front of me and tall grass and open land. It was quiet and peaceful. And the more interesting thing to note is that I didn't communicate verbally with the Indian woman. We communicated telepathically. I hardly had any time to really even get into a discussion because things got cut short prematurely, and also I was still absorbing the fact that……..I'm in the 1500's!! So the only thing I could think to ask her at first – mentally, not with verbal speech – was whether Miami existed yet! She telepathically responded that "Yes, Me-ah-me exists…" working in the correction on my pronunciation. :D Imagine that. I telepathically understood Me-ah-me, as she pronounced it, to be a settlement, not too far from where we were. That made me smile, like wow…Miami is already around! Cool.

And then wouldn't you know it, but an annoyed UFO whizzed up to where we were. I glanced up at the black colored disc approaching, which slowed to a hover above us to the left, and telepathically felt its annoyance at me. It was conveying very loudly, with a robotic sort of voice, "WHAT ARE YOU DOING…STOP THAT RIGHT NOW…STOP THAT…STOP…" It wanted to put an immediate stop to this, and squelch me back into place. In my "dream" I sighed and felt limp, "knowing the drill" and immediately resigned myself, knowing there was nothing I could do to stop them from controlling the situation. That's where it abruptly ends. Later I did a pendulum dowsing to ask whether I really inadvertently time traveled back in time, and I got a strong Yes. I asked whether that woman was real, and I got a Yes. I asked whether she went back and told the people she lived with about her encounter with me and also got a Yes. O.o Interesting.

The Black Box. A dream when I lived back in Florida where I was shown something about how "They" had connected a "black box" to my heart, and had control over whether I lived or died. There was a switch/button on the black box that they could turn my life on - or off - with. The dream seemed to take place in a mix of where I grew up in Massachusetts and Connecticut. I was lying on a table, and there were people in white coats around me, performing the "black box heart procedure." But I seemed to be me at my age now, in the present, rather than a kid. I could see out the windows that it was sunny and blue skied outside. A weird muddled dream. Several years after this dream I read the book "Song of Freedom" by Judith K. Moore (mentioned earlier in this book) and there is a chapter called "The Little Black Box." For Judith Moore, the black box was an implant in her brain, installed by human elements that had been using her in mind control experimentation.

The Gray. Had a "dream" where I was in what appeared to be another one of those underground facilities, no windows. I'm walking along and up ahead, about twenty feet from me, is a Gray alien. Little thing, about four feet high, with the bulbous head and large black eyes.

It's stopped in place, glancing sideways (to the left) at me. As soon as I see it I frown inside, like "grrrrrrrrrr!!!"…..and just go limp - giving up. EXPECTING the mind control beams to come off it, controlling me, and knowing there's absolutely nothing I can do about it and being irritated by the whole situation. Another instance of "knowing the drill." Except for some reason…nothing happens. My limp body just stands there, then I perk up, with this "Huh??" confused feeling, looking around. Nothing had happened. I'm not under any mind control. And I look at this Gray being just standing there…and I charge after him, taking full advantage of this rare opportunity where I'm not under the control of these beings and free to do whatever I want. Free to defend myself. Rage surges through me as I rush up to him and just start beating the crap out of this thing, pummeling him, screaming, cussing, hitting, kicking, going off like a crazy person, getting out all the pent up hostility from my apparently quite negative previous Gray experiences. Except when my fists hit this thing it feels REALLY hard. The skin is this sort of leathery stuff over what feels like a metal skeleton. And I hear this thing's thoughts as it starts to hurry away from me. "It would not be safe for me to stand here much longer…it would not be safe for me to stand here much longer…" It's completely emotionless. Its thoughts are just a sensory analysis of its environment. Its thin little arms move up and down as it takes off, getting away from me. My fists drop, I frown, realizing this thing is a COMPUTER. It's a fricking ROBOT. My anger dissipates away in confusion. It's not a real sentient Gray being at all, so there's no point in beating it up. And that's the end of this "dream."

My cat to the rescue. I had just moved to Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and woke up one morning in my motel room to the image in my mind of a very vivid, illuminated, glowing rainbow against a black background. Two UFOs descended from each side of the rainbow, landing together in front of it. From there, all these images of Gray faces filled my mind's eye. Even though they all looked the same I recognized them. I sensed individuality or at least was able to feel the essence of them. I knew them, but I don't know how. And I began fighting with everything I had to get out of my body and get to them. !! I strained with all my might, reaching for them, in total desperation.

As I frantically began pulling out of my body to get to them I became aware of the rest of the room, probably because I was now mostly out of my body. Then I heard my cat Kitty suddenly meow from across the room. She ran over to the bed, jumped up, then walked up my stomach and chest, meowing at me in an urgent way the whole time as she walked, and literally……just stood there on top of me.

Because she did that, and was standing on my chest, meowing in my face, I snapped out of it. I pulled back into my body and woke up. She jumped back off of me, watching me intently from the side as the image of the rainbow, UFOs and the Grays faded away in my mind's eye. I came to and sat up, realizing what had almost just happened. I have been extremely grateful and thankful to my cat to this day for doing that (or whatever positive "stuff" worked through her to help me). I'm not sure exactly what would have happened to me had she (or "stuff") not intervened. In the two years I'd had her at that point she'd never jumped on me while I was sleeping or in bed. This was not normal behavior for her. Only the one time when I was fighting to get out of my body to get to the "Grays" did she do that. Literally got on top of me and prevented it, whether intentionally, or inadvertently.

A dream? Or a real UFO/abduction? I don't know whether this was a dream, a real event, or a screen memory. However I'll include it in the "Dreams" section, just in case. But one night in Florida in March or April of 2002 (right after I moved to my new apartment in Fort Lauderdale), I had just gone to bed when suddenly, a bright blue-white light descended outside the front of my apartment. Its light poured through the blinds covering my front window. Whatever this was, it had tremendous force. I jumped out of bed, frantically grabbing for my cat to protect her…right as the light source blew in my front window. Which is amazing, considering it was a strong, tri-sectioned/slatted hurricane storm window. The glass and blinds flew in everywhere, landing all over the carpet, and now the noise level was doubled, and there was all this wind and ruckus mayhem, and bright blue white light pouring in, and more wind blowing around. All I could do was just stand there, clutching my cat, facing the window (about eight to ten feet from it) frozen in place, too shocked to do anything. I didn't make a run for the back door either. It was like I couldn't move. And that's all I remember.

I woke up the next morning, more than ten hours later - very suddenly - pushing myself up in bed with a HUGE gasp, eyes bugged out, whipping my head around to look over my shoulder, FULLY expecting to see my apartment completely trashed. It felt like it had only JUST happened, seconds before…when in reality more than ten hours had passed.

The apartment was perfect. The window was in place, the blinds were there, and sunlight lit the apartment. Outside life was as calm and still and pleasant as could be. My cat was there, and she was fine. The feeling of confusion and disbelief I felt is hard to convey. I KNEW the apartment should be trashed. To the core of my being I knew it had happened. Yet, the apartment was fine. Suspicious indicators: 1) it was like I was blacked out all night, I had no dreams, no memories of waking up even once in the night, and that's not normal for me; 2) waking as suddenly as I did, gasping; and 3) the feeling that no time had gone by at all, even though it had been ten hours - it's all indicative of being plunked back from an abduction. Guess things were rearranged too when I was plunked back. Like it never happened. Or, it's actually a very vivid and intense screen memory of sorts.

Fading abduction memory. Woke up in Florida one morning with the image of a short, pudgy, wrinkly old gray skinned "man" with huge black eyes in my mind. Like a cross between a wrinkly pudgy old man midget and a Gray. It was in my mind, then faded out the more I awoke.

As I was waking with this image in my mind I noticed my cat trying to get up in the living room window (it was a studio apartment, so, no separate bedroom) and fussing with the blinds as if she saw something going on outside the window. (Wouldn't surprise me – as noted in my e-book "Miscellaneous Stories of the Weird and Unusual" there had been several woo-woo incidents involving that particular window, including my cat getting attacked in it one night, with two more attempts on later dates.) I got out of bed to pull her back out and fix the blinds, and as I picked her up and placed her back down on the carpet I realized…..I don't recognize her. I don't "know" her, but I knew that I should. I knew this was "supposed to be" my cat, but I couldn't feel any sort of familiarity or connection with her. I realized that I also didn't know myself, either. There was no sense of "me" or of the life I was supposed to be in. I stared at the cat curiously at my feet, feeling bad about not knowing or recognizing her as she seemed nice, and gave her a couple of pats on the head as some sort of condolence ;D and got back into bed. Later on everything was back to normal and I was back to being me, and of course knowing who my cat is. I think this is the same thing as what I mentioned earlier about those times when I'd wake up in bed and not know where – or even who – I was, as if I was just being plunked back into my body and experiencing temporary amnesia as a result. This was the only time though where I got up and walked around while it was happening and realized I also didn't know my own cat. These experiences only seemed to occur during a time period in 2003, and never happened again.

Killing Alison (Alice-in Wonderland.) At the start of the dream I was walking down the semi-dark hallway of my old high school in Connecticut lined with the blue lockers we had when I went there. The light source was natural light coming in through the windows from the cloudy day outside. But I was me at my current age, and current personality with the way I dress, feeling very calm and amused. I saw a girl I was once friends with, but here in the dream her face was a porcelain mask (major mind control symbolism). She stared at me stone faced, with a white painted face, red lips and blush on her cheeks, looking like a harlequin mask. I walked past her to the end of the hallway and into a room that had a huge tank of water featuring students taking a "scuba class." They were being monitored by a "Them" government agent guy, dressed in the white dress shirt, dress slacks, shoes, etc. He was barking snide sarcastic unfriendly orders at them. The room was dark, lit by the blue glow emanating from the large tank of water. Later in the dream, I was going into my old bedroom in CT where I found "Alison" waiting for me behind my door, waiting to jump out and get me. She had long straight blonde hair and bangs. Alison/Alice-in Wonderland. I got her first though. There was a scuffle, with me overpowering her and hitting her in the head with a hammer, over and over, in slow motion. (Trying to kill the "Alice in Wonderland" programming?) I detached from the whole thing, feeling muted. After that I planned to take off on the lam to escape killing "Alison", although I wasn't worried or concerned, I was in a childlike daze. I was getting in my car to leave for this place that looked like a Middle Eastern Aladdin-type city in a desert. Pastel reddish brown yellow pink desert hues. I had to leave my kitty behind, which saddened me. (btw, my black cat named Kitty is a remnant of the black cat named Kitty from "Through the Looking Glass", although I didn't know that consciously at the time when I custom ordered her into my life and gave her the same name that Alice did in the book. I used to also be told that I had "Alice in Wonderland hair." Go figure.) In my mind's eye I saw the pastel desert hue colored Middle Eastern city with the domed architecture and all, and that's where the dream ended.

Symbolisms. Speaking of which, around this time period - fall of 2002/winter 2003 I was having lots of strange and unusual dreams that featured many prominent mind control symbolisms - dreams where I was in elevators, going up and down tall buildings; needing to get from floor to floor, getting off on the wrong floor and then having to find another elevator to get me to the correct floor; A LOT LOT LOT of elevator dreams. In several of these elevator dreams I could float due to a lack of gravity; in one I had to use amped up sexual energy to keep myself afloat; in that particular dream a guy appeared out of nowhere and commanded me to get in the elevator, so I did, and started floating around, and quickly realized that sexual energy could keep me floating; in other dreams I was wandering through these mall types of place, going into stores and doorways; in others I was wandering down the halls of a hospital, in a mellow daze, through double doors, walking past rooms that have glass windows, but the lights are off in those rooms, although I could still see into the rooms from the lighting from the hallway; [NOTE: Have read that MILABs often report dreams of being in hospitals] Lots of dreams about tornadoes too happening quite frequently during this time.

Being floated away. Have had several dreams that involved me flying along on my back, parallel to the floor, usually in the house I grew up in Connecticut, though I don't have these dreams anymore. In those dreams I was several feet off the floor facing up towards the ceiling, and I was usually flying rapidly backwards, creating a slightly exhilarating and enjoyable sensation. Then I'd start to rise up and go through the ceilings/floors, and out the roof. Another time I passed through the walls and was very conscious of the moment that I passed through, having the thought that "they changed my body's frequency to get me to pass through solid objects…" In one of these dreams it started in some house, with a crazy lightning storm going on outside. I went outside to look at the lightning, onto the sidewalk in front of this house. The night sky was lit up by both the streetlights and all the overlapping lightning strikes. I turned and looked to my right…and right then there was a small UFO traveling down the power lines, coming for me, lit up with various colors around the UFO body. That's when it lifted me up into the air and began pulling me along, traveling parallel to the ground. I just went along with it, enjoying the sensation, and the dream ends there. The dreams always end as I'm being floated/flown away, I never see or experience anything beyond that.

Flying maps. I used to have dreams involving me staring intently at maps, then flying rapidly over these maps. And these maps always have the same exaggerated coloring – bright vivid blues for water, vivid yellow/yellow-orange and orange browns for the land. I would be liable to dismiss this as nonsense……except I encountered another person on a message board who mentioned these identical same "flying over maps" dreams, with the same vivid coloring and everything. She/he mentioned it first out of nowhere, without me ever even mentioning it. What are the odds? They were a bit creeped out to read me describing the same dreams they'd had, said they had to get up and walk away from the computer, go take a break. Had another dream where I was looking at Earth, from orbit, being shown Africa. Specifically I was directed to look at the area where Chad was. Have no idea why. The only tentative theory I can come up with regarding maps and planet locations could be remote viewing. Not sure.

Tehran, Iran. "Dream" (more like a memory/experience flash) where I'm sitting in the back seat of a car looking out the window in a passive daze. In this flash I don't see who else is in the car with me, driving, I'm just watching the skyline go past us on the highway/expressway. It's Tehran, Iran. I've never left the United States, let alone visited Tehran. !!! Nor would I want to visit Iran, and nor had I ever researched it or sought out imagery of it at that point. Later on I would be working at a hotel as a front desk clerk with a guy who was from Iran, and I described to him the skyline of Tehran as seen from the highway, and the hazy, smoggy dirty blue color of the sky, and asked him if that's how it looked. He frowned at me, and said yes, actually, it does look like that. He stared at me like, How would you know that? Because of the way I just piped up, describing it like I'd been there, which contradicted the fact that I hadn't been there.

Not sure I even want to theorize what this whole "dream" snippet could really be about. It seems so farfetched.

Scrolling text. Had a really strange dream full of negative themes/elements, and I pulled myself out of it at the point where there was a computer screen sort of thing in front of me with rapidly scrolling text (programming?) Just all of this text, scrolling very quickly upwards, right in front of my face. Strange colors to it as well, like lime green, white, and turquoise blue or whatever.

Another Sky. I used to have these really interesting, occasional dreams here and there involving a sky packed full of flying objects. These dreams took place at night time, and almost always in our old house in Connecticut where we lived for nine years. (Although one of them did take place in Florida.) The sky would be a glowing a pinkish black color in these dreams, and there were all these lit up flying objects, like jets and things, long tube shaped flying things, and other assorted lighted aircraft, filling the sky. There's always such a magical feel to these dreams, because in the dream I'm just struck by how busy and bustling and exciting the sky is there (wherever "there" is….) versus here in our so-called normal world over "here," where there's nothing but the occasional plane. On a couple of occasions in these dreams (when they took place in Connecticut), one of these flying craft have landed (possibly crashed/skidded) into the woods behind our house. !! It looked like some sort of tear dropped shaped craft that could hold one, maybe two beings at the most.

"Thems" and Black helis. Both in Florida and in Virginia I've had dreams that involved "them" and their helicopters coming after me. Could be symbolic, or subconscious fears relating to them, but I do wonder. I think there's more to it than just that, though what it is and how it works, I don't know. In one of the more interesting ones that I can remember I found myself outside on a city street on a cloudy day, and there were "thems" dressed in head to toe black, with rifles, trying to shoot at me. However, I wasn't scared…in fact it was the opposite. I was skipping and flitting down the street, kind of twirling about, feeling the bullets whizzing by but seeming unable to actually penetrate me. As I twirled about on the street I thought in a sing songy, neener neener neener way, "You can't kill me, 'cause-you're-not-allowed-to!" Just a total, confident but nonchalant knowing about what the deal is. Then I flitted/skipped off away from them…into a church, to disappear. End of dream. Other times in my dreams I've been inside a house, usually the house I grew up in Connecticut, though sometimes it's other scenes, and outside there's a Them heli that's arrived, to harass and "come get me," honing in on me as I look at it out the window. This would always create a bit of an alarmed feeling.

In one of the more interesting dreams of this type both me and Tom were there, and it was a bright and sunny morning in the summertime, in my old house in CT, looking exactly as it did in real life, and I heard a helicopter approaching from up the street. (Details of this dream were taken from my log book, otherwise I wouldn't be able to remember it in full.) I went over to the front living room window and saw that it was an orange-y red color, not black, which surprised me. It flew straight over the house, low and quick and loud, tilted slightly to the side as it did so as if it were making a slight curve turn. I turned to Tom and used my index finger to trace a line in the air that cut across the house diagonally, to indicate without speaking the flight path of this thing. Then I moved to the back living room window and saw as it was passing by…then watched as it did a sharp U-turn and stopped in midair, pointing directly at us in a beeline over the woods. Now it was no longer orange-y red, and was white. "OH SHIT!!!" I thought, immediately ducking down, realizing that they were here to "come get us." I told Tom what was happening and said to get low to the floor. He did. I got up under the rear living room window, pushed up against the wall. Right then there was the whirring sound of a camera probe in the window inches over my head, scanning around, turning this way and that, zooming in and out. I practically held my breath. I glanced up to see if it was still there and now realized there was a male government agent "them" that had shown up to kill me, and was somehow outside the (second story) living room window. (doesn't make sense, total dream logic). He was right there above my head, scanning the living room, trying to figure out where I was. I glanced up and saw his hands holding his handgun, his right fingers flexing since he was apparently right handed, then I popped up, already reaching to snatch the gun right out of his hands with lightning fast reflexes and shot him point blank in the face, getting rid of him. The gun had a silencer so it went "pfffft" when it went off, instead of some deafening blast. He was gone, but it wasn't over. I jumped up and told Tom, "Come on! Let's go upstairs!" and we all corralled ourselves upstairs, me Tom and my cat Kitty who was now there. Eventually we were pressed up against the wall under my bedroom window as another camera probe tried to locate me through the window, inches above my head. This dream was very vivid in that I felt the very distinct cool, soft shaggy texture of my old bedroom carpet under my bare legs, which is exactly how it felt, though I hadn't experienced it in years since we moved away in '91. So that was interesting and nostalgic. It was pretty much the end of the line for me, I'd been cornered and there was nowhere to hide and no way to get outside without being detected, but I wasn't going to go down without at least trying. And that's where the dream ended. (In retrospect I should have used the gun I snatched from the agent and shot out the camera probe. :D) On the one hand it's obviously a dream, but on the other hand that's not normal dream subject matter, and it was very detailed and vivid in a way that my normal dreams aren't, with visual, audio and even tactile sensory. So once again, what it is exactly and how it works, I don't know. But it's definitely something.

And in yet another dream later on in Virginia, probably around 2006, I found myself being chased around by "Thems" in what seemed like the woods behind our old house in Connecticut. Chased around and around, to and fro, and I found myself going up a tree, where they finally caught up with me…..but it turns out that my frequency was now changed to the point where they couldn't connect with me anymore. They appeared as blurred figures, due to me being phased out of their frequency. So when they finally caught up to me they realized they couldn't actually get me anymore, I'd changed too much, and there was nothing they could do. The end. ☺ I liked that one.

Another possible soul abduction attempt – and a clever poem. In the middle of writing this book back in 2006, I started to experience some weirdness you could say. Had a very bizarre "dream" that involved red UFO probe balls flying around in a cemetery where I and others were camping out in sleeping bags to watch them; later on I was inside a house, watching a miniature, elongated/tear drop shaped UFO craft flying around outside the screen door, and could even see the little being inside, piloting the craft. A mini-UFO with a mini-being. Right at the point as I was noticing this UFO just outside the door, I heard a male human voice say in my mind:

Rivers flow north
Rivers flow south
Rivers flow red
So shut your mouth.

Right as the human male voice said that, the UFO turned to face me from outside the door and honed in on me. I started to try to pull out of this "dream" and was half in, half out of sleep, aware of being in my bed, and aware of the room, but then slipping back under. I could feel my body suddenly being paralyzed in my bed, as an energy field of some sort enveloped my entire body. Then the alien spoke to me, with vocal chords that seemed a bit rusty, sounding crackly and popping. "Let goooooooooooooooooooo…." it told me, with its creepy crackling voice. I felt the telltale astral wind blowing about as I began to lift out of my body, along with that alien voice telling me to "let go" echoing around. I totally panicked and fought my way out of it, breaking free.

If this was real and not a dream, then all I can say is…wow! I don't know, I thought that poem was the most clever thing ever. I guess it was supposed to scare me, or be a threat of some sort, but instead I kept giggling in giddy glee whenever I thought about it later that day, admiring the cleverness of it all. I'm sure that annoyed them. ;)

Summary

And that's not even the half of it. There's so much more to the story, but it wasn't my goal to actually write a complex autobiographical account of my life and happenings. Snapshots of experience work best when trying to put stuff out there so others can compare to their own happenings. Also, many anecdotal accounts have been left out because I can't know for certain whether they are what I think they are. They may be nothing, or have normal explanations, and for that reason I just chose to keep them out even when they seem to match up to stuff I've read in other people's accounts.

After I originally compiled the initial grouping of incidents for Part II I just sat on it all for the next several days afterwards, pondering things. And I pretty much almost abandoned this whole endeavor. My first thought was to just walk away. It all seemed so absurd, so over the top, that my reflexive conclusion was that it can't be happening. I'm imagining this, it's absolutely insane. Listen to what I think has happened here. There's no fricking WAY this has gone on in my life. There are so many unanswered plot holes, things I don't understand, stuff that makes no sense. What a confusing mess. So I must be imagining this or misinterpreting events in my life. Occum's Razor and all that. "The simplest explanation tends to be the right one" – which means nothing is happening here at all and I'm just crazy and imagining mountains out of molehills. And so the next thought was - live out the rest of my life and don't think about this, literally, *ever again. It was a very strong urge too – "Just don't ever think about any of this again." This thought/command reeked of programming.

My calm, rational source of reason counteracting this urge reminded me of the couple of memories I do have, with the leftover marks on my body to prove it to myself, and some of the more undeniable incidents. If I have those couple of incidents then it means I can't turn and walk away. There's a story here. So eventually I snapped out of it. And so here we are.

That whole reaction is kind of understandable though, because when one is dealing with this subject in their own life, the biggest problems are:

1. The lack of overt evidence (often times) as mentioned previously. Forget trying to prove most of this stuff to an average person who isn't experiencing it, let alone being able to definitively prove anything to our own selves. Our only proof most times involves anomalous body markings, really unusual dreams, random flashes of what seems to be actual memories, and a bunch of circus diversion craziness. Unless you go under hypnosis, which I'm not willing to do at the moment, then you're pretty much screwed in terms of finding out the full story of who's doing what, when, why, and how and being able to prove anything. There are just so many plot holes, things that don't make sense.

2. The clash between abduction happenings and the "real world." When you have this stuff going on in your life it creates a conflicting split. You can't just go and talk about it to any old person. So there usually is nowhere to go, except for the internet and books. You're left on your own, trying to reconcile where the evidence is pointing to in your personal life, with the clash of the mainstream world that often times denies that this stuff is real.

Even to this day, as of 2010 while in the middle of revising and updating this book, I still find myself experiencing doubt. It never goes away, despite everything that's gone on and what I should know. Part of me still goes back and forth about it all. A big part of this has to do with seeing people around me in life (either in person or over the 'net) who have completely normal lives, with no weirdness or woo-woo, which can of course lead one to wonder "Gee…am I crazy??" (Thanks to Facebook one can find all sorts of people from their past and see what sorts of life adventures they've been up to. And various people from my past, such as roommates, classmates and such, are living the most normal mundane lives imaginable. Married, kids, home owning, etc.) But then I realize……none of the normals that I'm seeing have the military intelligence connections going on in their lives. So that's something I do keep in mind. It doesn't mean all people with the military connections will have unusual freaky lives, and it doesn't mean all people without military connections will be normal. It just means that when I see the normals out there in the world who make me wonder if I'm just a lunatic, I look closer at who's got what going on in their lives, and there tends to be that pattern. The truly mundane normals don't tend to be the offspring of current or former military intelligence men.

One outcome of this endless back and forth was for me to create a distilled list of those absolutely undeniable incidents referenced earlier that in my opinion, leave no shadow of a doubt, and therefore serve as a good reminder for me that something is indeed going on here. They would be:

- Waking up with strange "dried iodine" amber colored stuff on me when I was five, in Westfield, Massachusetts.
- First known, overt abduction incident in October 2001 in SoCal, and follow up attempt at abduction a week later.
- Glowing "laser line" that appeared over my brother's bed in Portland, Oregon
- The "IT'S JUST A SPIDER BITE!!!!" yelling command in my mind when I subconsciously searching my scalp, and found the lump at the base of my skull. As well as everything else surrounding that incident.
- All incidents of waking up and catching stuff in the act of programming me.
- Flash memory where I saw myself in some facility sitting on a chair in a daze, scratching at my arm and creating a rash, then finding the remnant of that rash the next day on that exact spot on my arm.
- Some of the more anomalous markings I've found on my body, but in particular the red geometric diamond shape with the dot above and below it. (pic is found on my website.)
- Stuff repeatedly trying to pull me out of my body when I was lying down for a nap, and the accompanying tingling arms and anomalous purple circle on my arm that appeared right afterwards.
- "Alien in the cloud" incident, Fort Lauderdale, March 2002
- Voice screaming at me to "LOOK AT THE LICENSE PLATE!!!" in Fort Lauderdale, with the "Joseph" and trailer hitch.
- Beeping noises in the air moving around in my apartment in Fort Lauderdale, witnessed by Tom as well.
- The sound of something apparently arriving in my closet and then seeing some cloaked being/human trying to sneak around by the closet/kitchen area, Fort Lauderdale.
- "Thermostat incident" where somebody had been in my apartment in Fort Lauderdale and wanted me to know.
- The voice from the radio in Fort Lauderdale, making reference to an abduction related memory fragment from months earlier.

These particular incidents are the ones I have to refer back to when the "normal" everyday real world lulls me back into doubt and complacency. Some people may be wondering why some of the bigger incidents mentioned in this book aren't included on the list (such as the black helicopters, among others). That's because the criteria was that it had to be either physical proof corroborating an incident or memory and which couldn't be denied, and/or outright obvious and obnoxious incidents that were seen or heard, sometimes with a witness, and where there was no possible way they were anything other than what they seemed to be. For the latter, it's a case of "I know what I saw/heard." Versus something that could be excused away as a "coincidence." So something like the black helicopters, despite the obviousness of it all to me, could still be dismissed as coincidence. The first item on the list, concerning the amber substance that was on me at age five, is on the distilled list even though it doesn't corroborate a memory or experience only because it was the only time it's ever happened in my entire 35 years, and it's absolutely not something normal for a five year old to experience.

The clash with the "real" world, creating doubt, just can't be emphasized enough. The "real" world occupies 90-95% of our waking lives, reinforcing its particular version of "truth" and "reality" to us over and over. This other 5-10% involving abductions and paranormal is also very real, and equally as valid for those going through it, but there's no place for it in the 90-95% world. Years back I'd be at the drug store, surrounded by regular people and the hustle and bustle of the every day "real" world…buying Red Bulls or Frapuccinos so my boyfriend and I could stay up all night avoiding abductions, or buying film to photograph the anomalous bruises, small purple circles and even geometric marks that would periodically appear on my body. Standing in line to pay, holding the film, or the Red Bull in my hand while my eyes would fall on celebrity/fashion mags, or the local and national newspapers for sale near the register, with mainstream "news" headlines screaming from the covers. Clash of two worlds. Which one is more real? Not the one involving the newspapers and magazines, that's for sure. "It's the world that's been pulled over your eyes to blind you from the truth," as Morpheus says in The Matrix. Indeed.

In the course of my ongoing research, one of the biggest things I've noticed is that my story doesn't neatly fit into any of the groups or categories that I've read about.

At first it was a case of knowing I'd been taken, but it didn't fit the typical aliens/UFO pattern one always reads about, so I knew that wasn't it. Then in 2002 I finally learned about MILABS, MK-Ultra, the Monarch program, etc., and there were many random aspects of all these things that fit my situation…but many aspects that did not. For instance, my dad was never active military when I was growing up. He was already out for two and a half years by the time I was born in 1974, and we never lived on or right near any military bases. But that's a common thread for most MILABs/Monarchs/MK-Ultras, living on or near bases, and/or being a military brat. Although in reading James Bartley's article "MILABS Operations" (mentioned in the "Recommended Reading" section) he notes that MILABS can run the gambit from having no immediate military connections in their family, on up to having extensive military involvement on both sides of the family. So I'm definitely in the middle of the spectrum there. During the four years my dad was enlisted, 1968-1972, he was Naval Intelligence, reporting to the NSA, engaging in spy type work and translating intercepted Morse code messages into type, etc. I get into more details of his story in the Appendix section at the end.

Also my parents were loners, not part of any church groups, brotherhood fraternities or the like – which is another common component in targets' lives that you'll often hear. Many victims were actively involved in church, usually Mormons or Catholic, or had dads that were Freemasons. Also, I wasn't sick all the time as a kid, with mysterious bodily injuries and ailments the way many targets are. The few things I did have were just what they were, and nothing more.

I also know that I wasn't a part of the old school "Monarch" programs, as that seems to be the story for many people who were born in the 40's and 50's. They had Satanic ritual abuse going on, sold into the government programs as small children and experimented on like lab rats throughout their childhood and teen years with visible ailments and bodily markings and indicators to prove it. Cathy O'Brien, Kathleen Sullivan, and the relatively unknown author Judith K. Moore who wrote "Song of Freedom" are three offhand examples of this textbook scenario. But yet in looking back over my life there's no doubt that something is going on here, as evidenced by this book. So what I've tentatively concluded is this:

- I could have possibly been targeted for abductions as a kid due to "who I am" in general on a soul level, or, possibly something having to do with bloodlines, as mentioned earlier.
- Because of my dad's involvement in "stuff" while in the military; but even then he had obvious weirdness going well back into his childhood. (so in that sense we're looking at bloodline targeting.)
- Because of being so closely involved with and connected to my brother later on, who had his own "stuff" going on.
- Then later because of being connected with my current boyfriend, who's also an abductee, and who runs a well known website on all things conspiracy/alien/metaphysical related.

There are quite a few avenues, and all of them make sense, and possibly all of them are happening. It seems to be a mix of hyperdimensional and human military spook. There's probably definitely more than one thing involved here, and I think this could be the case for most abductees. Don't limit yourself into thinking that you've only got one thing happening, from one source, with one agenda. It's usually a lot more complicated than that.

And as far as what I'm being taken for, I hesitate to even theorize. But what I do know for certain is this:

- I've been programmed with self-destructive, self-sabotaging thoughts designed to take me out of the picture. I know this because I woke up and caught them in the middle of doing it, several times.
- I have the sense that I've been used for remote viewing, because again, I woke up and caught myself being pulled out of looking at something (by a human male voice), for somebody else's benefit. I also have demonstrated the ability to do this on my own, for personal reasons, in my waking life……before having ever read any material on the subject or knowing anything about it.
- Have memory snippets that indicate unsavory things happening to me by human males during an abduction as well.

I could theorize about additional purposes and reasons, but I hesitate to do so because I think it would be way too simplistic and laughable. I'm working with a puzzle that's missing most of the pieces.

Something worth noting is some feedback about my situation that I got while my boyfriend Tom and I attended a Cassiopaean channeling session in New Port Richey Florida, in September of 2002.

During the session, I took the opportunity to ask about Joe. I wanted to know if he had really been abducted, and if so, by whom. I didn't get a direct answer. In typical C's fashion, I seemed to get a roundabout answer that was pointing me in another direction entirely. The thing about the C's is that they liked to try to get people to think for themselves. Many things they'd answer directly. But if there was something somebody was missing, a point they were overlooking, and an opportunity for learning, they wouldn't just answer directly, because then there's no thinking involved. That was the case here. I was waaaaaaaaay over here wondering about whether Joe was abducted, and by whom, thinking that was all there was to the story, when really, I needed to be looking way over there…and asking "Who the hell is Joe?" Not "is he being abducted?" but who is he to begin with.

Here are excerpts from the transcript and what they had to say. Questions are listed with the person's first initial. I'm "C." The C's responses are given with "A" for answer. Also, on a side note, any word that the C's designate as being "in quotes" means that the word has a double meaning. Bolded answers are my own emphasis.

"C: I just wanted to know has my brother Joe ever been abducted by……

A: He's not here. But you are. Does that strike you as interesting?

C: Can they clarify what they mean here?

A: In this room.

(a lot of confused head scratching from everybody at this point, theorizing what they mean……) The C's interrupted:

A: Did you get our question?

(more discussion)

C: Okay, I guess my next question is have I ever been abducted?

A: Well, now that you asked…you may find great benefit in contemplation of this issue while in a relaxed state. Perhaps some consideration of the possibilities inherent in the events of your brother's life in relation to your own might be fruitful.

C: Well mostly my question is more concern about my brother than about my own self. Enough so that I want to know if he's being abducted, and if so, by whom?

A: Consider the terms: Projection and reflection?

J: Projection meaning to take the image of something and projecting it onto something else, a reflection of something that mirrors, comparing how the events of his life correspond to yours.

A: Are his experiences his alone?

A: She needs to "probe".

V: Get to the root of the issue…might hypnotism be a good avenue for her to probe?

A: Good idea.

(then "V" asked some questions pertaining to her own abductions, which the C's responded with…….)

A: More projecting?

C: What do they mean by that?

A: Some project……some reflect…….."

Then, later on in the session:

"C: Could I just ask one question? Last fall [October 2001 abduction] I believed I was abducted, and I actually have one memory of it, or a Gray, you know, while I was laying on a table. I also had physical signs on my body of an abduction. I'm curious as I'm hearing this: Was I being abducted by grays that really exist, or was that like the government mind control making me think that I was?

A: How about real abductions, but not necessarily "grays". They are very popular screens.

V: Okay, if not Grays, then who?

A: Ask her brother!"

That last comment was very interesting – ask her brother. You want to know who's taking you, ask him. Which means he obviously did have stuff going on. So, we've got several things revealed or confirmed here: 1) That I was definitely abducted in October 2001. 2) They're saying it was a screen memory, as in humans, not actual Grays. 3) Consider the idea that some of what happened to Joe may have actually happened to me. This ties into the idea that both he and I had supposed separate abductions in October of 2001. So if his was in an underground base with human government agent "thems," then what does that say about the nature of my own abduction during that same month? 4) The idea of projection/reflection and "probes" having to do with my brother, which is a whole side topic in itself, and one that I did eventually figure out after locating another C's session transcript from 1994 that used all those same terms.

In the 1994 session I saw that "probes" had to do with reanimated agent probes put into a person's life for the purpose of information gathering and derailment/destruction, and that they operate by reflecting back the energy that is projected to them by the target. Without the whole back story on Joe this probably wouldn't make much sense. But basically, by the time Joe re-entered my life in California after being out of my life for six years, it seems, based on his actions and the stuff he was doing and involved with, that he was a re-animated probe designed to mirror me – reflecting back what I projected. The thing that I had noted in my naïve obliviousness even back then was that the Joe that returned to me was all of a sudden amazingly like me in many ways, having coincidentally adopted many of the same traits I had, even though as kids we were nothing alike. Enough so that it made it difficult to turn my back on him and walk away, which was the whole point I guess. He also apparently shouldn't have still been alive by that point, as evidenced by some of the stories he relayed, and the fact that he even point blank said so, and yet….he still was. So as nutty as the idea may sound of "re-animated probes who reflect back your projected energy," all the evidence points to this. In any possible future revised editions of this write up I may add in more details about the idea of reanimated probes in an abductee's life.

Additional possible answers, or least, confirmation came in the form of a visit to an intuitive in the summer of 2007. Sometimes there are intuitives that work out of our local new age bookshop, each with their own way of tuning in to things, so I decided to visit one of them after hearing about her from somebody else. I'll call her N____. N____ works in a really odd way that I've never heard of before, which was most of the reason she got my interest in the first place. But she relaxes her mind and keeps it occupied by scribbling on a pad of paper, almost as if "writing," but it's gibberish. In preoccupying her front conscious mind in that way by scribbling, it allows these other entities to work through her. From there, she – or rather, the entities she's associated with - answer questions you have. Apparently there are two main entities she works with, and when each one takes over the way in which she scribbles on the pad will change. One causes her to write faster and more free flowing, the other slower and more deliberate. So of course, my #1 reason for seeing her was to see if I could get any input on my abductions situation.

I found N___ to be a really nice lady, in her 50s I'd guess, with blonde hair and piercing lighter blue eyes, and a kind vibe. Just from her eyes alone I felt there was definitely something unusual about her. As we got in the elevator to go upstairs to do the reading, she smiled over at me and noted, "Well, your heart chakra is definitely open." On the way over to the bookshop I was listening to CDs in my car as I always do, and one of the songs (don't even remember which one anymore) had highly affected me emotionally, in a charged up emotionally positive way. I could feel my emotions flowing and emanating from my heart chakra area, and apparently she could see that. She then noted with a wry smile, "You've had a very busy life."

To say I've had "a very busy life" is an understatement. I've packed three lives into one. So I was glad she could see that and know who I am. But this is exactly why I prefer people who are intuitive. They know who you are, they see where you've been and what you've been up to, so there's none of the usual misjudging and underestimating and getting things all wrong about me, which is pretty much how it frustratingly goes with every non-intuitive I meet.

An intuitive sees through to your core in a flash, no long winded life story explanations necessary. No misjudgments.

As far as the channeling session itself went (I paid for 15 minutes), I found it to be a little disappointing. I didn't get the abduction details the way I wanted, and it seems that as with all intuitives, the information is always to some extent colored by their own biases and personal filters. But the couple of bits that I did manage to get when asked "Why am I being taken??" was that 1) They've worked on my heart and legs. And 2) They've repaired/restored my hearing that was lost at one point in time.

The second part really got my attention, being that I had meningitis at the age of one and a half. For all intents and purposes I should not have come away from it unscathed……and yet I did. As if it never happened. It was bizarre, and anytime I've ever mentioned to people that I had meningitis and spent almost a month in the hospital and was quarantined that's pretty much the first thing they puzzle over. Like, wait a minute…..don't kids who get meningitis go deaf? And brain damage? Then I have to nod, and then it just seems weird at that point because I'm sitting there unaffected and it might seem like I'm lying. So I decided to no longer mention this to people, because it just gets weird. So apparently "stuff" has restored my hearing. But N____ would have no way of knowing about the meningitis. Sound has been very important to me in life, and I've had a penchant for going around making recordings of sounds, something that most people probably don't do. Walking in the crunching snow in the middle of winter. The wind chimes kicking up as a storm rolls in, and of course, the thunderstorms themselves. My cat eating. :D And meowing/talking, purring and snoring while sleeping. The sounds of the bubbling creek behind our apartment. Bird songs. Ocean waves when we lived back in Florida. The cacophony of locusts or cicadas or whatever they are in the trees in the summer, buzzing. And of course….music. It's like I need music to survive. When my ex Steve was going to learn sign language as one of his college courses he wanted me to join in with him, but I would have nothing to do with it. Strange, very negative aversion of having anything to do with the whole "deaf" thing. I wanted no part of it. Possible subconscious memories of the way something originally went, but which was changed. If so, I'm thankful for it. Whoever they are.

As far as work on my legs and heart go, who knows. If anything my problems have centered around my back and neck. I've had bad a prognosis from the one chiropractor I went to at age 20 who showed me an X ray of my not too good situation, which will only get worse as time goes on, and which it did. There have been times I've been rendered unable to walk due to recurring back and neck problems. I would imagine that seems to be a much more urgent issue than my legs….? If this is even true. As far as my legs go, yeah, I've got bad ankles and knee problems (that I now take supplements for, and which have greatly helped) but nothing that I can tell which would warrant abductions to work on. Makes no sense. Though funny enough, most of the mysterious and anomalous marks and bruises I've ever gotten have been on my legs. Including one mark that appeared to be a strange surgery-looking line on one of my calves, and another that looked like a mysterious surgery scar on one of my knees. Pics of both of these can be found on my website. And my heart – maybe. There's heart issues on both sides of my family, and my mom's father dropped dead of a heart attack at the shockingly young age of 36. My heart rate is very inconsistent, my blood pressure is freakishly low, and I have allergic reactions to alcohol, including my heart getting all weird and elevated and fluttery (especially from wine) to the point where I've worried I would die after drinking.

Other than those two bits of info. N____ wasn't much use to me in terms of getting detailed answers. She couldn't seem to come up with anything else. I don't know if it was blocked from her, whether she had biases and filters in place against the idea of negative abductions and mind control programming, or whether she was just a phony. Though in all fairness I could tell she definitely had some abilities, no doubt, but for whatever reason she was unable to access my situation in any amount of real detail.

In the course of my research I eventually came across the book "Unshackled," by Kathleen Sullivan, detailing one women's lifelong involvement in government mind control experimentation and black ops work. I have no idea whether all the events she writes about in the book really happened to her or not, yet there are some things worth noting. As different as our stories are (Kathleen is one of the classic Satanic ritual abuse cases of the 50's and 60s coupled with government mind control programming that you always hear about, very different from my own situation), we share some strange personal details in common. Like me, she was bullied as a kid by a group of kids in a bad way to the point where she spent a lot of time alone, and books became her friends. She didn't get along with her mom but got along great with her maternal grandma…but her mom and grandma didn't get along with each other. Same deal here. She has a section in her book entitled "Comfortably Numb," about how physical pain used to not really register with her, and while I don't have that particular problem, it did remind me of how by the time I was sixteen I was covering my food in all this red pepper in a zombie-like trance state, unaware of what I was even doing until it was pointed out to me. I was obviously hoping that the pain would jolt me out of my depressed zombie stupor I was in during that time period, due to the really screwball life I was in the middle of. To say I was "comfortably numb" in terms of my emotional state when I was a teen is putting it mildly. Everything was nearly shut down, the world feeling far away as I navigated through it in a detached state with my personal walls on lockdown. But more interesting is the bit about having extremely low blood pressure. Kathleen mentions her extreme low blood pressure on page 38, saying that it used to hover around 90/60, 80/50 before she woke up and began therapeutic work to integrate her compartmentalized multiples. Such low blood pressure for her equates to operating in a trance-like, compartmentalized state of mind. My own blood pressure? Freakishly low, always has been to the point where nurses and medical assistants would comment on it. One male nurse even joked, "Are you even alive?!" After reading this in Kathleen's book I ran down to our corner pharmacy where they have a blood pressure machine. My reading? 91/53. Whether this has anything to do with being in a programmed, trance-like state or if it's just genetics, I don't know, but it's an interesting possibility.

Then there's something that pertains more to my brother and his later "Shawn Hill" agent provocateur programming, and adamant beliefs that "none of this was real." Kathleen mentions "Otherworld programming" where the target is convinced that the reality they're occupying isn't real, so therefore, they're free to do all the criminal mayhem they want. "In 'Otherworld' nothing was real […] I believed nothing in that world was real, I had zero fear of carrying out instructions on black ops…didn't fear being hurt or killed […]no fear of being arrested – after all, the crime had never happened!"

This is THE most accurate description of Joe's attitude I've ever seen in a book about mind control programming. Joe had no fear about being caught, hurt or killed as he went about his criminal activities, because he truly believed in a way that I've never seen with anybody else that "none of this is REAL, Carissa!" as he once tried to explain to me in Portland, Oregon. His lack of fear led to a state of being invincible, and that, coupled with his special training skills meant he was able to pull off some unbelievable feats, things I can't get into here. I actually do think that this reality is a bit…questionable, and isn't what we're told it is, only because I've been witness to some very odd things in my time. Yet there can be no denying that this also seems to be a major disassociative programming tool. As I mention in the section "Untangling Disinformation," I myself was given a "dream" one night in Oregon narrated by a male "them" that tried to show/convince me that this reality isn't "real," it's just a program filled in with holographic technology. The truth probably lies somewhere in the middle, in my opinion. It usually is never a polarized choice between two black and white opposites. So to read her talking about this was amazing. I've never seen "Otherworld programming," or how it helps with criminal mayhem black ops stuff mentioned anywhere else.

Part III
Expanded Insights

In this section, I expand more in depth on the types of metaphysical, hyperdimensional, and psychological situations that a MILAB (or "alien") target may be facing in their every day real lives. Many of the books or articles that are available on these subjects speak in broad terms, offering an informational foundation for what mind control and abductions are. There isn't too much material pertaining to the every day sort of issues that an abductee may encounter, with the accompanying advise and tactical tips gleaned from first hand experience. And so that's where this section comes in.

Everybody's situation is unique though, and what I've learned in my own experiences may not apply to somebody else. And being that there are different groups out there abducting people, and all with their own agendas and methodologies, means that there is no one-size-fits-all advise that is applicable for everybody across the board. So this is intended as a general starting place for tips, pointers and theories. As I learn more over time I'm sure I'll be adding and revising this section for any possible future editions.

Fear in Relation to the Abduction Experience

What I'm not really seeing addressed in the materials that I've researched on MILABS and alien abduction is the subject of Fear. This is so important that it cannot be emphasized enough, and it's unfortunate that so many good books and articles out there fail to recognize this in their write ups. Too often all we get are a whole lot of stories that wind the reader up but then forget to mention (or maybe don't even realize) how fear factors into the entire scenario. Addressing fear should be the next logical step in all abduction material.

Over the years my experiences have repeatedly shown me that it's a low personal frequency that (often times) allows this stuff to breach your realm, and it's what definitely perpetuates harassment long after it should have stopped. I find it impossible to read other abductees' stories when it's a rehashing of a downward spiral of negative events and where the tone is one based on fear, frustration and paranoia. In fact most MILABS material and personal accounts have a tone that I can't relate to, and you'll see why when you keep reading this section. My own attitude over the years has progressed from nervous, to defiant, to becoming downright manically giddy at the harassment, and because of that attitude/vibe, the nonsense I used to experience has completely stopped. But I don't need to be different. Other MILABS can do this too and put a stop to the things that are happening to them.

I was trying to figure out with my boyfriend why so many people don't arrive at this realization and why I was different, and he pointed out something I hadn't even noticed – most people who are all worked up about their harassment and the direction that life has taken them are worked up because they're invested in the illusion. And I'm just…..not. At least, not to the same degree. It's helped that I've had quite a few heavy duty "woo-woo!" experiences of a reality-shattering nature that burst whatever tentative bubble I may have still had left that this reality is what society would have us believe. I now know it's not. People get worked up and freak out and find themselves in a downward life spiral when they're clinging to something that's illusory to begin with. There's a strange paradox happening with many abductees. Their abductions have shown them another side of reality that grossly contradicts the mainstream version things, and yet they can't let go of hanging on to the illusion. Their job, their titles (people are all about labeling themselves I've noticed, most everybody likes their self-assigned titles that show off how many different roles they play and "who they are" in this reality), their role in life and personal identity they've attached to themselves, their material possessions…they still cling to it all despite what they now know. And because they cling and still relate to it, they become fearful of the things that are happening that work to shatter that. Lose the investment in the illusion, and they lose power over you. I'm not Carissa ________ (insert ten different title labels that define me as a person and make me feel grandiose and special) owner of _______ (insert all my material possessions here.) I'm just me.

In retrospect, I didn't really buy into this reality even as a child. This particular timeline with the way things have gone caused something to feel really off even as a kid. The closest way to describe it would be Morpheus' monologue to Neo in the movie "The Matrix" about the splinter in the mind. It's that, but a little different. I knew even as a kid that things weren't right, and I wasn't supposed to be here to just be some normal person. I played along like a good little trained and obedient monkey, but it's also no wonder that I welcomed the weird and the woo-woo into my life…..it was validation, proving what I suspected all along, that the other way wasn't really real. So the last thing I'd do is cling to the fake illusion, upset that the weird woo-woo stuff was trying to tear it away from me. The woo woo was what was real. Not the every day "normal" world.

Besides the idea of not clinging to what isn't real to begin with, the attitude to have, as my boyfriend noted, seems to be: "Having maximum awareness with the least amount of emotional hysteria." Having the bigger picture perspective from a place of higher awareness.

Which leads to the next big point about having the right perspective. Too often, MILABS are getting so worked up over things like their phones being tapped, or vans being parked across the street from their homes, and so on. And to that sort of "harassment" I say…Who cares? I mean, let's gain some perspective here. What ends up coming out of it all? Pretty much nothing, as I've learned, and which I'll talk about more in depth coming up. But when nothing comes out of anything, why be scared?

In one particular MILABs book the author reiterated multiple times throughout the book her indignation at having her privacy invaded. "They're listening in on my thoughts! They're watching what I do!" Privacy schmivacy. In the end it doesn't matter if they watched you and voyeuristically monitored your thoughts. Ultimately you are energy, and you'll be moving on. Your body is your source of life, something to love, not a source of embarrassment and shame. So worrying about what other people think, what they're saying, how they may be judging your thoughts and watching your body is just 3rd density prison trappings. To really fully realize this and live it is truly liberating.

Recently I acquired a digital copy of the very hard to come by book "Operation Trojan Horse" by the late John Keel, (http://in2worlds.net/file_download/6/) written back in 1970, and it turns out that Mr. Keel had come to the exact same conclusions within his UFOs and interdimensionals research – the reflective nature of the phenomenon, and the way it responds to targets' fears and paranoia. As he noted:

> "The phenomenon is reflective; the more frightened the victim becomes, the more the manifestations are escalated. […] The phenomenon preys upon the neurotic, the gullible and the immature." – page 220

I was amazed to see that, since I'd also concluded the exact same thing, having experienced the reflective nature of the phenomenon first hand as well as witnessing what happens when one instantly "changes the radio dial." It's so important for targets to realize this, I wish I could just scream it from the rooftops.

So with that in mind, let's take a closer look at how fear can manifest in the lives of abductees, and what to do about it all.

Black helicopters

In Part II I got into my experiences with the black helicopters, and how when I learned to stop caring, and dropped the fear…they abruptly stopped. The second I changed my frequency, like changing the dial on the radio, the helicopters immediately took off.

The implications of this are pretty huge. What exactly is going on then if these helicopters take off the second I stop the fear and change my personal radio dial?? What am I saying here…that they can somehow read minds? Pick up on a target's thoughts? That they're scanning a person's frequency in some way???

Yes, actually, that's exactly what I'm saying.

Think of all that material out there that gets into the black helicopter harassment, treating it in this extremely serious, conspiracy way - and not one book (at least that I know of) mentions changing your frequency, or doing what I did in my own encounters. Instead, they promote the mistaken assumption that: a) these things are some kind of scary, "OOOOOOOH!!!" big deal, and b) there's nothing you can do to make it stop. They're going to hover, and circle, and harass you as long as they want, and as often as they want to. So you better just get used to it, because this is what it is.

X! I don't think so. It's anything BUT that. Drop the fear, and they drop you. What my higher self, or whatever it was, communicated to me during my second black heli encounter was totally right - treat it as you would an entity harassment/attack, and watch what happens. Well, what I had learned is that when it comes to the neg entities, they feed on fear, and when I lost the fear, they lost me. So I took my higher self's advise and applied what I knew about negs to the helis, and voila. !!! My higher self didn't come right out and say "Don't be afraid!" because pssh, that wouldn't have helped. My response to that would have been "Yeah, whatever!!"…and that would have been it. So it had to propel me into some sort of action, because I had to learn by doing, and see it for myself. Which I did.

So there is absolutely no reason to have black helicopters hovering or flying in circles over your house or apartment for hours at a time, none. When reading cases of that happening I think, "That's bunk! There's no need!" Like I said, I wish I could shout it from the rooftops for all MILABS targets to hear…"Change your radio dial!! Shift your frequency up and reject what's happening! They will take off!!"

Why will they take off and react that way? Because again, they are there to scare you, maybe measure/record…maybe even feed…on your resulting fear. If you truly and sincerely could care less, then they have no purpose for being there.

It's completely understandable why targets get fearful and agitated during their first couple of black helicopter experiences….because they don't know what these things are going to do. In my first two encounters I seriously wondered if I was going to be shot at when I went outside to look. Seriously…what if it's there to kill me?! When the heli moved on top of my apartment, hovering directly over the spot where I stood inside my kitchen, I just flat out panicked. "WHAT IS IT DOING?!? WHY IS IT DOING THIS TO ME?!? I DIDN'T DO ANYTHING!" Panic and stress and anxiety arose from not knowing what was going to happen next.

But when it becomes obvious that you're not going to get shot at, and this thing is just going to hover, or fly in circles, doesn't it seem, oh, I don't know…a bit stupid by that point? It does, come on, admit it. And it's at that point that you're now obligated to drop the fear, roll your eyes, shake your head, and shift your frequency straight up. By my third encounter I had an evil grin going as I challenged the heli to read my mind and swing back around…I dare you…I dare you….I felt giddy inside. I don't think we're supposed to feel that way. ;) hehe It's 180 degrees from what they're trying to accomplish. And there I am, getting off on it, challenging the thing with manic giddy glee. So adopt a bit of a psychotic mindset, like I've developed over the years.

It truly helps. They don't waste time doing all the "lab rat psychological mind games" with the rats that get a kick out of it.

At this point some may be wondering who…what….is piloting these black helis. Are they human? I don't know. Their windows are all blacked out. Can't tell what's inside. I'd almost venture as far as to say no, they're not human, or at least, not fully. Could be hybrids. If they're not alien/hybrid, then at best, they're probably robotic military types, the kinds that do as their told without thinking, including heli harassment of whatever location they're told to go to. Then there's even a more far out idea that they're not really helicopters at all, only projections of such – because in at least two of my encounters, nobody else seemed to be aware of these things, even though they were harassing in broad daylight in an urban area. Or maybe they are a helicopter overlay disguising a UFO. You never know. So keep all possibilities in mind if you find yourself having these encounters. Things are not always what they seem to be.

On a side note, something I began noticing more of while doing this write up is how often the black helicopter subject is held up as the ultimate example of the conspiracy crazies. Sometimes even by the people who research conspiracies. What is it about the idea of black helicopters that causes many people, including some so-called conspiracy theorists, to be automatically dismissive of them? Do they believe that all the people who've seen them must be confabulating a hallucination? All I can say is that black helis are most definitely very real, and I've actually begun using it as a gauge to measure how much somebody thinks they know when they claim to be a conspiracy researcher. If they're talking a lot of talk about this conspiracy and that, but then in the next breath dismiss certain other conspiracies as being in the black helicopter group, then it's obvious. "You still have a long way to go, buddy. But keep digging." And who knows. Maybe if they dig deep enough, a black heli will decide to pay them a visit. ;)

The Bees. There's a related type of story that should be inserted in here, as it relates to changing the radio dial. It has to do with a swarm of angry bees that appeared outside our apartment one afternoon when I'd been reading the book "Barbara: Story of a UFO Investigator" about UFO researcher Barbara Bartholic. I mention her book again later on in this section as well, but I had been reading the chapter titled "Punishment for Investigating" which details all the ways in which Barbara had been harassed over the years for her research into abductions and UFOs. My skin became hot and flushed as I read, and I was even shaking a little. It was the most disturbing chapter to read in the whole book, and I wasn't prepared for it. Especially the mention of harm that came to her pets. Innocent animals being targeted to get at their owners is horrible stuff. So I was worked up after several hours of reading. By then it was early afternoon and my boyfriend was up from sleeping, and so I took a break from reading to talk and hang with him for a bit. My cat was standing at the front door meowing expectantly, hoping to be let outside to play and have some fun, as was the norm on nice warm days such as that…but I inexplicably felt like I couldn't get up from the chair I was in. Normally I would have gotten up right away and opened the door for her, but it was like I was being held in place. So I just sat there and smiled at my cat from across the room and told her that I'd let her out in a little while, just hang in there. I didn't question the fact that I didn't seem to be able to get up. When "something" is being done to us we normally just go with it, as if in a dream.

I sat there in the chair talking with Tom and bouncing ideas back and forth about the chapter I'd just been reading, and after about a minute I heard a noise outside. It sounded like bees. A lot of bees.

"What's that noise?" I said to him, frowning and listening.

"Motorcycles?" he said, not paying much attention. Occasionally there are dirt bikes on the trail in the woods outside our apartment.

"No, that's not motorcycles….that sounds like bees…." I was now able to get up since the veil of control had lifted, and I walked over to the living room window to see what was out there, concerned.

It was bees alright. And we soon realized it was a swarm, thousands of them, the most bees Tom and I had ever seen in our entire lives. They were also individually really huge for bees, the largest non-bumblebees I've ever seen. And they were right outside one of our living room windows, seeming to be quite agitated. The swirling mass spanned from our window up to our neighbor's second and third story windows above us, since we live in a three story building. The bees were all facing the building and windows, and many of them seemed as if they were actually trying to find a way into our window, hovering right up against the screen and flying around the edges, exploring for ways in. Seeing thousands of agitated bees out of nowhere hovering outside our window and hoping to get in, and the way it all sounded was alarming. To put it mildly. I'd just never seen or experienced anything like it. It was like something out of a movie. I had an immediate panic fear surge and began running around closing all the windows of the apartment. We have screens, but I wasn't taking any chances.

I resumed my spot next to Tom at the living room window where the bees were all concentrated, figuring they'd soon break it up and leave. Tom grabbed his digital camera and took video footage of it using the video function on his camera, which is good, so we have proof of this incident. http://www.montalk.net/bees (the video is grainy and shaky, and the window screen obscures a clear view, but you can still get the idea, enough to see the large mass of agitated – and very large sized – bees, aimed at our window. It was actually worse than how it appears in this video.) But one minute soon turned to five and then ten, and it became clear they weren't going anywhere anytime soon. They just kept going, and going, and going, thousands of crazy bees. And then I had the realization….

My cat had been pleading to go outside only a minute before they arrived. And her favorite spot where she always goes to first when she goes outside?

It was exactly where the swarm was now. Right outside that particular window, where she'll poke around and nibble on grass.

Something had held me in place as I sat at the chair, not allowing me to get up and let her outside. But if that something hadn't done that, then my cat would have walked right into what was to be an angry swarm. And me being me would have of course put myself right in the middle of it to get her out.

It would have been a very bad situation, and the realization of it coupled with the sound they were making and the way the swarm looked just made me panic even more. The fear was running away with me. So that's when I realized….Okay, this has to stop NOW. I'm NOT having this.

Without saying anything I turned from the window and went down the hall into the bathroom and closed the door, to block out the sound of the bees and get some quiet. Then, I did what I did for the black helicopters. I changed the radio dial. Controlled my breathing and did a frequency shift, dropping the fear and panic that had been surging through me, all the while repeatedly thinking NO. NO. NO.

Just fully believed that I had control over this situation, not "something else," and that it was going to stop NOW. Because I'm NOT having it.

I intuitively sensed that I didn't need to do it for long, just enough to literally, change the dial so to speak and sweep out all the fear and reject what was happening. I finished, opened my eyes, opened the bathroom door, and went back out to the living room feeling calm and in charge. I don't know why I believed that it would work for bees of all things, but I did, for whatever reason.

And within one minute of me emerging from the bathroom the bees were disbanding and clearing out. Only a couple of stragglers remained, and within another minute they were gone too. Amazing coincidence. All was quiet outside once again.

It may not seem like much of a big deal, but I've since talked to Barbara Bartholic on the phone and she relayed to me that the "angry swarm of bees" thing is one of those things that most people don't know about, but it's very real and it does happen. That surprised me to hear, I had no idea. Until she told me that I still believed that there was a chance that this incident was natural and explainable. But she's got a few alarming stories in her files of personal research involving abductees or people involved in abduction research having the swarm of angry bees appear outside their residence. So she was absolutely amazed to say the least that I'd had an encounter with them too…and in the middle of reading her book, no less. It was she who encouraged me to add this section into my book in fact after hearing the outcome of my experience, because she feels it's important for people to know that they can apparently gain the upper hand in these situations. You don't have to stand there and let it just happen, being powerless to stop it. Harassment, be it helicopters to anomalous swarms of angry bees or whatever it may be can be stopped. You just have to drop the fear, believe you have the ultimate control, and change the radio dial.

Paranoia

Another related topic to fear is paranoia. I've encountered people on the internet, or in emails, who displayed the figurative wild-eyed paranoia. There they are, relaying sincere stories about tapped phones, surveillance and monitoring, black helis, "agents in disguise as regular people," obsessing in circles about their weird events, and they're all worked up about it…completely amplifying the situation and ensuring that the harassment will never end. They've become a guaranteed fear/anger/paranoia all-you-can-eat buffet, and in the process they're locked into a downward spiral that may lead to their permanent derailment in life if they can't snap out of it. They haven't figured things out yet. You have to stop caring. You have to become nonchalant. As I bluntly told one guy on a message board - maybe too bluntly – "Calm the fuck down!"

You have to. You have to calm down, take a big breath and get a grip on yourself when it comes to this stuff. You have no choice but to learn how to be nonchalant. And I mean sincerely nonchalant. Don't pretend you don't care…just don't care. Period.

So, they're buzzing your apartment or house with a helicopter? Cool. Wave at them and take a few pictures. Then crank up some good music and dance around.

Your phones are tapped? That's good. Who cares. Give them something worth listening to. Have fun with it. When they've tapped into my conversations, namely, when my boyfriend has been back in Iowa visiting his family and we're talking long distance, we always say hi to them. "Hi! How ya doin'." Five seconds later we're onto other things and have totally forgotten about it. Are we going to be all weirded out about it for the rest of the conversation? Are we going to spiral down into low frequency fearful paranoia?? Hell no. It's not even worth remembering ten seconds after it happened, only because we've learned that nothing ends up coming out of it. They make their presence known…and then that's it. Nothing else. It's all side track circus diversion.

They're following you in black cars? Hmm. Tailing people in black cars sounds so, I don't know, 1970's doesn't it? It's a big mind game, because they know it will oooh, be spooky. My brother claimed that "they" would park across the street where he worked in Connecticut and just watch, and make their presence known. He got so pissed off about it that one day he went charging out the door, across the street and right up on them, screaming "WHAT?!? WHAT?!!? WHAT THE FUCK DO YOU WANT?!?!" I believe he began pounding on their car and kicking it, if I remember correctly. ;) They started the engine and took off. And that was the end of that. I've seen my brother in action firsthand, doing far worse things than that, so I don't doubt for a second he did this. He was absolutely crazy and fearless.

A good example to cite here would be the book "The Mothman Prophesies." When you get worked up and obsessive about stuff, freaked out, scared, the way people were in Mothman, then the entities seem to want to mess with you even more. It's like a scientist toying with a lab rat. When you stop caring, when you get to that point where you're willing to charge right at them and confront them and take them on, face to face, when you lose all fear, it all stops cold turkey. The abductions may still continue, but it's back to business, minus all the mind games.

One of the big bombs my brother dropped on me after I arrived in Portland, when he was first explaining to me what the situation was with our abductions and with reality in general, was to tell me that "They" could see and hear everything that I see and think…due to my implants. !

Hmm, I thought. I realize that most ordinary people would get terribly freaked out by this revelation. The idea of no privacy. The idea that everything you're doing and thinking and saying is being monitored, by unknown "Thems." Quite the paranoia-inducing predicament of voyeuristic intrusion. For normal people. But I'm not normal. So later that night when my brother went off to work, I danced naked in front of the big mirror that was there in his apartment. They're watching? They can see what I see through my eyes? Good. Let me stand in front of a mirror. Here's a nice show for you. ;) This is what I think about "them" monitoring my every thought, word, and action and seeing what I see: I don't care. Next!

In retrospect it was that mindset that helped save me. Had I spiraled down into fear, paranoia, anger, frustration, etc. I probably wouldn't be typing this right now.

On a closing note there's another facet of paranoia I want to get into: blaming every little thing that happens in life on the infamous invisible all powerful "THEMS!!!" Sometimes things happen – stuff breaks, people don't get your email or voicemail message, mishaps occur, etc., and the "THEMS!!!" are not behind it, believe it or not. I have encountered a few people in life though with the tendency to blame every little thing that happens on the "THEMS!" in this bug eyed, alarmist way, and to that I say….it's time to get a grip. While you might be a target, they're not micromanaging every little malfunction and mishap that occurs in life. I've gotten several emails from people who were convinced that the "THEMS!" were interfering with their email accounts, so sure that I wasn't going to get their email, or that if I didn't write back right away then it obviously meant that the "THEMS!" had struck again, causing interference to keep us from communicating. All of which just left me shaking my head. It's very off-putting to hear from people like that, stuck in that mindset. Another time when I was giving a talk/interview sort of deal to someone who's since become an acquaintance of my boyfriend and I, he was experiencing technical difficulty with the microphone and sound setup during our first talk. His immediate thoughts were that it was THEM! interfering. He was pretty convinced of it too….until the issue resolved itself. And we've never had another issue like that again while talking. It's because the problem wasn't "THEM!" interference, it was just normal technical difficulties while doing the initial set up. Those things do happen after all. I've also read of a guy on a message board (the same one who was freaking out about tapped phones, mentioned earlier) who was convinced that his hard drive was fried out by "THEM!" Well, sometimes computers die. It happens…a lot in fact. It doesn't mean "THEY!" did it.

The test for discerning what might be the handiwork of "them" is whether logical explanations can be ruled out. And ideally, I think we should always be looking for the logical explanations for things – not to the point of oblivious denial, but in a balanced and reasonable way. When an incident is over the top and unbelievable, then chances are it's probably "them." For the more mundane stuff that certainly seems suspicious, but you're not sure, it's a case of time will tell. Don't jump to immediate, paranoid conclusions. Keep a levelheaded mindset as you neutrally observe the entire situation from a detached viewpoint, gathering facts. And if it turns out to be "them," don't get freaked out by it. Keep your wits about you and take what you can learn from the incident in order to apply that knowledge in the future….and then move on with your life.

Death/injury threats and attempts

To me, the most disturbing facet of all concerning alien/MILAB abductions concerns prominent researchers and authors being physically maimed during abductions, instilled with disease programming, or flat out being taken out. Cancer seems to be a biggie. Alien/MILABS researcher and author Karla Turner died prematurely of breast cancer. And in the book "Barbara: The Story of a UFO Investigator" she has this to say about the cancer programming:

> "I've made a wide circle of friends all across the U.S.A., most of whom were somehow involved with UFOs. Too many of them are dead or dying. Cancer seems the favorite method of ridding the world of nosy busybodies who want to known who and what the aliens are and where they came from and why they come here. Cancer is the answer to all their questions in far too many cases.
> Puzzling, isn't it?
> Not to me.
> Almost every day since I started my UFO investigations I have suffered strange happenings, sickness, complete lack of privacy, pain, torture to my animals, accidents to my family members, loss of property, threats, and almost every other kind of punishment you could wish upon your worst enemy…"

When I first read this chapter of her book, titled "Punishment for Investigating" I got a bit worked up as mentioned earlier in this section. I found myself easily succumbing to the same fear that many of these researchers also experience. But I took a step back, conferred with my boyfriend (who happens to be the web host of a metaphysics and conspiracy site, and the author of numerous articles on said topics, so, he's a good person to talk to for some feedback), and I came to my senses, you could say. He reminded me of what I've been writing about and living for the past two years. And so at this point in the game, I'm going to take a bold step forward and loudly proclaim that in my opinion, it doesn't have to be this way. They don't have power over us. They can't kill you, nor can they give you cancer, or any other disease.

What's happening here with these researchers is a multi-fold scenario:

- The fear frequency. It can't be stated enough. Fear, fear, and more fear.

- Lack of intending for protection. And I'm not talking about begging to God, in the traditional sense of praying – I'm talking about rising up and connecting with the very sources that you would be praying to, changing your frequency, empowering yourself, as well as taking preventative spiritual measures…as I will expand on in a bit.
- Not taking control of the reigns and reversing what's been done to one's body. We dictate the health of our bodies – not outside forces, as I will elaborate on in a second.

What happens to these researchers is not what has to happen to you.

For starters, sometimes people will receive warnings before attacks are implemented. But too often they don't listen and take it seriously, or take any sort of precautionary spiritual measures. So what to do when that happens?

We should listen. And I don't mean in the sense of becoming afraid and giving them power. What I mean is simply acknowledge what's happening. Don't run from it – face it straight on. "Okay…There is an intuition/voice, etc. telling me this. The source obviously believes this bad thing will happen to me if I don't take heed." So… acknowledge it. When there were black helis hovering and circling over me, ignoring it and just sticking my head in the sand – which was my first reaction! – did absolutely nothing to stop it and make it go away. In fact, it only amplified it.

So rule #1: Don't ignore what's happening!

The next step would be to stop what you're doing, right then and there, and have a spiritual pow-wow. Connect to something higher and positive, whatever works for you. Jesus/the Christ Consciousness, God/the Creator Source, angels, spirit guides and protectors, your Higher Self, and so on. Everybody has their own thing, so, call on yours, whatever it may be. Connect to it, merge with it, become it…for more on this, see the next section, called "Praying for Intervention." You're empowering yourself and raising your frequency, rising above 3rd density victimhood. You're taking action.

So rule #2 – Connect to the higher powers and raise your frequency

In doing step 2, you're already turning the tables on the outcome of the situation. Someone wants to harass you or your family, with the threat of more in the future?? I don't think so. You've picked the wrong targets to harass.

So rule #3 – Say no.

It seems so simple. Almost too simple, I'm sure. But I've done it, and it worked. "No. I don't think so. You are NOT going to do this to me. No. I'm changing the radio dial. NO. NO. NO. NO. NO." Over and over and over, while simultaneously raising your frequency. You're saying no, rejecting their threats and harassment, dictating how your life will go, according to you, taking control of the situation. All the while as you factor in your spiritual pow-wow…connecting to your higher power help, and merging with that, aligning with what it represents. Calmly rejecting whatever scenario "they" had in mind for you.

You have to know that you have the ultimate say in what happens to you.

So rule #4 – Realize you are the one in charge of your life. Not them. And know it with everything you have.

You have to know it, and not second guess yourself. And know that when you're done doing this, and are walking away to go do the next thing, that things are already in the works to make sure you get your desired – protected, safe – outcome.

From what it seems to me, based on the research I've done, the all out negative, physical abusive harassment doesn't just erupt in a MILAB's life out of nowhere. Thrashings during an abduction, leaving one's body black and blue, disease, organ failure…cancer…death. You don't just go from "0" to all out craziness like that overnight. It starts with breaching your realm, and from there it builds. And builds. And builds. The longer you allow it to happen, the more you stick your head in the sand, the more fear, worry and paranoia you generate that feed it, then the stronger the foothold it can get into your reality.

But if you fearlessly face off with it right from the get-go, you WILL nip problems in the bud. There will only be so much they can do after that when you've lost all fear, you can feel your own empowerment and strength with total conviction, and are on permanent speed dial with your spiritual pow-wow source.

The other, very understandable, problem lies in the fact that most people will naturally be intimidated by these beings and military spooks. They seem so much bigger than us, so much stronger, so, so…evil. They're outside of time, whizzing around in UFOs, materializing and disappearing at will, abducting and implanting and monitoring, flying helis all around, tapping your phone. And as we all know, bigger, stronger and evil always equates to being invincible….right?

X! Hardly.

Everybody has their strong points, and their weaknesses. And that means "them" too.

Their weakness lies in the fact they overestimate themselves and believe that humans will continue to remain the victims we've demonstrated ourselves to be. They also seem to lack the spiritual connection we humans are able to tap into. Cold, cunning intelligence will only get you so far. You need the rest, which we have.

So now, why are they able to "give people cancer"? Are they all powerful God-like creatures with the ability to completely control and micromanage all other "lesser" beings at will?? And more importantly – WHO exactly is it that's "giving these people cancer"? Is it aliens?...or humans?

It's actually humans, apparently. Let's look at an interesting excerpt from the Barbara Bartholic book that directly pertains to this (bolded words my own emphasis):

> "…At about 4 a.m., I work to a voice saying, "You have been infected with cancer." The words were put into my brain through thought projection. "There is no hope for you. The program has already been installed. Cancer will kill you." The wordless projection felt human rather than alien. It was much too blunt to have come from alien sources. Too clumsy really to have come from ordinary human sources. I realized I must be hearing from a shadow military group. I went wild with fear…"

> "…I spoke to one of the ex-military men whom I knew to be psychic, then showed him the hand shaped bruise under my breast.

With a half smile he said, "They're giving you cancer, kiddo. Looks like they're doing away with you, girl. There's no hope for you."

"They who?"

"The Black Project Intelligence Operation."

I then showed him the bruise on my neck which appeared to contain a puncture mark.

"They don't want you speaking out any longer, Barbara," he said. He even seemed pleased to add with a twisted grin, "You're a goner."

What's going on here when we really pick this exchange apart?

The power of suggestion.

They – being the military black ops/hybrids/whatever they are - have tapped into a very basic understanding about the nature of the human mind. We are extremely suggestible and programmable. People are so sensitive to their environment and to the emotions and reactions and words of everybody around them that they will usually take most things to heart. We are reactive people. We get affected by words, both positive and negative.

If you were surrounded by people affirming positive things to you every day, for your entire life, imagine where you'd be and how far you could go. But we don't live in that world. We live in a world that both purposely and inadvertently tears us down in so many ways and cripples our potential. And it takes so little to do it, which is pretty unfortunate. But it's the nature of this world, and also what it is to be a highly emotive, reactive human being that responds so sensitively to this world.

The military spooks issuing cancer commands, and later reinforcing it in person, know all this and are utilizing another form of mind control. And by this point, we should all know how much they rely on their handy dandy mind control. They are all about bending the will of their targets to mold and shape them according to their mandates, usually through hypnosis and suggestive commands. So keep this in mind. And I don't care if the cancer command/suggestion is coming from human military spooks, or a seven foot tall Reptilian or Mantid. You are the one in control of your life and body, not them.

Period. And they're counting on you not ever realizing this, rising up, and reclaiming your power. And that's their weak spot.

There is however another facet to this – instilling somebody with cancer or various diseases by beaming particular frequencies at them, known as scalar weapons. When you do the research you'll turn up evidence that the military has developed frequency weapons designed to kill outright or inflict harm and disease on a target. This has apparently been employed on certain MILABS targets in order to shut them up if they've pursued certain sensitive topics. But I believe that even this is combatable. Why? Because again, they do not have the final say in what happens to you. You are the one responsible for what happens to you! They may beam their little disease-inflecting weapons on you, but you can combat it and reverse it. We all have that capability. Problems arise for those who don't realize that they can reverse the things being done to them, and instead, just lay down and die instead of rising up with an indignant mindset, ready to combat what's happening.

There's a book that I recommended on my web site that I want to take a moment to recommend here, because it's very fitting, but it's called "The Biology of Belief", by Dr. Bruce Lipton. Dr. Lipton was a cellular biologist and professor working for mainstream academia during his 20 year career. During the course of his work and research, he came to discover some startling things about the nature of the human body. It turns out that it's all about mind over matter. DNA and genetics don't dictate whether you get cancer, illnesses and diseases…your own thoughts, perceptions, beliefs and attitudes do. And it's too much to get into here for this write up, so all I can do is to just recommend this (well written, riveting, educational and down to earth) book as being one of the more important things you'll read, if you're not aware of this subject already. I'd put this concept to work for myself before ever reading Dr. Lipton's book or watching one of his presentations, thanks to another book entitled "The Holographic Universe", by Michael Talbot. I healed myself of various ailments through the sheer will of the mind, and literally, talking to the body parts in question that had the issues. I stopped a bladder infection, an ear/jaw issue that was rendering me unable to talk, a tooth problem, and other assorted things. Dr. Lipton's presentation and book served to help reaffirm and remind me of this knowledge that I'd already gleaned…but trust me…it can't be reinforced enough!

Once people realize this concept and can prove to themselves that it works, then suddenly the idea of a military spook commanding you to "get cancer" is absolutely absurd. Sure buddy. Whatever you say. ;) ;) eye roll, eye roll. Once again, they rely on our lack of knowledge and awareness.

I don't completely have my head in the clouds in the sense that I believe we can eliminate all abductions entirely through the above-mentioned practices. Things vary from person to person. But what I do know is that you have to at least fight back and take a stand, do something, because even eliminating 90% of your abductions and removing your fear has to be better than doing nothing at all and just going belly up. It's 90% less interference, programming and possible injury than you would have had otherwise – and - that in itself reduces later attempts to take you, seems to eliminate how far they can go with you when/if they do take you, and pushes back the realm breach.

Saving Yourself

Connecting to your higher powers

Following is a more detailed explanation of the concept mentioned in the previous section.

In reading the accounts of female MILAB targets, notably in the Karla Turner book "Taken," I couldn't help but notice the overwhelming feeling of fear that pervaded almost every woman's story. Fear of what was happening to them, fear of the dreaded impending abductions, fear of the strange paranormal occurrences that surrounded them. Fear, fear, fear, and more fear. A whole book of fear. Not only that, but several women mentioned begging and pleading to God to get their abductions to stop. But help never came. The abductions and harassment never stopped. Praying did absolutely nothing.

Why?

Because they were asking from power outside of themselves to come in and intervene and rescue them. In doing so, they became a helpless victim child, unable to help themselves.

As mentioned in the previous section, you have to realize your own power. You have to rise up and connect to the very power you're asking for help from. You have to become it. Whatever it may be. Jesus. Angels. God. Your Higher Self. You have to know that you have it within you, and that you can plug into it, access it, and align with it at any time. You're not going to cower in the corner asking for it to come and rescue you, the powerless victim. You're going to change your frequency right out of this 3rd density reality, and you're going to rise up and join forces with whomever you're calling upon. And this flies in the face of everything that mainstream religion would have us believe. Mainstream religion has conditioned the world's people that they are helpless victims that reside underneath a male God figure with a beard and flowing robes, perched on the clouds, holding a staff, judging everybody and only helping those that "He" deems worthy, the ones who live perfect, immaculate lives, while throwing lightening bolts and evil glares at all the rest of the heathens and damning them to hell. We've been conditioned to believe we are meek and powerless, and have no control over our lives and no say in anything that happens to us. "God" runs our lives. Not us. We're just God's little puppets on a string. And I'm here to say, this isn't true. But don't take my word for it. Discover for yourself what's possible and what you're capable of! The disinformation conditioning is designed to get you to believe that you're underneath higher powers so you won't realize that you ARE the higher powers. The higher power creator source is in everything, and you are already it.

Another tactic worth noting that seems to always work for those being harassed by abductors and neg entities is to command something to stop and leave in the name of Jesus Christ. "They" don't like that one AT all. People have reported being dropped like a hot potato the second they said that, myself included. Many reading this won't be Christian but it needs to be noted for those who are, and those who are willing to try it. It's highly effective, and worth trying if the reader hasn't already because it's not begging for intervention outside yourself - it's a form of aligning to a particular frequency and commanding that the negs have to leave your reality in the name of that team. Not to state the obvious, but a belief in and emotional connection to the idea of Jesus/the Christ Consciousness is also absolutely necessary for this to work. You don't want to be uttering empty words with nothing propelling them.

To wrap up this section, I want to leave off with the reminder that being fearful and cowering in the corner waiting for intervention is what's known as "Option 1."

Being a fearless but slightly crazy person who goes around confronting life's harassers with fists, baseball bats, pellet guns and even an arsenal of empty wine bottles, like my brother did, ;) is "Option 2." And while it's heading in the right direction because it's definitely fearless, do keep in mind that The Grid is all about giving us only two polar extreme opposite choices. Black, white. Right, wrong. Liberal, conservative. Violence, or passive victim. TPTB are all about eliminating options, and giving us two false dichotomies to choose from.

So maybe what we want is to consider "Option 3." The one hidden behind the curtain. The one where you acknowledge the things that are happening to you, but without fear, then change your personal radio frequency and again, rise right up out of this 3rd density reality to align with the very higher powers that you would call upon. You're not a passive victim/prey. Nor are you becoming a fearless, psychotic aggressor. (Because if left unchecked, that fearless and violent retaliatory aggression can become a slippery slope into the realm of predator.) So Option 3. That's what it seems to be all about.

Revoking illegal metaphysical contracts

As the reader is probably realizing by this point, anything that I can pass along for what a MILABs target can do to combat their situation in a pro-active, fearless way, then I'm all for it. Years back I was given information by someone concerning "revoking illegal metaphysical contracts," including those concerning MILABs. I'd never heard of that before and found the idea intriguing, and worth trying out. In original versions of this book I cited the name of the person who passed along this information and who gave permission for me to use the material in this book. And despite the falling out between us in mid-2007, the material remained in here for years because for me it's not about personal differences, but whether there's information that could possibly help people. That took precedence. But as of 2013 a request has been made to remove her material and name from this book, which I've obliged. However I'll still give the basic rundown of the concept.

The gist involves the idea of those pre-incarnational contracts that many new agers (and abductees in general) are being told humans have agreed to, mentioned back in Part I, and which is supposedly giving these alien/interdimensional races the "right" to abduct people. Thinking on this logically, how can a contract be valid when you can't even remember making it, and/or made it while existing in a different form, in another lifetime? And for all we know the entire thing is being made up in order to manipulate us. There's no way to prove any of it.

Then you have the subject of MILABs, and whatever supposed agreements targets may be coerced into making while in a mentally impaired state. Agreements made in such a state of mind have no validity, just as they don't in our "matrix" reality.

And that's where the idea of invoking Universal Law to revoke these contracts comes in. There is no one set type of wording or approach one has to adhere to, it's just the general idea one declaring that they revoke any and all illegal metaphysical contracts one may have been coerced into making throughout their lifetimes and across timelines, or which were made in another time and place as a different being under different circumstances. It's also important to include the idea of whatever contracts, real or false, that parents may have made that then extended down to their children by default, which absolutely has no validity.

Everybody's going to be different, so do and say what works for you when you revoke your contracts and ties. Ultimately what matters most is the intent. The mere fact that you are renouncing any known or possible ties or contracts with unsavory elements – whether legal or illegal - shows the universe where you currently stand, and proclaims where you are consciously trying to align yourself. That counts for a whole lot, actually.

"Karma," free will free-for-alls, and incarnational happenings

Tying into the idea of illegal metaphysical contracts is the idea of "karma" in relation to MILABs and targeting of people. Karma is a huge subject, and I don't intend to try to dissect it in depth in a book that's primarily geared towards MILABS and mind control. But since these are ideas I've had, I thought it may be worth throwing in there.

Karma is typically understood as a "cosmic rewards and punishment system," the idea of whatever you do comes back to you, both positive and negative, as the universe tries to keep things in balance. So you do good, good comes back to you. You do bad, bad comes back to you. The idea of karma not only applies to things one does in their present life, with immediate rewards and punishment coming their way due to everyday behaviors and actions, but it also applies to actions from past lives as well. So entire incarnations can be set up based on what sort of situations were going on in one's past lives, and the karma that was either accumulated or burned off in those existences. And that's the simplified explanation for it based on what the majority of people believe about the subject. But based on my own life experiences, observations, research and my own (admittedly meager) awareness of things, I don't actually believe at this point that it's as simple as that. Most people's understanding about karma is based on the assumptions that everybody walking among us is fully human and therefore, subject to the same laws as everybody else, as well as the assumption that it's an actual god being of sorts doling out this reward and punishment. And this is where I diverge.

There's every indication that some walking among the population are….not human, to put it bluntly. Either that, or the original soul spark has "exited stage left" you could say, and/or severely fragmented, leaving behind a body vehicle that's being piloted or shadowed by other "stuff." There's also the idea that not all souls are fully developed and individualized, being more along the lines of a 2nd density hive mind group soul lacking the higher centers, which is a bit of a controversial subject within metaphysical circles. But all of which means, the things these "people" do may not necessarily be met with the same karmic checks and balances as everybody else. And as far as an external being or source of some sort being responsible for doling out karma, I've had every indication that it's actually us doling it upon ourselves, based on what happens after we die. To understand that (or even believe in it, for that matter) one of course has to believe in and be familiar with the idea of a soul, and an afterlife, and what supposedly happens in those after and in-between resting states, subjects that are beyond the scope of this book. So basically this section applies only to those readers who do believe in these sorts of things and already have a familiarity with the topic. All others can either skip past it, or just read it for personal amusement. :D

Tying into this, for those who believe and are familiar, is the concept of incarnational life plans. While some people (usually New Agers) tend to feel that our lives are completely pre-planned before we arrive here, and every event is being micromanaged by our higher selves, I on the other hand hold a more moderate viewpoint. I'm thinking that at best, our life plans are only loosely set in stone. We may have ideas about things we'd like to do or accomplish, but the game plan can change according to unexpected twists and turns. I have my reasons for why I've concluded this, including having witnessed apparent "no-no's" that something higher didn't feel was its idea of a good time and so therefore un-did and/or reversed things, as well as attempts at intervention to try to prevent something that switched me onto a different timeline (I didn't listen though, so, the track switching still ended up happening) which in itself proves to me that free will violations and no-no's that weren't on the agenda can, and do, happen. But why is this?

Because apparently this place is a free will zone. Free will free-for-all might be more like it, which is why we see the entire spectrum represented among the population in terms of extreme good, and downright nasty evil, as well as real humans, and then the masqueraders and shell piloters. Anything goes here, and stuff's coming in from all over to get in on the action and get a piece of the 3rd density physicality pie. We have the free will to try to live out our incarnational plans (or to even change our plans) – and neg stuff has the free will to try to mess things up for people. Because that's just the nature of what this place is, and it's the risk we all take when incarnating here. Now, I don't advocate the victim mindset in the sense of never taking personal responsibility for anything, and always putting the blame on somebody else. But at the same time there's no doubt by this point that freewill violations can, and do happen to people.

Yet...........experience and research has also shown me that there are certain lines that can't be crossed in individual cases. Boundaries can be pushed in terms of freewill violations, but in some people's cases there are blocks in place for how far something can go. And there could be any number of reasons for this, I don't profess to fully know why or how it works. But it's the reason that certain things may not happen to a person that happens to others, and it's the reason that some people can't be killed before their time and why there will be repeated intervention to undo or rectify a no-no situation. Back in Part II there was an anecdote concerning my first overt abduction experience back in October of 2001, and the attempt at the overt follow up the next weekend. By the second one I'd changed my mind, as noted, and ran around trying to get away from the situation, yelling "NO!" in my mind. And as noted, such an overt attempt to take me never occurred again. After that it was all covert, under the radar, and for all I know there may be things that they weren't allowed to do even under those covert circumstances. The situation apparently needed my permission – my invite – to ramp up to an overt level like that, and I said no. And maybe that was all that was needed for freewill violations to back off. (That's why I have concern for naïve New Agers and fringers who think "alien" abductions are a great thing, and invite them in. They're giving permission to something they know nothing about and are most likely endangering themselves.) A simple NO, and declaring to the universe where you stand seems to actually count for something.

Now with those basics in mind we put the focus back on MILABS, alien abductees and other assorted targets out there in the world, many of whom are making claims about very bad things happening to them. What are we to make of this with regards to the Bigger Picture Understanding about karma, incarnational plans, and the idea of free will and illegal metaphysical contracts? What's going on here?

Looking at my own situation as an example, I tend to think there's a mix of self-imposed karma, along with the illegal metaphysical contracts, free will violations and personal vibes/frequency resonance, all rolled up together. A bit of a mish mash. It's not just past life karma kicking me in the butt. Nor is it just straight up free will violations. From what I've gathered from intuitive types who have told me things about supposed past lives (tending to corroborate each other) there seems to be a situation of having done some negative stuff in a "past" life (I put that in quotes since there apparently is no time ;)) of which I've supposedly kicked my own butt about ever since in every life after that. My intuitive Filipino boss Edwin from my hotel job years ago said to me one time that this life was supposed to have been a clean slate for me, I was supposed to give myself a fresh start, especially after my last life (I was surprised to hear him indirectly confirming my own suspicions about the nature of that particular life). Apparently that was supposed to have been it in terms of "dumping on myself" you could call it, but nooooooo, here I go again, beating myself up for things that happened long ago. So this life has supposedly just been more of the same in terms of that. Then he got emotional about it – in particular when he glimpsed my previous life and what happened there – and ran off. Even if he didn't know about the paranormal targeting and MILABs nonsense and was referring to other ways in which this life has been less than savory, there's no doubt the pattern would fit - allowing myself to be put into negative life situations, including clandestine under-the-radar happenings, where things could happen because on some level I still don't think I've paid enough for whatever supposedly has gone on in the "past."

A repeating theme I've come across in my past life research is the way in which souls get stuck in a frequency rut, which causes them to keep attracting in the same sorts of situations and themes, lifetime after lifetime until they finally become aware of it and learn to break out of it. (The MILABs, alien abductee, gangstalking, hyperdimensional targeting, etc. themes would be persecution and abuse you could say.) So basically there needs to be that awareness, and a core frequency shift to snap out of it. "Okay, yeah, uh, I think I'm done with this now. I've had enough. Time to break out of this pattern and try something new." o_O

Then you factor in one's personal vibes/frequency, which for me may have resonated with this whole thing due to not only conditioning I received in this life but past life guilt as well. And then there's the illegal metaphysical contracts deal. Possibly in a past life I got involved with some sort of contract that is trying to still follow me around to this day. In that sense it's illegal because I'm no longer in that other body, and I have no memory of whatever may have transpired, so, that's not exactly fair. But of course that's not how the Negs would see it, if that's the case. ;) Another avenue for illegal metaphysical contracts would tie into my dad. If I do indeed have pieces of him attached to me, and/or I'm attached to him in any way, thus allowing his "stuff" to become my "stuff," then that too is illegal, since I had no say in the bleed over and trickledown. Though on the other hand it was the risk I took when incarnating here, right? ;)

Indeed. So a realization like that does ultimately put the responsibility back in one's own hands.

It's all speculation though, and ultimately none of it may be true in terms of what I've been told about my supposed past lives. So I merely consider the possibilities, and meanwhile, keep myself open to new information. And for all I know in five years I'll have completely different ideas about the matter.

The reason I get into all this though is because the idea of victimization and MILABS (or alien abductee, targeted individuals, etc.) goes hand in hand. And no material, at least that I've ever come across, has even tried to delve into the metaphysical implications of why this would be happening to a person. Is it their own fault? Are they a 100% victim? Neither? Both? What's going on?? To answer these questions means an author has to delve into subjective areas that either not everybody believes in or has awareness of, so the issue is just straight up avoided, which I understand. And meanwhile the unspoken message is that people experiencing these sorts of things are 100% victims. Which may not be the case. The truth of the situation could actually be a bit of a tangled metaphysical mess. So this is why I put this in here. I feel it's important to address the higher metaphysical areas of these subjects and get people thinking in those ways if they weren't already. Not only that, but get people thinking in terms of multiple options, instead of making the mistake that so many people make of only black and white, polarized two choice dichotomies.

And how this relates to the idea of "saving yourself," since that's what this particular section is about after all, is that in coming to realize the multiple potentials for why a person finds themselves in this situation it can then lead them to start taking action to undo whatever may be going on. Whether it's awareness of the possibility of illegal metaphysical contracts, self imposed karmic butt kicking that's long overdue to end, conditioned personal vibe/frequency resonance that needs changing, and so on.

Thwarting psychic attacks

The term psychic attacks can refer to several things:

1. Deliberate mental targeting of an individual by a person or a group of people with the intention of harming them in some way;
2. Neg entities targeting a person to attach to them, harm them, and/or feed on them by draining their life force energy;
3. Having focused, negative thoughts about someone which inadvertently sends negative energy to that person.

Psychic attacks go by various names, and it's the same concept involved with dark occult black magic rituals when the intent is to harm somebody, or invoke demons and neg entities to do one's bidding.

So you may be wondering, why am I mentioning this in a book that concerns abductions? Namely because psychic attacks are often a major component involved with MILABS, and therefore makes it something worth mentioning. Plus the focus of this book has slightly evolved to become about multiple forms of targeting and harassment, of which neg entity problems would be included.

My boyfriend was once experiencing a psychic attack and decided to lie down, meditate, and trace it back to the source to discover who was behind it all. Surprisingly, he found himself popping in on three remote viewers working in an underground base whose job it was to hone in on him and mess with him. The remote viewers in turn received quite a jolt to suddenly find their target looking right back at them. !!! They weren't expecting that. So this is probably far more common than people realize: government-sponsored black ops remote viewers and psychic warriors being used to knock targets off balance in life, possibly to inflict harm, and maybe even get somebody taken out of the picture.

To give you the basic idea of what a psychic attack would feel like, following are some symptoms that I and others have experienced:

- Intense energy drain and lethargy, to the point where it's like your actual life force is being sucked out of you. It will often descend out of nowhere, which is another major clue, and render you practically unable to move or do anything other than crawl onto your bed and collapse into a heap.
- Nausea – again, usually appearing quite suddenly. Also migraines, flashing in the eyes, or skin feeling as if it's on fire.

- Feeling extremely negative and hateful. Non-affectionate and aloof towards loved ones to the point where you feel like you want them completely out of your presence...maybe even your life.
- Mental agitation for no logical reason, not tying into diet, sleep, or personal conflicts. The mind going going going, with amped up internal dialogue, repeating thought loops or all around negative mindset, and often times interfering with sleep.
- Inexplicable depression, despondency and even suicidal ideas – then sometimes followed immediately by thought forms in your head telling you to go kill yourself (or as I've experienced, being told to "go lay down and die, right now.")
- Nightmares and overall nasty themed/violent/upsetting dreams.

Many of these symptoms will usually go together as a package deal of sorts, and aren't to be confused with the flu or viral/bacterial sickness which can cause some of the same reactions. When I'm sick, I'll usually get the sinus discomfort, sore throat, and a fever that comes from inside the body and accompanied by chills, which is how I can differentiate between true sickness and then "something else." Also, sickness doesn't descend as rapidly as psychic attacks do. With a psychic attack you can literally be fine one minute, and then be overcome the next. And conversely, you can be under attack and then within seconds of intervention treatment - as quick as the snap of a finger - be fine again.

But don't despair…it can be combated. Of course, otherwise I wouldn't bother to mention it. The most important thing is to be able to recognize that this is happening in the first place. By learning that psychic attacks exist, and what some of the major symptoms are, you're already half way there. They count on people being ignorant of things, remember. That's how they're able to do what they do. So, it's all about becoming informed.

The next step is to pry the source of the attack off your body. Remove the muck, and sever the connection. What many people do is to lie down and then intend for the connection to break.

If you happen to have somebody nearby who's gifted with the art of hands-on healing, that's good too. In that case, the laying on of hands with the intent for the negs to leave, right now, can be enough to get the negs to fly right off your body. I've experienced that, so, I know it's real. In the meantime, either you, or both you and your healer, should be calling on positive protective forces. Or rather – merging with your personal positive forces, as I outlined earlier in this book. You'll be shifting your frequency up, connecting to your positive forces, aligning with what they represent. Then what I've also done is perform a mental "raking" over my body, envisioning myself scraping all the neg muck that may still be on me, rounding it all up, putting it in a figurative bag, sealing it up, coating it in the positive energy that I called on, and do a big ol' return to sender. Sending it back to whence it came...whoever/whatever the source may be. Some people like to try to trace things back to find the source behind it all. I haven't attempted something like that, but if you're curious and like answers, then go for it. By knowing who the source is, it could come in handy for offsetting any future attack attempts.

After that, when I'm on such a roll, I then like to expand my protective intent to include my cat, my boyfriend, the entire apartment we live in and even the cars we drive. :D Why not, go all the way and cover all bases. It can't hurt.

Back in 2000, I had to do a cleaning in my bedroom as well as self protection after being whomped one night by a nasty neg entity who physically went after me while I was awake in bed, vulnerable. I documented this on my website in the write up called "The Vortex." And in that case, I didn't call on protective forces or even align with them. I wasn't at a point in life where I was into that sort of thing. But what I did do (and which worked), was to connect to who I was as a kid. Connected to the innocence, purity, and the uncorrupted core of "who I am" as a person. So just remembering that, and connecting to it, was enough to raise my frequency sky high. Once I was able to elevate my frequency, from there I wrapped my neg entity in lotsa luv, envisioned sending him back through the portal from where he came, then envisioned the portal being sealed. So ultimately, that's what we're aiming for with these protective meditations - raising our frequency - whatever thoughts or methods can get us there. There is no one, across-the-board method. Just do whatever works for you. When you raise yourself up like that, the negs can no longer hold on to you, and the hooks detach.

So that's the general outline of how it's done, but everybody's going to have their own methods that are tailored to them and their personality and beliefs. Remember, we don't have to be helpless victims, but they count on us not realizing this. So I'd recommend doing research on websites, books and resources that get into more detail about neg entities, attachments, and psychic attacks if this is a subject that's of interest to you. A good starting place is the excellent book, "Practical Psychic Self Defense," by Robert Bruce.

I'm also going to be honest – I can't pretend that you'll only have to do this once, and then life will return to flowers and rainbows permanently afterwards. It most likely won't. If you've experienced a deliberate targeted attack on you once, and managed to sever the source's connection and do a return to sender, then chances are they'll try again. I've experienced this several times. On one occasion for instance I severed a psychic attack/entity attachment, feeling fantastic afterwards to the point where I was practically floating and had blasted my heart chakra wide open, only to find myself inexplicably edgy and grumpy/low frequency within 24 hours. BUT…I don't mention this to instill fear. My mindset is matter-of-fact, "it's just how it is" shoulder shrugging awareness. They don't just let people go without a fight after one thwarted attack. So if you do have to protect yourself against a psychic attack/attachment, do keep in mind that it most likely will return. All of which means, intend for continued protection in the future, take preventive measures to keep up your frequency, and eliminate avenues in your life that allow them to breach your realm again. If you're aware and prepared, then it won't be a big deal.

Dreamtime Manipulation

Negative "entities" interfering with awakening MILABS

This was another bit I had wanted to include in earlier drafts of this book but then held back. What changed my mind was an email exchange with a guy that I had come to know through a message board forum I participated in. He had signs and symptoms of having maybe had funny stuff happening to him in life, and I'd always been pretty positive that he was an abductee based on various things he'd mentioned in emails to me. An abductee of whom or what, I didn't know, but he seemed to have something going on. At one point we were emailing back and forth for several days discussing things, and during these several days where he was making some really important connections for the first time ever in his life (like the fact that his dad was Air Force intelligence…) really looking closely at things he hadn't noticed before, he coincidentally experienced negative entities visiting him in the dreamtime, harassing him.

I myself have also experienced supposed negative entities paying me visits during the dreamtime during times I was making important breakthroughs with regards to MILABS stuff, asking questions and probing for answers. Following is one example:

In the previous section I discussed the concept of citing Universal Law to revoke illegal metaphysical contracts. Well, despite feeling very excited about the subject upon first hearing it, I wasn't even able to get around to trying this until almost a full two months after the fact. I kept experiencing a feeling of negative discouragement, keeping me from trying it. Patiently I rode it out, knowing it couldn't last forever. Then two months later I could feel that the negative pressure had lifted, and I took the opportunity to squeeze in some revoking. For three nights in a row I did this as I drifted off to sleep. Well, on the third night, "something" came 'round to harass me while I slept. I found myself in a dream where I had a neg entity latched onto me. I became lucid and started connecting to the idea of the Christ Consciousness, raising my frequency, and even mentally crossing myself. That provoked it and I found this neg screaming and flailing about, causing my body to jerk all about as it put on quite the little drama queen histrionics display.

I got it off me and woke up in my bed. All was calm. Or was it? My cat was awake and began doing something very unusual. Silently she positioned herself with her back to me, facing out towards the rest of the room. She'd sit there for a bit, then get up and move to another side of my bed, calmly sitting, facing out towards my room. She continually moved around the three exposed sides of my bed, facing out towards the room…as if possibly facing off against "something" that was around, and maybe keeping it from getting near me on the bed…? I can only theorize.

This actually didn't spook me because by this point in my life I've been through a lot and have gotten a bit blasé. I lay there thinking about things, and then had the bright idea that since I'm awake and all in the middle of the night, and since I'm already on a roll with the whole revoking illegal metaphysical contracts thing, then why not see about removing any "pieces" of my dad that might be stuck to me, any part of him that might be linked to the MILABS stuff in my own life? It's a long story in itself, but pieces of people's souls can attach themselves to others, and there's evidence that I have a piece of my dad stuck to me, as well as his possible MILABS connection.

I laid there and began intending for any possible pieces to detach and return to sender. I was doing this for about one minute when I received the smack down I guess you could call it. I was "zapped" by something while I lay there in my bed. It was like a small jolt of electricity in my chest/ribs/heart area, and it jerked my body. Did NOT feel good is all I can say, EXTREMELY unpleasant icky feeling. Even more interesting is that it simultaneously made a "ping!" noise in the air above me. !! So we had physical sensation going on here AND audio. (I later attempted this again, but did not experience the zap, thankfully.)

I've had extensive paranormal experiences as mentioned earlier in this book when I lived in the paranormal apartment from hell nicknamed "The Vortex" back in California, with my brother. But this was my introduction into MILABS-related awakening harassment. When MILABS begin poking around in sensitive areas, asking questions and taking steps to remove it from their life, "stuff" may appear, kicking up a stink.

I also came across something similar noted in the book "Song of Freedom" by Judith K. Moore. Back during her childhood and teen years in the 50's and early 60s, Judith Moore was used in Satanic ritual abuse/government mind control experimentation projects. Her story is one of the few of this type that I truly believed as I was reading it (versus people who may be copycatting other women's stories…) but at the beginning stages of her realizations about what had gone on in her childhood, she experienced one of those creepy paranormal entity encounters:

> "One night, coming home, my friend and I were talking about the possibility of incest in our childhoods. As we parked for a few minutes to continue our conversation, something horrifying happened: a big, dark figure loomed at the car window, then disappeared. We screamed and drove away. I know that was an apparition from the darkest side of life, a visitor from the other side, the world where demons wander in search of their lost souls. I cannot > remember being so frightened in my life as I was those first days of identifying myself as a survivor." – page 15

Factoring in that message board buddy who had negative entity stuff coming around in the dream time during the first few days of truly questioning his childhood and his strange parents and their Air Force intelligence connections, along with my own stuff, and Ms. Moore's story, and it really makes me think there's something to this.

But what I'm wondering is, how exactly real are some of these entities?

A real entity from another realm most definitely can appear in this realm and interact with us, as is the case with Judith Moore's encounter, or even attach to us and try to attack us, which I experienced back in "The Vortex." But in the case of my message board buddy and myself, the fact that these recent encounters were only appearing to us while we slept really threw me for a loop. There's no doubt that something was amiss here…people don't just have dreams about neg entities wrestling them, trying to latch on and harass them after all. But again, in my own encounters, something about it didn't feel real. As with all confusing things, I just put it aside and figured answers will come. They usually do, if you're patient enough.

At this point I think I've gotten some answers. It happened one night later on after the above incident, where I found myself wrestling with another harassing neg in the "dream" state. We're wrestling, and I'm invoking the Christ Consciousness energy, raising my frequency, taking this thing on, whatever it is, but with no fear, just in the most nonchalant way imaginable due to that aforementioned blasé attitude about it all…and I suddenly become aware that I can hear human male voices talking faintly in the background of my mind, on what sounded like a radio. !!! I couldn't discern what they were saying though, it was like gibberish. The entity? I could handle that for some reason. But the idea of human male voices being involved in it all…THAT freaked me out. I panicked, saying to myself like a little kid, "WHY DO I ALWAYS HEAR HUMAN VOICES?!!" "Always" being a reference to other times this apparently happened during my dreams, but which I didn't consciously remember until that exact triggering moment. And then it turns out that my boyfriend had experienced the same identical thing – battling it out against a neg entity in the dreamtime, only to become aware of human male voices talking back and forth on a radio in the background of his mind.

But it gets better.

Later on after that particular incident I found myself fending off yet another neg entity during the dreamtime, feeling calm and nonchalant while invoking the Christ Consciousness vibration…and then a sarcastic human male voice "cuts in on the line" so to speak, sounding like late 20's, early 30's maybe, and jibes me with, "Why are you even using that technique anyway?? Jesus wasn't even real!" Just totally mocking the whole thing.

This time hearing the human male voices didn't faze me. So I'm wrestling with this entity, whatever "it" really is, and meanwhile I'm addressing Mr. Sarcasm off to the side in the same sort of voice one might use to explain something to a five year old. "It doesn't MATTER if he wasn't real…it's the IDEA BEHIND IT that counts." Like, come on guys, let's get on the same page here. Duh. ;) REALLY funny in retrospect.

I haven't experienced any more of these encounters with sarcastic "thems" inserting their peanut gallery commentary since calmly answering back as if they were five years old, being completely unfazed, and I suspect I never will again. Why? Because in my opinion, these dream time entities may often times have very human manufacturers behind them. I was already taking them on in a very blasé way, which in itself is awesome and shows spiritual progression, but having knowledge that they're not even real to begin with dissolves the game. Now, it doesn't mean all night time/astral harassers are being created by human abductors. But certainly some of them seem to be as I've since discovered, possibly in order to mess with the target, to discourage/scare them from pursuing answers, to sink them into a lowered fear frequency and send them spiraling off course, and so on. And so I pass this on for consideration.

Neg entity harassers may also be a component of the mind control programming itself, a program/compartmentalized personality fragment instilled within the psyche to deter the target if they begin waking up, asking questions and remembering things. This was an idea I first came across in the work of Fritz Springmeier.

And there's also the offhand possibility that these entities actually are real, and were sent in by these human "thems" who may be involved in occult ritual practices. But again, my experience has shown me that an entity who can only come after you while in the dreamtime/astral state, versus on your own turf in the physical realm when you're awake, is small potatoes and weak.

If these dreamtime entity harassments ever happens to you, then two of the biggest tips I can pass along is to be lucid and aware - that's important – and nonchalant and blasé. No fear, basically. Practice becoming more lucid and conscious in your waking life, as that will spill over into your sleep state. It's all about neutral awareness.

Dream Hijacking

"Dream hijacking" is exactly what it sounds like – a situation when one's dreams are "hijacked" into by an external source for the purposes of feeding on the negative energy that's generated by them and/or programming/rewiring the mind. They tend to center around deviant/perverse sexual situations where the dreamer is either directly involved, or watching from the sidelines, or fighting/aggressive situations where the dreamer is in an abnormally amped up state. Both sorts of situations provide a nice food source for astral/neg entity feeders, but in the case of the perverse/deviant sexual dreams it's in my opinion that they can also serve the purpose of programming a target via shock and trauma to the psyche. See Part II, and my experience with the "Programming Script" where I woke up with a hypnotic male voice trying to tell me, as if he was reading from a script, that certain (sexual) things had happened to me in life.

There's also the related "virtual reality dreamtime programming," discussed earlier in Part I, along with MILABS end times programming dreams, which is coming up in the next section. Both of those situations have a more human/military angle going on it seems, whereas the source for what I'm talking about here is a little more ambiguous. Could be MILABS in origin, could be so-called "alien" (be it Reptilians, Mantids, Grays, Nordics, etc.) could be opportunistic astral/neg entities who are just roaming about looking for a quick food source.

The way that I've been able to differentiate in my own situation between a normal dream where it may be your own subconscious generating the subject matter, versus external manipulation, is that in many situations a hijacked dream will start out normal and boring……but then it seems to take a sudden turn out in left field. And there may also be warning indicators, symbolisms and situations that start appearing in the dream to alert that something or someone has the crosshairs out, much in the same way dark clouds roll in before a storm. This is where lucid dream capability comes in handy, to become fully conscious in the dream and recognize what's going on around you, instead of just being swept up in it the way we normally tend to do. Another indicator I've experienced is that in one dream, I suddenly "felt" that I was being watched, and even voiced this out loud in the dream, looking around, confused, interrupting the flow of things. I kept questioning that I felt like I was being watched and that "I have an intuition for this sort of thing…" looking around, puzzled. Then suddenly in the dream there appeared a large camera "eye" sort of thing in my field of view, zooming in, verifying what I kept feeling. The dream ended after that. In my opinion I really was being watched, something was either plugging in to the dream or outright manipulating the creation of the dream in the first place. And I knew, I could feel it and it caused me to become lucid.

Dreams involving fighting or aggression or mind control programming is easy enough for me to talk about, but perverted sexual subjects was not so easy for me to discuss before, which is why I originally avoided talking about that particular aspect of dreamtime interference for the past four years since this book originally went up. However over the past few years I've encountered people in emails and on the 'net reporting the sexually perverse dreams that clearly seem manipulated, causing distress in the target, so it seemed to me that this was a subject that needed to be talked about. And now at this point in my life many things that used to bother me no longer do. So, here we are. And in a way I'm glad I held off on discussing it since I now have more insight into the subject, and more personal experience with it all than I did before.

Aggression

In my own case, a relatively recent example of a manipulated dream involved me and my boyfriend. In the dream I found myself screaming at him, full of amped up anger, but yet no reason was given. He stood before me as I raged on and on, getting worse and worse, until it escalated into me kicking him. Which is so ridiculous it's almost funny when you think about it. But at the point where I began actually kicking him in the shins I "came to" in the dream, because kicking him alarmed me, as this is my boyfriend and we don't have one of those drama/fighting relationships, at all. So it triggered my true, core self to snap out of it. I found myself looking around at my surroundings, puzzled, intuitively "feeling" things out, like, "WHAT in the…?!" Which in itself is amazing, to be able to do that. And that's when I felt that my so-called "anger" was really a tacked on overlay of sorts, like being dipped in mud, yet underneath things are clean. It wasn't me. I could clearly feel something else pressing down on me trying to pull my strings like a puppet, forcing me to "feel" something that wasn't really me. But as soon as I became aware of it and questioned it, looking around in the dream, it flew off, and I was back to feeling like myself. And the dream was over. But this connects into what I say elsewhere in this book, that if you have a strong sense of self, then "stuff" won't be able to get you to do things that go against who you are. Whether it's opportunistic astral feeders trying to manipulate you like a puppet, or negative programming.

Sexual

This one is a slightly bigger subject, as there are various types of artificial/manipulated sexual dream scenarios, and multiple possible agendas. I'll outline the ones that I'm familiar with from my own research:

Abnormal/deviant sexual themes. What sets these apart from a regular sex fantasy dream is that it's activity that the target would not normally engage in. A woman I once emailed with theorized that it's like "stuff" is trying to get people to accept deviant/perverse sorts of sexual behaviors as the norm. For what purpose, I don't know, although that certainly ties into what we're seeing within the mainstream media nowadays – same agenda. The envelope being pushed further and further every year, degradation that was previously taboo now being prominently featured in movies and on TV shows to desensitize the masses into accepting it as okay, etc. But I tend to think there's more to it than that. I suspect it's also a form of programming. The target may go along with things in the dream because they lack the strong mind to become lucid and put the brakes on things, and then afterwards they feel a mix of shame and humiliation and shock, which can do things to the psyche.

In this case what I've seen is that the dreams may center around such things as sex with family members – that's a big one. They REALLY seem to dig that one from what I'm getting, with siblings, or parents and children hooking up. They just try to…..slip it in there and hope you'll go along with things and not become lucid. Incest is considered one of the ultimate taboos in modern Western society, and so this is a major avenue for psyche trauma should somebody not become lucid and wind up following through with the act. And another oft reported theme is homosexuality, from what I've gathered. (On a side note, when you do the research into alien abductions the theme of homosexual relations seems to be a particular subject of interest to them, whatever these creatures are. Three male members of a fringe message board forum I used to belong to all mentioned that it seems they were born straight, and had interest in females, and no interest in males….until the age of sixteen. Then at sixteen it was like a switch was flipped for all of them, and they suddenly became "homosexual." It was weird to find even one person saying this, but three? And all three experiencing this at the same exact age? I met one of the guys in person, who was heavily immersed in the woo-woo and was most definitely an abductee, and I just felt like he wasn't really gay. But it seems something sure wanted him to think he was. He seemed to have conflict about it all too, which says something. There are natural born homosexuals who just always knew who they are from the time they were little, and then apparently there are these types who go to bed one day a straight person, and wake up the next as if a switch was thrown, and suddenly have overwhelming compulsions for the same sex. Makes me wonder how many other people out there have experienced this. In my opinion this ties together with the homosexual obsession displayed by "aliens" during abductions, and the invasive/hijacked homosexual themed dreams that targets report having. I think stuff is playing people like puppets, trying to turn them into something they wouldn't normally be if left to their own natural devises.) The late author Karla Turner noted in her book "Into the Fringe" (which I only just got around to reading in 2010) that these "aliens" are obsessed with human sexuality and reproduction.

Actual memory flashes? Then there are the memory flashes that might seem like dreams only because one remembers them while in bed, in a relaxed state, making it difficult to determine the nature of the imagery. Dream, or real memory? It can be tricky, but here's one of my own examples. Back around 1999 when I was 24, and living with my now ex boyfriend Steve in SoCal, I had a very puzzling "dream" one night that made no sense to me, and remained a mystery for years afterwards. I call it a "dream" only because it took place at night while I was in bed, yet I seemed to actually be awake. It was only a fragment, and wasn't at all like a dream. In fact, it was exactly like a memory flash, since dreams usually have a plot of some sort going on, whether coherent or hazy, and this one didn't. A real dream (for me) doesn't just focus on one specific thing, with nothing else surrounding it, appearing as a sudden "flash" in the mind the way this one did. But in this memory flash I was having sex with what I could sense was an older guy, seemed to have white hair, and who was wearing a long sleeve white button down corporate style dress shirt, but his pants were off. Just the bare bones undress to get to the job done. I never did see his face directly, I just saw his body underneath me, but did see the white shirt, and had the sense that he was much older than me, in his 50s or so, and got the impression of white hair. I had no attraction to him and felt absolutely nothing – emotional or physical. Yet I was "performing" as if I did, while feeling completely blank inside. And that was it. I came to suddenly in our bed in our apartment, wondering "WHAT THE HELL WAS THAT?!" It made no sense for me for several very important reasons: 1) Sex dreams were not the norm for me; 2) I didn't have a thing for middle aged guys, at all. Older white haired corporate/government looking dudes didn't do it for me. 3) The fact that I felt nothing, but was performing as if I did, with this totally blank mindset. It's the exact opposite of what a normal sex dream is all about. Just makes no sense. So everything about this memory flash snippet was opposite of what "should" be. Since this happened before I was even aware of such a thing as "MILABS" or my own status as an abductee it really made no sense.

Years later there was the strange experience with the white haired older corporate/government looking dude wearing the white shirt and gray pants at the Walgreens in Florida, mentioned in Part II, whose cologne registered with me subconsciously in a negative way, who made a sarcastic comment to me as he passed by and who seemed to be able to exert mental control over me, and I'd have to say that he's the closest match to the guy that I remember from that memory flash. And funny how in both cases, whether in the "dream" or in the "real" world, I never saw the guy's face. A bit interesting when you think about it. In both cases I was only aware that it was an older male, white hair, and the clothing style. The Walgreens incident took place only four years after the memory flash, not too long, so, it's entirely feasible it could have been the same guy. If not, then it was a guy very much like him. This incident also matches the other sudden "memory flash" mentioned in Part II where I suddenly found myself on a table under a light surrounded by human males, leaning in and leering and jeering and where I seemed to be unable to move, feeling alarmed. What's also interesting is that in my mind control research (I think it was in the work of Fritz Springmeier, as always) I've since turned up mention that mind controlled girls being used for sex are, for whatever reason, programmed to not feel pleasure while they do what they do. But they have to act as if they do. Why, I don't know. But it matches to a T what I saw in that flash snippet…..years before I read that. It wouldn't be the first…or second, third, fourth, etc…..thing that Fritz has written that matched up to things in my own situation.

I hesitated in putting this in here at all only because in a lot of ways it can be pretty embarrassing, and more so since I don't have proof for what it is. I have gone endlessly back and forth about it, and when I finally submit this revised and updated version to Lulu and let it go to press I'm still not going to be fully okay with it. For all I know it's just my own overactive, weirdo mind generating random nuttiness, and here I am trying to insinuate that it's evidence of having been taken under the radar, and "mind controlled!" to have sex with some guy I'd never normally do anything with and then pretend to feel something when I actually didn't. I know it can seem ridiculous, but considering the next memory snippet that happened in early 2002 it means there's enough circumstantial evidence for me to believe that it is what I think it is, for all the above mentioned reasons, so I'm going to put it out there and let the chips fall where they may.

Elsewhere in this book that I referenced a "dream"/memory flash experience in Portland, Oregon around December 2001-January 2002, and because of the nature of it I don't want to get into too many details. But I seemed to experience this flash in the morning as I was waking, which is why it may initially seem like a "dream," when in fact it was a memory snippet. But what I will confirm was that in this memory I was lying on a table on my left side under a bright light in a brightly lit room, I was either very drugged up or tranced out, and it seems that they were trying to see if they could get me to go along with a particular sexual situation with somebody else. The thing that I am proud about is that despite the drugging or trance state my core self would not be squelched. No amount of drugs (or hypnosis, but I think it was drugs based on how it felt) was working apparently. So I remember lying there, in a drugged or tranced haze in this bright room and saying faintly "nooooo……" not going along with it, not saying yes. My core self kept fighting to the surface. And that's all I remember.

As mentioned in Part II in the "Actual Memories" section, the thing that my few memory snippets all have in common is something attracting my totally focused, frightened or curious interest, independent of "their" direction, which then could have pulled me back up into conscious awareness just long enough to make an indelible stamp onto my brain that even the erasing techniques couldn't later eliminate. (Either that or in pulling me back into a more awakened, lucid state of mind it shifted my assemblage point, which is why I was later able to access the memory, once my assemblage point shifted back to that same position.) That seems to be the case here. My core self fought its way to the surface and kept saying no, and the situation itself that I was in was disturbing enough that it made that indelible stamp on my brain.

Months later in the fall of that year I was living in Fort Lauderdale and had an experience with a "voice from the radio" making reference to the subject matter of this particular "dream"/memory flash from Portland, where I could hear the smirk behind the words. This is elaborated on in Part II.

As the reader may have noticed, taking this section into account with other random things mentioned throughout this book, sexual harassment in various forms seems to be an ongoing theme for targets. Whether it's things being done to a vulnerable target during an abduction, or their dreams being hijacked. Again, not something I felt like talking about before. The first time I tried to write about this several years ago I got sloshed on alcohol in order to write it, wrote the section, but then changed my mind and deleted it all the next morning.

But I'm realizing that too many other MILAB/targets are all reporting the same exact sorts of stories. Males as well as females. So here we are. (This subject was also dealt with in David Jacobs' book "The Threat," concerning maladjusted hybrids, some of whom go on to sexually abuse and harass human female targets that are either assigned to them or who they know of through the abduction process.)

The only suggestion I can give anybody on the subject of hijacked dreams is to practice being as aware and awake as possible during your waking state, because this does translate over into your sleep state as I've learned firsthand. And it probably also translates over into situations where one is hypnotized and/or drugged. A strong awareness and sense of self will push back at attempts at squelching one's consciousness. During the winter of 2008-2008 I began practicing a daily spiritual/mental/emotional discipline routine, and of the many new things implemented into my life, mindfulness and being aware and awake and totally "in the moment" was one of them. (This was aided by the almost total removal of whatever little media I have left in my life. Although I wish I could say I kept up with that.) Quiet the mind, get focused, be "here" and aware and awake and clearheaded and focused. And an unexpected side effect of all this intention was that it spilled over into my dreams. I suddenly had a much stronger mind in my dreams, with the ability to question what was going on around me (to the point of questioning the bad dream logic plot holes that pepper most dreams, like, "heeeeey, wait a minute, that doesn't makes sense…." so that's amusing when you think about it….) and even managed to put the brakes on things and become lucid, if/when something thought it was going to plug in and hijack things. So I know for a fact from personal experience that this works. Become more alert when you're awake, and you will become more alert when you sleep.

You can also so some sort of internal affirmation to yourself before going to sleep, intending that astral feeders, remote psychic targeting, mind control programming, etc. won't be able to connect to you, that it's not compatible with you, etc. This way if it does, your subconscious will already be on alert, and thus, more apt to trigger you to wake up should something try to tap in. Also, Robert Bruce, author of "Practical Psychic Self Defense" gets into some detail about opportunistic astral feeders and sex dreams if anybody is curious to learn more about that subject and become armed with awareness.

End Times Programming

After the original printing of this book an interesting subject came up on a message board I used to participate in – the idea of apocalyptic doomsday end times scenarios seeming to be an actual need of mass consciousness, whether it's Biblical Revelations, the Rapture, the New Age's Shift/Ascension, 2012, Y2K, nuclear war, Planet X, global warming, ice age, pole flips, comet impacts, and so on. And right then as I read and posted to that thread I made the connection regarding my own apparent end times programming, received via my apparent MILABS involvement. I'd never thought much about it before then, and it certainly slipped my mind during the original writing of this book. Then, synchronistically within a day of making that post I came across a brand spanking new article by James Bartley outlining what of all things but…MILABS end time programming. Mr. Bartley's article was exciting for me to read as he was talking about the exact sort of programming I myself have experienced. There are endless uses for MILABS targets and many aspects of programming going on, but I think "end times cataclysm, NWO-lock down society" programming is SUCH a huge and important one that it warrants its own section in this book.

For me, this programming seems to have started back in 2000 when I was roommates with my brother in SoCal and apparently being abducted, but not aware of it. I knew he had the "thems" in his life, but I was in a state of oblivion about my own involvement. I was also not into reading conspiracy material at that point, and only had some basic understanding of the "NWO." But yet at this time I began experiencing what could be called obsessive thoughts regarding a future society in the midst of NWO lockdown/martial law. I'd have these vivid imaginings that would invade my thoughts where I could see tanks rolling down the streets of urban L.A., soldiers with guns drawn, patrolling, keeping everybody in line. Me living on the outside of this locked down society, on the lam, in the woods or in caves. These thoughts were so pervasive that as a writer I wanted to write some sort of story about it all, otherwise they were just burning up my brain with no outlet.

These thoughts continued into 2002 and 2003, an all-around state of mind that was expecting, prepared – and even hoping for – a cataclysm where I would be a survivalist living in a post-apocalyptic society, again, on the lam from oppressive forces trying to keep everybody in line. It's not really normal to want this sort of future society and to be thinking in that direction.

I began reading military-issued survival material, books on how to grow and forage your own food, make your own soap and candles. Not in a crazy, wild eyed way, but out of matter-of-fact, level headed interest. I created a "Bug Out Bag" loaded with all the necessary "on the lam" survival supplies in the event we ever needed to grab and go. There was a very vivid, realistic dream of a nuclear explosion I had one night where it was the end of the game for me. Vivid imaginings of walking along roads that no longer had cars on them, because most people weren't driving anymore – ducking off into the woods to dodge the police roadblocks set up along the way for interrogating the rare people who did still drive. More vivid imaginings of Washington D.C. being nuked because it's only 100 miles away from where we currently live. Just far enough away that we wouldn't be killed…but still within a major danger zone requiring us to leave, and then surviving in a society that would now be in chaos. Vivid imaginings of panhandling for food outside stores that I could no longer go into because I'd said no to the Big Brother microchipping, while others said yes. So now I had to be on the outside looking in. And lots of obsessive interest about the logistics of freight train hopping. Not normal! ;) I'd intently study passing freight trains and imagine running along and grabbing on, jumping off, jumping onto the top from a platform above, and even got tips from my dad who hopped trains as a kid – wear gloves, he suggested. And get a belt or rope of some sort to strap yourself in if you plan to be on one for awhile, so your hands and arms won't get fatigued having to hold on for so long.

But then, there was the mother of all "bein' on the lam and escaping the NWO" dreams: It was so vivid that it may as well have happened. The dream started with the U.S. being in a war situation and with martial law in effect; I then found myself traveling by foot across the country and was in a convenience store where people were gathered around the T.V. that hung from the ceiling, calmly watching the news reports. Then it culminated with me and several others illegally hitching rides on freight trains, trying to get cross country past closed state borders. We were somewhere out west, in open land with mountains in the distance and a piercing blue sunny sky. Military snipers dressed in black were set up intermittently along the tracks to pluck off people like me. I saw two sniper dudes about 30 feet (?) from the tracks, one of whom had his rifle up and firing. The one next to him had his rifle down, and just stood there squinting in the sun, letting the other guy take his shots at us. I could feel the bullets whizzing past me as I rounded the corner of the box car to get away and hang off the other side, and that's where the dream ended. My mentality through it all was calm and nonchalant. Just doing what needed to be done. No fear.

When I pendulum dowsed this back in 2005 I got that no, it was not a normal dream….and no, it wasn't a prophesy either, believe it or not. Much to my disappointment. Being wired to find this desirable and appealing means I was secretly hoping for such a fun and dangerous future! But alas, it apparently was not a premonition of a real situation waiting to happen. So what was it then? Well, what I got from my line of questioning was that yes, this was programming. Interesting, I thought, then put it aside and forgot all about it. Until now, after finding the James Bartley article, which outlines verbatim the fact that MILABS are being run through dream time and virtual reality training programs designed to prep them for some future locked down post-cataclysm society where they will be on the lam, traveling cross country [heading west], dodging the bad guys and having to forage for food and survive.

http://theuniversalseduction.com/bartley/8/milab-operations

It was more "almost falling out of my chair" when I read this. Just to see somebody describing my obsessive thoughts, ideas and dreams that I've been having over the past six years was amazing. So I guess the pendulum was right.

So how can you tell the difference between a premonition vision of one's future versus programming dreams and thoughts? Well, programming dreams are vivid. Too vivid. They're so real it was like you were there, and they seem to involve very negative scenarios. True premonition dreams seem to be a lot more subtle, even relying on symbolic imagery many times. And the thoughts and imaginings that I would have while awake didn't feel real. They were about outlandish scenarios and seemed to invade my mind, seeping in almost like a virus you could say, overtaking whatever I was thinking about before. They'd take on a life of their own, growing bigger and bigger like a snowball rolling down a mountain. True waking premonitions, as I've experienced them anyway, pertain to everyday real sorts of situations.

The next question then is Why? Why are MILABS being programmed with end times training scenarios, and being wired to desire this in their lives? James Bartley has his personal theory for what's going on here (bolded words my own emphasis):

> "…the obvious first candidates for survival are milab adults and especially milab children who have latent paraphysical abilities due to their unique DNA. From the standpoint of the military controllers, milabs and milab children are not negligible commodities. They are extremely valuable. Think about it: Even aliens, sometimes several different species of aliens are interested in these people. The aliens particularly the reptilians and the dracs, must have a good reason for being interested in these milabs."

On a side note: For some reading that it can be an ego wank to feel as if they're one of the "special chosen ones," due to special abilities and bloodlines, although I know that wasn't Mr. Bartley's intended purpose in mentioning it. This is just a word of caution for anybody who might make the mistake of falling for that potential ego pitfall, and it's something else I mention later on in this book.

With that said, I tend to agree with Mr. Bartley that this could be one particular reason for why some MILABS are being targeted for training. As always though, there's never just one reason for anything, and I'm thinking there may be more layers to peel back here:

1. Disinformation. If targets are programmed with very vivid, believable training scenarios and end times battle dreams it may reinforce and convince them that this really is our future. In turn, they help propagate this possibly mistaken belief out in the world - on the internet, with friends and family, and so on. So, a case of MILABS possibly being programmed to influence the masses.

2. Ensnaring/herding desirable targets onto a negative timelines. In getting a MILABS' attention focused obsessively on these negative future scenarios, the programmers are getting these selected desirable targets to inadvertently pull that negative probable future reality to themselves. Like attracts like, and your health, job, friends, and life happenings in general all reflect what you've pulled to yourself via your actions, thoughts, fears (or lack thereof), attitudes, and beliefs about what's possible and what isn't. The same goes for where you wind up in the future: Your attitudes, thoughts, actions and beliefs right now, as you read this, are shaping what upcoming timelines you find yourself on. And what if you're somebody with enormous potential on a future positive timeline? And you're being derailed/sabotaged into pulling yourself towards one that's very negative? Now there's a thought.

3. Encourage a Service-to-Self (STS) militia mindset. One of the MILABS women in Bartley's article was trained for how to grab a shopping cart and race her way through a supermarket to stockpile food and supplies in the event of an emergency, beating out everybody else. Yay for me, I have food, too bad for you, you're going to starve! being the mentality. Another part of this end times cataclysm programming involves what to do with those who can't keep up with you when you're on the lam and trying to survive. The programming tells you to drop them, and don't think twice. No matter who they are…even if they're a loved one. I've run up against thoughts like this, wondering hmm, what happens if someone I'm with is dragging me down, but it's someone I care about?? Then I read about this very same thing in Mr. Bartley's article. Drop 'em, says the programming. A completely self centered, "me me me!" STS survivalist mindset all the way. At first I could sort of understand that point of view although I wasn't comfortable with it, so just pushed it out of my head, not wanting to think about something like that. After awhile though things began changing in me, and that's when I said, You know, wait a minute here…!! I don't think I could do that. I don't want to do that! To me it was the whole false two choice dichotomy deal, where we're only given two black and white polar opposite extremes to choose from – either save yourself at the expense of others, or go down in flames with the lagwagons who will drag you down.

   X! How about neither. How about this entire "end times" programming debacle is bunk? Where's my third option here?

   ding ding ding! Once you begin questioning things and aligning with a positive path, the negative programming starts to fall apart at the seams and loses its appeal. You start to see it for what it is. They want MILABs to adopt a militia mentality, one where they've got guns and are willing to trample on anybody who gets in their way, and do what they have to do to survive. It's utterly ridiculous in my opinion and strips a person of their humanity. I'd starve to death before I carried on like that. Some people are already quite STS-oriented though, and/or are somebody with the potential to tip over in that direction, which is probably why they're targeted for this sort of programming. Keep in mind that "they" are always scoping for good STS recruits. ;) They can scan frequencies, see who has the dark side potential lurking within them, or those who are already full blown living it, making for an excellent new recruit. "Come, come work for us, you smart, psychic, STS bloodline you…!"

4. Go west…into a trap? Something else Mr. Bartley noted in his write up, which matched with my own "dream" experience, was that MILABS were being directed to go west in these "being on the lam and traveling cross country" scenarios. Go west…why? One idea is that the southwest is riddled with both above and below ground military bases that supposedly have both human and alien personnel, as well as having energy vortices galore. It is, or at least, has the potential to be, one huge higher density bleed through. So, "stuff" may be waiting to round up the arriving programmed recruits once they obey their programming and make the journey.

   Another idea may be purely survival-oriented, to get away from crowded urban areas with lots of people, police, guns, mayhem, and lockdown. Get to rural empty land away from people, and maybe have a better chance at survival.

   Related to that is the concept of Earth changes – it's been reported that many high up people in the know have been relocating to, and building homes in, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Arizona, because those areas will supposedly be safe in the event that things wind up underwater. So many New Agers, MILABS and militia survivalists in general have it in their heads to go west/southwest that it automatically begs to be questioned. It's extremely suspicious at best, and I just know that should I ever find myself in the middle of a society gone to pot, I'm going the opposite of where all the programmed people are being herded. Forget the wide open baking hot desert with no food, water and no place to hide….one would be way better off heading for densely forested areas where there's food and game, better access to water, shade, and means to make solid camouflaged shelters. And the farther inland and the closer to mountains, the better – just in case we're talking about Earth changes here where things have gone underwater. So, you know, just a thought. ;)

So we have four potential reasons off the top of my head as the reason for this programming. And yet all of it manages to cleverly skirt the "free will violation" kink in the works. Why? Because we as humans have self awareness and sentience, with the ability to think, question and analyze not only ourselves, but the world. And it's up to us to put those abilities to use. And if we don't…then oh well, not the programmers' faults. ;) So the negs' way of thinking goes. They like to exploit lack of awareness for all it's worth, get away with as much as they possibly can. The programmers aren't technically forcing the target onto that negative timeline…nor are they forcing them to live out that scenario if and when they do find themselves in it. The target still has freewill to stop and go, "WAIT a minute here…why am I having these obsessive thoughts? And why do I feel like these scenarios are appealing???" And they still have free will to override the programming that would have them going west, killing and trampling on others and doing what they have to do in order to survive, and coldly dropping those who can't keep up.

Once you can recognize that you have this sort of programming, and if you've decided that you don't like it, then take back control of the wheel. Declare that you're aligned with positive sources, ask for whatever help and protection they can offer, reject the obsessive thoughts about negative future survivalist "me me me!" scenarios that would invade your mind and dreams like a virus, and begin practicing all the small ways you can override those negative STS behavioral urges as they manifest in your every day life. You're basically re-programming yourself is what it boils down to, and aligning yourself with a different path…and a different probable future.

Physical and Spiritual Isolation of Targets

Isolation and relationship interference

When doing the research, I came across something interesting that really stood out for me – it was the concept of keeping a mind controlled subject isolated in life. As somebody whose life theme for the longest time seemed to be about isolation, I really sat up and took notice of this. It's important enough to be mentioned here in this piece only because isolation can be extremely detrimental for a programmed person. We need other (quality) people in our lives, if for no other reason than to help keep an eye on us and make sure we're doing okay.

Keeping a target isolated from friends and family, in a situation where they're living alone, means the programmers/abductors could have unlimited access and experience little if any interference with their activities. An isolated abduction/mind control target is one that has no checks and balances system in their life. Self awareness of their abduction situation certainly helps, but sometimes we just can't pull ourselves out of a programmed funk on our own, or might not be able to override certain programming urges. So having people around us that we can talk to or who can get us to snap out of it is necessary. And if they're people who are aware and on the level regarding abductions and mind control, then it's even better.

As mentioned, my own life had been nothing but a variation on the isolation theme for the longest time and I can't help but notice how this probably has enabled much of the abductions and programming that may not have happened otherwise. I have only met a handful of other people in life that have been as cut off as I have been from family and normal friendships and normal relationships, and who were as completely independent, starting at such a young age.

The excerpt that I came across which first brought this issue to light for me was the following, from "Secret, Don't Tell" by Carla Emery, discussing the case of Candy Jones, and which was actually an excerpt from another source being quoted:

> "The first stage of any mind–control program involves isolation from family and friends while the foundation programming is implanted. After that, a more permanent form of isolation is built in: talk frankly only with "us"; stay away from "them." Jensen and Burger also programmed in harsh prejudices for the purpose of alienating Candy from all definable groups of people. Jensen's flat "no-friends" rule dealt with the rest. The mind–controller wanted her to be a self-sufficient loner who avoided people and avoided relationships because Candy said "…most of them wouldn't understand what I was doing. I couldn't take the risk." (Bain, page 141.)

A self-sufficient loner who avoided people…that was (and to a degree still is) definitely me. By the time I was 19, my favorite phrase was "It's just me, myself and me in this world." There's nobody else in this world that can help me. I'm on my own. I have no safety net in life. I have to take care of myself, because nobody else will…and nobody else cares. That was my philosophy, for years. It developed for a good reason, because events had conspired to make this the case. Also, considering that my entire immediate family has major signs of being tampered with, it's probably no accident that things went this way.

Another excerpt from "Secret, Don't Tell":

> "At their wedding, [Candy Jones'] long years of CIA-conditioned isolation were obvious. Long John had forty guests. Candy had none, except her mother and the attendant who looked after her. Donald Bain, Nebel's friend and biographer, noticed that, and thought it strange." – page 72.

That would so be me in the event I were to ever get married. Except I wouldn't even have my mother. It would just be me, myself and me. I used to say to myself that even if I did ever decide to get married for some reason….how I can have a wedding when there's nobody to invite! And the same goes for death…because there were long stretches in my life where I was living alone, with no family around, no boyfriend/husband, and no friends or acquaintances (or else renting a room from strangers who also wouldn't realize right away that I was gone or miss me). I realized it would be a precarious situation were I to die in a car crash or something. Nobody would know I was gone, let alone miss me. There would be nobody to claim the body. So, better make sure I don't die prematurely!

There's a lot to say about my life situation but in general it's very unusual. As far as I can remember I've never met any other person in my age group who has been in my boat in terms of being that alone in life. It may sound pathetic or lame, though it doesn't bother me, but I'm in my 30s and other than my boyfriend (who thankfully is a match for me in all the ways that matter) I don't have any actual personal friends that I hang with, and there's zero family in the picture. It doesn't mean I look to my boyfriend to solely provide everything for me, being clingy and dependent, that's definitely not my personality type either. I'm capable of doing my own thing and amuse myself in life. But it's to the point where I feel like I can't be around people unless they're on the level about things, even a little bit…..which pretty much nobody is…..which therefore means, no friends, because for me it's impossible to tolerate anything other than that. Things did not start out that way. I started out as a friendly "social butterfly" chatterbox without a care in the world, with a large group of friends both at home and at school when I was a little kid living in Massachusetts. Due to years of life events and personality rewiring however, which really kicked in after age seven when my parents moved us to a small semi-rural town in eastern Connecticut, everything changed. It only took nine years, but at the end of those nine years I was barely recognizable as the being same kid I started out as. Now there's a perpetual feeling of "I don't belong" and "I don't fit in" and "being on the outside looking in." It's impossible to undo by this point. I can get along fine with people when I have to, such as at work, which for me oddly enough has almost always entailed positions with a large amount of public interaction. So I'm not socially inept. But it drains me, and I have a tendency to avoid unnecessary social interactions. Forget being in the spotlight. If there's a way I can duck out of something unnoticed, just to avoid having to talk with people, even with people I know, I will. Unless it's somebody who "grabs me"…somebody who's real, who I may even experience some sort of connection with, which has definitely happened with random people I've met in life over the years. I know them when I cross paths with them. But they're so few and far between.

In the case of Candy Jones, it was her CIA controllers giving her programming commands to ensure that she didn't pursue friendships and relationships and kept herself isolated from others in life. But it's not always human government agent "thems" that do this in my opinion. My theory is that this is something that's probably implemented more often by inter/hyperdimensional "stuff." A form of "interference" designed to redirect the life path of a person. And it would be done not only through abduction programming, but through manipulation of the people around the target, since that's what higher realm entities are capable of. Put the spotlight on both the target and those closest to them, working everybody equally until something eventually gives. Friendship and relationship interference go hand in hand with being an abductee. Those times you do find yourself connecting to someone in life may be met with all sorts of bizarre happenings to keep you apart and derail the situation. Author Eve Lorgen wrote about this in depth in her book "The Alien Love Bite – Alien Interference in Human Love Relationships." http://www.alienlovebite.com/ In the case of the alien love bite scenario, the purpose seems to be twofold – to interfere for the sake of keeping people apart, and also to feed on the extreme emotions that would be involved in such love relationships gone awry. I also wrote an article about the general subject of hyperdimensional interference, including within relationships: http://in2worlds.net/interference-new-article-august-8-2009

Isolating a high mark target is imperative if you plan to be targeting them on a regular basis – get them alone so they can be taken more frequently, and without as much interference. It's also important if you just want to take them out of the picture in general. Get them spiraling down into loneliness, alienation and despondency…that should do the trick, so they think. It's a very successful tactic, and seems to work on most…but it's never foolproof. Especially if the people involved have awareness about these sorts of things. Awareness is everything.

"There is no God"/severing spiritual connections

We've all heard of people who've been programmed into becoming religious fanatics, aka bible thumpers, and the even more extreme example of brainwashed religious cults, but what about the flip side of this? Cutting a target off from spirituality? I've seen this mentioned here and there in my research, with regards to getting a target to believe that either God hates them, or that there simply is no God. If a target believes that God hates them, or if you can get the target angry at God, then according to mind control author Fritz Springmeier, "You can get that person to commit any sin." And if a target believes there is no God, or anything spiritual for that matter, then there's no greater spiritual hope for them to cling to, nothing to get them through trying times…nothing to fuel self-empowerment when they're being worked over by their handlers and programming. All of which is mucho bueno when trying to isolate and destroy a target, or program them to commit criminal acts in the vein of agent provocateur work, assassinations, terrorist activity, and so on.

Spirituality often equals hope and empowerment. It can be a lifeline, and a weapon against the negs for any target who would try to fight back and resist what's happening to them. "They" do not want that.

I found this particular aspect of MILABS to be interesting, only because I believe that I experienced a variation on this, which can't be dismissed. My aforementioned ex with the mind compartmentalization and the NSA dad, was also a diehard Atheist and skeptic who seemed bent on getting me to convert to Atheism, to the point where it became apparent at the end of the relationship that it had been a mission of sorts for him. Steve's philosophy, which he stated…and stated often…was that "There is no soul, we're all just pieces of meat, when we die it's "lights out", that's it, there is no God, there is no afterlife, we're all just pieces of meat, when we die it's "lights out", that's it, there is no……" You get the idea.

What Steve had was a script. A glossy eyed, trance-like script that he would endlessly repeat during the three years we were together, and the year and a half as roommates before that, in order to convert me to being Atheist, and then reinforce the mindset. He was also a diehard skeptic, and refused to believe in anything to do with psychic abilities, the paranormal, and so on, and made sure to work on me to try to get me to stop believing in that stuff as well. The total irony was, he had past experiences with the paranormal, and could even read minds, but refused to admit what he was doing. He turned his back and adamantly refused to acknowledge any of it, to the point of extreme, illogical absurdity.

All of this became apparent to me by the end of the relationship, after I'd already began to notice the multiple personas issue. I was standing before him in the hallway one night, hearing "THE SCRIPT" for the millionth time in almost five years, and I noticed for the first time his completely glazed over eyes that weren't even seeing me as he spoke. And his robotic, trance-like state that seemed to be rehashing something that he had memorized. I had the clear and distinct thought of "He's trying so hard to convince me that there is no God and no soul…..then it must mean…there is. He's completely full of shit.**"

And I silently walked around him and left him standing there in the hall, talking to the wall……quite literally. He was so immersed in his light trance and "There is no God, there is no soul, we're all just pieces of meat…" script regurgitation that he didn't even realize I'd sidestepped him and walked away until a few seconds after. Then he slowly trailed off, seeming confused as he just stood there in the hall by himself, unsure what to do with this new turn of events. I'd never done that before. I always listened intently to anything he had to say. Not anymore. The relationship was on its last leg, taking its final dying breaths and so I was now at the point where I'd either walk away, like right then, or just flat out tell him to "fuck off" whenever he'd start in with various b.s. After we'd officially broken up, the only thing he could come up with to complain about, his one big peeve about me, was "…And you were never really an Atheist." That was it. His face twisted with disdain when he said that, surprising me, due to his usual emotional neutrality about all things. He seemed to feel genuine disgust for this supposed indiscretion of mine! (And lest I sound like I'm coming across as a victim – I definitely take full responsibility for any people who've been in my life and the choices I've made in keeping them around long after they hit their expiration date. Programming or not, we still have free will and the ability to pull ourselves out of a situation. So just to clarify that I don't present these personalized examples featuring obnoxious people in order to paint myself as a sympathetic victim.)

It was all very puzzling for me at the time, like…."huh?" I of course did not know about MILABs, mind control, nor my own status as an abductee at that time, but in retrospect it seems that he could very well have been taken and programmed by "something else" and used to work me over. And considering his family's background and his multiple personas issues it makes him all the more suspect for such doings.

Cutting targets off from spirituality seems to be a very real facet of it all, because spirituality, along with a connection to higher positive forces and having the spiritual bigger picture, is our ultimate weapon. I've learned that from firsthand experience. Once I became attuned to the idea of my higher self and positive forces everything changed in my situation. That's when the tables started to turn. Spirituality is going to take different forms for everybody, it doesn't necessarily involve the worship of deities, and there is no right or wrong aspect of it. So long as one is tuned into positive ideals that's all that ultimately matters, and I can definitely say that negative stuff does seem to want to eliminate that. So this is something to be mindful of.

Sabotaging Programming Commands and Manipulated Life Situations

In Part II I mentioned several instances of waking up and catching "them" in the middle of programming me while I slept. "You will only see what's wrong and ugly in the world!!" and so on. Imagine if I hadn't woken up and caught them in mid-sentence…then what?? Even with the awareness of this command, I still found myself slipping into that mindset during the time period when this occurred. It was a slump I had to pull myself out of. Think of how many people may be receiving these types of commands while they sleep and don't catch them, or, during abductions and don't remember them. How many others have I received that I didn't catch? How many are planted within my subconscious as I type this? For that reason, if you're an abductee you have to take extra measures to really monitor yourself in life. Every day, and throughout each day, pay attention to your moods, thoughts, urges, feelings, and overall emotional state in general, and note any changes and subtle shifts as they occur, and try to pinpoint what may have brought about the change in attitude. And if you can't pinpoint the source, and it seems to have descended on you out of nowhere, then it could very well be a programming command kicking in (or just an all around hyperdimensional/psychic attack, a related concept mentioned earlier in this book). You never know. My boyfriend and I have gotten good at practicing this self-monitoring and analysis – a form of stalking, as it's termed by the Toltecs - that it's second nature for us now, although I still definitely slip up, falling victim to negative mood shifts and playing right into it. But I've definitely gotten better. It makes me wonder though how I ever got by in life before without monitoring myself. Scary to think about. But it's why most of what happened to me in my 20's even happened - lack of awareness, not paying attention, not noticing things, not analyzing and questioning all my thoughts, urges and actions.

A good potential example would be something that occurred to me in September of 2005, in the middle of the afternoon while at a temp job. The day was warm, bright and sunny and calm, with a beautiful blue sky and green trees, as I sat in the office I was using at the time. My life was great in every respect – living with Tom, who is a great boyfriend, working, making money at a temp job that to this day was probably the best temp gig I've ever had. Yet there I sat in this office……with the most overwhelming urge to run away from my life. Abandon everything and just…..run. RIGHT NOW. To where, I don't know, to do what, I don't know, but the urge was powerful. RUN!!!!!!!! LEAVE MY LIFE!!!!!!!! RIGHT NOW!!!!! GET IN MY CAR AND WALK OUT ON MY JOB AND JUST GO!!!!!! Leave my kitty behind with my boyfriend Tom, and abandon both of them back in our apartment here in Virginia and just….go.

The urge was so powerful, and yet so completely illogical and nonsensical that my mind was in a tug of war. So in the end I just sat glued to my swivel chair, my fingers gripping into the chair, just staring blankly ahead like a deer caught in the headlights, completely motionless. If somebody had walked into my office right at that moment it would have been a really odd sight. Glad nobody did. I wasn't moving, but my mind was very busy with this back and forth tug of war. It was very intense, and took about ten minutes to ride this whole thing out. And in the end, after not acting on this crazy urge from nowhere and sitting firm in my seat, it slowly subsided, and I was able to slowly return to my job duties.

This wouldn't be the only time I've had a strong urge to run away from my life, leave Tom, abandon Kitty and just run, but it was the most notable since it occurred in the middle of a work day, causing me to have to ride it out in an office with the potential for other people to witness me acting strangely. I've thankfully never acted on any of these urges. For that reason they don't seem to happen anymore. I've proven to be too strong a logical thinker, not a blind reactor.

In retrospect, these urges seemed to be attempts at preemptive timeline manipulation. I hadn't yet written this book or formulated my website in September of 2005…but it was coming up right around the corner. I purchased the domain name "in2worlds.net" one month after this incident, and began furiously finishing up the content of my website as of December, which I elaborate on in more detail in the "About" section on my website. And then began writing this book in March of 2006. And that particular temp gig that the programming wanted me to abandon wound up giving me a lot of tools that I would need for how to format this book in a nice way. So yeah, some big things were coming up within a matter of months. Hence, the intense urge to run away from my life and change the course of how everything would go, just prior to it all.

It's basically a battle of retaining your sentience and free will. It's easy to slip and get lazy and to allow life to drag you around by the nose, so you don't have to think. The zoo is designed to suck our energy at every turn, which in turn contributes to getting lazy if we're not aware and don't take precautions. This loss of energy is our weak point, the way that they can get in and chip away at our lives. So if you're an abductee, you have to find the energy to be able to stalk yourself and pay attention, and take back control over your own life. It becomes a matter of thinking before doing, every day, with everything. Is that thought really your own? Is that urge you have really the optimal thing to be doing right now? Is it logical? Does it make any sense? Are you able to pause, breathe, detach, and foresee what the negative consequences would be from doing this? If so can you now resist acting on these urges (which most likely aren't even your own) and go down a different path…one based on sentience and free will?

Another angle to this is having a strong sense of self. Too many people in this world are lost, and lack the ability for self-generated esteem. They look to others to make them whole, and to give them an identity and purpose. But if you have a strong sense of self, then you don't need to look to others for your esteem and identity, you will have an automatic innate sense of "who you are"……which can also cause abduction programming to run afoul. If you're instilled with a negative, icky programming command that goes against the core foundation of who you are you'll be more likely to resist it if you have that strong sense of self. The ego tends to get a bad rap in spiritual practices, but it serves a valuable purpose in this case. (I think much of what passes for New Age teachings, including their phobia about the ego, is designed to turn people into passive, compliant, non-thinking marshmallows because it serves an agenda. But, that's a whole side topic!)

Strong intuition coupled with a sharp mind that has analytical capabilities, pays attention and asks questions is a deadly combination. Intuition gives you a head's up advantage for seeing who's who and what's what beyond the borders of physical reality, while a strong mind means you'll question things, won't get played for gullible or taken for a ride in life.

When I was first roommating in California with my brother, a mind controlled target, one of the things he scorned me for was this very ability to think and pick things apart and critically analyze everything. At the time he scorned me for this I was unaware of my own abductee status and so I was surprised at the level of contempt for me that drove his words, like, Wow…what's THAT all about?! I pick things apart and scrutinize everything too much?? What's it to him, you know? Why does he care? Then later in Portland I was told repeatedly by my brother that I needed to stop thinking about things so much…but now the new angle he used was that it had to do with tricking the "matrix" program of reality. (I get into this particular bit in a previous section.)

Thinking is not good for "them" which means it's a must for us. They NEED people who don't think, and are drifting along in a dream state, on dopey autopilot. I cannot emphasize this enough. This is the reason for why television and entertainment has become such a dominant force in our society, and why programs and commercials have gotten so hypnotic and nonsensical. It's a mass attempt to lull the population into a dream-like trance stupor. So for us we must then adopt the counter-tactic of awareness and personal stalking. Thinking, questioning, analyzing. You may never be able to stop the abductions, and you may never be able to fix or completely undo the mind control programming. But what you can do is be as sentient as possible at all times. Make sure you're not just reacting to programming and manipulative urges that are not in your best interest. With every sabotaging programming command that you override through self-awareness, the closer you get to personal freedom.

Or, to quote the fortune cookie that my boyfriend once "coincidentally" received:

"You control your response, and therein lies your freedom."

Urges to move to certain locations

Related to this is how many people who are involved in the "weird and the strange" will have urges to up and move to various locations. Pay attention to the locations that people mention – so often it's the southwest. New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and Utah. I myself had the persistent urge to move to the southwest for several years back in the 90s, after visiting there on several road trips. Other places I later had the overwhelming urge to relocate to were North Carolina – specifically, Asheville, or the surrounding region, and northern California.

While some urges to relocate may be in your best interest and coming from your higher good, the fact is, if you're an abductee then you still have to question everything. It turns out that the places I've had urges to move to were areas that were known for their underground base/UFO activity. Asheville, North Carolina - supposedly - has an underground base, strong energy vortices and UFO activity galore, as well as a verifiable satanic occult issue happening, although I never knew that back when I first had the intense urge to move there. Glad I did the research before I just up and moved. And northern California is a hotbed of weirdness, with Mt. Shasta and its New Age scene, Bohemian Grove, various military installations, and all the rest. And most reading this are probably well aware of the situation in the southwest with all its bases, both above and below ground, huge military presence, countless UFO sightings, energy vortices, and all around weirdness that draws in the New Agers like a magnet.

My later move to Florida also seems as if it could have been a manipulated deal. I originally wanted to move there in '94, but changed my mind due to something that was said to me by a coworker. Then in early 2001 in Portland while hanging out with Joe one night we were pondering where we would live next. Going back to SoCal was out of the question for both of us for different reasons, so, where else should we go? I'd completely forgotten all about Florida by this point in my life and hadn't mentioned it to Joe. But nevertheless, Joe looked at me with that weird look he'd get, the glint in the eyes with the strange knowing smirk, and simply said "Florida." I happened to be holding a USA Today in my hand when he said it and glanced at the national weather/temperature map they have, and saw that the southern tip of Florida was one of the only areas in the continental U.S., next to south Texas, where the temperature colors were yellow and orange. Everywhere else was green, blue and purple. So hot and tropical Florida it was. And why did I later pick "Fort Lauderdale" specifically? I have no idea. It was just…in my head. Only after moving there and going through all my strangeness from 2002-2004 did I later learn that other female MILABS experienced weirdness in south Florida, including Fort Lauderdale specifically, as well. I had no idea until after writing the original version of this book.

A related concept is getting the urge to take a sudden trip to some place out of nowhere, for no logical reason. I've also experienced this, as outlined in Part II, with regards to my spur of the moment road trip to Flagstaff/Sedona, Arizona, from California. If you keep tabs on yourself then this shouldn't be an issue. It becomes an issue when again, you lack awareness, and don't stalk yourself. If you're an abductee, and you have an urge to just drive off to some far away place – alone – and you can't track down where this urge may have come from, then maybe it's best to hold off on going. It may not be in your best interest.

Manipulated jobs?

Here and there in this book I've made reference to working for a brief period of time at what I called "the Illuminati hotel." In retrospect my brief time there seems to have been an orchestrated set up from the get-go. If I hadn't worked there then the idea of manipulated jobs, and things taken to that level, probably wouldn't have even occurred to me. But if one can have manipulated relationships and moves, then why not jobs, is how I now look at it. And I realize that all this can sound a bit…paranoid. But there were indications that something very unnatural was amiss with me seeking – and then getting - this job, so I use this story as a good example.

We had just moved to Virginia in September of 2004, and I began temping with one of the local temp agencies starting in October. I worked at a couple of assignments, then found myself assigned to this one particular company starting in December. I soon loathed the assignment, as it was all wrong and a total joke. It culminated with me giving two weeks notice. The minimum requirement with my agency was three days notice if one wanted to be pulled off an assignment, but I wanted to be nice and give them enough time to find a suitable replacement. Plus it made me look really good to my temp agency. :D It guaranteed that they'd continue to call me for work. But one afternoon during those two weeks notice my supervisor at the job assignment I was leaving needed me to find a room at one of the nicer end hotels in the area for an incoming company employee, and that's where it all began.

As I perused the yellow pages getting hotel phone numbers my attention was caught by one particular hotel ad. In retrospect I can recognize what happened next as something akin to "post hypnotic suggestion," because the moment my eyes saw the hotel's ad I had this sudden kind of trance-like knowing in my head that "I'm going to work there…..!" For no discernible reason. But I knew it….I needed to call and find out if they were hiring and if so, what I needed to do to apply, because I was going to work there. And I did, with total relaxed confidence, feeling like it was already a guaranteed done deal. I got the front desk, who sent me to human resources, who told me what to do to apply. Within a few days I was sitting in a meeting room filling out the paperwork…and found myself in a face to face interview with the front desk manager himself. Meaning, I'd already passed the first stages of judgment. I'll keep the front desk manager anonymous by calling him "Richard." By the end of the interview "Richard" was giving me a basic tour of the hotel and letting me know that I was pretty much hired. The job was mine, if I wanted it. I said I did, feeling excited inside. Then again, I "knew" it would be mine anyway before I even applied. Richard had a low key personality, not emotional, but in his low key way I could see he seemed pleased when I said yes, and had a small smile on his face. While we waited for the service elevator to take us back up to the lobby he let me know that the position had been open for almost five months now (in retrospect since we'd moved there….….something I only just realized right now as I'm typing this in 2010……) but he'd rejected every person who had interviewed. Until me. That's a little weird when I look back on that. Now, it really could very well be a case of nothing but sketchy, and/or unqualified types applying for the job during all those months, and it wouldn't surprise me since I've seen that sort of thing happen, no doubt. But then again……maybe not.

A woman I knew over the 'net named Pam who identifies herself as a MILAB and also happened to be intuitive sensed negative things surrounding this job back when I was first getting hired on, and tried to warn me about it when I told her about it over the phone. Negative things as in, malevolent happenings, not just that I would be displeased with the job. She had never warned me about anything else……just this one particular job. At the time I just waved it off, thinking she was loopy. In retrospect she may have been right.

Soon I was working the front desk, usually the 6:30 am - 3:30 pm shift. Most of my coworkers were younger then me by over ten years and kind of immature, with limited work experience, whereas I was 30 at the time and had eight years of office job experience around the country under my belt, plus prior hotel experience, so I did well and was able to keep up with the busy paperwork, phones and guest traffic. The employee programming that went on there was a bit of a mind control trip in itself, though not surprising for a higher end hotel. Everything from the way we answered the phone, to how we stood, to how we spoke, and even directed guests (you never point, you always "gesture with your hand"!) had to be done a certain way.

I soon started referring to the hotel as "the illuminati" hotel when I got wind of where the corporate headquarters was located, the way the headquarters' restaurant was even named "Illume," the fact that the hotel's owner was some oil tycoon, and then realized that the hotel's logo had a thinly disguised pentagon in it. (Of course it didn't hurt either that in the break room it was mandatory for the TV to be set to CNN, all the time. One more "illuminati conspiracy" you could say. I say that tongue in cheek, but, it is a little weird. Hotel policy dictated that the TV was never to be switched from CNN, or turned off in general, though I frequently ignored the latter if I happened to be in there alone.) Then there was the matter of how the hotel had eastern European, Croatian and Russian/Belarussian immigrant workers, all of whom were being exploited by an agency that represented them to the hotel. The agency was knowingly doing it, the workers were knowingly submitting to it, and the hotel was knowingly okay with it and encouraging it. For instance, scheduling the Belarussian desk clerks for double, and even triple shifts, where they would sleep over in one of the hotel rooms and didn't get any overtime pay, and where their hourly rates were several dollars less an hour than the rest of us. Something the hotel couldn't get away with for legal U.S. residents who know their rights with the Federal labor laws. The immigrants accepted it because to them it was still a better deal than whatever they'd left behind. After I heard about what life was like in Belarus, the last communist holdover in the former Soviet bloc, I could see why they gladly accepted it. The one time I tried to broach this subject at the front desk, probing for more details about the agency who brought these people over, the bell hop – who wasn't even one of the immigrants – got fired up and shut down the conversation, seeming fearful and angry, making it seem that I was going to be reporting people….and costing people their jobs. He let me know that the guys who ran the agency used to be (exploited) immigrants themselves, and now were running the agency to bring over more (exploited) immigrants. So basically a case of, "Shut up and mind your own business. Everybody here knows what's going on, and everybody involved is okay with it." This is why in retrospect I wondered whether some of these girls were being used for other……stuff on the side, considering how good looking they were, in a vulnerable, needy situation, and with innocent, passive, almost trance-like demeanors.

As far as my own indications of weird activity go, there are only a couple, not counting the unusual circumstances of me applying, and then getting, the job in the first place. The first thing I can think of is very minor, but it involves 15 minutes of "missing time" you could say. I left for home at the end of my shift at the normal time, with no delays en route, and yet when I got home I was 15 minutes late. And no, the clock at home was not incorrect. All the clocks and times matched….I was just missing 15 minutes. It stopped me in my tracks because it wasn't right. To this day I have no idea what that's all about, if something happened to me and my mind is blanked out, or what.

Also during this time as mentioned elsewhere in this book I began attracting in the "MILABS 69" thing in terms of number sightings. I experienced it once back in Fort Lauderdale, but now out of all the lockers that I could have been assigned, my locker number was #69. (so when it came time for me to select an employee number for logging into the computer and such I decided to choose 3169 from the list of ten numbers that were offered to me, why not you know. ;) Make it easy to remember. So that was my own doing.) And then I started frequently getting "6:09" on the clock….but only during the time I worked there.

Then came the morning in April when I had just started my shift in the morning and "Richard" arrived at the front desk at 7 a.m. on the nose, always impeccably dressed in a suit and on time to the minute for when his shift started. And as I glanced over at him to my left to say hi, an immediate, intensely strong feeling and knowing that something very unsavory had happened involving him just…..hit me. I don't know how to describe this. But when I saw him this knowing immediately surged up in my mind, that something very yucky had gone on involving him, the memory just about to emerge…..but then feeling like it was running into a wall, or a ceiling, being blocked. The memory wanted to come out…..but couldn't. Over and over. Surge…block. Surge…block. Surge…block. My eyes bugged out a little bit as I glanced over at him and was hit with this intense surging of negative memory knowledge. He in turn looked slightly quizzical and surprised, probably at my surprised look, and I hurriedly glanced down and away. If something indeed had happened he gave no indication of it, and didn't seem to be aware of it. His surprised look seemed to be solely in response to my wide eyed look.

This all overlapped during the same time period when he gave his two week notice, having accepted a bigger and better position in another hotel chain outside the state, putting his house up for sale and preparing to move with his wife and two young kids. During those final two weeks this negative memory knowing remained strong, enough so that I completely avoided talking to him, wouldn't look at him and never said goodbye to him, even artfully dodging the little farewell thing on his last day. But I had such a negative feeling and knowing about him I didn't want to associate with him in any capacity. This has never happened before, or since, with anybody. Richard's "personality" or lack thereof was very interesting. But he was Caucasian, in his 40s, very clean cut and impeccable with dark blond close cropped hair, blue eyes, seeming kind of 1950s actually. Not necessarily good looking, but not ugly either. Reserved, with a cold intelligence, low key, though I did see indicators of a fiery temper a couple of times that he kept tightly in check, so he had restraint. And he actually gave off the vibe of possibly being gay, something effeminate, so I was shocked to hear he was married and had kids. What was going on there with my memory surging, I'll never know, and if something did happen, then truthfully I don't want to know.

I wound up leaving that job within two months after "Richard" left due to an escalating series of events piling on, primarily focused on the replacement desk manager, who was a total clown and very inept. But it was like reality was trying to get me to get out there, and when I wouldn't take the hint then more things kept piling on until I finally quit…and actually walked out in the middle of my shift no less. So I was only there for four months, then returned to temping with my previous agency.

The postscript to this whole tale is just as weird. But in October of 2006 I was temping at an assignment that I'd been at since June, when I got a call from my temp agency saying that this other company whom I'd temped with months ago, for only a day and a half mind you, was literally begging for me to come back and work for them with the plan for me to go permanent with them. Apparently this other company HAD to have me. And only me, they insisted. They were creating such a scene about it, calling the agency repeatedly, that my temp company was going to do something they didn't normally do…..offer me the position with this other company, and pull me off my current assignment. The whole thing was bizarre because again, they'd only worked with me for a day and a half. Why was I so special?? The position was for a tax accounting firm downtown, working the front desk as a receptionist basically, with light office admin duties. Everybody there was nice from what I remembered, the job seemed okay enough and the pay was fine, the location was only a couple of miles from home. Since the begging and pleading for me was so intense I gave in and agreed to be pulled off the assignment and go over there, feeling kind of flattered, admittedly, like, Wow, okay.

Long story short, when I got over to the tax firm it was a major case of "bait and switch." And this is where it eventually gets back to "the illuminati hotel," as you'll see in a moment. But my job duties weren't going to be what they told the temp company, and instead involved a whole bunch of back office grunt work and converting their thousands of paper files into scanned electronic copies. One of the women who worked there was showing me around and explaining these various job duties to me, and then brought me down to the mildewy smelling basement level where all the filing cabinets were located with the thousands of files that I'd supposedly be converting. She waved her arm towards all the cabinets and said, "Welcome to your future." O.o To this day I've never gotten over the arrogance behind that statement. So sure was she that I was just this meek, passive little chick who'd gratefully jump at the chance for this "opportunity" to work in a mildewy basement doing work that would make anybody want to jump off the nearest cliff.

But then as it turned out, the mildewy basement would not in fact be my future because guess what….they were moving in only a week and a half. So I was informed that another major aspect of my job duties would involve packing up, and helping to move, the entire office. Again, none of which was told to the temp agency. But let's take a guess at where they were moving to………

…….into office spaces located inside the "illuminati hotel," of all places. ;)

So all this inexplicable intense begging and pleading that they HAD TO HAVE ME and ONLY ME!!! when they'd only known me for a day a half, months ago, right as they're packing up shop and moving into the "Illuminati hotel." ummmmmmm. Amazing coincidence there. Needless to say I was only there for one day before bailing out and going back to my previous assignment, who was happy to have me back. The temp agency sided with me and was peeved with this company for their bait and switch, and trying to get a free office mover in the process. I don't profess to understand what in the frickity frack was going on with this situation, and for all I know it's just a giant coincidence, but it was bizarre, to say the least.

Discovering Abduction Schedules

If you're dealing with military abductions, or the joint alien/military affair, then there will most likely be a pattern to when you're being taken. And it seems that they will operate on that schedule for as long as they can, until you discover it and begin throwing a wrench in the works.

Because so many things had begun happening to me by 2002 I started keeping a log book to document my stuff, as well as diligently photographing the mysterious nickel-shaped round dark purple bruises that were periodically appearing on my legs. http://in2worlds.net/anomalous-markings I hadn't figured anything out yet, and it was a bit frustrating, but I plugged away with it all nonetheless in hopes that someday, answers would come.

Then one day in April of 2003, I figured something out. In flipping through various photos of the nickel-sized bruises, I really noticed for the first time the dates on the back of each photo. All of the photos were taken either between the 1st and 3rd of each month, or the 20th – 23rd. !!! I couldn't believe I hadn't noticed this before. Amazing. This wasn't random chaos. This is why it's imperative to log and document your stuff. Over time, with enough materials gathered, you will discover the patterns and meanings. But you have to be patient enough to wait for the materials to accumulate. It won't happen overnight.

This realization was so revelatory that I had to pause and take a moment to regroup. I closed my eyes and addressed my higher self. (or at least, what I understood to be my higher self. It may not have been, but as noted in my write up about it http://in2worlds.net/the-higher-self it was definitely something positive….) I started talking to it, saying, "Okay Higher Self, me in the future, it looks like I found a pattern to the abductions. Tell me what I'm supp…."

"It's about time!" came the response, interrupting.

Not in a sarcastic way, but rather in an urgent "don't stop now!" sort of way. The voice was like my own, so, it was differentiated from the outside 'microwave voice beaming' technology mentioned in Part II where the voices were male, and clearly not connected to me. The thought behind what the higher self voice was conveying was "Keep going! Keep moving, don't slack. You found the pattern, so don't stop now..." I started laughing though, shaking my head about it all. It was just too funny how it cut me off like that, all urgent.

There are a few possible reasons for why they might utilize a regular schedule:

- Possibly they're taking so many people that it has to be an organized affair. The military/black ops agencies would want things to be as organized and efficient as possible.
- May coincide with the target's personal biological cycles; Certain times of the month may be more opportune for snagging somebody based on the purposes they're being taken for. Think biorhythm cycles, women's monthly cycles, etc. and so on. Something to do with some sort of cycle.
- Maybe there's some unknown variable, something pertaining to whatever's going on in their realm, that makes it so that they can only take people at certain times.

Throwing a wrench in the works was just mentioned a moment ago. What does that involve?

It means exactly that…foiling their efforts to take you. What I came to discover was that my mysterious bruise markings were appearing on a regular schedule, and that during those times of the month I had an increase in number sightings and ear tones, indicating that "something" was amiss. There was hyperdimensional forewarning, you could say. And I began thinking of that as my head's up, and used it to my advantage. On those nights when it seemed stuff might happen…my boyfriend and I stayed up all night. I would go to work on minimal to no sleep, and we'd down the Frapuccinos and Red Bulls to keep us awake. Or we'd take stuff to read and go hang out at Denny's for several hours in the middle of the night, eating food and drinking coffee and reading good books, during the prime time that they'd be (trying) to take me/us. Or, I'd just stay up as long as I could, and then conk out for the last two hours before my alarm was set to go off while my boyfriend kept watch. He's nocturnal anyway, so it was normal for him to be up during the night and to go to bed at around 6 a.m. or so, which certainly helped. Some people will claim that staying up will do nothing to thwart them. I disagree. That's defeatist. Especially if you leave your home and go elsewhere, and even more so when you go to a public place. You have to at least try. You can't just go belly up.

I didn't mind any of it though, all the dodging and outrunning abductions, losing sleep and all that, mostly because we lived in South Florida. The year round summer weather and close proximity to the beach meant everything had a fun vibe to it. It was perpetual summer vacation. My job required no brain power, so it was cool if I went in on no sleep – I didn't need it anyway – and life in general just didn't have that oppressive feel that you find elsewhere in the country. It's hard to get depressed and feel dragged down when you have an easy job, there's no winter, and outside your front door there's palm fronds rustling in the warm breeze and you can literally, be sipping a Pina Colada on the beach off the A1A the next day, which I had done on a few occasions. Translation = when you live where others come to vacation. So everything was already light hearted and felt like a game, and this was just one more aspect of the game. Having that outlook really helped matters too, in retrospect. It's ALL about your personal frequency, as I outlined in the section regarding Fear. And when you're not afraid, and are just facing the situation head on, just doing what you gotta do, and even getting a slight kick out of it in between going to the white sandy beach and frolicking in the crystal clear blue green water that's as warm as bathwater ;) then it turns the tables on the outcome.

Once I began throwing a wrench in the works enough times and made it difficult for them to adhere to any sort of set schedule, then I had the experience, as mentioned in Part II, where I woke up to hear a man's voice pulling me out what felt like a deep, trance-like state, saying "1-4-1-4-1…" as if it were some trigger code. It felt like I had been looking at something for him before he pulled me out of it. (Remote viewing?) But then another female voice cut in on the line you could say (higher self?) to inform me in an urgent, FYI-sounding way that "They now have the ability to use you without actually taking you." Via the implants, most likely.

But hearing that definitely threw a wrench in MY works. It seems that with MILABS, their preferred method is to take somebody physically, but if they have to then sure, they'll resort to Plan B, and use them remotely. Possibly it's not as effective, but, it gets the job done. Whatever "the job" is, I don't know. To this day I still have no idea what's going on and how it all works. I can only theorize. But talk about making me feel hopeless. What's the point of outrunning them if they're just going to plug into me while I sleep? So I gave up. At that time, I just didn't know how I could possibly side step somebody plugging into me while I sleep, seamlessly merging with me so I don't even know it and just perform for them like a good little monkey. If that's what's indeed happening. So for about a year and a half I took the blue pill, and slipped back below the waves. It just got so tiresome always being on the run from something when I didn't even know who or what I was running from, or what was actually going on. And to a degree, that's still my attitude I admit. I don't have the passion for it all that I once had.

Now however, at this point I think there are ways you can side step it. But it requires much more work then just staying up all night and drinking Red Bulls. As their tactics are amped up, when they start resorting to their Plan B's and Plan C's, then the effort we have to put in as a counter defense will also go up. One major counter-tactic would involve lucid dreaming skills. When you become adept at being conscious while sleeping, then it's possible you'll be more sensitive to any attempts at intrusion that may occur. Which ultimately means, people can fight back. It isn't entirely hopeless.

Figure out your abduction schedule, if there is one. Dodge the physical abductions if you can. And in the event that they plug into you via your implants, gain the upper hand by practicing lucid dreaming and taking control of your sleep state. There has to be ways to program your own mind to alert yourself in the event that something is trying to plug into you while you sleep. Connect to your higher powers for any additional feedback and insight and help you can glean about it all. And always keep your frequency up. Don't get despondent about it all, it's not worth it. Think of it as a game, and just have fun with it.

Residual Talents and Abilities

Something I began noticing about myself in my early twenties was my unusual, to the point of being freakish, lightning fast reflexes. I don't recall having those abilities as a kid, but I sure had them now. It became evident during one particular incident at 21, while I was roommates with a group of friends who were in my life for several years. We were all in the kitchen, and I turned and accidentally knocked a tall glass off the counter with my left elbow. I saw it happen out of the corner of my eye, but before I even knew what I was doing I bent down a little and swooped my right hand behind my back…and caught the glass in mid-air behind me without looking. It was one smooth and continuous move, from knocking to bending to catching, and I had no control over doing it. My arms and hands had a mind of their own.

The room became silent, and I looked up with the glass in my hand to see three of my roommates just staring at me with looks of shocked puzzlement. I put it back on the counter, and one of the guys, Mike, said "Wow." That's all anybody could say. Conversation resumed a little nervously.

And that was my introduction into a skill I have absolutely no control over. Like the time at the pizza parlor in Fort Lauderdale where my boyfriend and I were studying a menu at the counter, and my left arm suddenly shot out to catch a falling menu in mid-air; my conscious mind didn't even realize it was falling until after my hand had already caught it and was carefully placing it back on the counter top. The guy behind the counter looked at me with wide eyes and said "whoa." Standing next to my bookshelf reading a book and my right arm shot out to catch the heavy bookend and then push all the toppling books back on the shelf, in one move – conscious mind had to catch up once again with what my reflexes involuntarily did. And then what happened recently in 2010 - in the bathroom at work rinsing my glass mug in the sink, holding it with my left hand but then it slipped, about to crash to the tiled floor and shatter. All I know is that my left hand had a mind of its own and did all this crazy maneuvering so that I caught the mug left handed, pushing it against the sink to stabilize it, but which caused it to chip a little. And then it slipped out of my hands for a second time, spinning wildly through the air and once again threatening to shatter on the floor, and once again my reflexes went into overdrive, all nerves on end, bending my knees and dipping down with my left hand and some crazy maneuvering…..and I caught it, again, this time down closer to the floor. Put it back on the sink. I just stood there recuperating after this fiasco because my nerves were shot from the sudden alarm panic that flooded my system. It all happened so fast my conscious mind didn't even have time to catch up. All I know is that there was this slippery glass mug flipping wildly through the air threatening to shatter all over the floor, and then something else kicked in making sure it didn't happen. And the many times I've dropped something I'd been holding and one of my hands involuntarily forms a perfect little scoop shape and positions itself under the falling object to catch it. I can feel my mind shutting off as some other part takes over and does this. It's bizarre.

More specifically, I've come to realize that what tends to happen when something falls in front of me is that my eyes will come into sharp, intense focus on the object, so the background basically gets blurred out, like unplugging or detaching from the rest of reality, and all that exists is the falling object situation. And then it kind of feels like time gets distorted. Things slow down, and I'm able to position myself to catch the object, all the while being super coordinated in a way that isn't normal. Why, I don't know, because let's face it, the stuff that's usually falling isn't anything worthwhile, requiring that level of sophistication to catch it. But again I can't control it. Falling objects, no matter what they are or what their value, all register the same to my subconscious – an emergency. No differentiation. So if ever there is something of true value that does drop in my presence I don't think I'll need to worry too much. It will be caught. o_O

All of which has led me to question my other unusual skills and abilities. It's in my theory that people who are being taken and programmed, whose brains are being effectively rewired, are going to find themselves with some unusual residual ″talents″ and special enhanced abilities that normal people don't have. And this needs to be mentioned, because it can be another marker that confirms something funny going on under the radar of our normal waking reality. So to illustrate, I'll list a sampling of my own abilities, and maybe the reader will be able to relate in some way:

- Lightning fast reflexes, as mentioned above. Most notably is the fact that I have no control over it. I can't override it. I happen to be right handed, but this goes for both hands, left included, which is interesting. Complete ambidextrousness in that regard. Something that reinforced to me that this skill is indeed indicative of "stuff" was the movie "Mr. And Mrs. Smith"…funny enough. I only had just watched this movie in September of 2007, about a bored married couple who soon discover that the other is a special ops agent. Brad Pitt's character is 99% convinced that his wife, played by Angelina Jolie, is an agent like himself, and he tests her by purposely dropping a wine bottle after refilling her glass. Without any conscious control, her left arm automatically shoots out and catches the bottle in mid-air without looking at it..…something that normal people don't do I guess. So now his character knows for certain, and the game is on. I only just watched this and was like "!!!" when I saw that - using "unconscious lightning fast reflexes" as the ultimate test to determine whether someone is an agent with training. Interesting. And then on a minor note, in the movie "V For Vendetta" the main character V, who happens to have "unusual blood properties" (unusual bloodline…) is the target of a government-sponsored experimentation program which results in him developing a new alter ego (split off multiple persona) and some pretty impressive skills – including heightened intellectual capabilities, and lightning fast reflexes.

  On a minor related note is that somewhere along the line in life I became ambidextrous. To the point where when I was waitressing at one particular job, my boss was watching me in action and said "Oh! You're a lefty!" pleased to find a fellow south paw. I looked at him like he was nuts. Sorry, I'm right handed. He promptly disagreed, and pointed out that I was working left handed. I hadn't even realized it. Another time I was playing Ms. Pac Man at a Laundromat and was intensely playing along, and doing very well…until I looked down and noticed that I had been working the joystick left handed the whole time. It felt like my right to me, there was no difference. But the second I became conscious of it I wasn't able to do it anymore and got eaten by a ghost. :D

- Psychic. Have demonstrated all of the following at some point in my life: telepathy with both humans and animals, precognition/premonitions, clairvoyance, remote viewing, telekinesis by accident once or twice, and some pretty extreme reality manipulation skills, as well as just overall knowing/sensing what's coming up down the pike in life so there's no surprises.

- Audio recognition. Can recognize a song within sometimes one note, backwards as well. Won a radio contest at 13 for being able to recognize just a couple of notes - played backwards - of the 60's song, "I Can't Help Myself." (The Four Tops.) I was the only one who called in. Nobody else recognized it. And when listening to my boyfriend play around on his guitar…for every chord and every group of notes or sound effects he does with his amp, I'm matching up in my mind what songs have used those exact chords and effects. It's impossible for me to just hear the notes in a neutral way without my mind mentally placing them to other songs, like a computer, matching things up. One time when pondering out loud my audio recognition abilities I received a prominent ear tone in my right ear at that exact moment, as if confirming it.

- Unusually good memory. The ability - more so when I was younger though – to remember names, dates, birthdays, addresses, driver's license/plates/vehicle info., phone numbers, and all manner of data and trivia and life happenings in general, including conversations. It really did stand out amongst the people I was around, and became known at one particular job I temped at in '97 as a file clerk. There were over 30 cabinet drawers with over a 100 files per drawer, as well as various "To Be Filed" baskets, and files strewn on people's desks and everywhere. But it soon became known that if you couldn't find a file in the drawer, just ask me…I'll know where it is off the top off my head. "It's in the basket……it's on so-and-so's desk……it's on top of the cabinet…" The psychologists would come up to me and toss out a patient's name, skeptical that I could possibly know……..and I always did. Once I proved myself enough times they began to kind of take it for granted.

This is also why I was such a great memorize and regurgitate robot machine in school. In high school I'd wait until the last day before a test – sometimes within only hours before - and then learn the entire two weeks' lesson…and get an A or B. Didn't pay attention to most of my Biology class for the second semester in 10th grade in Connecticut, and learned (and/or reviewed) five months of material in two days and got the highest score in the class on the final. Shocked even me. Took tests on books I never read…and passed. I'd recall details about the books that I heard during class discussion…in the background, while I did other "more important" things like read my own books that I wanted to read. ;) There is also the fact that I can remember my life going back to when I was a baby, mentioned back in Part II, which many (arrogant) people tend to scoff at, thinking that nobody can remember their lives before the age of five or so, merely because they can't. Which is total nonsense. (It never occurs to them that maybe it's because they have a low IQ and/or they are not a fully conscious and sentient being. This isn't to be confused with those people who are smart and sentient but have memory gaps in their childhood due to abuse and trauma. Those types are different from the arrogant scoffers who are most likely not as intelligent and sentient as they think they are, and believe that their lowered consciousness is the ultimate measuring gauge for how everybody else on the planet should be. !!) I have many memories of being a baby, toddler and small child, in diapers, in a crib, crawling, being fed in a highchair, playing with my various toys and my friends in our apartment complex, the TV programs that were on our TV, the music my dad would play, and then birthdays, Christmas, Halloween, etc. Just SO many memories (including the accidents, mishaps and foibles that are common to toddlers ;D), let alone memories when older.

And there was one freak incident that occurred in 1997 when I was 23 and worked as a waitress at one of my jobs – I was "on" all week and couldn't forget anything if I tried. I spent the entire week manically amped up getting hardly any sleep every night as if I was bi-polar or something, which I'm not. I could remember every last little thing that every table I'd waited on from the Sunday before had ordered…then realized I could remember everything in general about everything that had happened all week. It was maddening, and I found myself sitting on the floor of the living room at 2:30 in the morning with my roommates, swigging cheap wine straight from the bottle trying to come down to a normal level so I could get some sleep and stop the craziness.

Recently I read an internet article about people who have the rare situation of being unable to forget anything that happens to them or anything they encounter in life, and various things described in the article applied to things I've experienced in my own life. My one week of being "on" 24/7 gave me the firsthand insight into what they mean when they say it's a burden to have, not something enjoyable. It's not fun at all. Luckily my extreme "on" situation did go away after that one week, although my general detail recollection remained as prominent as ever. Another issue with this ability is that it really magnifies all the people around you in life who are functioning in a half asleep "auto pilot" state, not paying attention or remembering most of what happens to them. When you remember so much, and in some cases, nearly everything, and most of the people around you don't, it just creates a glaring discrepancy. Especially when people try not to be held accountable for things that they did or said, because they themselves can barely remember the incident…..and they hope and assume you can't either.

- Compartmentalized mind. Have a compartmentalized mind that's demonstrated that it can do its own thing, and seems to operate separately, almost like a computer. In the past I've solved math stuff, or figured things out separately from the "main" brain, and then fed me the answer when it was done. This hasn't happened in a while though, but it has happened in the past, indicating the potential.

  Tying into the above two is the compartmentalized computer mind in general. I can get into a frame of mind where it's like another part of my brain takes over, like when playing video games, and is able to perform in a way that I can't in my normal state of consciousness. One time when I was 22 and at the movies with a friend named James in California, I was playing one of those Simon memory arcade games in the theater lobby…and I slipped into that compartmentalized state of mind and was able to keep going and going and going, perfectly playing back longer > and longer strings of the color tones. My eyes were glazed over and I felt detached from myself, it was some other part of my brain that was playing. Finally James said, "Damn, girl…!!!" freaked out. Hearing that pulled me out of it, and I messed up and the game was over. I had made it up to about 25 tones, and if James hadn't said anything than who knows how long I could've gone on for.

So for myself, I noticed a definitive change, or at least another subtle level of change, occurring around the age of 22-23, in 1997. That's when my brain seemed to suddenly become "smarter" and much, MUCH more clear all the time, versus only during those select times when I needed it, like in school. I was reading the David Icke book, "Human Race Get Off Your Knees – The Lion Sleeps No More" and found a section getting into the functions of the left brain versus the right, and how humanity has become predominantly left brained, to our detriment. Some of the functions of the right brain that he noted included psychic abilities, improved memory function, and of course the control of the left hand. Even though I've read up before on the functions of right brain vs. left before I don't recall reading about memory function in association with the right brain, until his book. All these years I never made the connection between my bouts of heightened psychic abilities, the super memory function……the left handed ambidextrousness. But some of these seemingly separate phenomena I talk about here have "right brain function/activity" at their core, as I recently finally realized. I'm left brained dominant….but something apparently changed in my early 20s to heighten my right brain activity, leading to some of these anomalous talents I began displaying. The left hand ambidextrousness is the giveaway for it right there. In looking back on myself and my life at that time I can safely say that it wasn't anything that I was doing during my waking life that would have caused this change in me, and I can't imagine what I could have done anyway to cause such a large and recognizable level of change in brain function. So, thank you to David Icke for being the catalyst for my light bulb moment. I'm not good with pulling things together, at all, and making connections between subjects that seem separate. It's unfortunately one of the biggest problems I've faced in trying to figure out what's going on in my life.

But as noted in the bulleted list above, this new change in brain function came in handy at my jobs. As a waitress I could now take orders without having to write them down (which helps boost your tips ;) …that really seems to impress people because they feel like you're really paying attention to them). And in '99 when I was working at an executive suites, answering the switchboard for up to 48 different companies, it also paid off. There were times when I'd be answering multiple calls on the ten-line system using a headset (which very frequently meant having no less than ten calls at a time on hold that you'd have to work your way through, then put another ten on hold, and another…) and having every single four digit extension and every four digit voicemail memorized, along with the whereabouts of every person I answered phones for off the top off my head so I wouldn't have to stop and refer to my sheet. During one particular time period it was all that, PLUS simultaneously doing data entry side projects at the same time, typing (at that point) 65 wpm/10,000+ keystrokes per hour. So I'd be answering the calls with the headset on, having almost 50 four digit extensions and voicemails memorized, and all whereabouts known off the top of my head, and then after transferring the calls go back to cranking through the typing project like I was some perfectly performing computer robot. All for $9.00 an hour. They sure got their money's worth with me. It's all very reminiscent though of my dad's "unusual" performance in the Navy of translating Morse code into type at something like 80-90+ wpm, among his other abilities which I get into in the Appendix.

I think people can be, and most likely are, tinkered with during their abductions and programming. Brains are upgraded – in my case, and maybe with others as well, their right brain hemisphere is amplified/stimulated because it serves some sort of purpose to them - people will find themselves with skills they didn't used to have, and some of it may even be the natural by-product of other things that they're being used for. As noted in the section regarding the after effects of being taken, finding oneself with increased psychic abilities out of nowhere lasting for up to several days in a row may be a natural by-product of the abduction process in itself, or as I recently realized, it could be an indicator of heightened right brain function.

Maybe there was a biological/nutritional reason for this, but I kind of doubt it. It just seems to me that I was upgraded. As with my dad, it was like the potential and foundation was there, and then maybe something came along and tweaked things a bit. Factoring in the roundabout indicators of abductions occurring in my early 20s (despite the fact that I didn't even know about the topic), and these "talents and skills" definitely seem suspect in retrospect. Although I've certainly met people who blow me out of the water in terms of what they're able to do – psychic abilities that are to be reckoned with, true photographic memory all the time, stuff that's pretty freaky and probably natural-born, not a result of having been tinkered with. But still, I mention this in case it maybe rings a bell for somebody reading this.

Untangling Disinformation

A big part of what it means to be an abductee is that people will often find themselves being given revelations about various things. They're shown things, told things, they're given predictions or prophesies, insights into who's who and what's what in this reality. But the bottom line is – what's real, and what's disinformation?

At this point I'm going to relay what happened when my brother Joe finally got to meet "them" face to face during an abduction that he was "allowed" to remember, which took place in October of 2001, and the revelations about us, and reality in general, that he passed on to me. He was given all sorts of information, not only for his own programming purposes I imagie, but also because maybe it was supposed to get to me too, to shape the outcome of where I wound up in life. For the actual details about what Joe saw during his abduction, see the section called "The World Underground" in Part I. And keep in mind that I'm not endorsing what he relayed. I think some of it is flat out crazy. But what I am going to do is just lay out there what he was told and shown, for the benefit of anybody else out there who may have been told/shown something similar during their own abduction experiences. Because from what I'm starting to realize, there may be MILAB targets out there being put through the psychological mind game ringer to REALLY screw with their sense of what's real versus what's illusion, and to give them the impression that their abductors are God-like powerhouses who control reality to an absolute degree, all in an effort to sabotage them in life and aid the negative programming attempts. So this could be useful for that reason. Then, I'll untangle what I feel is the disinformation and correct what's most likely been skewed. Disinformation is very clever in that it's usually closely intertwined around valid information. It gets you nodding your head Yes, Yes, Yes to stuff that matches up to what you know, then takes a sudden turn way out into left field…with hopes that you'll just keep nodding your head Yes. And as mentioned earlier in Part I, there's often double reverse psychology going on, requiring multiple unravelings of the material being presented.

At the time Joe told me all of this, I knew nothing about any of what he was talking about because it was 2001, and I was brand new to this entire thing. I had no way to verify any of it at the time, so all I could do was document it on my computer, which I diligently did, and put it all on the backburner. Only after the fact did I slowly start to find sources who were saying the same thing. And as mentioned previously, Joe did not read up on these subjects, and didn't go on the internet, so that's not where this information came from. But then again...he didn't have to seek the info out on the 'net or in books, because he wasn't a regular person, or a regular MILABS target. I mentioned in Part I that Joe was a probe/pawn of sorts, being piloted by "something else," and so by the end was acting as a direct extension of "them."

So with that in mind, these are some of the revelations that "they" told him during his 10/01 abduction. I don't get into everything he mentioned, as some of them are trivial or personal, but these are the major ones:

- This reality is "merging" with another, and because of what's happening, certain chunks of this reality have gone "missing." Those missing areas are being filled in with holographic projections. You can feel when you're in a holographic projection because the people and natural scenery will lack life energy.

- Holographic reality – known as "The Program" - is projected through an interconnected system of satellites, radio dishes and ELF waves, among other things. Basically anything that can be used to transmit signals.

- The media is all an illusory lie as well. He claims to have been shown some sort of disk thing that they can insert into something that has a crystal, I don't fully know or understand, but that's where our television, news, etc. comes from.

- Only about 3 out of 10 people are actually real anymore. About 30% of the population. If that. The rest are what you could call drones. Empty shells, background characters, puppets of the program. Black people however, usually are all still real. !! (he didn't explain why, just said this is what you'll see.)
- There are various secret factions of the government and they're at war with each other. i.e., they all have their different agendas and they're competing with each other. As far as the government we see – the President, Senate, Congress, etc…that's not who's really running things. They secret factions don't answer to them and have no regard for it at all. And yes, he said, the government was behind 9/11. duh.
- In about 5 years' time (putting the timeline at the end of 2006, into 2007, roughly), something is going to happen which is going to halt the way of life as we currently know it. Things will be locked down, [martial law?] and traveling will become so expensive and such a hassle with all the paperwork that's required for it that only the rich will be able to keep doing it. They're going to have militarized check points set up on the highways, with spike points for popping tires, and facilities set up underground for confiscating people's cars.

On a personal note, he went on to say that we both had implants that allow for "them" to see everything that we're seeing. Everything we do, say or think, can be - and is - monitored by "them." Then there was the bit about how we're not "from here" soul-wise – and they're not either. In fact, they're supposedly part of the same soul group as my brother and me. And that also, oddly enough, ties into why both of us look so young for our ages. He said we're not aging at the rate that others around us are. And supposedly, according to "them," my brother and I were abducted when we were kids by aliens. Stuff not related to "them" and their agenda. They are supposedly something separate……but they've been following us since we were kids. They have files on us containing every known possible detail about us, and he said they claimed that they've even manipulated events in our lives… "to see what we'd do and how we'd react." But then there was the tacked on bit that Oh, see, they like us, and are "on our side", and "do what they can to help" when they can. They're not supposed to, but they still sneak in help. (riiiiight.)

The part about manipulating events to see what we'd do and how we'd react sounded a bit ridiculous…at first. Until I stopped and remembered that I've seen them, whoever/whatever they are, orchestrate some pretty unbelievable synchronicities that involved actual reality manipulation. It's stuff that's so out there that I normally just don't think about it too deeply because the implications are pretty astounding. Long after I'd put aside this particular revelation onto the backburner, I began realizing on my own that it seems as if there may be a blueprint of sorts with regards to the lives of abductees. Whether military or alien, I started to possibly see patterns in the chaos, as if our lives are being manipulated to go a certain way, with certain types of things happening at certain ages – almost as if we were being experimented on. Only then I remembered Joe's revelation about "them" manipulating life events "to see what we'd do and how we'd react" and was like, HOLY SHIT. It's something I'm still looking into.

There was one big thing that Joe heavily tried to impress upon me as well, which was that I needed to stop thinking about things so much. Because see, the way the grid program of reality works is that when you think about things to much, it tries to beat you to the punch you could say, and manipulates events based on its anticipation of what you're thinking of doing.

So, if I had to untangle the things that I was told, I'd say the truth was that yes, something is changing in our reality – some call it "the Shift" if you will - and yes, holographic projection technology seems to be real, from what I've since discovered in the past few years. In fact, the (channeled) book "Bringers of the Dawn" by Barbara Marciniak says much of the same stuff Joe relayed. Joe had never read that though, and neither had I, until after the fact. And as far as chunks of reality gone missing – I wrestled with this one. At first I was willing to believe it, with a neutral, "sure, anything's possible" mindset. Then I put the whole thing out of my head for several years. By 2006 I found myself returning to this particular revelation with some shocked incredulity. I've come across information from various people over the past year that corroborates this. Large amounts of people in crowds with no auras. Entire areas that used to be real but which no longer emit life force energy. People seeing the white grid lines, of which I have some personal experience with as well. And so on. So now I've found myself returning to this revelation with particular interest.

Now, fake media generated from a disc – I know that what we're told via the media is a bunch of lies, but as far as the entire shebang being completely fake, people and all – no. Although I wouldn't doubt that the technology he was describing was real – discs, crystals, and who knows what, which all sounds very Atlantean-esque.

But what does seem to be valid is the concept of drones. People who are content to serve the program/system, and who try to keep the rest of us in place. To say that I've noticed people who weren't acting right is putting it mildly, and this started happening for me back in 2000, before my abductions were known to me. I've encountered people with big empty eyes, whose responses were not matching what was being said, people who could only talk about "normal" things, and who literally, shut down when something woo-woo was said, and people who were just acting reeeeaally off in general. So yeah, this part has validity, in my opinion.

9/11 being staged? Absolutely. The government not being what we're told it is? Check. Secret factions? Yup. At war with each other? I'm sure. So that all seems to be true.

However, the part about not thinking about things too much because of the way "the program" works was actually where the brunt of the most potentially damaging disinfo. was. It was designed to get my reality creation abilities nipped in the bud, pronto. I've consistently been able to manifest what I need in life, going way back to when I didn't even know about such concepts. So imagine what would happen should I begin trying to turn my mind off and "not think too much." As mentioned earlier in this write up, they need people to not think. They need people who are asleep and unaware, drifting through life on autopilot. People who "think too much" are a dangerous thing.

As far as the prediction about five years' time – guess we'll just have to wait and see. The thing about this one is that myself and others that I know through a message board forum have felt some definitive changes or shifts you could say over the past year or so. We feel like we've shifted onto a different timeline now…several times in fact. Some of us even have very clear knowing/memories that we are repeating ourselves as if in a time loop of sorts, myself included…and I'm not talking about déjà vu either. So for me I'm not worried about this predicted future because the bottom line is, the future is open, can change, and has already been changed on multiple occasions since 2001. There are many open probabilities…a factor that was conveniently left out of this "prediction." OF course. ;) They don't tell you things like that, remember.

And while I don't doubt the both of us were implanted, the fact that I was told how my every action and thought could be heard and seen by "them" was said (in my opinion) in the hopes of driving me into self conscious, fearful paranoia…not because it was just some useful tidbit to know. Luckily, I didn't go down that route, and decided that I didn't care what they were seeing/hearing. Which ties into one of the biggest underlying reasons for telling me any of this stuff in the first place: To break me psychologically, and get me to choose a very dark path as a result of what I now knew. Fake media. Fake people. Fake reality. Nothing's real! Have a psychological meltdown! There's no point in being normal and mainstream anymore, right? Just go crazy and be a sociopathic criminal, like Joe. Close myself off to people, and hate them all, use them and exploit them, the way he did. And if everything I did or thought was known to "them," and they'd been snagging me and watching me my whole life, then shrink up in paranoid, self conscious fear. Be a helpless victim. All the while believing that these guys were really the good guys, who "help when they can" and are part of the same soul group as us. ;)

When I was talking about this topic to a male abductee over the internet, he said that their attempts to psychologically destroy him with these same tactics only backfired. I'd said the same thing about my own situation, so it was funny to hear him say that. And what we mean by backfire is that instead of converting us into angry/paranoid/hateful/fearful tools that serve the dark stuff, it backfired, and succeeded in just making us all that more aware, and switching us over to the opposite direction of what was intended. But as my very aware boyfriend has noted on many occasions, they always take a risk when they make the decision to fully go after someone. There's a high probability that they will succeed and the target will be converted/absorbed/taken down….but there's always the chance that it'll blow up in their faces. Sometimes in a major way. Then again….it could all be more layers of games within games, as already mentioned earlier in the book. ;) Who really knows what's actually going on here.

Several months after Joe relayed these revelations, I had a "dream" where I was shown what reality would be like without "The Program" in place. It scared the shit out of me, is all I can say. It was brief, but I heard a male human voice somewhere off to the side or behind me, narrating, but I couldn't see him. Then I found myself…hovering in an empty void of total nothingness, my feet hanging in mid-air, accompanied by the most intense feeling of panic and anxiety I've probably ever felt. It's really hard to explain, but I'd have to say it really did actually maybe feel like how a void in reality might feel. "THIS is what it's like without 'the program" I was told. Kind of like, Do you get it now? Without fake reality this is what you'd have. Not very nice, is it?

I woke from that experience in a full panic, gasping for breath, nerves on end, really messed up. Whether somebody was really showing me something valid, just as a useful and informative FYI, or whether it was all manipulative mind control games designed to break me psychologically, I can only guess. I actually suspect it could be a mix of both. If nothing else I can say that people don't just have dreams like that. That was no normal "dream" by any means and for me proves something is amiss.

But this does make me wonder though how many other abductees are being targeted in a similar fashion, given revelations and insights, whether true or not, which are designed to try to derail them in life. If anybody out there experiences anything even remotely similar to what I went through while up in Portland, the only thing I can suggest is to not flip out. Keep your wits about you, and just put whatever you're told or shown on the backburner until a later date when you can get more information and corroboration. That's all you can do. You can't just automatically believe it and take it at face value, no matter what flashy theatrics they throw at you. What I've discovered is "they" have a lot of abilities, sure. But what's real, and what isn't? The thing to always keep in mind too is the spiritual bigger picture. The stuff they don't tell you about are higher positive forces and your own Higher Self. When I discovered that in 2003 it was like I gained a whole spiritual arsenal against them. That's when everything changed. So it's an absolute must to keep that aspect of it all at the forefront of your mind.

Multiple Personalities vs. "Multiple Personas"

Before researching heavily into the subject of mind control, I independently came up with the idea of what I call "multiple personas," which differs from the concept of multiple personality disorder. In the case of MPD (or Disassociative Identity Disorder, DID, as it's now called) we understand it as being a situation of the person having separate, individual fractured personalities, sometimes having their own unique names, genders, ages, personalities, speech patterns, mannerisms, etc., and accompanying black out periods when personalities are flip flopping back and forth. It's wild stuff. And I can't say I've ever known anybody personally who had this problem to that severe of an extent - although I have on the other hand, witnessed what I have deemed multiple personas. It's a much milder form of being a full on split personality, but it's not to be confused with being a multi-dimensional person. If you're real you're not going to be a one dimensional cardboard cut out after all. You're going to exhibit different moods, different sides of yourself as you navigate your way through life playing your various roles. You're a mom, a friend, a wife and lover, a neighbor, a daughter. Somebody's dad, brother, son, boss, husband. You can't be one way to everybody, and that's very normal and totally understandable.

But what I'm talking about is having an almost split personality. A situation where the mood swings are more like severe personality swings, but the person in question still answers to their name and never loses awareness of their core self, versus multiple personality disorder where a person may answer to a different name, thinking they are actually somebody else. My theory is that in the case of multiple personas there could be one of a couple of things happening: 1) the mind control target has had their mind split/fractured during programming sessions, which leaves them with personality instability in their waking life that in turn, can cause their personality to shift around, yet…they never quite make the full flip over into a compartmentalized alter, losing the sense of who they are. It stops just short of that, leaving the person a fully functioning member of society, with (relatively…) little suspicious behavior that would be noticed by anybody. Or 2) it's a situation where programming to fracture the mind has only been done on a mild, surface level.

I figured some this out on my own by 1999-2000 or so, after having experienced my mom's rapid and unstable persona switches as a teen, as well as hearing my brother's story, and then observing my then-boyfriend Steve, as well as my own self, only to stumble onto corroborating data several years later in an article by Gunther

Rassbacher that backed up the tentative theory. From the online article "Operation Open Eyes: Mind Control in America – Five Easy Steps to Create a Manchurian Candidate" by Rassbacher (bolded words my own emphasis):

> "The next step is Level 3 hypnosis, where the subject will become an "overwrite" upon his own personality. An "overwrite" is a new identity or personality. It is similar to having multiple personalities, except the original personality is repressed or hidden under the "overwrite" and will not surface for a set period of time which is determined by the Programmer.
> The "overwrite" is not a complete new identity…."

While I have yet to know somebody who exhibited individualized split personalities to a severe extent, I have on the other hand, witnessed the concept of multiple personas, or maybe an overwrite, as it's called in the above excerpt. I have also seen these people assign an alternate moniker to themselves that they like to occasionally go by, and sometimes would use that name in lieu of their given name…but yet, while still retaining full memory and recognition of their real self. (have also read of a number of famous people that I suspect of being mind controlled who do this as well, casually talking about their various alter egos who have their own names.)

My brother had his alter-ego, "Shawn Hill", and mentioned a couple of incidents back when he lived in Connecticut where petty criminal stuff happened, and it seemed like he probably did it – as Shawn Hill - buuuut…he couldn't remember doing it…necessarily. It seemed like he had a vague recollection of being there and doing those things, but, it was so hazy…… Talking to him on the phone back in 1998 or 1999, he told me that he didn't want to be called Joe anymore. He wanted to be called Shawn. His new name was Shawn Hill. I laughed nervously, like, Ohhh-kay. "Well, I'm not going to call you Shawn. You're Joe to me. Your name is Joe." His whole demeanor during that call was short and brusque, and he was even less amused by my refusal to acknowledge this "overwrite" persona named Shawn Hill. But notice that he never lost awareness of Joe. Even though he was in Shawn Hill character, he still knew full well who Joe was, and Joe, when being Joe, was fully aware that there was this "Shawn Hill" running around doing things he could only vaguely remember. That's not true multiple personality disorder. But it's definitely something. And multiple personas, or personality overwrites, seems like a good way of explaining it.

And my ex-boyfriend that I mentioned (whose dad happened to be former NSA), also had an alternate name that he'd occasionally use for himself, "Scott." When we were out in public he'd give his name as Scott. It never struck me as being anything too weird, just some funny thing he liked to do. But, then there was the fact that he experienced memory black outs where entire chunks of things he did, conversations he'd had, were gone. It was like he may as well have never done those things. And then the most telling incident that I witnessed with him occurred three years into the relationship (when the relationship was dead anyway) and tipped me off that there was an issue, and it was when he split off in mid-conversation. One second we were having a light hearted exchange, the next…his face changed, went blank. Not only did he not remember what he'd just said a second earlier, but he completely denied even having the entire conversation we'd just been having. Even me rehashing the entire conversation "Okay, you said this, then I said that, then you said this then I said that…!" did nothing to jog his memory. I didn't react well to it all, let's just put it that way. When I had to ask him, "What…do you have like, multiple personalities or something?!?" then I kind of knew. If you even have to ask that question, then it means somethin' is going on.

Yet, I don't believe these incidents can be classified as full fledged multiple personality disorder, because it wasn't like I would come home one day and try to talk to my brother, or then-boyfriend, only to have them pull a crazy and tell me "Joe isn't here right now..." Or "Who's Steve?? I'm Scott…I don't know who Steve is…." meanwhile, as they believe they really are their alter-ego. You hear about that sort of thing happening to people though.

Later on after I moved my brother out to California to come live with me and Steve, we were talking about his Joe/Shawn thing, and I mentioned my suspicions to him about Steve. He responded with a big grin and said, "Yeah, you didn't know that? I noticed it the first week I was here!"

Yes, I guess I did miss the signs, what can I say. Joe claimed that he watched Steve switch during one of their conversations – Steve's expression changed, like he was suddenly switching personalities, or "coming to"…and Joe could tell that Steve didn't recognize what was going on. Supposedly Steve had an "oh shit…" look on his face, and just played it off so as to not attract attention to the situation. If I myself hadn't witnessed Steve switching from one second to the next that one time, then I would have had skepticism when hearing this.

My own situation is a weird one. Back in 1996, when I was 21-22, long before I knew that I was an abductee and had definitely never heard of government/military abductions and the subject of mind control, I awoke one morning and clearly heard in my mind a male voice saying with big eye rolling disdainful sarcasm, "You have so many personalities you can't even keep up."

!!! What??!? I thought to myself. Where did that come from? It couldn't be a dream – for starters there were no visuals, just a male voice. And why would I dream something like that anyway? I wondered. It wasn't true. So it didn't make much sense. At this point in time in my life I of course know about mind control programming, split off personas, MILABS and abductions, the human males that are involved in mine, and the way in which they sound (almost always with that same disdainful sarcasm).

Then there was another REALLY anomalous incident that happened in 2002. I'll reprint the incident from my log book. Excuse the language, but, this is exactly what went through my mind, and there's no way to censor that in order to appease sensitive types and yet still accurately represent what happened. If anything, the cussing and the attitude is the exact point I'm trying to make here, as you'll see:

> I was standing at the printer [at work] waiting for my stuff to come off and I was staring out the window at the blue sky and the sunny day and the trees. Happened to direct my attention back inside around the office itself. Next thing I know, I temporarily "woke up." Either that, or some sort of program kicked in prematurely that wasn't supposed to. I felt like I emerged from a zombie-like state of trance tolerance, where normally I walk around in an amnesia-like state, tolerating having to work and pay bills and come to this place called C_______ Management, day in and day out, and be with these people, doing the job that I do, putting up with the crap I do.

> All that changed. The amnesia lifted, and I had this realization about WHO I AM. And I was looking around the office thinking, "WHAT THE FUCK AM I DOING HERE??!?!!?" It wasn't like I couldn't remember who I was, or where I was, or why I was there. It was quite the opposite, in fact. I knew EXACTLY who I was, and I was like, oh my GOD…..what the FUCK am I doing HERE?!!?!? Like, we're talking about ME here!!!!! ME!!!!!!!! What am I doing HERE?!?!?!?!? It's not like I didn't recognize the place. I knew it was C_____. I knew it was my work. I just couldn't believe that I was willingly coming here every day wasting 8 hours of my life, every day, HERE. At THIS place. It was almost like, "Oh, while you were sleeping, this is what you've been doing with yourself….." That whole, "While you were sleeping" deal. And when I realized what I'd been doing with myself, I was shocked and appalled and horrified.
> And then I slipped back under the water, and the feeling was gone. All I had left was the intellectual knowing/memory that it had happened, but the mindset itself, that personality, was gone."

What's not mentioned in my log book entry is what would have happened had this realization about WHO I AM not gone away, had it not slipped back under the waves. The personality was aggressive, and had zero tolerance for the mainstream world. None, period. It would not have stayed at work, and it would not have continued living a normal life….going home to the apartment, laying around with the boyfriend, maybe reading, doing some article writing, doing internet research, watching a movie, sleeping, eating, paying bills, and more work at the stupid $10 an hour job. Repeat every day, on and on. Oh no, I don't think so. ;) Not hardly. Now, it wouldn't have been violent, I didn't get that feeling, but it wouldn't have been able to tolerate doing any aspect of the mainstream normal life that we all do every day.

There are two main explanations for what happened here. The first, which is the one I wanted it to be, is that this "awakening" was spiritual in nature, the spiritual/incarnation amnesia lifting and suddenly remembering, if only for one brief shining moment in time, "WHO I AM."

Of course that doesn't explain the cussing and negative, male, aggressive attitude. That personality was anything but spiritual. I've connected to my higher self, and let's just say that the discrepancy between that personality which emerged accidentally while I was at work, and my Higher Self's emotionally detached, yet totally empathetic, wise and understanding nature is pretty glaring. It's night and day.

So, after several years of clinging on to the idea that this accidental personality emergence was the spiritual veil lifting, as pleasant and fluffy as that sounds, I've had to settle on it being an alternate, compartmentalized multiple persona that somehow, someway, was triggered and popped out when it shouldn't have. And this alter was just totally negative, that's all I can say. Which is another telltale sign of it being an alter. Some alters will be childlike, others will be sex kittens. Some will be angry, aggressive one dimensional "rage holders." This seemed to be something akin to the latter.

Several years after this incident I was reading the works of several mind control women who've written about their stories, describing their various alters. One of them in particular, Kathleen Sullivan, author of "Unshackled," supposedly had several very aggressive male personas that were created to do down and dirty work, high stress assignments for her handler "thems." These guy alters were all aggressive business, designed and trained to wield guns and take people out and live in a world that was completely removed from her normal every day core self who went to work, earned money, paid her bills, watched TV, hung with her husband, cleaned her house, etc. I'm not saying that's what my own alter was created for, if it even was an alter to begin with, but it felt very aggressive, male, no-nonsense, and negatively fueled. I've pendulum dowsed it and got each time that this personality emergence was a compartmentalized alter popping out, not spiritual amnesia lifting. In fact, the whole, "Who I Am" thing wouldn't even be an accurate description to describe the mindset, it was more like another side of me emerging that's normally dormant.

I've never been like Joe or Steve, and have never flipped and done 180s as quickly as my mom could and did (with her it was like a thundercloud would descend out of nowhere, and she would just switch, boom, from one moment to the next, then later on act like it hadn't happened…) and I don't have "two me's" and experience black out periods like my dad does. But unfortunately as the years have gone on I've noticed what I consider to be persona instability. And I don't like it. I feel like there are multiple sides of me, who have multiple conflicting views and attitudes and end up contradicting each other. I can feel myself shifting around – but is it just normal mood shifting? I don't know. There's never a complete amnesiac break. Even with the above mentioned incident at work in 2002 I still knew who and where I was. But I've never formally adopted an alternate first name for myself for use in day-to-day waking life, the way programmed multiples often will, and in fact I'm adamantly against that. I'm Carissa. Period. I won't even tolerate a nickname, even when people have tried to give me one. And I've never experienced black out periods, nor have I ever been confronted with a conversation or situation where I was apparently there, but yet, have no memory of it. Thankfully. That to me is where the line is drawn. Up until that point there's a suspicious issue occurring, but it's not serious. When you cross over into black out periods, forgetting things you've done and using alternate names, then you're in trouble.

My own situation is apart from my family, because I've never carried on the way they have, taking things to that extent. I think a person's frequency determines how unstable they'll behave. Both of my parents had very low frequencies, as did my brother – either emotionally volatile, and/or extremely depressed and angry - so their flip flopping issues were QUITE noticeable. On the other hand, Steve always tried to be as emotionally neutral, stable and balanced as possible (reflected by his astrological configuration of being a double Libra, sun and moon), so quite fittingly, his problems went relatively unnoticed.

But the reason that this can go undetected for so long with some people is because the key lies in its subtlety. People are looking for the BIG and DRAMATIC and EXAGGERATED, the way it goes in the movies. But real life isn't going to be like the movie "Sybil."

I'm willing to bet the issue of multiple personas as a side effect of mind control programming is more common in society then we think. When you take into consideration how many military and government agency personnel there are out there, both active and retired…and their families…as well as the number of Hollyweird performers and entertainers, models, singers and television personalities; politicians, corporate big wigs, political authors and other high profile people with huge influence; inmates, juvenile throwaways, sex industry workers and runaways; New Age and religious gurus, and the alternative health, healing and metaphysics arena…that's a hell of a lot of people. And those are all the prime target candidates, according to the research. Main targets are people who are front and center of all major areas in our society that would serve to distract us and/or steer us down the wrong path, as well as society's throwaways, rejects and lost souls who are exploited simply because they can be. However, many of these people still need to function in society and have their double lives, which means their programming would need to be relatively seamless. So subtly is imperative, as mentioned. Which means most of the time, things will go undetected and most of society will continue to remain unaware that this is happening.

The Hyperdimensional and Paranormal Phenomena

An important characteristic of someone who is an abductee is the strange hyperdimensional markers, or fingerprints, that become a part of their life: Ear tones/ringings, synchronicities, deja vus, number sightings, and so on. Ear tones/ringings usually tie in to implants and monitoring, deja vus seem to tie in to timeline manipulation (which I don't get into here, but I do cover on my website), and synchronicities and number sightings can either be a message conveyed to you from something higher, or can also signify timelines being changed around. Very few sources make mention of any of these things, yet, when you start hanging around on the internet you see these things mentioned repeatedly. I write in depth on my website about it all, but here's the overview for those who haven't read it, with some new information not included on the website version:

Number Sightings

This is probably the most common occurrence in an abductee's life, next to ear tones/ringings. When you notice that certain numbers keep appearing to you on the clock, various electronic items, or on stuff that come your way in life, then it usually means something. The more farfetched and unusual the occurrence, then the more meaningful it probably is. I've documented my own number sightings in depth in order to get to the bottom of what the numbers meant for me, as noted on my website, and I highly recommend that others do that if they have this happening. It's extremely useful. The only way to get to the bottom of what a number sequence means for you is by logging the instances of when it happens.

For me, the main numbers that have followed me around for the longest time have been 119, 948, and 141. 119, for my birthday, 11/9. 9:48, for the time I was born. And 141…well, it wasn't originally my number, but it transferred over to me. But more on that in a moment. In 2003, as my awareness grew, the number sightings branched out to include repeating numbers such as 111, 222, 333, 444, 555, 1111, etc., sequence numbers such as 123, 234 and 1234, and even more unusual yet meaningful numbers such as 1133, 1010 and 1212.

So, about the whole 141 transfer thing: 141 had been my brother's personal number, something that supposedly followed him around. With Joe it was always "141 this" and "141 that", although to be honest, I never saw any proof of this, I just took his word for it that it was happening. I myself didn't have numbers that followed me around like that. However, once I moved up to Portland, Oregon in November 2001, that started to change. My time in Portland was an unusual experience, something that was discouraged via obstacles and problems set in my path to prevent me from going, but stubborn and persistent me pushed right past them, more determined than ever, and I went anyway. And not too long after arriving in Portland where I was roommates with my brother, I began to notice that I was seeing 11:09 an awful lot on the clocks. I'd get the urge to glance at my digital alarm clock at home or at the computer clock at work right when it was 11:09. My birthday is 11/9, so the number meant something to me. Coincidentally, before starting to see these numbers in Portland, I'd recently begun assigning the numbers 119 and 948 to myself, usually within passwords and stuff. So I'd consciously reached out to those numbers you could say, which plays a big part in how it can possibly start, I think.

Then the night Joe was arrested in Portland, caught breaking into a building with stolen items on him from a previous burglary, everything changed. It's a long story, which I won't get into here, but that was the night that 141 transferred over to me. Five minutes before the cops showed up with my brother in the back of their car I got another 11:09 on the clock. It literally made me stop in my tracks, frozen in place for a few seconds realizing "Okay….this isn't right…something is happening…" Then the doorbell rang. How right I was.

Almost an hour an a half later when they were asking me to sign a warrant for them to search my belongings (since I roomed with him and was considered equally as guilty until proven innocent) I had to put the date and time on the paperwork. I glanced at the clock, which said 12:21. A mirror number, the same backwards and forward. Not only that, but my full given name adds up to 84 in numerology, and 8+4 = 12. Joe's adds up to 21. ;) Pretty clever.

"But wait…there's more!" 1221 also happens to break down to:

When the cops were finally leaving I glanced at the clock for only the third time that evening. And it was 1:41 a.m. exactly. The cops were leaving at 1:41, with my brother in tow, but the fun had only just begun.

141, and the other two numbers, came up repeatedly throughout the course of that insane weekend. Every time I had the urge to glance at the clock that weekend it was 10:41, 11:41, 1:41, 11:09, 9:48, or some combination, such as 4:11, 10:14, 11:14, 1:14, 11:19 or 9:11. Even when I had the urge to look at my mileage odometer. I was sitting in my car in the Rite Aid parking lot intensely contemplating whether to bail my brother out of jail – yet again – then I had the urge to glance at the odometer, something I rarely pay any attention to. And it just so happened to be at exactly 119,974. My birthday is 11/9/1974. Close enough for horseshoes. It was absolutely out of control, and at the time I had the feeling that there was a tug of war going on between 119 and 141. 119, my number, me, and 141, my brother's number, him, who was dragging me down in life and who I was trying to make a break from.

141 has been a regular part of my life ever since that weekend, four years ago. I would also come to discover that 141 is embedded within my brother's birthday. 1/31/1981. Breaking it down numerology style, which reduces numbers down to single digits, we get:

1 + 9 + 8 + 1 = 19 (= 10 = 1)

Hyperdimensional fingerprints?

In my own log book I would document the date and time of my number sightings – often, the time in itself IS the number sighting, since I'd have urges to keep looking at the clock at key moments – as well as noting anything that I was doing at the time of the number occurrence. Where was I, what was I doing, who was I talking to and what about (if applicable), and so on. Then after you document enough number sighting incidents, along with any other surrounding corresponding phenomenon, you can begin to decipher what everything means. It's also highly recommended to learn the basics of numerology and what the common symbolic/esoteric meanings are behind numbers. What I've discovered is that most things have multiple layers. There is probably a reason why those specific numbers were picked for you in the first place, and that's where having a basic understanding of the language of numbers comes in handy, to decipher the next layer of it all.

Sometimes repeatedly getting a number sequence can be a warning of negative meddling, interference…abductions coming up very soon. Other times it may be a sign that something has been tinkered with on the timeline, good or bad. A lot of new age non-abductee spiritual types believe that number sightings are just the universe's way of trying to get your attention and wake you up. And that could very well be the case for them. For me, I just know that when I'm doing exceptionally good in life and/or averting negative interference, I'll get 11:33, 9:48, 10:10, 11:11 and so on. (9:48 being specific for me personally.) But overall there is no across-the-board explanation that I can offer up for what number sightings mean – numbers will usually be tailored to an individual, from what I've been learning. I expand more on the idea of numbers on my website: http://www.in2worlds.net/numbersightings

However…and there is always the exception to everything…I just discovered while reading a book about UFO researcher Barbara Bartholic that we both have had instances of receiving the same particular numbers – 69. I experienced my 6 and 9 sightings mostly during a very specific time period in my life – during the four months when I worked for what I nicknamed "The Illuminati Hotel" here in Virginia, mentioned earlier in the "Manipulated Jobs" section. And as Barbara knew, and as I myself discovered thanks to her work, the 69's can be a sign of alien/MILABS at work. For instance, when I worked at the hotel I was assigned locker #69. I also began receiving a lot of 6:09's on the clock and in life in general, to the point where it became noticeable, although I had no idea what it meant at the time. So if it wasn't for Barbara's book I would never have gotten the answer to this random piece of the puzzle that was sitting on the back burner all this time. She was the first source that I've come across to even delve into the subject of number sightings in relation to abductions, and she relays in her book all the synchronistic, uncanny ways in which 69's appeared to her in life.

Getting the 69's stopped only when I quit the hotel after four months. And only when I started writing this book back in 2006, and was reading the Barbara B. book and looking back at my time spent at the "Illuminati hotel" the 69 sightings resume once again. For instance, in the middle of writing this book my boyfriend and I were driving past the "Illuminati hotel" one afternoon, about to make a right hand turn at the intersection near where the front entrance is when I noticed that the last four digits on the license plate of the car in front of us was…………..6169. That used to be the log in/clock in code for me at the hotel. The odds of the car in front of me displaying my old log in code and being in front of me at the exact moment when passing by the hotel are astronomical. I also began receiving 6:09 and 6:19 again on the clocks while writing this book, corresponding with some very bizarre alien dreams with MILABS programming, and possible soul abduction attempts where things were kicked up a few notches and became much more overt.

The summary of what I got (via pendulum dowsing) is that "something" was doing some very wacky things to the people who worked at that hotel, unknown to them. My own experiences showed me something was amiss. And I did primarily begin receiving the "MILAB 69's" after working there, exactly as Barbara B. describes. (I only had one 69 indicator before that, back in Florida in 2002, as noted in Part II.) So when I saw Barbara B. mentioning her 6's and 9's, and saw that she connected it to MILABS/aliens abductions, I about fell out of my chair. http://www.in2worlds.net/numbersightings.

Ear tones

Again, another one of the big things that tend to happen to abductees. From my website: (http://www.in2worlds.net/eartonesringings):

"'Ear tones' are intermittent short lived tones, occurring in either ear, which many people seem to experience. Often times they are preluded by a pronounced muting effect, where the sound in the room seems to abruptly shut out as the tone then fades in. So it's a tone that fades in, goes on for a bit, then fades back out. But it's not to be confused with tinnitus, the chronic condition of damaged eardrums where one's ear(s) constantly ring or hum (as I understand it). Go to this link for http://montalk.net/eartone.mp3 for a simulation of what a muting followed by an ear tone ringing sounds like. This was created by my boyfriend, and it's so accurate that it's kind of scary. !!

Ear tones can also leave residual after effects. For me, I've experienced a burning "fried" feeling in my ears on several occasions when they've occurred, much like I'd been chatting on a cell phone for several hours. Sometimes the tone itself causes physical discomfort in the ear, making one cringe. Related to this, I've experienced something akin to a "tuning fork," where the sound was coming from just outside my ear and sounded identical to a tuning fork. It felt like I was literally being "gonged" and caused dizziness and disorientation for a few seconds afterwards.

Other related aspects to ear ringings are ear clickings, "thwumpings," (for lack of a better way to describe it) and muted pressure without a tone.

"Clickings" are just that: clicking noises that seem to come from deep within the ear. My boyfriend has experienced this, which is how I heard about it, and has proven for himself that it's not natural or some biological malfunction. Often times these clickings occur when he's not consciously focused…yet they stop as soon as he focuses in on them.

"Thwumpings" feel very similar to the effect of having fingers flicked in front of your ears according to those I know who have described it to me.

The "muted pressure" is when the sound goes mute in an ear, accompanied by a pressure that usually feels quite uncomfortable. But no ringing or tone follows. This actually seems to be one new mode of operation within my own ear tone adventures, interestingly enough. ;) Since putting this write up out there on the 'net, not only are some of my ear tones now much fainter and shorter than they ever used to be, but there's also this new muted pressure thing as well. Another abductee I know who experiences the tones has recently noticed this "change in operations" as well.

And a new one that a reader just informed me about are ear tones that sound like "Morse code." To quote from her email (with permission): "….These are very very frequent for me, and in fact if I listen quietly enough, I can hear it running deep in the background most of the time. It is a series of two different notes or positive/negative sounds…tone semitone tone, in varying lengths of short and long. Morse code is the only thing I can liken it to…" I thought this was interesting enough to be worth mentioning, in case anybody else reading this also experiences it.

But the most important factor, which can't be stressed enough, is the uncanny synchronistic timing of ear tones. They often happen during key moments, in conjunction with a specific comment said by somebody, or maybe a number sighting, or a déjà vu. It is this aspect of ear tones that really got my attention and proved to me that they weren't a natural, random biological happening with some scientific explanation.

I've had sporatic ear tones throughout my life, but the issue became so prevalent during 2002, due to what I was involved with in life, that I created an entire section of my log book devoted solely to documenting it. The log book contained the following information, if possible:

- The date and exact time the tone happened;
- Which ear it occurred in;
- What the tone sounded like (high, low, strong, faint, short in duration or long; tuning fork, hum, muting pressure, etc.);
- What physical after effects there were, if any;
- What exactly I was doing/saying at the time it happened. What was I thinking about? Who was I talking to? Where was I?

Through documenting this information, I was able to determine over enough time that these ear tones are definitely not random, nor the result of a natural, biological problem with my ears, and most definitely did point to some external situation happening. I was also able to determine that there was a difference in meaning for right ear versus left ear. For me, the left ear has been negative, usually indicating straight up monitoring, or warning me that something is "off" about a person or situation, while the right was positive, sometimes seeming to confirm or reaffirm something I'm thinking or reading. In fact I just came across a reference to ear tones in the book

"Masquerade Party at Secret Canyon" by Jeannine Marie Steiner. The book is one psychic woman's personal experiences into the realm of abductions, mind control, and MILAB harassment, and on page 73 she says:

> "On my way back to Ventura, I drove past Pt. Mugu Naval Base. Stopping at the red traffic light, suddenly, in my left ear I got a very loud ringing noise. To a psychic that's a strong warning that means something is very, very wrong. It means red alert. (Ringing in the left ear is a warning and ringing right ear is positive.)

That was interesting to find someone else noting the same thing I've experienced….and who has independently come to the same conclusion as myself as to the meaning of left ear vs. right.

The more you log, the more you can determine for yourself what may be happening with you and what it means. It's all about logging your stuff – I can't stress it enough. Documenting things focuses your awareness, and in doing so you gain more power over your life.

Now, if you can rule out Tinnitus, and you've definitely noted a pattern and meaningful synchronistic timing to your ear tones, then the culprit behind it all might be monitoring, and/or implants. Abductees usually have implants – it's practically a given, for tracking and monitoring purpose. Many times these implants are located deep within their ears (among other areas, such as the base of the skull/cerebellum area, or embedded up in the nose). Implants are used for monitoring and behavior/thought pattern alteration – aka programming. So in this regard, it makes sense why so many of these ear tones occur while having "unusual" thoughts about the "weird" stuff, talking to certain people, or during key times and dates. (Some recent ear tone happenings occurred within a day or two of a conflict erupting with somebody around me in life. I experienced three ear tones in my left ear within a 24 hour period between December 1-2, 2007, which is very unusual. That means something is up on the personal front. And by December 3-4 I was involved in a "hiccup" misunderstanding between myself and a guy that my boyfriend and I have known since about 2005, which had the potential to result in a permanent parting of the ways on negative terms with burnt bridges. In other words: timeline split. This guy is an abductee who runs several websites about UFO/abduction/alien researchers…as well as promoting my website on his various websites, which gives me a lot of traffic, and is much appreciated. And he also happens to be the target of some heavy duty harassment himself, and it's not the first time that I've gotten ear tones revolving around him. VERY interesting, to say the least. But this is why logging my ear tone occurrences was vital – only after the fact could I look back and see what happened around the time that I got them. In this instance it seemed quite clear why the sudden monitoring going on within a day of our weird misunderstanding and near parting of the ways.)

Another explanation that has been offered up is that the monitoring itself is silent and does not create an audible noise; instead, ear ringings are the body's own self-generated mechanism for alerting you that you're being monitored/interfered with. In that case, "right ear" versus "left ear" are actually the body's own self designated code to distinguish the different sources and intent behind the monitoring. Both theories make sense to me, and I tend to think both can be happening, depending on the situation. For instance: the ear tones which leave an ear feeling hot and "fried" and the tuning fork hum "gongs" which cause disorientation and dizziness could be a result from the actual physical implant – or even something in a neighboring realm affecting me. And the more benign, painless tones could be the body's own self-generated warning system. And as mentioned earlier, what two years of logging has shown me for my personal situation is that left ear tones are usually more "negative" in nature. They occur typically when other abduction weirdness is going on, if I'm speaking with somebody "unusual," or when somebody says something very pointed and strange to me. My right ear tones are often in relation to specific thoughts I'm thinking or important ideas I'm reading. Sometimes they almost seem to be a confirmation of sorts, especially when it happens when I'm thinking about "spiritual" subjects.

And recently a reader from India emailed me to report that for her: "I've found that there is a large natural calamity (Tsunami, flood, earthquake) about 2-3 days after I hear it." So I thought that was interesting and worth mentioning. Also noted in her email, she doesn't have the abductions thing going on the way I do because she's in India. (The whole MILABs and alien abduction phenomenon seem to be running rampant in America as mentioned earlier.) So for those in other countries where MILABS and alien abductions aren't prevalent, then ear tones may have other meanings.

However, I encourage anybody reading this to research the matter on their own, using their own experiences. I have a friend (the aforementioned guy who runs several websites about abduction stuff) who noticed that for him, left is positive while right is negative. So everybody will be different.

I learned how to utilize my ear tones as a head's up warning system. When they occur in the middle of the night, that's not a good sign. Abductions for me are a middle of the night/early morning occurrence, and so when I've gotten an ear tone at 3 a.m. it usually meant somebody was lookin' for me. ;) Ear tones for me are commonly accompanied by other phenomenon throughout the day, and taken together, everything indicates that "something is up." That's why it's so important to really pay attention to these things and keep a log of your phenomenon, and to pool everything together to see the Big Picture. For example, if you have a day where you experience several meaningful number sightings, some synchronicities/deja vu, and an ear ringing, then that's the universe trying to tell you something. And to discover what it all means you have to start somewhere, and that's one logged entry at a time. Then later you can go back over it all and see what was happening on what particular days.

When sleuthing out the patterns, look at everything you can possibly look at. Pay particular attention to the days of the week, the number of the day of the month, the times when things happened…everything. Maybe there's a pattern to when "stuff" is happening to you. There almost always is. And numbers are the best place to start – dates and times. Through documenting my various anomalous phenomenon, I soon learned that my pattern involved the 1st — 3rd of the month, and the 20th — 23rd for abductions.

On a closing note, something that can't be stressed enough here is the need to not get caught up in crazy paranoia regarding this, and other unusual happenings. Try your best to view it with an alert, attentive but yet, detached neutrality. When you start wigging out about things your frequency plummets and you become an easy target. "Stuff" loves nothing more than somebody who's freaked out, paranoid, or angry about the things that are happening to them, taking violent swings at empty air in the dark. Not good. If you're being monitored, there's probably not much you can do about it, so just go with it. View your ear tones as a tool, a head's up advantage, a game – not as the enemy. If nothing else at least they make life interesting, and prove to you that there's a whole lot more to this reality then the mainstream world would have you believe. They help keep you awake and on your toes, paying closer attention to your life than you would have otherwise, which is always a good thing. So, try to maintain a positive, balanced perspective on it all."

Real vs. artificial synchronicities

From my website: (http://www.in2worlds.net/synchronicities):

"…if you are someone who experiences ear tones/ringings, deja vus, or frequent number sightings, or if you consider yourself to be an abductee with a lifelong history of the "weird stuff" happening, then it's safe to assume that synchronicity is another occurrence in your life.

"Synchronicities are meaningful coincidences. We all experiences coincidences in our lives, and many of them probably occur by statistical chance. But every so often there are those that are just so pointed and tailored to a particular detail and to something about you, specifically, that you can't dismiss it. When that happens, statistical probability doesn't matter. Throw it out the window. The only thing that matters at that point is whether it has meaning for you. For example, reading a word right as it's said out loud next to you – the more unusual the word, the more it means something; Objects coming your way or crossing your path/field of view that coincide with an idea or theme you have been thinking about, or matching up to something that has personal meaning for you, and so on.

"Synchs are often time multi-layered. Meaning, they happen several at a time, all connecting together in a cluster that can sometimes even connect to other strange happenings around you. I have a term for it all, which I call lining up. When you experience several synchs clustered together within a day or a few days' time, then it really can feel like reality is aligning in some way.

"Synchronicities can happen for various reasons. Several of my personal theories include timeline alteration, moving up/shifting up to something higher, messages being conveyed from our higher stuff, and so on."

For an abductee however, synchronicities can also be artificially generated courtesy of their human/alien abductors, and usually done for the purpose of influencing/reinforcing the path the abduction target is taking. For this reason, it becomes necessary for abductees to learn how to differentiate between a natural synch, and one that is being artificially generated for manipulative purposes.

I've experienced both types in life, and several of my own artificially generated synchs were documented in Part II, which perfectly illustrates this concept. The "pen from nowhere", the Joseph license plate frame with the trailer hitch, and then there was another one not mentioned in this write up which had to do with moving to New Mexico. Shortly after arriving in Florida I was already thinking ahead about the possibility of moving to the southwest – specifically, New Mexico. I was driving my car one afternoon near the intersection of Sunrise Boulevard and Federal Highway pondering this, and I looked over and saw that……the next car over from me had a New Mexico license plate. !! Wow! I thought. Synchronicity!! Possibly positively reinforcing the idea of moving there! Then the next day I was telling Tom about this as we drove along the same stretch of Sunrise and Federal Highway, going the other direction this time, at a different time of the day……and I looked over to find the exact same car, with the New Mexico plate, right next to us. Again. The odds of this are astronomical. Now it just struck me as being creepy, and very suspicious.

In order to decipher what's what, it helps to understand how positive forces operate versus negative ones. And this is a topic that is a bit bigger than the scope of this write up, but I'll summarize a couple of important points here since it's relevant. But the big one to keep in mind is that positive stuff doesn't use glaring, flashy theatrics designed to "Wow!" you – that's what the negs do when trying to manipulate people. And it usually works for those naïve types who lack awareness, discernment, and healthy analytical and questioning abilities. Positive stuff also doesn't use tactics that appeal to the ego, or that which advocates fear, paranoia, anger, division, etc. But the negs do. If stuff's buttering you up and playing on your sense of self importance, or fanning the flames of discord then you can guarantee it's not a positive force at work. Negs are also quite fond of feeding people lines about whatever they feel you'll fall for, whatever your weak spot is, lying, taking credit for things they didn't do, just all around deception. In general, the rule for positive stuff seems to be the respect of freewill. They usually wait for you to come to them, not the other way around, they don't force anything on you, and if for some reason they do need to intervene to right a no-no that's occurred, they seem to like to slip in and out the door being as unobtrusive as possible, not drawing attention to themselves. This is what my research and personal experience has shown me. So, look at everything surrounding a far-fetched unbelievable synch to see how it's playing out in order to determine if it seems positive or negative.

Another thing worth noting about the nature of artificially generated synchs geared toward influencing abductees is that often times, they may utilize people. I can only theorize why this would be, but I'm thinking it's because people are easy for "stuff" to work through and manipulate. People are also a more effective tool because they can directly vocalize something to us; we're more apt to sit up and take notice of other people telling us weird, synchronistic things…plain and simple. Human psychology.

On an important side note, if you do experience somebody in your own life taking part in a strange synch, try not to fall down the slippery slope of believing that all the people around you are knowing agents that are "in on it!' trying to get you. I've gotten emails or read message board posts from people who were sliding down that slope, and it's not good. So often, so much of what happens to people is a case of synchronicity, or stuff working through people, unknown to them, versus people being knowingly in on some plot.

Try to utilize your intuition and feel out a synchronicity. Artificially generated synchs, for me, have usually felt weird, and even a bit creepy. They're just too perfect in their timing and execution, too manipulative, and too in-your-face. They try too hard. If you're an abductee, then you have to be alert and on guard with the events that happen to you in your life. Not in a paranoid, fearful way, but in a matter-of-fact, aware way. Don't take things at face value, and even more importantly, don't assume that synchronicities are always reinforcing that you're on the right path, or that a decision/idea is in your best interest. Too often naïve New Ager types steadfastly ignore the idea of negative "stuff," making the mistake of viewing everything through a positive lens. Negative stuff does exist though, and it is out there, trying to exert its influence. Which means not everything is always coming from a positive place, including uncanny in-your-face synchronicities that seem to try to reinforce certain life paths. "Stuff" can easily orchestrate events to try to reinforce something that may actually be detrimental, so always pause to question things and feel things out, and above all else, be discerning.

The paranormal

A secondary characteristic that usually emerges in the life of an abductee is paranormal activity.

While living in Florida in 2002 – 2003, my apartment became a portal you could say. It was similar to what I wrote about in my write up "The Vortex," which appears on my website. "The Vortex" was the apartment I lived in with my brother for a year in SoCal and that was completely inundated with paranormal activity. The activity happening in California was a mix of various things, whereas Florida seemed to directly correlate to abductions, and had a negative alien element/feel to it all.

The front main window in Florida had "something" going on with it, and my cat was attacked in it one night, and almost again on two more occasions. And as I relayed in Part II, I had my "dream" where a (UFO?) craft emanating blue-white light descended outside that particular window and blew it in. Also, the corner next to the front door was a hot spot, causing my cat to jump up as high as she could towards it, repeatedly boinging like a springboard, trying to propel herself up into it…exactly as she used to do with the portal above my doorway in California. She'd jump up, then claw into the wall to try to pull her way up to it, only to slide back down, nails screeching against the wall. Woke up one time in the middle of the night to find a blue-green static-y portal thing in front of the door, same as what I experienced back in "The Vortex." Entity harassers came around a few times, one of them we nicknamed "Ralph the rustling plastic bag" (you've gotta have a sense of humor about it all, remember…!) because he was an all black…thing….that would paralyze me into my bed then vigorously shake himself around in my face, making a strange crinkling rustling noise like a plastic bag, trying to terrify me and feed on the fear, I take it. Who knows what he thought he was doing. ;D

There were the times when "stuff" would try to pull me out of my body, also documented in Part II. Another instance where an all black entity entered through the kitchen area, blew through the living room and then disappeared into the front wall/window hot spot area. And still other times when stuff would come around in general, which I would pick up on psychically. There was the occasional weird flashing, where the lighting or the room and surroundings in general would seem to be flashing very rapidly. Both Tom and I witnessed that on several occasions, so it wasn't just one of us imagining it. And on and on and on. I talk about some of these paranormal instances, especially the entity encounters, more in depth in this write up on my website: http://in2worlds.net/and-all-the-rest

During 2002 and into 2003 the apartment had a yucky feel to it. It didn't start out that way when I moved in, but it became that way over time as harassment activity and abductions progressively got worse and worse. I gleaned my bit of very important insight though into the Fear Frequency in early 2003, a year after moving in, and that changed everything. My fear stopped, the harassment and paranormal craziness trickled off as a result, and by the time Tom came back to Florida in May of 2003, after supporting his family through some personal issues back home in Iowa, it was like a whole new apartment. I didn't have to do a cleaning on it the way I did to my room in SoCal, described in "The Vortex", but it felt so much cleaner. Very calm. Positive. When Tom came back it was like a fresh start, because all the stuff that had previously been happening before he left was gone. He also had a whole new mindset, and between the two of us, and our new mindsets and awareness and understanding, the apartment remained (relatively) clean. Stuff occasionally did still happen…but it was nothing like before. It was do-able, and it didn't taint the feel of the place.

Paranormal side effects occur in the lives of abductees for several reasons. For starters, it seems the very nature of non-human abductors creates paranormal activity, simply because of who they are. Wherever they go, the paranormal phenomenon as we view it and label it, follows. Also, when you have "stuff" coming and going from your living space, and they're snagging you on a regular basis and keeping an eye on you in general, then that seems to open doorways in your home, allowing other stuff to get through.

I now wonder in looking back over many of the incidents that happened to me in "The Vortex" whether at least some of them were alien in nature. It never occurred to me at the time, but a later re-read of the book "Watchers" by Raymond Fowler detailing the alien abduction happens of Betty Andreasson turned up a mention of glowing little sparkles – seeming to be a near identical match to "the sparklies," as I called them, which infested my room (until I yelled at them to go away!) And then the time when my room had a yellow tint to it, feeling completely off and wrong (precursoring an attack by a neg entity a day later) - I've since turned up references to "4th density overlays" in 3rd density causing the environment to have a yellow colored tint to it.

But most importantly though is that if an abductee is the target of an active fear campaign, then they may find themselves surrounded by these sorts of strange, fear-inducing paranormal happenings. It goes with the territory, because "stuff" sometimes is looking to sink the abductee in life, and to do so relies on a person's negative/fearful/paranoid personal frequency. Think about what happens to people who are immersed in crazy paranormal happenings and harassment. Their effectiveness in life is drastically reduced, and any positive things they could be doing in life to help themselves, and others in the world, is virtually eliminated. Unless that person gains awareness and can snap out of it and put a stop to it, they're effectively removed from the picture. "Another one down! Mmmwwahahahahaha!" And in the meantime, the feeders get an all-you-can-eat buffet out of the deal.

Right now as I type this in Virginia, we have none of that stuff happening anymore. I had been taking that for granted in fact, until writing this section forgetting how it used to be. As far as I can tell, we still have abductions occurring, but none of the paranormal and anomalous happenings that have typically gone with it in the past. When you're aware and know exactly what to do and what mindset to adopt, they don't bother. There's nothing for them to latch onto. [On a funny side note, as I was typing that last paragraph, we experienced a power surge…three power glitches in a row. That's never happened in the year and a half we've lived in this apartment. (and a 2010 post side note – it's never happened since.) It could be "just a coincidence," but really, what are the odds. And the number three has often been noted as an announcement marker of non-human intelligences, whether it's three knocks, or what have you. So, I took it as a funny little reminder, that "Hello…we're still here…" And the fact that "something" is around and aware of us in order to respond so instantaneously to something I was typing, but yet, isn't kicking up a stink anymore says something, to me anyway.]

The “Chosen Ones”

Alien souls incarnating on a mission, or mind control?

Abductees will often feel as is they’re here on a “mission,” with an agenda to accomplish, and that they are different in some way. Some even feel as if they have to help save the world, that’s how strong the urge is that drives them. I’ve experienced the feeling of having a mission and something important to accomplish ever since I was a kid, and this knowing that I’m not like everybody else, and I’m not here to have the life of a normal person. It was something that was always there, right under the surface.

Some people even take it to the point of believing that they’re not from Earth, they’re alien souls in human bodies - Wanderers, Star Seeds, Indigos, and various other labels that are floating around on the internet and in books. So what’s going on with this? Are we really here on a mission? Are there really alien souls in human bodies right now? Is this just programming, designed to mess with abduction targets? Or is it both, depending?

1. Incarnation goals

In my opinion, it seems that positively oriented souls do arrive here from other realms with an intended goal or plan, with something they’d like to contribute to the world, adding their little bit to the pile to help shape and influence the outcome of life here on planet Earth during these times. I myself don’t go around proclaiming to people that I’m an “ET soul,” yet, I definitely feel as if I’m here to do something big - I can’t just be some normal person content to live out their life and die. And I can easily see myself having existed as non-human beings on other planets. So one possibility is that this feeling could indeed tie into being here on a “Star Seed mission.”

However, even if I have incarnated elsewhere, as other types of beings, I don’t identify with being an “alien” as many of these supposed Star Seeds do, and I don’t mentally reject being human, here on Earth. (For some though it gets taken to that level.) So another possibility is that this mission/drive could be a general all around incarnational goal, their life plan as a human soul, if nothing else.

2. Programming

But then there's the possibility that some people have been programmed to feel special and different because it's serving somebody else's agenda, such as MILABS projects, or New Age disinformation ("crystal children," "starseeds" "indigos" "rainbows" etc.) If one realizes that they are a MILAB, or an alien abductee in general, then they need to look very closely at their beliefs about being non-human, special, different, here on a mission, "chosen," and so on. Especially memories they may have that are associated with this belief. Mind control programming is apparently very vivid and believable and yes, quite effective on many. I don't mean to throw a wrench in the works for people, but for those who can acknowledge that they are an alien abductee or MILAB, then it becomes imperative to question everything one thinks they believe or know about themselves, because the fact is, "they" are programming people, and "they" are experimenting on people, playing them like lab rats.

In the book "Taken" by Dr. Karla Turner, she even gets into this:

> "Ten days later, Angie recalled another abduction, but this one differed dramatically from the previous encounters. […} Inside the van, Angie saw bench seats, carpet, and a large control panel. The other men entered, and Angie wondered if they belonged to some military group.
> "Are you all with the Army, Air Force, Navy or Marines," she inquired.
> The oldest man replied, but she was beginning to have a hard time understanding everything he said. She thought he said the group belonged to an organization called "High Shelf" which worked mainly in "special underground stations." He also told her that she and other "Chosen Ones" were part of a mind-control project, to "carry instructions and temperance, via thought transference" to other people." – "Taken," pages 157-158

Targets who are long term investments in various MILABS programs would in then fact be "special" and "chosen" and "different." For that reason they really are here to do something….for MILABS black projects, that is.

There's also the idea of taking people who genuinely are here on a higher level positive soul mission and derailing them into believing that it really is all just mind control programming, and nothing more. Get them re-routed and sidetracked away from realizing who they really are.

On a side note, in the 2005 sci-fi movie "The Island," the clones in the cloning facility receive some heavy doses of mind control programming while growing and forming in their pods. And one of the big programming commands was to be repeatedly told that they're special….they've been chosen….they're special….they've been chosen… While we're not clones on an island (at least….I don't think we are….! ;) You never know though of course….) just the idea that a movie featured mind control programming based on getting targets to believe that they're special, different and "chosen" of all things was very interesting in light of what I've been pondering in this book. I think there's lots of bits of truth tucked into fiction movies.

Now this doesn't mean that all people who believe/feel themselves to be alien, special, different and here on a mission are programmed, but, some certainly may be. In Part II I mentioned what seems to be a dream of an abduction memory where I was being told of my "reptilian genetics." Yet the fact that I was clearly lying on an exam table under a light, being told this fact by a hypnotic male voice while having some sort of hallucination of little gecko lizards pouring out of my chest doesn't exactly lend credence to the idea. But it's very interesting that "something" wanted me to believe this about myself. Getting a target to believe they're part Reptilian, Gray, or some sort of non-human entity in general when they're actually not can serve a variety of negative, manipulative purposes. So if you've ever had similar ideas, then ask yourself this:

- How long have you felt this way? Is it as long as you can remember? Or did it begin around a certain age? If so, what age? Can you pinpoint the exact time or moment that it began?

- What effect did the belief have on you? Has it changed the way you go about your life in any way, and if so, how? Has it altered your personality? What effects, if any, has it had on your relationships with other people? Has it been positive, negative, or neutral?

- Are there groups or activities that you're involved with as a result of this belief that you wouldn't have been involved with otherwise? If so, again, what are the effects of these activities/groups on you, your life, and your personal relationships? Is it positive, negative, or neutral?

These are important questions to ask for anybody who has found themselves convinced that they may be an alien hybrid or special chosen alien soul on a mission of some sort, apart from the rest of humanity. Take a moment to think about what a belief like that could do. Getting the target to identify with their abductors, and identify with their traits is one thing, for starters. "We're part of the same team…we're on your side, and you're one of us." Also, if the target is somebody who was working for "the good guys" doing positive things in life, it can be a form of sabotage to derail them, get them relating to "the bad guys" instead.

Something I have to wonder is: Before the big New Age movement of the 20th century and all the black ops mind control projects, did people still go around believing that they were aliens in human form? The military/government has had a hand in shaping and influencing the modern New Age movement. With that in mind you have to wonder then if "they" are the ones who are behind creating these ideas and labels in the first place, as part of some sort of experimentation of sorts, where people are messed with and programmed to see what "they" can get them to believe.

The kicker for me is that I once experienced a supposed pre-incarnational memory where I was apparently not human, and coming here on a mission (which I'll get into in a moment), and I also do believe that there is a hybrid breeding program going on in the population, and that this planet has been hijacked by non-human entities. So I can totally accept the idea of hybrids and non-human incarnations on other planets, but the way New Agers typically approach the subject has always rubbed me the wrong way. There seems to be a lot of manipulated disinfo bunk going on. So possibly another angle is that the infiltration into these New Age/metaphysical movements has been to distort what are actually some valid concepts, leading the herd astray. So many possibilities! One has to do a lot of careful unraveling when analyzing what may really be going on.

Then there's the subject of the military/government's involvement in tracking those children who have been labeled by their parents as "Indigos" and one of the "new gifted children." No surprise, but the government has a keen interest in children with exceptional mental and psychic abilities, as evidenced by the declassified government documents detailing their mind control experimentation over the decades. Get the New Age parents scoping their children's talents, slapping labels on them and announcing it to the world on the internet and symposium gatherings, doing the brunt of the talent scouting work so the government doesn't have to. Pretty clever. I didn't come up with this theory though, this is a word of caution I've seen from various people.

In summary I'll leave off with the aforementioned anecdote regarding a pre-incarnational mission memory. It happened one morning in early 2005, right after waking as I was laying in my bed. I had a spontaneous image where I could feel myself in the middle of a group of beings, getting ready to come here. We were not human it seemed. It was a big blur of whooooosh motion as we took off. And we were definitely on a warrior type mission, something we signed up to do you could say. The whole feeling behind it was like the blast of a triumphant trumpet. It was also telepathically conveyed to me that this mission was the reason I've had protection in this life.

Yet I can't just take this as a face value memory, because again, if I can admit in one breath that I've been abducted, used and programmed, then I just cannot accept this as being my truth. Maybe as time goes on I'll tap into something that will give me some real and valid insight into "who I am" in the bigger scheme of things, why I'm here and how I came to get here, but until then, I can't just automatically believe this. But I know that MILAB targets have similar stories to this, and many people out there would just automatically believe something like this, without exercising any sort of discernment. And yet…I have my own personal proof for why this vision would actually be true, various tidbit stories that do confirm this but which I won't sidetrack onto here. So who really knows.

Now, saying that it were true, in a mundane life, something like this can be a welcome ego boost and something to spice things up. In fact, later when I pendulum dowsed it I had a bit of the ego wank going on, I admit it ;) For my line of questioning regarding the protection I have, I asked if it was because I'm a more advanced, higher up soul? Got a loud NO. Is it because I'm special, you know, like higher up than other souls? (notice my inability to get away from that line of questioning. :D) NO. No? huh. (admitted disappointment. Who doesn't want to think they're special, right? haha) Is it just because of what I signed up to do then? YES. That's it? YES. Oh. So basically anybody who signed up to do that then would get the protection? YES. Oh, okay. Got it. It's part of the package. Sign up for such-and-such job, you automatically get the full coverage insurance. ;) But it's not due to be being "special" and "better."

So either something is programming targets to believe mind controlled delusions for various agendas, or, people are being honed in on and abducted because they really are different, and as such, they attract attention to themselves. As always I say…take your pick. I think it can be a mix of both, depending on the person involved.

Abduct me and make me feel special!

In 2006 we were watching a DVD of hypnotist/author/speaker Dolores Cannon giving a talk at a UFO symposium, and one of the things that really jumped out at me was a particular anecdote she relayed. She has what she calls the "thems" (aliens it seems) who will sometimes speak to her through her various hypnotized clients, and one of the big revelations that was relayed to her by "them" was that they are specially selecting people to abduct and genetically upgrade – increasing their DNA strands, and tweaking them overall to be a part of the aliens' master plan for a new Earth, and new people. Dolores recounted how she had been telling the audience this revelation at a previous conference, and how some guy in the audience had piped up with, "Where can I sign up!" She chuckled as she relayed this to her current audience, and the overall implication was that this alien revelation is real, and it's a good thing, and there are definitely people out there who'd love to sign up for this and team up with the aliens.

Now, I really enjoy the works of Dolores Cannon and recommend several of her books on my website, I think she's a great author, but when I heard that I was like, AHHH! NO! slapping my forehead with my hand. It's a huge mistake that many people make, and make for all the wrong reasons. The idea of being one of the selected few who gets chosen to have special DNA upgrades by the God-like aliens is appeal to the ego, as well as relinquishing your power to something outside of yourself.

If a person has a mundane life though this can be quite exciting – and that's understandable. Many abductees get a kick out of being targeted, because it sets them apart from others, it makes their life interesting and different, and some do go as far as to believe they must be special as a result of it all. And there's really nothing that can be said to a person who's in that mindset. They have to figure it out on their own, in their own way, for their own reasons. Can they be content to find excitement and stimulation in other, everyday ways, and not rely on their aliens and abductions to provide that kick? A person can still be apart from the herd and carve out a nice little independent, free-thinking niche for themselves in this reality without relying on their alien/military abductions to provide that for them.

And we definitely don't need aliens helping us to evolve via nifty little upgrades. They are not God or the Creator Source, and they're definitely not something we need to be submissively subservient to, giving ourselves up to them. A person is not going to be better than their neighbor or co-worker for having been specially selected for supposed DNA upgrades. If anything, they are now the alien's little puppet, as I call it, their guinea pig personal property. How can that be a good thing?? Well, unless of course they believe the abductors are good and God-like and that we somehow need them to improve us.

And then there's the fact that aliens that abduct and tinker with you are aliens that also lie, to put it bluntly. They'll tell you whatever you want to hear and whatever you want to believe if it means you'll willingly let them keep abducting you. We don't know what we're signing up for or what we've just given ourselves over to. So just because they're aliens doesn't make them better than us, God-like…or even truthful.

And not only that, but it may not actually be aliens that we're dealing with. Now there's a thought. What if it's a screen memory? What if it's human black-ops military factions doing the abducting and programming, convincing one to believe that they're dealing with happy little Grays from Zeta Reticuli? There the target is, willingly giving themselves up to them, "Choose me! Upgrade me! Make me better and special!" and "they" meanwhile, are programming with drugs and hypnosis and laughing their asses off as they do it. This apparently happens. This seems to be what's going on for many people, unfortunately. So, something to keep in mind.

Because abductions are so shadowy and covert, and because we can't fully know or trust what we're actually dealing with, it's in my opinion that we should just say no to ALL abductions. Turn your back. Walk away. Truly positive forces are available to you whenever you need…who don't have a need for abductions, empty promises and flashy theatrics.

"Just Say No!" to Stockholm Syndrome

With female MILAB targets something I've come across a few times was the mentality of hoping that these guys who are taking them actually care about them in some way and that some of them are actually trying to help them out. Way back at the beginning of things I had wondered the same thing myself, so I can understand how people (and the women especially) would hope that this is the case. It reminds me of a version of Stockholm Syndrome, when captive hostages begin sympathizing with their captors. It's not always easy facing the reality that one is being used and abused, and it's more reassuring to think that whoever these "people" are that deep down some part of them does like you and cares about you. Somehow it makes it "okay," like you have these powerful people or forces on your side that other people don't have. "Yeah, they sometimes do bad things to me, but, don't at least a few of them care about me? Don't a few of them like me and want to help?!?"

This mindset is dangerous, as it gets a person to concede to whatever is happening to them. I don't normally tell people what they "should" be doing, but this would be one of those rare exceptions. (the other exception is me going on record very bluntly stating that I feel people should NOT invite the idea of "alien" abductions into their lives, and should reject the idea of alien saviors, as mentioned in the previous section.) In this case I feel like it would be better for people to face the music and assume the worst case scenario - that these guys are totally using and abusing you, and not one of them has the least bit of sympathy for you and nobody in their group is going to step up to the plate to "help" you in some way. So don't look to them as being any sort of potential force on your side. This goes for MILAB targets, and people dealing with aliens and their half human hybrids. It's one of those times when a black/white, all or nothing viewpoint is going to serve somebody better than risking a slippery slope into Stockholm Syndrome territory.

There's also the programmed "lalala!" response that one can get despite being faced with some glaring evidence of nefarious happenings. I've had that as well. You just feel like it doesn't bother you, shrug. You're aware of it…but you feel like you're okay with it. But the question is, is that the real you feeling that, or is it something making you feel that way?

For me all I need to do is look at what my reaction was during that one "dream"/memory snippet where I found myself face to face with a Gray robotoid and actually not under their control for once. Rage. And the one stony faced white woman in the white coat with her hair pulled back that I've seen in at least one abduction memory snippet as well as two "dreams." More rage. Or the memory flash where I was flat on my back on a table under lights, seeming as if I was in a (drugged/hypnotic) daze, while several guys surrounded me, leering and jeering at me, scratching under my chin. Alarm. Those are the emotions that clue a person into what the real deal is with all this, versus whatever the programming tries to make one feel. Everybody's going to be different, but I know that some of these MILAB women who may start to sympathize with their harassers have their own share of negative memory snippets, "dreams" or bodily indicators showing them the true nature of what's going on with them. That's what a person needs to remember, and use that to push back against the programming.

Savoring the attention

Relating to all of this is repeating pattern I've noticed amongst some supposed gang stalking targets. I wrote an article about gang stalking http://in2worlds.net/gangstalking-and-targeted-individuals so I've received a fair share of emails from people over the past couple of years relating to the subject. And something I've noticed is that there are actually some people who, whether they're willing to admit it or not, don't really want the targeting to stop. For these types, their emails never mention anything having to do with solutions, empowerment, or brainstorming on ways to get harassment to diminish, or stop completely. They don't express any interest in trying to find true understanding behind why this is happening and how it works. Rather, for them it's just about finding a captive audience for their drama, and going in self absorbed circles, along with various manipulations to try to hook me in as a feeding source. Deep down, they apparently like being a victim. They give off a surface appearance of wanting things to stop with all this "indignation"……but their actions (or rather, lack thereof) and the things they say indicate otherwise.

Not too long ago I came across a link on Rense.com relating to gang stalking, and in skimming through the readers' comments at the end of the piece, one comment really jumped out at me. I couldn't read any further after seeing it. It was one commentator attacking/defending against another commentator saying, near identical paraphrase, "If you don't have this happening to you then it's because you're not important!" Then kind of waving them off, telling them to "go back to your insignificant life!"

You're not important. Your life is insignificant. Why? Because you aren't the specially chosen few being gang stalked and targeted. Now, what was I saying again about the ego wank of it all? The way in which supposed victims often feel special for having been singled out? Drama and intrigue. A way to spice up an existence that would otherwise be boring and hum drum. Conversations being listened in on, finding oneself tailed and monitored. "I'm special. I'm so interesting that people want to devote all their attention to me." So do we really think that a person who would indicate that the targeting makes them "significant" and "important" is actually going to look for ways to get this to stop? Do we even need to answer that question?

Not all targets have this mentality, and I've conversed with ones who are all about finding solutions and being empowered (my favorite types, the ones who are truly legit, in my opinion). But some clearly do have the "I secretly like the attention" mindset, and I was able to pick that up in a number of the emails I've received from people, analyzing how they talk in their writing, and what they do or don't say and talk about. It was very evident, although I don't think they even realized it about themselves. I even lamented in my gang stalking article about people emailing me to fill me in on all their gang stalking drama, but never taking even one step to get it to stop. One woman in particular mentioned in her email being closely followed down the sidewalk by supposed harassers who were following her all over the place. (among other activity.) I read that and made a face and shook my head and thought, "That's what pepper spray is for." I don't understand this at all. I've had pepper spray on my keychain since a non-gang stalking related incident in Fort Lauderdale. And I wouldn't hesitate to use it if need be. Everything else about this woman's writing tone indicated a drama queen who was clearly getting off on all the attention, and had no intentions on trying to get things to stop, so really, no surprise there that she wasn't looking into self defense. And as noted, she wouldn't be the only one like that, unfortunately. This is just something I wanted to put out there.

The Big Boys with their Alien Toys

As the reader has probably already figured out for themselves, whatever is going on in my situation is a confusing mess. There have clearly been humans involved in my abductions, and yet, the technology they're utilizing is nothing that the mainstream public is aware of. And the way events are being orchestrated is beyond time, to put it simply, something that only non-human intelligences are supposed to be capable of. Or so we thought. So what's going on here? How can this be? Researchers only rarely talk about military abductions, let alone human/military factions that are acting like aliens. And it's exactly the reason I have had such difficulty in getting answers for my personal situation. We're usually presented with a black and white version of who's behind abductions – it's either regular old human military agents who are technologically on par with the rest of the public, or, it's super God-like aliens. Period. Take your pick.

X! Try again. What I've been seeing are super God-like humans doing stuff that only aliens are supposed to be capable of. However when I've pendulum dowsed my abduction situation on several occasions I've gotten some unusual answers. When I asked, "Am I being abducted by human military?" fully expecting the loud "Yes" and already mentally moving on to the next question, the answer instead came back as...."Maybe."

?? I thought. "Maybe" for me means keep digging, there's more to this then just simply yes or no. So then I asked, "Am I being abducted by aliens?" And got another maybe. Maybe?? I thought. What does it mean, maybe? It can only be humans or aliens...right? What is this weird wrench in the works! I asked again and got the same Maybes. hmm. Finally at a loss for why it wasn't black and white yes/no, and not sure where else to go with this line of questioning, I finally thought to ask, "Am I being taken by hybrids??"

And I got a very clear YES. And I've gotten a clear yes every time I asked that question afterwards.

For starters, there's always the big possibility that pendulum dowsing is nonsense and it means nothing at all. But if it's valid, then this answer can mean different things. While one possibility is that yes, I'm being taken by literal "alien/human genetic hybrids", a secondary meaning could be human military spooks utilizing alien technology with alien buddies. So, an operation that is a "hybrid" of the two sides.

There's a reason I've gone around in my life and on the internet saying that the set up of this reality, and the things they want us to believe are lies. There are government/military factions running around out there completely removed from the mainstream government. They have technology we're supposed to think doesn't exist. I know this because of the things I've seen, which aren't supposed to be possible according to the accepted laws of reality on the surface civilian world of the sheep herd. Meanwhile, we the public are still driving around in metal boxes on rubber wheels and flying in the same-old combustible engine driven aluminum tubes, completely immersed in personal dramas, entertainment fluff, and illusory world strife that serves to distract us. There are clearly two worlds – or more – happening, and they've successfully got about 95% of the population herded very tightly into one reality option.

What researchers know from experience and by talking to abductees is that the military has the ability to beam messages via microwaves/ELF waves at people, as well as being able to communicate to a target via their implant(s), creating that "voices in the head" phenomena. This technology is old news in fact, going back decades. I myself believe I witnessed what appeared to be a "beam me up" laser, as well as having personal experiences where it seemed as if I was plunked back into bed very suddenly from someplace else. And "somebody" was quietly moving about my apartment in Florida, barely disguised with some sort of cloaking technology. This is all pretty far out there stuff, but yet still relatively easy for the brain to digest, and all quite plausible when you stop and ponder it.

But then what about when we get to the areas involving reality manipulation, time manipulation, and synchronicities?? Those are concepts that the brain doesn't have such an easy time trying to decipher and seems beyond the range of human capability. If that infamous "pen from nowhere" back in Portland mentioned in Part II really was what I think it was, then how is that possible? That's literally like somebody was sitting behind a curtain that separated my reality from theirs, and was able to reach into this reality and alter it from behind the scenes, so to speak. But…behind the scenes where? Where is "behind the scenes"?

This is the point where people begin to think it has to be the aliens, but again, I've had experiences that show humans being intricately involved in these activities. Aliens don't speak with sarcastic human male voices and toss around very human writing instruments. And that's when it's time to face the music – there are human elements on this planet who can do these things, and it doesn't matter what the media, schools and "Powers That Be" tell you about who's who and what's what here on Earth…there's a whole reality going on right under our noses, and we're purposely being shielded from it. That shielding is exactly how they can keep doing what they're doing. We're still driving around on those metal boxes with rubber wheels, mind you – but do you think that's all The Powers That Be are capable of? If all those reports over the decades of alien contact are real, then why wouldn't the two sides have joined forces? There's always that possibility though that humans got there on their own, in which case, it's highly likely that some snazzy high level physicists have been spirited away to work for the government black ops and to develop teleportation technology, time travel, realm and time manipulation, and the like. It seems possible and highly likely, considering that the Navy was experimenting with invisibility and time holes…during WWII, with their Philadelphia Experiment. And that was 70 years ago. 70+ years from 1944 should put us into some pretty advanced technological territory.

The only problem is…what we're seeing here on the good old surface world is relative stagnation. Most people aren't noticing this though. Because their cell phone models become more refined and car bodies get slightly tweaked and we have more distraction tactic techno gadgets to play with, we're supposedly "progressing." ;) Keep in mind that electronic swipe cards and flat screen computer monitors - just to name a couple of relatively recent technological "advancements" - were old hat to the secret military factions…decades ago. When you do the research into military abductions you'll find abductees describing these yet-to-be-invented technologies during abductions that took place many years ago.

It's been said that "They" are 30 years ahead in their technology versus what the public is allowed to know. 30 is a low estimate I think, the number is probably a lot higher. It's also one of those oft-quoted sayings, which makes it suspicious. It's a bit silly to even try to make estimates about where the technology timeline is really at when we the public are missing most of the story. What I've experienced/understood about this secret technology has led me to seriously question just how far behind we, the general population, have been held back, and how much reality has been manipulated to keep us asleep and out of the loop. What's actually going on here on this planet anyway? It really reminds me of the scene in "The Matrix" when Morpheus tells Neo, "You believe it's the year 1999, when in fact it's closer to 2199. I can't tell you exactly what year it is because we honestly don't know." So while it may be 2006, the fact is the mainstream public is being held down, held back, and kept out of the loop of progress, which in effect creates a distortion about where/when we really are. "Stuff" has gone on without us, and they don't want to bring the common riff raff along with them. ;) And actually I can understand that, I'm just neutrally bringing this fact to people's attention if they haven't already figured it out for themselves.

An interesting thing that I've also noticed is how many average people believe that if this secret government technology and these other layers of reality existed, well, they (Joe Average) would certainly know about it, right? The fact that they haven't heard about it and don't know about it means it plain old just doesn't exist, and that the rest of us who say differently are quite obviously crazy. Well, not to burst their bubble, but honestly…who is this Joe Average to "them"? Nobody. So why does Joe Average think they would – or should – know about it? The slave owner doesn't report to his slaves. It's the other way around. But the surface world has done a lot to pump up so many people's egos and confidence, making people think that they're somebody special and important because the media tells them so twenty times a day, and also because they may even have a lot of money, a special title, a big house and three or four cars and a stock portfolio. It creates confident know-it-alls with highly inflated egos who believe they should - and would - be aware of such things. In truth, they're still an ant like the rest of us, despite their money, titles, houses and cars. Just a rich, glorified ant with a few more privileges. That's all. And they're still going to be out the loop about what's really going on here on Planet Earth, whether their ego can handle hearing that or not. And for the rest of us who have discovered that something is amiss, we only know about it because we stumbled onto it accidentally due to being abductees. Otherwise we wouldn't have a clue about it either.

It's not an easy topic to address, as it sounds very pessimistic and negative. But I put it out there in a matter-of-fact way. (And to clarify – when I refer to us as ants I'm not implying that we're forever destined to be powerless drones at the mercy of higher forces. Humans have boundless potential that most of us never realize or tap into. But as long as we continue to not realize who we are and not tap into our potential, then yes, we will continue to be ants. The biggest part of not realizing "who we are" involves us behaving as disempowered victims, which is discussed in other areas of this book.)

The biggest obstacle in overcoming the confusion surrounding my abductions was realizing this very simple fact – there are human military/government factions utilizing what we would consider to be alien technology, doing things that would really stretch a few brains. So either they managed to get there on their own, or, they had a little help from their alien friends and are now working side by side with them. So which one is it?

End Notes

It's now 2010 as I work on this revised version of Chasing Phantoms and a lot has changed for me since the initial writing of this in 2006. First and foremost I'm no longer the exact same person I used to be. It's been only four years but in a lot of ways it feels like it's been more than double that. There are reasons for this, which I won't sidetrack onto, but part of it is just the natural aging process and the knowledge and subdued personality that goes with it. Secondly, and just as important, is that so much of what used to happen in my life no longer does. This was already the case in 2006 when I first wrote this book, which I mentioned in the "Paranormal" section, but it's even more so now. Overt weirdness erupted in my life starting in 2000 with "The Vortex" back in California, http://in2worlds.net/the-vortex followed me to Portland, Oregon, then on into Florida full force, and then began trickling off after we moved to Virginia in late 2004. Random things happened throughout 2005-2007, but as the years wore on it all began to seem like a distant memory. That's why by this point in 2010 it's gotten easy to slip into complacency, and even doubt, about the weird "MILAB" type of circus diversion – and even the more subtle, weird reality happenings - that used to make up my daily life. In reading back through my old log books while compiling this update I've been struck by all the more subtle woo-woo that used to go on back then as well, not just the overt circus diversion. It's stuff I don't even bother to get into because it's not necessarily related to the subject of MILABS and mind control. It's just strange and impossible reality happenings indicating a fluid realm you could say, and reality not being what it seems to be, which can follow certain people around. I may add them to my other book, "….And all the rest. Miscellaneous Stories of the Weird and Unusual."

It doesn't mean absolutely nothing ever happens anymore. I still get the occasional strange bruise on my body, and then sometimes parasitic neg entities trying to manipulate moods/thoughts, which have to be removed. But other than that, it's all very dull I must say. Under the radar. No circus diversion. No impossible reality happenings and fluid realms. What is the reason for this change? Why has the overt harassment and fluid realms phenomenon not continued to plague my life as it does for so many people? There's a few possibilities offhand. For one, there's the fact that there are different groups doing different things to different people. So not everybody will be the same in terms of what is happening to them, obviously. Some may do worse things than others, some may give it up more easily, I don't know. There's also the fact that the targets themselves are different, and so what's "allowed" for one may not be "allowed" for another. Everybody's here for different reasons, with different soul backgrounds, and not all of us are going in the same direction, so that has to be factored in for why the rules of the game are different for certain people. And there's also the idea that certain areas of the country seem more susceptible to stuff than others. California, and especially Oregon and Florida, seemed to be far more unstable and susceptible than where we currently live in central Virginia. (though they certainly wouldn't be the only vulnerable locations in this country, as already mentioned earlier in this book.) So location can't be ignored either. Some places are very "vortex-y" and glitchy.

And yet another possibility, which was brought to my attention by my boyfriend Tom was the idea of sun cycles and its effects on the way our planet functions. A possible link that I never would have noticed was that at the height of our Florida weirdness in 2002-2003, the sun spot cycle was hitting a maximum period, with all kinds of crazy solar flare activity happening. X class level flares were being thrown off the sun left and right, it was nuts. This certainly may have played its part in why reality was more fluid and glitchy back then, and why paranormal activity was able to seep through so much easier. The trickling off of woo-woo activity coincided with our move away from Florida, our personal frequencies changing drastically….and the solar cycle going into an extended sleep mode. So it's hard to tell which factor was exerting the most influence on things. Maybe it was all three.

Ultimately I think the major part of it was the personal mindset frequency shift that was emphasized throughout this book. Things happen to targets when it gets a rise out of them, makes them paranoid, or even cripples their personality. Things give it up when a target laughs with manic giddy glee and genuinely think it's funny. I feel like it's safe to definitively conclude this now beyond any doubt. By the end of our time in Florida Tom and I were able to stop most things that had been happening just by changing our vibes alone, and that was despite the susceptibility of that area. If you don't care and aren't responding, if you aren't even noticing and paying attention to most of what stuff is doing, and if you're not scared when you do notice, then "stuff" has no choice but to give it up and move on to somebody who does notice, and does react.

Yet……..the other part of me has also wondered whether "stuff" doesn't just "let" me believe that I had any part in my life settling down and returning to normal. "Yeah, sure, that's right, you actually did something to change the outcome of things. Yup, it's all you. bwwahahahahahhaha!" (condescending pat on the head.) :D When I was originally writing about this in the "Paranormal" section back in 2006 our power glitched three times in a row in the middle of me typing, as if saying, "Hello, we're still here. We haven't gone anywhere." But I do see evidence for all those times when stuff seemed to stop the second I changed my internal reactions. As overly simplified as that seems, maybe that's really all it takes. Even John Keel talked about this, as referenced in his telling quote earlier in this book.

So sure, maybe something is just "letting" me think that I had some part in things, or…..maybe it really is like that one dream I had back in 2006 or so. Where "they" were chasing me all around, trying to catch up to me and get me, only to discover that when they finally caught up to me we were both phased out of each other's frequency. I'd changed too much and now they couldn't do what they wanted to do with me anymore.

And on a final note I want to say that this book is my personal experiences, as well as my thoughts and theories on what basically amounts to an overwhelming amount of information that one must sort through when trying to get to the bottom of what's going on in this reality. As a result certain things may be off base, which I fully realize. (Considering what we're up against it's amazing anybody can manage to get anything right at all.) I'm sure I'm wrong about something somewhere, so if you find something you don't agree with then use it as a catalyst for seeking out your own conclusions. Everybody has their pieces of the puzzle, and I don't profess to have the puzzle figured out in full, not by a long shot. But that's why this book has grown and evolved since its first incarnation back in July of 2006, because along the way I've gathered up more pieces.

I don't want to be wrong - not because of ego, but rather because I'd like to be able to help people, so the less wrong I am, the better I can accomplish that. And so the perfectionistic side of me is inclined to not want to put anything out at all if some part of it is going to be inaccurate or if I don't have all the answers. However I also realize that to not put anything out at all is even worse than putting out something that may have some wrong bits in it. So, here we are. If more insights and revelations come in I'll keep revising and adding to this book, as always…..

Appendix

In early versions of the book I used to have an Appendix, where I attempted to outline what my family and early life was like. This was because I realized that a lot of readers are going to be wondering about the rest of my background. What were the parents like? Are they aware of the weird stuff? What was the childhood like? What about my brother Joe? How did he become what he later became? What's the deal??

Unfortunately I was never able to do the story any justice (in my opinion) and in the end decided to yank the whole thing. But in short the previous version discussed my empty mother whose behavior over the years disintegrated into verbal/emotional/physical abuse and whom I've purposely had no relationship with for 20 years now. Often times she behaved like a hostile, mildly cognitively impaired five or six year old trapped in an adult's body. I've gotten feedback from some readers saying that when they read the earlier Appendix they were "gobsmacked" or got "wound up" in an agitated way about the things that I described about my mom. The anecdotes were endless, and just when you thought it couldn't get crazier, it did. She behaves like a caricature. It's so far out into left field as to be almost unbelievable. (hmm…"the experiment"? Makes me wonder…) She wasn't a monster all the time, in fact she could drift along for periods at a time in this bland kind of empty state where she was relatively okay, for the most part, even being "happy." (though she still wasn't emotionally bonded with me and Joe even during these times, there was always an arm's length detachment.) Then she'd switch. Bland...hateful. Bland…hateful. In later years as she disintegrated the hateful periods were also accompanied with full on rampages.

The closest description I've come across that fits her is Borderline Personality Disorder. She was diagnosed by a psychiatrist when I was 17 as having a "personality disorder," but Borderline is the one that fits the most as I'd come to discover in my research. In one particular book I've come across, "Understanding the Borderline Mother: Helping Her Children Transcend the Intense, Unpredictable and Volatile Relationship" by Christine Ann Lawson, the author divides Borderline mothers into four main archetypal groups, and the one that she terms "The Queen" was the most spot-on for my mother, whose primary state is emptiness and treats her kids as personal servants and who can never be pleased; along with "The Witch," who is hateful and goes on abusive rampages; and a dash of the paranoid, delusional, secretive "Hermit" thrown in there as well. The author had examples of the kinds of verbally abusive things that the Borderline mothers will say to her kids – usually one child in particular that she's singled out to be her target - and they were exact quotes my mom had said to me. The author also noted very specific types of behaviors that Borderline mothers will engage in, which were identical to my mom as well. It actually made me gasp out loud when I was flipping through the book at Barnes and Noble. It was like the author was a fly on our wall growing up. So if anybody out there has a crazy abusive Borderline mother – get this book. If nothing else it'll at least validate your experiences.

So yes, there's a reason I have zero relationship with her. It's a very unusual situation, as most people don't cut off contact with their own mothers, let alone do so when they're still young. But as a result of her increasingly abusive and mentally unstable behavior over the years I had no choice, and we had no bond anyway. We already had no bond by the time I was only six years old, and by the age of nine I was wishing to be out on my own, away from her and declaring that I hated her in my diary. By age ten I was already proclaiming to one of my friends at school that as soon as I could get away from her when I was older I would never talk to her again. Forget by the time I was a teen and how I felt about things then. I never internalized her treatment, thinking the problem was me the way a lot of kids do, I always knew it was her without a second hesitation, and knew that I needed to get away from her. I had a strong sense of self, feeling like an adult in a kids' body who knows better, so it pissed me off to have to be subjected to her.

And then I had a very real (unlike my mom), but also very damaged and flawed dad who in the end slipped under the waves, choosing oblivion. (In many ways he fits Christine Lawson's archetypal dad description of "The Fisherman," who lets the crazy abusive "Witch" mother wear the pants and just looks the other way and doesn't protect his kids, combined with the "Huntsman," the hardworking, ethical provider who emotionally distances himself from his family and also fails to protect his kids from the mother.) But we'll get more into him in a short bit.

And as far as my brother Joe goes…I wouldn't even know where to begin. I compiled a write up for myself to document his story and what happened there, but that's not for public consumption. A lot of it would actually be considered boring for most, as it's basically a sister's sentimental tribute to her kid brother. And then for the stuff that people would find exciting, involving his many – many – instances of cop dodging and criminal mayhem (or outright getting arrested) it's material that I don't want to put out there for the public. I have a "reader's digest condensed version" background on Joe that can be found at the beginning of my "Vortex" write up, so I'll just refer people to that if they're interested to hear a little more about him. http://in2worlds.net/the-vortex A mug shot for my brother from 2008, which appeared online for a news station that ran a story about his (petty) criminal activity also served as proof of sorts of what I'd been saying to Tom about my brother. As upsetting as that was to see (there's a part of me that will not stop seeing him as "my little brother", no matter what I've witnessed of him since that time) it was also finally some confirmation verifying what I'd been saying about him all these years. Official proof of something. As of right now I know that my brother's either had warrants for his arrest or been arrested in Connecticut, California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Georgia and Vermont, though he's lived/traveled in/to more states than that (including New Orleans, LA and Florida) and could very well have more. Those are just the ones I'm aware of through personal knowledge or internet research. He's been crisscrossing the country living as a wandering homeless vagrant I take it, since I ran for the hills from him back in 2002, making his living as a criminal it seems though he may have found legitimate work in the middle of that somewhere along the lines. I was shocked that he looked good in a recent mug shot from 2008, after living like that for years. He looked like he hadn't aged a day since I'd last seen him at age 21, in early 2002. He didn't look happy, but he looked good, considering. Part of me wanted to go find him and rescue him, the old programming holding strong, but I had to remind myself that Joe can't/won't shake the sociopathic behavior, and him being in my life means the cops will always be a regular fixture, as well as my life always being in danger, on top of him robbing me blind all the time and using me/manipulating me. He had no shame and minimal conscience by the time I last knew him in life. Anything I ever gave him, including two cars, he destroyed with no remorse.

Another major component of the original version of the Appendix centered on the personality training and rewiring that happened to change me from one thing into another. Lots of story there. A mix of unhappy home life and dysfunctional parents, living in a crappy, culturally dead small town in rural eastern Connecticut, and years of intense bullying by some kids who lived on our street, which went on for fully eight of the nine years we lived there in some form or another. And who knows what else that may have been going on "under the radar," as evidenced by this book, which has to be factored in. So by the time I was in my mid teens I was barely recognizable as the kid I started out as. As a child I was a sociable extrovert, very conscious and sharp. (a couple of times in this book I talk about being conscious enough to have memories as a baby, which is apparently rare, but that's a major component of this sharpness.) But by the teen I was in an introverted, zombified stupor, all my walls on lockdown. During the time period between 15-17, overlapping between Connecticut and California, I have memories that are missing either the beginning, or the resolution, where I no longer remember the why's and how's, or where entire weeks of my high school experience are gone. I don't know, I don't remember, because even though my body was there, my consciousness was off somewhere else. (as evidenced by failing out of most of my classes after we moved to California. !!! In 11th grade I had no idea what was going on half the time, didn't know about homework, or tests, a kid would come up to me to ask me something and I had no idea who they even were….they're in my class?...?? huh? Things would sound far away while I sat there in class, distorted, like a fog.) "She's not there….." as the song goes. That was me. I even forgot to eat for a period of time apparently. I just know that one day in October of 11th grade I realized that my body looked a bit emaciated in my bedroom mirror. I finally saw myself and got on the bathroom scale where I saw that I had dropped down to 97-98 pounds, from my normal 105-106. (may not sound like much but I was only 5′2″ at the time, so, it's not like I had much to spare. O.o) Realized I couldn't remember eating anything recently….or remember much of anything that had been going on at all in general.

Yet conversely I was (mostly) "there" for my after school job. Don't know why the paradox/contradiction, unless it's because my job was something enjoyable, unlike the home life and school. Things only started to change for me by my senior year, and got better from there, improving every year.

And then there was the whole way in which me and Joe were kept isolated away from most all of our entire family, save for only our maternal grandmother, but even that was spotty depending on whether my mom was getting along with her or not. So I have grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins, etc. on both sides of the family, including a half sister, that I've never met and never will due to that whole deal, or where we did meet them when I was really young back in Massachusetts, but then things got cut off and I never saw them again to this day.

So obviously it's a lot of story. But for this latest version of my book what I've decided to do is just to focus on my dad, eliminating most of the childhood and upbringing aspect of the tale. Both are equally important, but since I can't do the whole story any justice, without coming across as "woe is me" then let's just focus on his background since I reference it several times throughout this book. He's an integral piece of the puzzle. The story didn't start with me, and I feel that it's important for readers to understand that we need to be looking at our parents – and maybe even further up the family tree, depending - if we want a more complete picture of what's going on. Especially if one's parents were in the military, and even more so if they were in military intelligence, like my dad was. I think it's safe to say that for anyone who considers themselves to be an alien contactee or a MILAB that the story started before they were even born.

Much of the following is taken from the first versions of the Appendix, so anybody who read that way back when may remember it. However there's new add-ons and commentary.

My parents were avid believers in "the weird" and didn't harbor negative superstitious attitudes in regards to these topics. In fact, it was quite the opposite. Ghosts, psychic powers, UFOs/aliens, reincarnation – my parents were definitely open to these topics and didn't bat an eye at any of it, and never questioned me when I was checking books out of the library about it all. If anything, they inadvertently encouraged my interest in the subjects by theorizing about these subjects at the dinner table. Psychic powers and stories of mom Christine's psychic experiences as well as my grandma and great-grandma; past lives, and my parent's random memories of such;

UFOs, and my dad Bob's recounting of his one big UFO experience while in the military; Haunted houses and ghosts – and the haunted house my dad lived in from the ages of 10-18. Then there was my dad's astral travel experiences ("flying" as he called it) and his own demonstrated psychic abilities. And so on. I heard it all. It was my Dad who first taught me about how Man has made incredible technological jumps in the 20th century, and theorizing that it probably came from aliens. I was probably one of the few kids who even had the concept of the vast leaps that humans have taken in such a short time span…and had family that concluded that it came about through alien intelligences…and talked about it at the dinner table. I was into anything on TV or in the movies that related to the paranormal. "Close Encounters of the Third Kind," "Poltergeist" and "Raiders of the Lost Ark" were my all time favorite movies by the age of ten. Also by the age of ten and eleven, I'd worked my way through most of the books on the subjects of aliens, UFOs, abductions, ghosts, psychic powers, and the paranormal that you can possibly think of that our tiny local library had in stock…in the grown up section. And I just loved those "Time-Life Mysteries of the Unknown" series. ;) By 7th grade I gave a report in one of my classes outlining various psychic powers. In 10th and 11th grades, both Connecticut and California, it was the reports about UFOs and aliens. And in 12th grade it was something paranormal woo-woo, can't even remember what. It was during our psychology class' two week foray into parapsychology, and all I remember is that my report sparked an interactive discussion where our teacher and the entire class were all sidetracked, talking about paranormal woo-woo for the rest of the period. :D (Let's hear it for Mr. Beidler. Probably the only time in the mainstream public school system where kids were encouraged to discuss ghosts and psychic powers and learned how to dowse the human body's energy with metal coat hangers.) But there was a need to talk about these subjects and to "wake others up." I didn't much like the fact that the every day real world (at that time) didn't talk about these subjects, and in an open way. The shallow, mainstream, trivial boring stuff of money, college, economics, politics…my attitude was, who cares??! To me, the only subjects that felt real were the things that the majority of society wasn't comfortable talking about and didn't believe in. At this point in the 2000's things have changed for the better, with a less repressive environment for discussing these things, which is good.

Yet there was an odd paradox with my parents, because they weren't New Age hippy dippies, which is the typical stereotype for people who are interested in those subjects and discuss them openly. They just, for whatever reason, were into these subjects. For my dad it'll become obvious why in a short bit.

At a private gathering in 2005 of free-thinking people who are into "the strange," for lack of a better way to put it, one older guy in his 50's made small talk with me by asking if I was interested in the subject of aliens and UFOs. It came about because I recommended the book he was flipping through, "Rule by Secrecy," by Jim Marrs. So when he asked that question I kind of laughed, and inside my head I rolled my eyes. I hesitated before answering. I was 30 years old at the time, and I'd been researching aliens and UFOs since I was nine. I'd read so much by this point that I couldn't honestly claim to be "actively" interested in aliens anymore. In fact, the subject was tired and worn out to me. Nevertheless, I said "Yeah, sure," nodding.

"So what got you interested?" he smiled, curious.

"My parents actually," I said, realizing it consciously for the first time. I had independent interest in it, but because of their acceptance of it all and the stories they shared and the movies we were watching, it quadrupled my interest and encouraged what might have only been a passing fad in my life.

For some reason, this genuinely threw him off. His smile faded, and he looked puzzled.

"I started heavily researching aliens when I was nine, but to be honest, I'm not really that interested in it anymore," I elaborated. "I guess I'm just kind of over it at this point, you know?"

He still looked surprised, kind of like "Huh. Well alrighty then!" That was the end of that conversation. I wasn't purposely trying to shut him out, I was just being honest. I do think that he was expecting to hear that I'd only recently become open to the subject on a shallow surface level, and probably only due to some recent silly experience or something. When in fact I'd been researching these subjects for literally most of my life, was indirectly encouraged by my parents, and am completely embroiled in the whole abduction phenomenon. (Though I never realized it for most of my life.) As well as being matter-of-fact about it all. I guess all four are a little unusual.

My dad Charles, but who goes by Bob, was born in December of 1949 in Manhattan, New York. He was the conservative Reagan Republican, former military (Navy, 1968-1972, Vietnam) from a Catholic background including Parochial school until 8th grade, back when they had nuns that could beat you up. Reading "Conservative Reagan Republican military Catholic" might conjure up images of uptightness, but he wasn't as bad as it sounds – he was raised Catholic as a boy, but that was later abandoned, and his family was a dysfunctional mess. His stories were always so much fun to listen to when I was a kid. They all seemed to center around drinking, fighting, boinking, and playing in two different bands. (mostly guitar, but apparently some drums, and singing too.) In between getting good grades in school though, because he was smart. He had the craziest stories, but they were the best. There's a lot to say about my dad and his dysfunctional family and the life he had, but I'm going to skip over most of it and keep this to the bare bones minimum.

My dad's early childhood was spent in New York City, in Manhattan. His own father, my grandfather, was half Italian from his immigrant dad, half Hungarian from his immigrant mom, and he was also former Navy, and a bit on the crazy side. (I'm not going to be mentioning names of other family members to keep it as anonymous as possible.) My grandfather had a hellacious temper, inherited from his own father, which involved a lot of corporal punishment on my dad you could say. Very strict, no messing around, a bit abusive. My dad and grandfather weren't close at all, and did not have a good father-son relationship and spent years estranged from each other.

My dad's mom was of English descent from a family line that at one point was pedigreed, and had ties to George Washington and King George III way back when – red coat "tories" in the Revolutionary War. I've always wondered if that part of the family had anything else besides English going on with their ancestry, especially since they've been rooted in the U.S. since the 1600s, but there's no way to know at this point.

So that's my dad's ancestry, English, Italian and Hungarian. He and his two sisters were skinny and all had blond hair, tan/olive skin and brown eyes, everything I would later inherit.

In retrospect, with what I know now, it's safe to say that my entire family has been involved in abductions – especially my dad - although they consciously didn't realize it. It seems my Dad had gotten the interest of "something" dating back to when he was just a kid, growing up in New York. Like father, like child, and so his abilities and weirdness were passed on to the next generation, to my brother and I. My dad could have gotten the attention of "stuff" possibly due to any or all of the following: 1) His dad had also been in the Navy (meaning, possible MILABS situation going on); 2) He had natural psychic abilities which attracted the attention of "them," whatever "them" is; and 3) He lived in the Hudson Valley area of New York - New York, and the Hudson Valley in particular, is supposed to be a hotbed of UFO/base activity. A recommended book by Ellen Crystall called "Silent Invasion" details the UFO craziness that was going on in the Pine Bush/Hudson Valley area in the 80s…she even specifically mentions Middletown, New York, where I was born.

My dad once relayed a strange experience that took place in a park when he was little, maybe around eight or nine. It was in the late afternoon/early evening, and involved something with his "vision," and things looking really different, not normal. He had a difficult time trying to explain to me what exactly happened, but basically he wasn't seeing things correctly. Everything looked strange and bizarre. Sounds to me that he was possibly seeing a realm bleed through, I don't know.

From ages 10-18, after his parents' divorce, he lived in a raised ranch style - haunted - house in the suburbs of Monroe, New York with his mom, step dad and siblings (which now included three additional half sibs, for six kids total). The tract neighborhood was brand spanking new but apparently had been built right on what used to be a cemetery, alongside a creek. My dad figured this out when he and one of his sisters found broken pieces of headstones in the soil of their brand new, still grass-less "yards." Ooops. So they had years of paranormal experiences - lights coming on in the middle of the night, footsteps walking up and down the hallway, the temperature in his mom's room rapidly dropping, becoming as cold as a refrigerator to where you could see your breath…in the middle of July. Despite the fact they had no air conditioning. And more. I remember some vague story of something that happened one night in the backyard when he was a teen, some apparition, or lights, or who knows what that terrified him to the point where he had difficulty even explaining to me what exactly happened. I have no idea if these paranormal happenings related to the supposed cemetery that used to be there, or if it was for a completely different reason. In my research I've discovered that paranormal activity and UFO/alien activity usually go hand in hand. Where one is, the other is sure to follow.

After hitting puberty, he noticed that sometimes lights and electronic gadgets would turn off when he was in the room. I learned that after relaying to him over the phone how one time, my brother Joe turned the TV on with his mind when he was twelve, back when we were living in SoCal. Joe got so weirded out by it his eyes got big and his face froze and he slipped out of the room to go hide upstairs in his own room. My dad smiled over the phone when I told him that and wistfully relayed that when he was that age, it was the opposite. Stuff would shut off when he was around.

By the time he was sixteen, he was giving a report in his 10th grade class explaining that there were secret "underground facilities" located within the Adirondack Mountains - yet he didn't know how he knew this. He just knew it, and apparently felt compelled to share what he knew and wake others up. (Adirondack, because he lived in New York.) But for that reason, not being able to explain how he knew this or offering up any proof, his teacher ridiculed him in front of the class. I would love to have seen a copy of that report. Very interesting. Sounds a lot like me when I was a kid. I've often wished if only I could have known my dad when he was young, and been the same age as him at the same time. I would have had his back in that class! :D

When he was a senior in high school he began dating my mom Christine who was four years younger than him. ie…..she was in 8th grade. O.o This is something I only just recently realized. I used to always think she was a freshman while he was a senior, which is still a little eyebrow raising, but I realized that the dates didn't add up. If he was 1964-1968, and she was 1968-1972, then there's no way they were in high school at the same time. When she was starting high school in the fall of '68 he had already graduated earlier that year in June. That's just wild to me. !!!

The both of them coming together is a whole story in itself I suppose, because both had some majorly dysfunctional family backgrounds going on. But what's relevant for this is the way in which my dad would tell her, with a straight face, that he was an alien. Why, I don't know, though she of course knew he was goofing on her. But she went on to say that he never let up on this "joke" either. So…was he just goofing? O.o :D Just seems to me to be an odd thing to joke about.

So if there was already something happening to him, then the situation certainly wasn't helped any when he enlisted in the Navy during Vietnam, in 1968. In the meantime, he and my mom stayed in touch, writing to each other during her entire four years of high school, even while both were dating and being with other people. Which is also wild to me. The idea that they clung on to the idea of each other, even though they'd only dated for a little bit while she was in 8th grade, and he a senior. But by enlisting and willingly offering himself up to the U.S. government as he did, versus being drafted, it helped ensure that he would be treated better, and stay out of harm's way. In theory. He enlisted as a "Communications Technician", i.e., a "tech personnel." Spying, to put it more bluntly, working in matters of intelligence, intercepting Morse code messages, and translating those Morse code messages into type. It's not a job anybody can do, but he was able to do it, and do it well. He was so fast that he would finish a line of type, yank his hands back off the type keys, and the typewriter would still be pounding away, trying to catch up. I remember him demonstrating for me as a kid what that was like, even imitating the hypnotic trance-like look on his face that he would have as he'd throw his head back, eyes half closed, arms and hands lifting off the type keys. He was proud - and rightly so. Most people can barely type. Let alone know Morse code. Let alone be able to translate Morse code at something like 80 or 90 wpm typing speed. I would later come across the work of Joseph McMoneagle, who'd worked as a remote viewer for the U.S. government, who described in his book "The Stargate Chronicles" what a tremendously difficult feat it was to master translating Morse code into type. It was something McMoneagle worked and worked on, his speed slowly increasing over time, with much effort. So for my dad to perform the way he did with such apparent ease is insanity. I know he's proud, but I don't think he comprehends the full extent of what he was able to do.

After his four years were up, my dad returned to the States in May of '72, and he and my mom were married only two months later. Right after my mom graduated high school. They wasted no time. Again, more wildness to me. I was born two and half years later, in November of '74. A big part of marrying him so young I think was to get away from her crazy family who was completely useless in terms of helping her out in life and being healthy, normal, loving and supportive (hence, why she's Borderline Personality Disorder…there's a lot of abuse and trauma in her background) and because her personality wasn't the type that was strong enough to be out on her own. Years later she would resentfully tell me that if she could go back and do it all over again she wouldn't have me or my brother, and that she should have pursued working in NYC as a secretary on Wall Street, not marrying, not having kids. But the fact of the matter is, if she could have done it then she would have. The fact that she didn't says everything. As an adult I look back on her life and I understand that because she had no model for what a normal, loving, healthy mother was it's a wonder she even managed to function at all as a mother, and because her family was never there for here, literally, ever, she had no model for what it is to be loving, supportive and normal towards her own kids. There was nothing in her background to show her "how to be in a healthy family."

As mentioned earlier in this piece, when you do the research into government/military mind control experimentation, the Navy comes up time and time again as being a culprit. Back in 2002 I hit the goldmine when I stumbled across a piece that mentioned the Navy performing mind control experimentation way back when on what of all people but…

When I broached this subject with my Dad one afternoon on the phone back in 2002, during the one year period when we were back in contact with each other, it brought stuff to the surface, and things began pouring out. Without warning, he started ticking off all kinds of weirdness he remembered from throughout his entire life, including some of the incidents mentioned earlier, and on into his time in the military. As he started relaying these bits and pieces to me on the phone I realized what I was hearing and did a mad scramble for my notebook and a pen with one hand, while holding the phone with the other, so I could take notes but without interrupting him and risk breaking the flow of information that was coming out. This was NOT stuff I wanted to miss or forget. I'm extremely glad I had the smarts to do that. Over the years I've been prone to letting opportunities slip through my fingers but this wasn't one of those times. In 2003 I had (yet another) falling out with my dad, and have been out of contact with him since that time, so this was all I managed to get before that occurred. And what I got that afternoon is the following (phrases in quotations are direct quotes from him):

After my dad enlisted and took his IQ and military aptitude tests, he was basically whisked away, you could say. He didn't have to go to school for training that everybody else did - somehow "got to skip that part." He even noticed this, but didn't question it too much. But what he does know is that his four year tour of duty was filled with strange happenings and preferential treatment. "Got the choicest places to be stationed" such as Germany, San Diego, and then Pensacola Florida for six months…in the winter. Concerning Florida in the winter, a buddy of his even joked, "Who are you blowin' to get that?!?" He even had his choice granted of being on planes, rather than on ships.

The weird thing about Germany is that he and one of his buddies spent Christmas at the house of an American couple that offered to host some American military personnel in their home for the Christmas holiday. Twenty five years later, at the factory that my Dad now manages in Connecticut, one of the new women working there looked vaguely familiar to him. Only to find out that she was the American woman who hosted him in her home, twenty five years earlier, on another continent. Now, what are the odds. Makes me wonder if she had a secondary purpose. Mind control handler? Keeping tabs on him? Because again, what are the odds. That doesn't just happen. It's astronomical. He just accepted it though. "Moving along….."

Then there was the incident he relayed that for me, cemented my suspicions about him possibly being taken and experimented with. Him and his buddy Hopkins, as he called him, were out late one night, and as far as he recalls they went to sleep back at the barracks. However, the next morning both of them were "wound up like eight day clocks!" and "were able to read each others' minds" all day long. (Amped up psychic abilities, basically.) They had SO much energy, and feelings of positiveness, "like the world was wonderful and beautiful," "boundless energy," "but not like a jittery caffeine energy. It was different."

Something obviously occurred between the time they went to bed and when they awoke the next morning. And logic would dictate that it couldn't have been the only time this ever happened, either.

Overall his experience in the Navy was pretty good he said, compared to what other people went through in Vietnam. A lot of partying, women, and good times, "kind of a breeze."

Another miscellaneous odd item worth noting about my dad during his military stint was his big "UFO encounter," which he told me about when I was a kid. At a military base in Vietnam or the Philippines, can't remember which one because he was stationed in both places at various points, two UFOs appeared and parked themselves over the base one night. Not registering on radar, of course. The people inside the base had to be "manually notified" you could say, because they saw nothing appearing on radar and had no clue what was transpiring outside. And out of everybody who could have been standing underneath these UFOs, guess who it was. My dad, and one of his buddies. They stood looking up at these UFOs, clutching their rifles, frozen with fear in a weird stand off. At that point, fighter jets were scrambled to go up after them, and then the UFOs took off. "zzzzip" over the hills, as I remember my dad telling me as a kid. Gone in a blink. The jets had barely pulled themselves off the ground and the UFOs were already gone. That seems a bit odd that it was my dad of all people – the guy who used to "joke" to my mom when they were dating that he was an alien, and who had inexplicable knowledge as a teen of underground facilities in the Adirondack Mountains – who found himself standing right underneath these UFOs. And I do wonder what, if anything, could have been passed along to my dad, any kind of communication transfer of some sort...? You never know. It's all just very strange.

I also learned at this time that even though he was in the Navy, he didn't actually report to the Navy. He reported to the NSA. I never knew that, not that it would have meant anything to me years ago anyway. I had no clue back then of anything. But I do now. Navy reporting to the NSA sounds to me like "The Department of the Navy," which is different from the regular Navy, I've since learned. The Department of the Navy is always coming up in my research as being "up to no good." After learning that I was left wondering, What are the odds that me, being who I am, would have dated my ex-boyfriend Steve whose dad is NSA…and only to find out after the fact that my dad technically worked for the NSA as well. If there's even some sort of connection there, I don't know.

My dad went on to stress several times that his "whole life has been protected." Time and again he's had close calls and near death moments, only to be plucked out. This luck with mortality extends into being overall very lucky in life. Says it seems like he "can do no wrong" in life. Relayed stories about his (then) recent speeding ticket just being…thrown out of court. There was some problem involving an electrical power line outside his house, don't know exactly what he was talking about other than that the problem mysteriously "fixed itself." And in general, he realized that in his life everything always works out for him. Like something is watching over his shoulder.

Over the years he's relayed several of these near-death moments where "something" rescued him at the last moment, or where it was like there was a bubble of protection around him. One of those instances occurred when my dad was very little, and still living in Manhattan. He remembers standing in the open apartment window looking outside…then feeling a hand shove him from behind. As he lurched forward, about to pitch out the window to his death, another invisible hand yanked him back in. Had Scarlet Fever at age seven, but lived. (Thanks to antibiotics of course, but, maybe he had a little extra help.) Hopping trains one time as a kid in New York and he had the "urge" to jump off right at a particular moment. When he landed on the ground and looked up, there was a large post right there along the tracks that would have smacked into him and killed him had he not jumped right then. In Vietnam, a plane he was in was shot down - four out of seven in the plane were killed, but not my dad. He was plucked from the river, floating in jet fuel. Standing on the riverbank in the jungle, and a grenade goes off right next to him, killing his buddy who was standing right there. Doesn't touch a hair on my dad. And the time when I was a baby and he was driving back home in the middle of the night after visiting my maternal grandmother who lived in North Carolina at the time. We were on the 95 North, at the junction of the 95 and 295, going 70, 80 mph according to him. My dad realized he was in the wrong turn lane, but it was too late to swerve. He tried anyway though, not thinking clearly, then realized at the last moment that he wasn't going to make it and was going to smash right into the divider. But next thing he knows, he was safely on the highway, heading north. No recollection of what happened in between the moment when he was going to impact the median, to the moment when the car was safely back on the highway like nothing had happened. He had this feeling, or a voice of some sort come over him that said "everything is going to be okay, don't worry..." He and my mom looked at each other, wide eyed. She promptly fell asleep after that. And they never discussed the incident again. On the phone with me in 2002 was the first time he was talking about it out loud to anybody in 27 years.

My regret is not having followed up with my dad in a later phone conversation to press for more stories from him. I should have formulated some questions, but I didn't have enough knowledge and information at that point to even know what to ask him. Although I did broach the subject of military mind control on several later occasions with him over the phone, but none of those phone calls ever elicited the response that I got on that one rare occasion. The last time I recall mentioning the subject to him he finished my sentence for me, showing me that he was aware of the subject and remembered what I had to say about it previously…..but his voice showed that he sounded skeptical and detached. Kind of like he was slipping back into oblivious denial. Not interested. Moving on. Next. Even though it was he himself who had offered up all these amazing stories during a previous call. My dad was settled in to his life with his second wife and their daughter, who at that point was six years old, in a modest, custom made house in southern Connecticut. He had his long standing job that he'd been at since 1989 as one of the head supervisors in a manufacturing plant, running the place, and life was for all intents and purposes, normal. So, not interested in rocking the boat I guess, keep up the normal routine of things, keep everything moving along, same as it ever was. (to quote a Talking Heads song ;)) Which I can partly understand.

The last time I actually spoke to my dad was February 2003; then he dropped out of the picture and I didn't hear from him again until July of that year, via email, and I admittedly didn't respond very nicely, but I had my reasons. (though at this point in life, almost eight years later, it's safe to say that I would respond differently.) And it was the nail in the coffin of our relationship, twelve years in the making, going back to 1991 when my mom moved my brother and myself to California after the divorce. What's interesting to note is that those times my dad was sporadically contacting me in 2002-2003 while I was in Florida, it eventually got so that it was around the 20th of the month. Like clockwork, like a schedule. My abductions, or whatever it was that was going on, I would later learn also coincided at that point in my life on either the 1st-3rd of each month…or the 20th –

23rd. It was an odd coincidence, no doubt.

(And on a miscellaneous side note, back in late 2001 I discovered that my dad's phone extension at work was……141. Of all numbers. http://www.in2worlds.net/numbersightings The odds on that one are pretty amazing. When I told my brother Joe about it in Portland he just stared at me, deadpan, not believing me. He made me redial the number so he could hear the voicemail recording for himself that says my dad's name, followed by "141." When I realized what his phone extension was back in 2002 my first thought was "Oh, they got to you too." In my opinion, it was a "fingerprint" indicating something at work in his life. He'd been compromised.)

I finally parted ways because the situation with him had become too intolerably weird for me. One of the most notable things was that during the time period when I was in the process of moving cross country from Oregon to Florida, and was back in contact with him via the cell phone I had at that time, I discovered that he was suddenly "on the same page" as me in terms of being a newfound conspiracy theorist. In fact he described a book that he'd just finished reading that I thought must be David Icke, based on the subject matter (Illuminati runs the world, spawned from earlier Middle Eastern roots, linked up to non-humans), but he insisted that no, it wasn't. I later figured out that the book he was describing was Jim Marrs' "Rule by Secrecy," a book I myself crossed paths with a few months later in Florida. So now he was coincidentally into researching conspiracies, same as me. (Seems to be the same "mirroring" pattern that Joe displayed when I first got him back to Cali in 2000.) But even though he supposedly was now into conspiracy theories, he was only interested in a "surface scratching" way, not in any real meaningful way. Just enough to superficially "match" me I guess.

Then the weirdest part of all. After I got to Florida and was waiting for Tom to come join me I'd of course mention Tom to him in our phone calls, excited. And every single time I'd mention Tom's name he would get silent. Then change the subject. Even more bizarre….on several occasions he changed the subject onto my old friend Mike, back in California. Mike, whom he's never met, and never will, whom he's never even talked to, doesn't know what he looks like and knows nothing about him, and whom he had no interest in during the eight years that Mike actually was in my life back when I lived in Cali. Now suddenly in 2002 he had developed this weird obsession with Mike.

(Me) “blah blah blah…Tom!”
(Dad) silence…..“So uh, yeah, does Mike plan to visit you in Florida?”

Or,

(Me) “blah blah blah….Tom!!!”
(Dad) silence……”So have you heard from Mike lately?”

Every single time I ever mentioned the word “Tom” my dad would do this routine, going silent, and either change the subject onto something else, or switch focus onto Mike. It was probably one of the nuttiest things I’ve ever experienced with him. In the year that he was back in my life, before I walked away again, he never once at any point acknowledged Tom. Even after Tom got to Florida and we were officially together as a couple. Never asked about him, and always skipped over any mention of him, like a robot that couldn’t compute. Once I realized this was the case I just no longer talked about Tom, because there obviously was no point. He’d made it clear he wasn’t interested. When I mentioned this nuttiness to Mike on the phone Mike’s response was “Something’s interested in me, and I don’t like it.” So Mike’s interpretation of this was that “something” was probing through my dad to find out about the situation between me and Mike, and whether Mike was still going to be around in the picture, and if so, to what capacity. Had we talked? Were we going to be visiting? Had I heard from him? So strange. I don’t know what to make of it all. If it was indeed probing, then why? The only thing I can think of is that it’s possibly because of the role that Mike had played in my life. Mike had been my lifeline in California, somebody whom I “recognized” from the first moment I met him, feeling instantly at ease as if we went waaaay back, coming into my life during a crucial, precarious time period when I had nobody else to help me. (I get into him in more detail in my “Miscellaneous Stories of the Weird and Unusual” free e-book on my site.) Though once again, it’s not like my dad cared or paid attention to Mike and his role in things way back when.

The other major oddity was that I pretty much couldn’t say anything to him without him interrupting and going on a sidetrack tangent of some sort. Nearly every single thing I’d say would remind him of something or other and spark a sidetrack tangent, to which I'd get quiet, and let him go on and on and on, until he finally would get silent and go "ANYway, you were saying…" Then I'd continue, only to interrupted again, and again. So having an actual real conversation was usually not possible. This wasn't something he used to ever do, but it was his new habit you could say. And then there were the strange out of place questions. "So, do you still like that grunge music?" To which I went "What?" Like, Hanh? There was silence. "You mean, the music from twelve years ago??" More silence. We'd only been out of contact with each other for two years, between 2000-2002, but yet he was acting as if we hadn't been in contact throughout the entire 90s and was asking if I was still into music from like, 1991. o_O

So needless to say, during that year we were back in contact I would always hang up the phone after our calls with my skin being flushed, feeling hot, which for me means stress and agitation (and/or a side effect of being under psychic attack). On a subliminal/subconscious level something was registering with me as being really wrong or off.

In retrospect I'd have to say that his whole way of being was a computer that had been programmed and was "running scripts." There was never any real feeling behind his words, and he always seemed passive and detached. I never actually felt like I was really talking to my dad, there was no real connection happening between us. It was really like I was talking to an inanimate object. I didn't feel anything there with my feelers. Our phone calls, with that one rare exception where he revealed interesting insights, were totally pointless. And of course, factoring in the "refusal to acknowledge Tom" thing, and strange obsession with Mike after I first moved to Florida, and always interrupting and preventing a real conversation of any sort, and seeming to be stuck in the waaaay past as if the in-between hadn't happened, and all of it together caused me to feel stressed and flushed after every call. Since reading "The Mothman Prophesies," and in light of my half sister's discovery that my dad has no knowledge of what's gone wrong between us, I've gone as far as to wonder if I was actually even talking to my dad. After reading about John Keel's experiences with "phony phone calls" where somebody who sounded identical to a person that he knows was talking to him for entire phone conversations, only to find out after the fact that said person never talked to John, or the vice versa situation of people claiming to have talked to John Keel on the phone which he had no knowledge of, then yeah, I've had to wonder if something like this wasn't going on in my own situation. The other possibility is that something else was piloting his wheel during those calls and speaking to me through him. Or maybe it was an alter persona of some sort.

But before the end, before I walked away for the final time, he was telling me some very eye opening things. "I do stuff, then forget doing it," he said, such as re-wiring all the electrical in his mom's house, or fixing broken computers for his family - skills he didn't even know he had. (btw, these insights and quotes were told to me during the same phone conversation when I grabbed a notebook and took notes while he talked.) When he's in crowds, he feels like he's "in a dream world," thing are "not real," he's just "going through the motions, like a leaf blowing through the breeze." He's "here but not here," "I feel like I'm in a play," and that in general, "things are predetermined." "I don't remember half of what I do anymore" but it's not Alzheimer's he says, because stuff does get done…he just doesn't remember doing it. Like with the hard drive in his computer – he doesn't remember how he fixed it. When he looked at it he couldn't figure it out to save his life. But yet, it's fixed. He did it, according to those who saw him do it. (on a side note – years back he relayed an experience pertaining to "waking up" one day and realizing he'd been in that horrible marriage to my mom for so long. It was like….."he woke up." He felt as if he was emerging from a fifteen year dream, like "WHAT AM I DOING? It's not supposed to BE like this!!!" And that was the beginning of the end.)

Black out periods/missing chunks of one's life/missing time, feeling as if in a dream state, feeling as if "waking up," and especially skills from an unknown source (of which my brother also demonstrated) are classic indicators a programmed, compartmentalized mind. My dad has definitely shown signs of this for years, as evident by his two personality sides. There was nice, dippy, dopey, passive and oblivious dad who drifted along in a daze (trance?) not noticing things he should have noticed, and then there was mean dad. Mean dad was sharp, on the ball, with a disdainful, sourpuss face and disposition of a bear (or as my maternal grandmother referred to him behind his back – an ogre) who expected 110% perfection from me and acted as if he couldn't stand me and Joe. (As mentioned earlier in this book, the "Thems" that I've experienced were exactly like this side of him. Identical. And that silver Cross brand pen that was tossed at me in an elevator in Portland, Oregon, mentioned in Part II was "coincidentally" my dad's exact same favorite pen type.) But that's the side of him that drove me to become the meek, unquestioning robot computer super achiever in school. The mean dad side was very harsh, critical and judgmental. Not a nice person. When my dad flip flopped it wasn't as pronounced as my mom would later be, it wasn't like a dark cloud would just descend over him and where he'd change from one second to the next……..which was how she was. His was more of a gradual slipping around between personas.

Another perfect example of "split personality dad" concerns the subject of sex. This anecdote was also mentioned in the original version of the appendix. The preface to the tale is as follows: One night out of nowhere when I was 15 or so, my mom sat me down at the kitchen table and proceeded to inform me, general paraphrase, that I should sleep with guys before I get married because otherwise I would be missing out on what that is like, and it could create problems. I just sat there in my usual trance-like blank stupor of that time, listening to this, and having no idea why she was telling me this. There wasn't any passion or emotion behind her words, she just relayed this piece of "advise" blankly and monotone. I listened until she was done, just kind of nodded in a daze, then slowly and silently got up and went back upstairs to my room.

Within a week my dad then proceeded to do the same thing. Sat me down at the kitchen table, and began advising me about how I should sleep with guys before I get married, because when people get married as virgins they later begin to wonder what they missed out on and it causes problems, etc. etc. etc. It was bad enough hearing this from my mom when we despised each other, but to hear it from my dad….it was just downright embarrassing. His voice was also blank, emotionless, monotone, and his eyes were far away, not even really seeing me as I sat across from him. It was like they were both programmed to tell me this, and just responded to it like good little programmed, tranced out monkeys. I sat there in silence, nodded when he was done, then got up and returned to my room.

Flash forward to tenth grade, age 16, where he was advising me on what the most sensitive part of a penis is to focus on during sex. Under the head, he told me. That's the spot. I'm not even kidding. I forgot about this for years until about 2007. I was doing volunteer work one afternoon sorting books for a "books or prisoners" program I used to like to help out with, and I came across something in one of the books I was sorting that triggered the memory. When I remembered it my face immediately became hot, and this surge of total embarrassment surged through me, actually making me catch my breath a little. Back when this conversation somehow happened when I was 16 I just stood there in the kitchen looking at him as he told me this, feeling blank, like, "okay." Not saying anything back, then the subject changed. Now as an adult in my 30s I'm very different, no longer numb and tranced out, very much "here" and aware and feeling things, so I felt a surge of embarrassment. I wouldn't say that the memory was actually suppressed or anything, and taken to that severe of a level, because it didn't traumatize me or anything back when it happened (which is usually the cause of suppressed memories). The memory felt like it had always been kicking around in my mind, I just hadn't thought about it all these years until that moment, triggered by something I came across in a book. Then poof, there it was.

Then for the grand finale where the persona switch occurs, let's flash forward to age 20, when I'd now been living in California for four years. I was visiting my dad at his home in southern Connecticut for the summer of '95, along with my then-boyfriend Gary who'd come along. The whole trip was an ill conceived nightmare on my part, which I won't get into, but to make a long story short I was heading out one night to go visit Gary who was now staying at a motel. Gary had arrived with me in my car, and so he was essentially stranded in a motel in a strange state he'd never been to with no transportation, completely relying on me, and waiting for me. So after I was done with my work shift (as a waitress at a local restaurant, for the summer) I was heading out to go see him. And this made my dad completely lose his shit. I poked my head into the living room to say goodbye to him, and found him sitting on the couch staring straight ahead at the air, looking pissed. My Vietnamese step mother sat to his left, looking concerned and worried. I asked him what was wrong. His head turned towards me, eyes flashing, and that's where he proceeded to just lose it, spewing all this hateful rage at me for the fact I was leaving to go see Gary. He sounded like demon possessed, I'd never seen him get that bad, ever. He raged and spewed, on and on, and in the middle of the crazy diatribe I was called, among other things, "a fucking tramp!" At that point in his rant my stepmom gasped "BOB!" shocked and appalled, grabbing onto his arm. I let him rage and rage until he ran out of steam, sitting there on the couch staring at me with hateful eyes, waiting for me to respond….clearly wanting that knock down, drag out verbal brawl.

Instead I just stood there silently, watching him, a combination of wheels turning in my head, and numbed shock. Then without a word I turned, picked up my purse in the kitchen, and left, leaving him with his own words hanging in the air. I'm proud of my response in looking back, considering I was only 20. You don't play into stuff like that. It's a total set up. The only thing to do is walk away and not give it what it's looking for.

Tranced out dad sitting across from me at the kitchen table telling me I should sleep with guys before I get married, then later advising me on the best parts of the penis to focus on during sex. Then raging demon possessed dad screaming that I'm a fucking tramp for going to visit my boyfriend who was stranded in a strange motel in a strange state with no transportation, when I was a 20 year old grown adult who'd been on my own supporting myself since before I even graduated high school. This personality inconsistency absolutely defined both my parents though. In a way it really wasn't anything new. That was just the most extreme example of it with my dad. Fritz Springmeier talks about this too in his book "Illuminati Formula…" which I put in my "Recommended Reading section." Yet another thing he describes that I could relate to. The mind job programming where something is okay one day but not the next, and the general inconsistency and flip flopping back and forth in personality so the kid never knows what to expect and gets frazzled. Let your guard down then BOOM! switcharoo out of nowhere. By the end of me living at home with my mom in '92-'93 I learned the hard way about letting my guard down with her even when she was being "nice," because she'd shown that she could, and definitely would, switch from one second to the next. We could be having a rare nice moment, only to have her switch out of nowhere within seconds, like a dark cloud descending, totally ruining things as she would become hateful or irrational and crazy. My parents didn't start out that drastically inconsistent, per se, but definitely disintegrated into it as the years went by. But I don't think it was done consciously by them, it was more like side effects of their other "stuff" and problems.

My 13 year old half sister, whom I've never met but had been in contact with back in 2010 via email, has said the same thing I noticed about the two sides of our dad. Being 13 at the time she described him as if "he's a shape, with different sides to him." He flip flops from one day to the next and she never knows which "side" of the "shape" he's going to be. One day he's in a great mood, and laughs and jokes with her and where things are okay and acceptable, as she's relayed. He acts like her buddy, sharing his lighter with her, making dirty jokes, and all of her friends thinks he's so cool, as I've seen with their comments on her Facebook page. "I love your dad!" they'll respond when she quotes the latest off color humorous comment she heard him spout. The next day he's pissy and sniping at everything, and where things are suddenly not acceptable. (though apparently he's never taken the pissiness to the level that he would with me and my brother, saying the sorts of things he's said to us and calling her the sorts of names he's called me.) That's the side of him that hits the fan when she's busted for drugs at school and expelled for the rest of 7th grade. But who was the one loaning out his lighter to the 12, 13 year old in the first place, you know? Probably the same side of him that was later making jokes and being nonchalant as they sat around in the court room, waiting for my sister's case to be called. Flip flop, flip flop. (even I didn't experience that drastic level of "persona switching" when I was a kid. The dad I knew growing up is not the same dad she has. I was kept at the level of a small child by both my parents, something I got into in the original Appendix version, whereas with her he tells off color jokes and loans out his lighter, among other things. There seems to have been two different agendas going on when it comes to me and her. I have enough reason to believe she's already on the radar of "stuff." But then again being his offspring means it's pretty much guaranteed.)

But in general she still worships the ground he walks on, same as I did for so many years always chasing after him post-divorce. Same as Joe did, despite the fact our dad never had a close relationship with him. My dad has had that effect on all his kids. Something about him lures you in. He's real, and flawed, and he's had all these crazy experiences, and can be cool and fun, and is your buddy, teaching you things about the world, and it's all even more magnified when your mother is batshit crazy and has nothing going for her which makes him godlike by comparison. Then he turns. And for a sensitive kid it can be very upsetting.

Something my sister relayed to me is that in talking to my dad it seems he has no idea what the problem is between us. She broached the subject with him one day in the summer of '10 about why he and I have no relationship, trying to get his side of the story and perspective on things, and basically he was at a loss. So this means has no idea about the effects of his two sides (coupled with his uncaring obliviousness post divorce, which I don't even bother to try to get into here), even though I had told him point blank in an email back in 2000, after our first falling out. And it also means he doesn't recollect the crazy email he sent to me out of the blue in late fall 2004….sixteen months after my final email to him…..where he popped his top for no discernable reason, spewing hate and rage at me. The email arrived out of nowhere, with no provocation on a full moon of all nights, and I didn't even finish reading it once I realized he was reverting back to the old "mean dad rage spewing like demon possessed" persona. No thanks. Go find somebody else to abuse. Clicked off of it and deleted it. I didn't even want to leave it sitting in my in-box. Didn't respond back and play into the games and feed fest, because there's no point. I hadn't even seen the guy in ten years at that point and knew I never would again, making it all that much more pointless. Stuff was obviously using him and he just responded to it like a good little puppet on a string, not questioning anything and with no ability for self monitoring, totally playing into somebody else's agenda, as always. So like I told my sis, if he's at a loss for what the problem is then it means he doesn't recall sending that full moon crazy email, let alone anything else that's gone on over the years….of which I've already told him about like, ten years ago.

In a way it matched up to something I encountered with him on the phone during that one year period we were back in contact. I had broached the subject of a couple of things he'd said in the past (nothing that was discussed here, it was other stuff), and he sounded far away, apparently not remembering those things, and his tone of voice was very passive and just….kind of lost. I think he even said he didn't mean whatever he supposedly said. (and uh, I'd definitely disagree. When he was hatefully spitting things out, engaging in derogatory name calling, doing mocking impersonations of people, etc. etc. he definitely meant it. After all, one of my dad's favorite phrases used to be "Say what you mean and mean what you say!" Now suddenly it's a case of not having said what he really meant and not meaning what he said? ummmm.) One of the incidents in question happened only seven years before, the other twelve. So we're not talking thirty, forty years ago or something, so there was no reason not to remember.

Yet I believed him (and still do) when he said he had no idea and didn't mean whatever it was he supposedly said. He's not lying or just trying to feign a weak smooth-over. That's not his style. It's just that particular side of him I was speaking with on the phone at that moment really didn't say those things or mean it. Though the other side did. Multiple personas, all the way. So the question is, do I remain bitter for having a dad that's carried on the way he has? When it's now a little bit more clear that we're dealing with a situation of multiple personas, where right hand doesn't know what the left hand is doing? For the longest time it was hard to let things go as if they never happened, but having the knowledge and awareness of soul fragmentation, neg entity manipulation and attachments, mind control programming and multiple personas certainly does help. I think it pretty much explains everything.

Earlier I mentioned the school conditioning I received, courtesy of my dad, to become a robot computer. Even though it's more of my own autobiographical happenings it's important to mention since it involves him, and is the perfect illustration of the "Thems" side of his personality. I'm going to copy and paste from a version of the Appendix that I have on my computer which gets into my entire story. Before I dive into this though I think it's also important to mention that while there was this aspect of him that behaved this way with regards to my schooling and brain molding, there was also a more positive manifestation of it. The positive side of him had a thirst for knowledge and loved to learn about the world, and he passed that along to me by taking the time to teach me things about all sorts of stuff when I was little. Whereas my mom had a depressed and angry personality that tended towards pushing me and Joe away so she could nap or veg out watching mindless entertainment programs and sitcoms, he took the time to teach me stuff. It wasn't anything that big or important, but he was always encouraging a curiosity about the world, and took initiative. He had enthusiasm for learning and wanted me to learn too. So in all fairness that's the positive aspect of what follows.

"Despite the relative good time that life was back in Massachusetts, there were definitely some emerging issues, especially when it came to school. By age five to six, "report card day" was already a highly stressful situation. Every year I was always chastised for "talking too much" and given lower marks in the category of "behavior" as a result. I learned to dread and fear report card day. (I had pre-first grade, unlike a lot of other kids, so that's where it started, continuing on into first.) My first grade teacher Miss Bruce even called my mom at home to complain about how much of a "social butterfly" I was. These complaints did NOT go over well with my parents, let's just put it that way, and I think if these teachers understood what sort of reaction they were provoking in my parents – and how I was going to later turn out by the time I was in high school, withdrawing into a tranced out zombie shell, deadened to the world, hardly talking at all - they would have kept quiet. But I remember sitting at the kitchen table with my mom completely freaking out and pacing around the kitchen yelling and screaming and berating, because one of my report cards said I "talked too much." Just-Flipped-Out on me, all the while threatening how much worse it was going to get when my dad got home from work. And sure enough, when he did, it was on and on and on and on and on, more screaming and berating. In a way you could say they were trying to terrorize me into submitting to how they wanted me to be. A pattern they utilized for years, keeping me in a terrorized, meek and obedient, completely controlled child-like state. They'd just go and go until they finally would run out of steam. Then I would scuttle back to my room, completely frazzled. Each and every report card day. Parent Teachers Conferences…….same deal. I remember sitting on a chair outside the classroom in the hallway during one of these after-hours school meetings, stomach completely in knots, nerves shot, psychologically frazzled at the prospect of what was to come, the screaming, the berating. The on and on and on. I didn't know how to not care. And I was never allowed not to. You would have thought I was a monster child, and performing poorly in school. In truth, I was always one of the smartest in my class, got high marks, was friendly and got on well with everybody, and I always had a wide assortment of friends, male and female, of different ages and backgrounds. My worst crime was being too social. Too friendly. Keep the straight A's, but stop talking. Stop being friendly. Personality conditioning. Reshaping, remolding. (The system as a whole attempts to do this to all kids in the modern school systems you could say, it's not just a "MILABs" thing.) In this case however there was an added element going on with my parents, where they acted very bizarrely, as if they themselves were programmed to condition my mind and instill certain personality traits in me, steering me in a very different direction then I would have wound up otherwise.

I may have only been six and only just learned how to add simple one digit numbers together, but my dad made sure I could add up a row of five or six numbers long, carrying the digits. Subtracting long numbers and borrowing digits……….AND teaching me how to check your work when you do subtraction. (you add the answer to the number you subtracted, and it should equal the number being subtracted from.. ;)) This….by first grade. So I was already a grade or two ahead most times with everything. I remember sitting at the kitchen table in Westfield having to work out math problems for so long that my little fingers literally, gave out, and I couldn't squeeze my fingers together anymore to hold the pencil. Meanwhile as my dad would get irritated and impatiently try to shoo me along into getting over it, ASAP, and keep going, get on with it. More math, more work.

On the one hand it's good that they were on top of my schooling and made sure I was smart. They liked to give me educational toys as well to play with, like that Disney pictorial map of the United States puzzle when I was seven, teaching me what all the states were and where they were located. And my mom was always bringing me to the library and buying me books galore. But they took things WAY too seriously.

The way in which I was "molded" and "shaped" as a kid seems in retrospect to be "them"- style programming. It started in Massachusetts, as mentioned, and by the time I was in Connecticut it escalated into expecting me to be a perfect straight-A super achiever brainiac who could memorize and regurgitate instantly, on cue. A robot. A computer. I was very intelligent, and had a thirsty mind and loved to read and learn, so in many ways I didn't mind "being smart." It came easy. But it had its unpleasant drawbacks. The most perfect example would be when I was learning the multiplication tables at age nine. Forget my hand becoming so weak that I could no longer even hold a pencil from all the math my dad would run me through. That was old news. Now we had……multiplication table memorization! I would stand before my dad as he wore his harsh, humorless "mean persona," rapid fire quizzing me. If I got an answer wrong – if I even so much as hesitated, or faltered in my response – I was sent back to my room while his face twisted in disdain. And this could go on for hours. Back and forth, back and forth, back and forth, back and forth, back and forth, back and forth. I remember at one point when I hesitated in an answer and he bellowed, "I DON'T WANT YOU TO THINK! I WANT YOU TO JUST KNOOOWW!"

Be a robot. No thinking. Just KNOW, and be able to instantly conjure up perfect answers, on cue, every time. (Picture the very fitting image of quickly snapping fingers, snap, snap, snap…) As mentioned it was like there were different personas going on with him. One was relaxed and easy going, the other was mean and disdainful, holding his daughter to ridiculous standards, where nothing was ever good enough. No matter how good you could be, his response was to cavalierly believe you should do better. And better. And better.

It worked though. I remember being in third grade and taking timed multiplication tests, and I was always the first one done, every single time. I could just crank through the answers like a computer, taking the timed aspect of the test seriously, as if my life depended on it. There were kids who weren't even finished when time was up, and then there was me, done with minutes and minutes to spare. I remember my teacher Mrs. Todd looking at me quizzically several times as my pencil went down way before everybody else in the class.

[….] On a random note was the idiosynchric game my dad used to like to play where he would ask me random trivia questions that I was expected to know the answers to…snap, snap, snap…off the top of my head. This started back in Massachusetts actually. Nothing bad would happen if I didn't – though it's not like it even occurred to me to go against anything anyway - it was presented as if it was just this fun little inside game we both had, so I never minded. But in retrospect, that's still kind of weird. I mean, who *doe*s that, you know? Why would you want your kid to be a "memorize and regurgitate robot" who can generate answers perfectly on cue at any given moment, in pop-quiz fashion? Years later I came across a mention of this style of "home programming" in the work of Fritz Springmeier. It was more of that "almost falling out of my chair" thing when I saw him talking about parents quizzing their kids (who were involved in military/government mind control programs) and making them know all sorts of weird, random trivia facts that they'd have to be able to regurgitate off the top of their heads at any given moment, snap, snap, snap. What are the odds?

Over the years I've heard many stories about kids who are bribed into getting good grades or rewarded in some way, and that's just very foreign to me. I was even told that there's no rewards for good performance. Why? Because it's expected. It's not something that should be some sort of big deal. So basically saying, You will perform perfectly, period. Because that's the way it is. There is no other option. I remember in eighth grade dropping from an A+ to an A- in some subject one quarter. Oh, that sure got the disdainful, verbal berating from him, on and on and on about "how many percentage points drop" an A+ to an A- was. Whereas other parents would just be happy that their kid even got an A, for my dad it wasn't good enough.

Second place in the 5th grade spelling bee…….1st place in 6th grade. Placed in the 8th grade beginner band (flute) while only in 4th grade. 1st place in 7th grade for the junior high writing contest for the entire school. Put into the "Gifted Program" in 6th, 7th and 8th grades. Member of the National Junior Honor Society in 8th grade and member of the "Academic Bowl" (quiz trivia team thing). Won all the local levels with the team and went on to participate in the Kids Quiz TV program filmed in Providence, Rhode Island. And we won. Always tested years above my level on those yearly "Iowa Tests of Basic Skills." By 4th grade I was testing at a 9th grade level in reading comprehension, vocabulary, writing and spelling. (due to being a voracious reader.) IQ tested sometime in grade school and apparently got a score that was high enough that my parents wouldn't tell me what it was, for fear of affecting me. So to this day I have no idea what I scored. I just remember my mom's infamous "deer caught in the headlights" look when I asked, and her refusal to say anything. So bizarre. IQ tests do have some validity, but on some level they're also just a test of how well you've been conformed to the system's way of thinking and perceiving reality. My dad had also tested high on his IQ tests in the past, to the point where he'd been invited to join Mensa. O.o He loved to poke fun at that for years, the old drinking, brawling and hell raising side of him rolling his eyes at the pomposity of a group of self designated geniuses sitting around basking in their own geniusness. ;D

Natural smartness inadvertently led to these sorts of "achievements" – and to not have achieved that stuff would have required mindful overriding and purposely screwing up in school, something that didn't cross my mind. In retrospect I wish I'd realized what was happening and purposely just gotten a C average, because once I established myself as being able to perform on that level the bar was raised by my parents, and it became expected that I perform at 120% all the time. It's the same lesson I learned the hard way in the working world, and what one very smart and observant male co-worker buddy named Ryan back in Florida once told me – never let on how smart you are. Don't do anything beyond the bare minimum of what's expected of you because then they just want you to do more, and more, and more. He also went on to talk about how after you establish yourself as being capable you then get promoted…and completely eaten up, spit out and then ultimately fired. Wise words, as I'd seen this for myself at several jobs, and in looking back it applied to my home life as well. The big lesson: Stay as invisible as possible.

(Later in life I would inadvertently attract to myself job situations that were exact replica of everything I'd known growing up. Jobs in SoCal where the pressure was on to be a super multi-tasking worker in super fast paced environments, going going going, where mistakes were not acceptable, supervised often times by these cold, robotic, fake puppet people "reptilian-esque" managers who didn't show appreciation or acknowledge a job well done, instead, focusing only on every little thing that employees did wrong and taking them for granted, and where I had to be on my toes, because the threat of being written up and/or coldly fired out of nowhere always loomed over my head. And not to sound like a self-help book, but several years ago I began examining my childhood in-depth and realized that I was attracting life situations that mirrored what I knew growing up….because that's all I knew, and so subconsciously I kept pulling it to me. Once I realized it though I was able to break out of it, and start creating new patterns for myself at better jobs with nice, relaxed environments. And at this point I no longer tolerate nonsense working environments and bosses anymore.)

[…] By 9th grade in Connecticut I'd completely turned my back on the "brainiac super achiever" persona that had been foisted upon me. Starting in 9th grade I got my first D, and then F, in Algebra….and to my absolute joy, I heard not one word about it from either parent. They were so wrapped up in their divorce drama that for once, there was almost zero attention on me anymore. To be left alone like that concerning school for the first time in my life was absolutely fantastic. In fact, it was during this time period that the domineering control issues with my parents did a 180 flip flop. Whereas once things were strict and oppressive, suddenly it was hands off. (Paradoxically the abuse issues with my mother went through the roof during this time, since we'd always hated each other anyway and now she was in the middle of divorcing my dad who I took after in terms of my overall looks. So I became her verbal punching bag and target of physical abuse since I was such a glaring reminder of him.) But as far as school itself went, for the most part they barely noticed.

In 10th grade my high school in Connecticut was seeking out "gifted" students to place in their newly formed gifted and talented program (the junior high had one, but not the high school), and so an IQ test was administered to everybody. I remember taking the test in English class and being the first one done…and promptly returned to my riveting novel that I was absorbed in. My pencil was down while everybody else was still slaving away, trying to figure things out. Later when the results were in I was given an invite in the form of some letter that was delivered to me in one of my classes to join their little "gifted program" for the few smart kids who'd gotten the highest scores in the school. I didn't even respond back. A big middle finger of indifference to the system that I'd been cornered into my whole life. And it was pretty much all downhill from there as far as school goes. ;D

Despite my dad's earlier training techniques for molding me into a computer-like super performer regurgitation machine, I still don't believe he was even consciously aware of what he was doing. Possibly he was told to be that way by "something," who knows what, because it serves valuable purposes, and so…he did, without any conscious realization of what he was doing, or ability to even question himself. It was like he would switch over into this pissy mean persona whenever he was being a slave driver with school.

On the one hand I want to dismiss the idea of him being under the influence of something else to mold my personality this way, because on the outset it does sound ludicrous, just so….farfetched. Really out there, especially considering we had such a seemingly boring life and nothing overtly obvious in terms of "weird" stuff going on. We didn't live on a military base. My dad wasn't actively involved in the military anymore at that point. So who were the mysterious "thems" that I'm alluding to then? Where were they coming from? I don't know. Yet on the other hand there's no denying for myself that this very unusual personality shaping was occurring. If I can even suspect that I was being "taken," by humans or otherwise, due to those strange indicators as a child mentioned in Part II, then of course my parents would have been too. I mean, what normal parent takes their kid's grammar school performance THAT seriously?? If their little girl doesn't get straight A's in grade school and perform like a human robot computer then the world will end? Come on now. So yeah, I've had to try to come up with some theory, and based on what I know now of the "Big Picture" in my 30s looking back with more puzzle pieces in place, stuff possibly seems to point to that, as much as I want to roll my eyes and think "That's really nuts." But I just keep remembering the line from "The Truman Show," spoken by Christoff, the "man behind the curtain" – "We accept the reality of the world with which we're presented." And if that reality has hidden stuff behind the scenes that we can't see, then of course it's not going to occur to us to think in those terms. Instead we will take what we're presented with at face value…no matter how weird and "off" it may be. And the idea of the other option will of course sound crazy.

So, possibly molding someone into a meek, powerless, completely controlled brainiac "memorize and regurgitate computer robot" at home, who jumps when snapped at and has been conditioned with screaming/terrorizing, spills over into their abduction programming and performance with their handlers. As mentioned earlier in my book, "they" need people who don't think. They need people who mindlessly obey. This is all just theory though, but one that I have to consider in light of everything else I now know. But, kudos do go to my dad though for not repeating the mistakes of his father, and his grandfather before him, who were both psychotically physically abusive. My crazy Italian immigrant great-grandfather kicked the shit out of my grandfather, who in turn kicked the shit out of my dad. My dad inherited their same hellacious temper…but refrained from kicking the shit out of me and my brother, although he did engage in questionable treatment of Joe, no doubt there. It just wasn't anything close to the level of his dad and grandfather.

I often look back on all of it and wonder what would have happened had I decided to rebel and not perform like their meek little robot. Just…refused. Basically, be the way my brother Joe was, because he didn't listen to anybody and would not be controlled, and didn't take anything seriously. That was just inconceivable though. The thought never even crossed my mind, such was the level of control I was under with the complete inability to even think for myself about the idea of rebelling in ANY sort of way. Lot of fear.

As a weird miscellaneous – and more positive – add on, another defining feature of my dad was card games. Since we had such an isolated existence and he liked his card games he taught me how to play, this way he'd have somebody to play against. So, I was his card buddy. (He also taught me chess, so I know all the basics of what the pieces are and how they move, though I know nothing of strategy and for that reason would never even attempt to play against anybody. ;D) He taught me Solitaire, Black Jack, Rummy, Crazy 8s…and Cribbage. That was my favorite, I just loved that game. I was good too, even though I was only like, 11, 12, 13 years old, enough that I could give him a run for his money. :D "15-2, 15-4, 15-6 and a pair for 8!" I may have even won a few games, but I don't remember now. But I have good memories of my dad heading over to the cabinet in the living room and pulling down the deck of Bicycle playing cards (the only kind he'd ever use) and his wooden Cribbage board with the metal pegs, and nodding towards me like, Hey, come on, let's play. At the kitchen table mostly, but during summer weekend mornings we'd be out at the picnic table under the hazy, hot humid sky with those locust bugs buzzing in the trees in the woods. So, yet another example of teaching me stuff and making me smart, but it's a good memory, so I wanted to leave off this section with that.

In looking over all of this, I think that for starters, my dad's work with the Navy and NSA doing whatever he did didn't end with the military. If he had useful skills and talents then possibly he was continually taken and used for years afterwards, unknown to him, long after he was married and had kids. Maybe for psychic stuff, remote viewing/PSI work. Maybe by stuff that isn't even human. I don't know, because I still don't understand who is behind it and how it all works. One reason for this theory is due to one specific incident from when I was sixteen, when my dad was experiencing one of his recurring bouts of out of control psychic ability, what he called "Being On." It was the first time he divulged this phenomenon to me, and I listened with rapt interest. It was driving him mad, because while "On," he could continually read people's minds and know things about everybody around him (namely the people he worked with and such) with no ability to shut it off. He was pacing back and forth in our house in Connecticut, annoyed and aggravated about the situation, as I watched, interested, like Huh. Wow. My mom was out somewhere, which was why he was even talking about it. Had she been around, this incident would never have happened since they were going through their divorce. My dad grabbed a deck of playing cards and told me to shuffle them, meanwhile, as he wrote down a list of ten cards on a piece of paper. When I was done shuffling he took the cards from me and flipped over the first ten in the deck.

The cards matched perfectly, in the exact order of what he'd written on his list.

He wasn't amused by this though, if anything, it seemed to annoy him even more. I look back on this now and think that maybe it was residual after effects of being used for psychic work, reminiscent of his anomalous incident with Hopkins back in the Navy that I learned about years later. And for some reason this incident didn't shock me back then as much as it could have. This seemed neat but yet, normal. I didn't find psychic stuff to be surprising. I was already an avid reader of the "weird" for close to seven years by that point, and had demonstrated my own abilities, as well as hearing stories from my parents. And in my ideal world, everybody would acknowledge it as the normal way for humans to be. This was why I'd felt compelled to give reports on psychic powers at school – educate the masses about what's possible, and what should be normal for us. But I could understand his frustration and aggravation about being plagued by something he didn't want and didn't understand, and even the slight fear behind it, wondering how this came to be. But I just figured it was something he was naturally born with, and left it at that.

At this stage however, I don't necessarily think that.

My dad was born with natural intuitive abilities, and he definitely had a naturally bright intellect. But possibly "stuff" took those natural abilities, tweaked him, and "amped thing up" a few notches through experimentation and mind control. To perform the way my dad did with the Morse code type could have been his natural talent - but maybe he was "tweaked" to perform better. And the way he was whisked away after taking his IQ/aptitude tests and getting to skip the mandatory schooling and training, and his incident with Hopkins, and a UFO finding itself situated right over his head on a military base, and along with his preferential treatment in general, confirms for me that something strange was definitely amiss. But it couldn't have stopped in the military, obviously. Because then you factor in those aforementioned blackout periods he mentioned a few years ago, his dream-like state of mind, and the skills he didn't even know he had, and Houston, we have a problem.

Recommended Reading

There were a few sources mentioned throughout this book, but of those here are the handful that I would really recommend for further information regarding the subjects of aliens/interdimensional beings, neg entities, psychic attacks, MILABS and mind control. (And there would be more recommendations here but I've had to remove some links over time because unfortunately, the material was no longer available. So it goes on the internet.) Directly click on any of the links if you're reading the electronic copy of this book…

Mind Control

"Operation Open Eyes – Five Easy Steps for Creating a Manchurian Candidate" – Gunther Rassbacher. Article that outlines the government's selection and training of youths from America's incarceration system to become programmed "Manchurian Candidates." As noted elsewhere in this piece, the things Gunther described matched my own brother Joe's situation to a T, who spent ages 14-17 in various juvenile lock ups, which is why I recommend this. http://www.rumormillnews.com/operation.htm

"The Illuminati Formula for Creating a Totally Undetectable Mind Controlled Slave" and "Deeper Insights into the Illuminati Formula" – Fritz Springmeier and Cisco Wheeler. http://www.theforbiddenknowledge.com/hardtruth/illuminati_formula_mind_control.htm Hands down the single most detailed and comprehensive source on Illuminati/occult based mind control. However it's not written like a regular book, and is a bit all over the place. So be prepared for that if one chooses to read it. The book outlines the techniques that are supposedly employed to compartmentalize the mind, how the systems are set up within the mind, what the symbolisms, trigger words and number codes are (sometimes supposedly minus a few words or numbers so as to not trigger programmed people who may be reading), as well as information regarding electronic mind control, implants, ritual cult programming and assigning demons to targets, among many other things including Disney, and the Wizard of Oz. It's like a handbook in a way getting into some heavy duty dark material. Not for the faint of heart. Recommend easing your way into the subject with lighter fare first if you are new to the topic. What's interesting to me is that Fritz and Cisco made a few claims in this book about specific people, which at the time there was no real way to confirm. But since then some of these claims have in fact been verified….by the very people themselves. So that's made me sit up and look closer. There's a lot of personal controversy surrounding Fritz, but there's still no question for me that so much of what is reported in "Illuminati Formula" is apparently spot-on. (the proof of what he and Cisco talk about can also be found running rampant within the media: http://in2worlds.net/mind-control-themes-and-programming-triggers-in-movies) Since I see evidence in the world for what he's talking about, I continue to recommend the book despite whatever weird and questionable things may be going on with Fritz personally.

"Mind Control, World Control" and "Mass Control" – Jim Keith. Two books that give a solid overviews of all things relating to government mind control on both individual targets and the masses at large, by the late Jim Keith. http://www.amazon.com/Mass-Control-Engineering-Human-Consciousness/dp/1931882215

"Secret, Don't Tell – The Encyclopedia of Hypnotism" – Carla Emery. Comprehensive historical overview of hypnosis that delves into the use of unethical hypnosis, as well as government mind control projects. Detailed and valuable resource that also contains many additional book, article and website links and references. The late Ms. Emery, who claims to have been victim of mind control herself, put a lot of time and effort into compiling this work and even went into hiding while writing it. If it wasn't for the intervention of "something higher" one night, then this book wouldn't exist at all, as explained in the very first opening introduction. http://www.hypnotism.org/orders.htm

UFOs, Aliens, Abductions and MILABS

"Taken" – Karla Turner, Ph.D. The late Dr. Turner's book regarding eight women's personal case histories as alien/military abductees. Nice sampling that gives a broad overview on the topic, and which is guaranteed to provide at least a few answers and fill in some missing puzzle pieces for MILABs. http://www.karlaturner.org/mainpage-vidboxes/panel2.html

"MILABS Operations" – James Bartley. Article that covers many aspects of MILABS not being discussed anywhere else.

http://theuniversalseduction.com/bartley/8/milab-operations (For more of Mr. Bartley's writings, see the sidebar on that link.)

"MILABS - Military Mind Control and Alien Abductions" – Dr. Helmut Lammer and Marion Lammer. Having never heard of the idea of the military/government taking and messing with people, I was stuck in "unanswered question limbo" back during 2002…until reading this book. It provided my big "Eureka!" breakthrough moment, which is why I still have to recommend it despite its flaws. There are many useful insights and corroborations to be found in the Lammers' "MILABS," but do read with discernment as there seems to be a subtle agenda going on with this book to dismiss certain aspects of abductions, as well as using silly comic book-style illustrations that undermine this important subject. But, still a must-read for any MILABS/mind control researcher. Another write up from Dr. Lammer would be "Preliminary Findings of Project MILAB – Evidence for military kidnappings of alleged UFO-abductees." http://www.karlaturner.org/articles/citations/project_milab_lammer.html And then his follow up article, "Further Findings of Project MILAB – Looking behind the alien/military abduction agenda": http://truthseek.info/articles/3/22/page52/1003//cached/html/

"Discerning Alien Disinformation" – Montalk. Fantastic book that dissects all aspects of the alien situation. Purchase the book from Lulu Press: http://www.lulu.com/product/paperback/discerning-alien-disinformation/4542989 or download the free PDF version from Montalk's website: http://montalk.net/Discerning_Alien_Disinfo_v3.1.pdf

"Operation Trojan Horse" – John Keel. Link to PDF copy of the extremely hard to come by and highly recommended "Operation Trojan Horse" by the late John Keel. I put this book on a very short list of impressive UFO research, not only for the thousands of historical records Mr. Keel sifted through in his research (most of which would probably have been lost and forgotten had it not been for his work in digging them up) along with his firsthand experience and investigative research, and the hundreds of interviews he's conducted with people over the years, but also for the patterns that he spotted in the chaos, and the conclusions he draws from them. http://in2worlds.net/file_download/6/ It's in my opinion that UFO researchers are indebted to Mr. Keel's efforts.

"The Love Bite – Alien Interference in Human Love Relationships" – Eve Lorgen. http://www.alienlovebite.com/main.htm

"The Dark Side of Cupid – Love Affairs, the Supernatural and Energy Vampirism" – Eve Logen. http://evelorgen.com/wp/news/dark-side-of-cupid-book-now-ready-for-pre-order/

"Barbara: The Story of a UFO Investigator" – Barbara Bartholic, as told to Peggy Fielding. The life and times of the late UFO abductee and researcher Barbara Bartholic who worked with Jacque Vallee for seven years and eventually became a MILABs target as well. Written by Peggy Fielding, and based on interviews that Barbara gave to her. It's an interesting read that gets into aspects of the abduction scenario I've never seen mentioned elsewhere, painting a darker, more realistic picture of alien abductions, counterbalancing the typical New Age viewpoint.
http://www.whale.to/b/Bartholic%20-%20Story%20of%20a%20UFO%20Investigator.pdf

"The Threat - The Secret Agenda" - David M. Jacobs, Ph.D. A counterbalance to the new age love 'n light pro-alien propaganda, looking at the possible insidious side to the hybrid breeding program and what the aliens may really be here for. http://www.ufoabduction.com/books1.htm

"Silent Invasion" - Ellen Crystal, PhD. The UFO invasion of the Pine Bush/Hudson Valley area of New York back in the 1980s. http://www.pinebushufo.com/pinebushpage25.htm I was left a bit dumbfounded after reading this book, wondering how this went relatively unnoticed and unreported within the mainstream?? UFOs were out there practically every night, skimming over treetops and people's houses….landing in fields…..and the world in general just looked the other way? Not Ellen Crystall though, she was out giving these things chase on the roads and in the fields, taking pictures, rounding up whoever she could get to go out chasing with her, and even reported that these beings were involved in some sort of digging underground in the middle of the night. Possibly mining for certain elements, as that area contains rare elements not found anywhere else. I even know a woman in her mid-50s who lived in that area during that same time period, and knew of Ellen and could have participated in the UFO chases and investigations if she'd wanted, so that was interesting to get first hand corroboration from somebody who was there. This is a must-read for anybody who's interested in UFO-ology.

"The Cryptoterrestrials" – Mac Tonnes. "What if 'aliens' are not from other planets?" http://www.anomalistbooks.com/tonnies.html "If evidence for the Extraterrestrial Hypothesis has failed to surface—despite decades of hard work and diligent investigations—then maybe we should consider the notion that we are looking for the answers in all the wrong places. Instead of looking up, maybe we should be looking around us. And, perhaps, even below us, too." – From the Foreword by Nick Redfern, author of On the Trail of the Saucer Spies

"Extra Terrestrial Friends and Foes" – George C. Andrews. Interesting book that covers a wide variety of alien lore: The hybrid breeding program, the increase in missing children in certain countries, underground bases, the secret treaty-gone-awry between the U.S. government and the "Grays" and whoever their masters are, the various assortment of aliens that have been visiting Earth and the different agendas, the demonic/interdimensional possibly alien influence on Adolf Hitler, the supposed Virgin Mary sightings and the evidence that they are holographically projected images originating from UFOs, disinformation authors and government-sponsored disinformation, crop circles, indications of ET manipulation in human affairs contained within history and mythology, the extent of the alien cover up and people who are "suicided" when they get too close to things, and lots more, including excerpts from other works and guest contributions from various researchers and authors. The author's approach is intellectual, yet still personable, and he applies rational logical thinking to dissect what we're being told about all things alien and abduction related.

Miscellaneous

Montalk. High quality website with articles by the author Montalk regarding aliens/abductions, metaphysics, conspiracy, alternative science and the Matrix Control System. www.montalk.net

"Practical Psychic Self Defense" - Robert Bruce. Mr. Bruce knows what he's talking about as his book is filled with personal anecdotes from his hands-on experience dealing with neg entities and possession, and it's written in a personable, accessible and level headed way. So much of what he describes in this book I experienced for myself and talk about in my write up, "The Vortex," which can be found on my website. People don't realize how much neg entities run rampant exerting their influence on people, and for that reason I consider this book a must-read.

"The Mothman Prophesies" – John Keel. In the 13 months leading up to the collapse of the Silver Bridge on December 15, 1967, Point Pleasant West Virginia was inundated with all sorts of paranormal activity. UFOs galore, strange Men in Black and humanoid entities visiting the townspeople, and the Mothman itself, a 7-8 foot tall winged creature with glowing red eyes. A doorway to another realm seems to have been activated during those thirteen months allowing for a host of bizarre phenomenon to manifest on our side. Many non-fiction investigative books are written by random strangers who weren't there, trying to recreate a story they didn't live through so the reader can learn about it. Keel however was in the middle of it while it was happening, experiencing the weirdness firsthand and had become intertwined in the lives of the residents of Point Pleasant (and the non-human entities) long before the bridge collapsed, and before anybody understood why any of it was happening. There really isn't another book like this.

"The Gods of Eden" – William Bramley. Mr. Bramley's historical research into the origins of human warfare wound up revealing that non-human intelligences seem to be directing affairs on planet Earth from behind the scenes. Down to earth, informative and thought provoking, this excellent book (released in 1990, before David Icke and Jim Marrs) winds its way back through human history and shows the thread that links wars, religion, politics, and even great plagues.

INTRODUCTION

The Occult Script—A Colossal and Monstrous Conspiracy

But let the Spirit of all lies with works of dazzling magic blind you. Then absolutely mine, I'll have and bind you.

The Devil, Faust
Play by Goethe (1749-1832)

They're everywhere. Cleverly disguised. On TV, imbedded in magazines, and lurking in powerful advertising. Sometimes they're subtle or subliminal, other times direct, provocative, and mind-bending in effect. Strange symbols, signs, charms, talismans, and handshakes that program and control our minds.

Henry Makow, astute inventor and essayist, says that they are key components of the satanic conspiracy that now confronts us with maximum force and evil. "This satanic conspiracy," Makow warns, "succeeds only because people cannot believe something so colossal and monstrous actually exists."[1]

> The world is a contest for our souls. The people who are pushing products, violence, and sex are not operating on a random, 'whatever sells' basis. They have Masonic symbols in their logos. The top players are following an occult script designed to enslave us body and soul. They are building a gigantic prison based on their own mental hell. This is the New World Order; we are the inmates.[2]

It is, in fact, "satanic indoctrination," Makow emphasizes, and we are all locked into the prison classroom as this mental poison from hell is piped in to us 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

A Psychological Matrix

In this eye-opening book, Codex Magica, you will discover just how accurate and true are the warnings of Mr. Makow and just a few others. Most people, of course, are so far gone, their minds so awash with occultism acquired from decades of propaganda encountered on every side, they cannot any longer decipher reality. The majority are caught in some form of Psychological Matrix. Tragically, hundreds of millions of people have, in a manner of speaking, become "Manchurian Candidates." They eat, breathe, move, and sleep as if in a trance. Immobile, unable to react, afflicted with amnesia, they are like Pontius Pilate who, when confronted with Jesus Christ standing right in front of him, the very essence of unmovable Truth, asked Christ the question. "What is truth?"

Well, here, in Codex Magica, in over 600 incredible pages, is truth. Here you will see pictures of many of the foremost movers and shakers of human history, ancient and modern, as they secretly communicate through sign and symbol. Naturally, the elite do not relish being exposed in their dirty works and evil doing. They and their dumbed-down minions—I am referring to the overwhelming "see no evil, hear no evil" masses of people in society—can be expected to quickly jump to the attack and attempt to deny it all. Through sleight-of-hand, they will do their utmost to divert your attention. "The pictures are taken out of context," they will protest. "The images are not what they seem."

"Here, listen to us," they will implore, "it's not what it looks like. Let us explain it all to you."

"Don't be hasty now in your judgment," they'll cry. "You and I know that conspiracies don't really exist. Everything is okay, nothing is amiss. It is all just an accident, nothing to fret about."

"Are You Going to Believe Your Lying Eyes?"

Their weak and idiotic protestations remind us of the famous TV comedian, Groucho Marx. Groucho enjoyed retelling the story of the time a startled wife came home to find her adulterous husband in bed with another woman. "It's not what you think," he assured her. "Are you going to believe what I tell you, or are you going to believe your lying eyes?"

Thank God we no longer have to believe what they, the Illuminati, and their lying accomplices in the media and government tell us. We can lay their propaganda aside and view the actual evidence through the prism of truth with our own eyes. This book is the result of over two decades of research. I believe it speaks for itself. The pictures, illustrations, and proofs contained in these pages do, in my opinion, document a monstrous conspiracy that surrounds and envelops us.

It may well be that some, a few, of the photographs, are not what they appear to be. We all know that it is possible, for example, that photographers took shots of certain people as their hands, fingers, arms, and bodies were inadvertently in odd positions. A picture may be worth a thousand words, as the old Chinese proverb says, but even pictures can be deceiving.

And so, I leave it all up to you to decide, dear reader. Do these proofs provide evidence of these peoples' involvement in nefarious, Masonic, occultic, or magical activity or not? You be the judge.

To help you make a decision, often included in the captions that accompany the photos and illustrations is commentary that helps one to better analyze the situation or scene that is pictured. When possible, I present evidence and information outlining the individual's membership in the Masonic Lodge, the Rosicrucian Order, or other globalist or occultic groups, secret societies, and organizations. This is done as an aid to your independent decision-making.

Sometimes, I admit, it is difficult from the picture alone to ascertain whether a person, or persons, are displaying a Masonic or other sign, or to tell for sure that an occultic pose or scene is being portrayed. Again, the author does his best to offer up evidence, such as pages, excerpts, and descriptions of such signs and poses from official textbooks, dictionaries, and encyclopedias of the Masonic Order or illustrations and examples by experts and authorities.

In some instances, it is unclear what exactly is transpiring in a photo because the intent, or motive, of the individual subject cannot be discerned. We cannot read peoples' minds, and so we must judge based on the photographic evidence. For example, there is much confusion today over the hand sign of the devil called "El Diablo" or "Il Carnuto." Many confuse this sign of evil with the sign of the deaf for "I love you" and with the sign given by many to indicate youthful rebellion, sex, and rock and roll.

In the section of Codex Magica that pictures a number of people giving this problematic sign, I therefore explain the difference in types of hand signs and discuss the ongoing controversy in an attempt to clear up some of the confusion. Readers may just find the clarifying information presented here revealing, to say the least.

All in all you will view in Codex Magica over 1,000 photos and illustrations documenting Illuminists, Satanists, and other elitists practicing magic. Even if the skeptics and naysayers were able to explain away a few of these proofs, the remainder would be sufficient aplenty to prove the thesis of this book. That, indeed, a massive conspiratorial network of occult magicians exists today and has existed throughout human history.

From the perspective of the occult researcher and investigator, the key to understanding the precarious world we live in is the recognition that a consistent pattern exists. A criminal is often convicted by an overwhelming preponderance of circumstantial evidence, even when no direct evidence—like a smoking gun—is produced. But in our case, in Codex Magica, we do produce a convincing array of direct evidence, along with many facts that connect the dots, to conclusively prove the continuing existence of an occult conspiracy. Over 600 pages of photographic evidence and materials cannot all be wrong.

Exercising Fairness and Good Judgment

I wish to emphasize that I accuse no one pictured herein of being a Satanist or occultist. Their being pictured here does not mean that individuals are necessarily members of the Order of the Illuminati or prove anything whatsoever about their social, political, religious ideology or other beliefs. Nor am I implying, suggesting, or stating that the men and women pictured are knowingly involved in any type of plot, satanic or otherwise.

My friends are fully aware that over the years, I have authored and produced numerous books, audiotapes, and videos on the subject of mysterious marks, symbols, signs, and logos, including such bestseller classics as Dark Secrets of the New Age, Mystery Mark of the New Age, and Circle of Intrigue. As such, the reader should realize that the information in my books and other works is based solely on my own opinion. True, I do my level best to judge things accurately and to marshall relevant facts and data that might bear; but ultimately, the reader or viewer must decide if he or she concurs with the author's judgements and opinions. As the cliche of a well-known TV news network so often echoes, "We report, you decide."

Those who have read and evaluated my past works know that I am always concerned and desirous of presenting accurate information. I invite anyone who believes the facts and analysis, or even the opinions expressed herein are incorrect or incomplete to promptly inform me of such. I am more than willing to make corrections or retractions based on the best evidence.

Deciphering A Mountain of Data

One of the problems inherent in an undertaking so vast as this book is that the subject matter is so broad and complex. There are literally thousands of secret signs, grips, and symbols to consider in evaluating photographic evidence. My opponents—the men of the secret societies and the Illuminists—would agree that this is the case. In the Royal Arch Mason, an official publication of Freemasonry, Dr. William L. Cummings commented on how many hundreds of rites, rituals, and degrees existed.[3]

Obviously, in each of the hundreds of ceremonies a number of secret handshakes and signs are taught and practiced. Thus, Cummings remarks, Masons themselves are in a state of confusion:

> It generally comes as a surprise and sometimes as a shock when the Mason who has never given any attention to the subject learns at least a hundred Masonic and quasi-Masonic rites and systems have existed and no less than eight hundred so-called Masonic degrees have been revised.[4]

Royal Arch Mason editor Ray V. Denshaw wryly comments that a long-time Mason of reputation may be asked, "How many of the hundreds of degrees have you received? Have you received the Rite of Memphis of 90 degrees? Or the Rectified Rite? Or the Swedenborgian Rite?"[5]

Moreover, Masons affiliated with the Grand Lodge of the Orient in Paris, the United Lodge in London, or the Grand Masonic Lodge of Israel, may well utilize signs and handshakes not used, seen, or understood in other orders.

Then, of course, there is the Order of the Rosicrucians, the Order of the Trapezoid, The Priory of Sion, The Alta Vendita, the P2 Lodge, the Solar Order of the Temple, the modern-day Knights Templar, the Vatican's Knights of Malta and Knights of Columbus, the Order of the Odd Fellows, the Order of Ahepa, the Order of Skull and Bones, the Bohemian Club, the Pilgrims Society, and a thousand or more other secret societies and orders, not to mention the many Jewish cabalistic groups, satanic churches, and witchcraft and druid sects.

Knowledge of Secret Signs Opens Doors

British Satanist Aleister Crowley, a man who fancied himself the "wickedest man on the planet," was Grand Master of the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.) and also founded the mysterious and Luciferian, Order of Astrum Argentinium. He once ruefully and knowingly intimated that after he had independently learned and practiced how to do the secret handshakes of a number of other secret societies and orders throughout Europe, he traveled around from city to city and discovered that by knowing how to convey the appropriate handshake, he was invited into what is normally the guarded inner sanctum of almost all the groups. They were persuaded simply by his handshake that Crowley was eligible to attend their conclaves and be made privy to their most closely guarded secrets.

The average Mason or member of other secret orders knows little of the signs and symbols of his own order, let alone that of others. In my work for this book, I have communicated with a number of ex-Masons, but few were able to identify any but the most rudimentary of signs and symbols. I did far better with Masonic encyclopedias and with modern and ancient magical texts and guides.

I Give Credit to...

In addition to the individuals listed in the acknowledgements of the title page, I would also like to acknowledge the assistance of a few very special friends was invaluable to me in preparing this book. I'd like, therefore, to give credit to:

- Lawrence Patterson, publisher of Criminal Politics magazine and one of the world's leading experts on global finances and investments.
- Alex Jones, well-known radio personality and top-notch producer of many videos documenting the rise of the police state.
- Dr. Cathy Burns, author of the excellent Masonic and Occult Symbols Illustrated, as well as The Hidden Secrets of the Eastern Star.
- Dean Grace, author of A Little Guide to the All-Seeing Eye Symbol On Our Dollar Bill.
- Ralph Epperson, author of Masonry: Conspiracy Against Christianity, The Unseen Hand, and other fine books.
- Dr. Gail Riplinger, author of the bestselling classic, New Age Bible Versions.
- David Meyer, occult researcher and publisher of Last Trumpet newsletter.
- Michael Hoffman, II, author of the groundbreaking book, Secret Societies and Psychological Warfare.
- Fritz Springmeier, author of Bloodlines of the Illuminati and other revealing works.
- Robert Gaylon Ross, author of Who's Who of the Elite and The Elite Don't Dare Let Us Tell the People.

I also wish to acknowledge the late Jim Shaw and Jim Keith, Bill Schnoebelen, Tom McKenney, Ed Decker, James Spencer, David Bay, Dr. Dennis Cuddy, Reginald Haupt, Jr., Dr. O.J. Graham, Jeff Rense, Des Griffin, Gary Blevins, Dr. Stanley Monteith, Jack Chick, Ted Pike, Donn de Grande Pre, Jack Roper, and Juri Lina, all of whose authoritative research and writings provided me with valuable information as well as incalculable inspiration.

Hands On Membership Not Required

Illuminati paid provocateurs and other would-be critics might suggest that because you and I are not Masons or Illuminists, my research in Codex Magica—or your own independent research—has no authority. In answer, I am happy to respond by noting that the best of homicide detectives have never been murdered nor participated in such; few lifeguards have had an incident in which they were drowning and required assistance; most lawyers have never been sued; most psychiatrists have never been admitted as a patient to a mental institution; most neurosurgeons have never had brain surgery; most sports writers have never played pro-football or pro-baseball yet they report and comment on the same; most prison wardens have never themselves been locked up as convicts, and no historians have lived in the past centuries of history about which they amass information and facts and comment about.

It doesn't take a monster to know that human monsters exist or a serial killer to know that murdering innocent people involves savage and evil acts. And there is abundant evidence that exists about the Illuminati and secret societies so that we do not have to join and participate in these repugnant groups to know what they are all about. Codex Magica proves that.

A Challenge to Critics

I hereby challenge any and all Masons and other members of secret societies to meet me on neutral ground with neutral observers in a contest, a duel of wits, if you will, to see who knows more about the subject matter presented in this book. Until such time as the critic accepts my challenge and is willing to publicly display that he knows as much or more about secret handshakes and grips, symbols, marks, logos and other occultic matters, I suggest that the critic shrink back to the shadowy confines of his Masonic Temple, synagogue, or shrine and refrain from empty, futile criticism.

As for those skeptics and naysayers who get their kicks by pretending to know — just know! —that these things cannot be true, that "conspiracies" just do not exist and who maintain that anyone who even dares to mention the existence of any group called the "Illuminati" just has to be wrong, may I humbly recommend that they earnestly burn the midnight oil, carefully read this book, and examine the evidence in a fair-minded and objective manner? Many a friend has written telling the author that he likewise was once a doubter and skeptic, until, that is, he had heard and considered all the evidence. In this regard, the Holy Scriptures have a tremendous bit of advice worthy of consideration:

> He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.
> -Proverbs 18:13

ONE

Caution!—You Are Now Entering The Forbidden Zone

Only puny secrets need protection. Big discoveries are protected by public incredulity.

— Marshall McLuhan
Take Today

What is one to do when, in order to rule men, it is necessary to deceive them?

— Helena Blavatsky
The Secret Doctrine

What you will read and see in this book is forbidden to you. Discovering these things could be highly dangerous to your health. Forbidden knowledge is sweet, but also deadly. Many men have died for revealing far fewer secrets than are found herein.

I am not being overdramatic nor attempting to be sensationalist. This is a warning: Make very sure that you possess the daring and the courage to proceed before you go any further.

Lingering in my mind are the names of courageous men who have gone before you and I and are now dead because they exposed the forbidden knowledge of the Illumined Ones. Captain William Morgan — abducted, kidnapped and ritually murdered, his lifeless body dumped in a lake after he published a book unmasking Masonic secrets. Danny Casolaro—suicided, having his wrists cut and bleeding to death in a hotel room where he had gone to meet a confidential source; Paul Wilcher, found nude, his body stiff as it sat on a toilet in his home, only days after he mailed his expose manuscript to U.S. Attorney-General Janet Reno; and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, the world-famous classical composer, who paid the ultimate penalty, the Aqua Toffeta, arsenic poisoning that wracked his body.

Poor Mozart. He, too, had revealed some of the secrets of Freemasonry. Blackballed by The Order, so frightened were his friends and family that not one human soul so much as attended his funeral. It is said that Mozart's faithful dog followed dutifully behind the lonely funeral wagon. The sad and forlorn canine was the only living creature in sight as the body of the man all of Europe had once toasted and applauded was taken to its burial site.

So, I ask you, dear friend, once again: Do you dare to discover the secrets many have been punished for merely knowing, let alone revealing? Are you sure, very sure, you want to enter the Forbidden Zone?

Immersed In Evil

You see, we are surrounded by evil on every side—quite literally immersed in it—but the wicked and the deceivers want us to believe that evildoing is exceptional. From childhood we have been taught that evil and corruption are the province of the few, that most people are virtuous, honest, and good, that most of our politicians truly have our interests at heart, that the social system, with the exception of just a few deviants and criminal types, is basically sound.

With such assurances, most people breathe a deep sigh of relief. "Don't worry, be happy," said the words of a fun-time novelty song a decade ago. And most of us appreciate and agree with that sentiment. After all, it's not nice to be negative, to be a skeptic in the midst of a nation of wannabe happy faces.

Unfortunately, the masses who believe this nonsense have been gulled and are destined to receive, very soon, a rude shock and an abrupt awakening.

Grand Deception

As Christopher Mark observed recently in an insight-filled article entitled "Grand Deception: The Theft of America and the World," "The world is completely corrupt beyond your wildest dreams, and the United States is, perhaps, the most gullible of all nations."[1] Mark goes on to explain:

> For now, grasp this: The world you believe exists does not exist. We live in a form of the Matrix, not unlike the world portrayed in John Carpenter's movie, "They Live," except that high government officials and international bankers are the elite who control all you see and hear as did the aliens portrayed in the movie.[2]

But, the foolish may object, we have the media to protect us from the corrupt. We cannot be deceived as long as there is a free press to act as our watchdog.

Ah, but there's the rub. There is no free press! Christopher Mark adds:

> The news is a farce. As is the case with the financial institutions, which are > concentrated in the hands of the few, long ago the media was bought and paid for...What you read and what you see on a daily basis is largely manufactured. You are being lied to each and every day.[3]

Thomas Mann, the keen social observer and philosopher, once suggested that men are erroneously taught to believe that it is forbidden and wrong to expose the works of darkness, or to reveal the machinations of evildoers, especially evildoers who, though they act in hellish ways, the deceived world at large so obviously holds in the highest regard:

> That is the secret delight and security of hell, that it is not to be informed on, that it is protected from speech, that it just is, but cannot be made public in the newspaper, or be brought by any word to critical knowledge.[4]

Secret Delight

How interesting the realization that, as Thomas Mann puts it, hell takes "secret delight" in its ability to keep secrets. Proverbs 9:13-18 seems to have a relation to this. It states:

> A foolish woman sitteth in the high place of the city, To call passengers who go right on their ways: she saith to him, bread eaten in secret is pleasant. But he knoweth not that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.

Why do the Illuminati value secrecy so highly? Why all the mysterious, encoded signs, handshakes, symbols, language, and codes? One finds many reasons. For one thing, the psychopath — these are the kind of people who are Illuminists — seems to be drawn to the darkness, to mysterious perversions and deep occultism. "Nothing so arouses the deep mind's attention than the call of the dark, arcane and mysterious," Paul Huston writes in his book, Mastering Witchcraft.[5]

Secrecy is deemed essential amongst witchcraft sects, and witchcraft is, in essence, Illuminism. Huson explains: "Now witchcraft consists of knowledge, and knowledge brings power. Power shared is power lost. Although we have entered the Age of Aquarius, along with its attendant freedom and loosening of restrictions, it will still be very much in your interests as a witch to shroud certain of your doings in a reasonable veil of secrecy."[6]

As you will discover in studying the pages of Codex Magica, the Illuminati certainly do have much to hide. Seeing as how the leaders of this notorious organization are responsible for hardship, bloodshed and revolutionary terror on a global scale, if their secrets were found out, there would be hell to pay. If the masses ever were to wake up from their trance and begin to understand just how horribly they have been deceived, they would angrily rise enmasse and string up the elite from the nearest light pole.

The Most Terrible Secret of All

But there's also the matter of the most terrible secret of all, the secret that, if discovered, would sound the death knell for the Illuminati and Freemasonry. Manly P. Hall, 33°, touched on this in his book, Lectures on Ancient Philosophy:

> Freemasonry is a fraternity within a Fraternity — an outer organization, concealing an inner brotherhood of the elect. The invisible society is a secret fraternity dedicated to a MYSTERIOUS SECRET.[7]

As Hall alludes, Freemasonry hides its greatest secret even from its membership at large—only an invisible "inner brotherhood" is entrusted with it.

Robert Guffey, writing in the book, The Conspiracy Reader, reports that the "cryptocrats," as he calls the elite, consider most Americans to be mere sheep who must be kept from discovering "the black cauldron of dirty secrets" hidden to them.[8] The MYSTERIOUS SECRET of which Manly P. Hall, 33° writes, surely falls into this category of dirty secrets kept squirreled away in the black cauldron.

The dirtiest secret found inside that black cauldron—THE MYSTERIOUS SECRET—is this: That the unknown "God" worshipped by the Masons and called by such hazy, nebulous names as the Great Architect of the Universe and by codenames such as Abaddon, Mahabone, and Jahbuhlun, is actually none other than Satan, or Lucifer. That is the greatest of secrets that the Illuminati must shield from view.

The Illuminated (so-called "enlightened") man who knows this darkest of secrets is taught by his superiors and comes to believe that all who are in on the secret are somehow more sophisticated, urbane, intelligent, and spiritually astute, than the uncouth, vulgar, and coarse people who stupidly follow after the God of the Holy Bible. Stupid people deserve to be deceived, say the Masons and Illuminists. Thus, as Emile Grillot DeGivry comments, the elite "conceal in order to baffle the vulgar."[9]

Marie Roberts and Hugh Ormsby-Lennon, in Secret Texts: The Literature of Secret Societies, note that the rituals, rites, symbols, emblems, and other tools of the secret societies are "Mysteries that must not be revealed to the profane, lewd, and unworthy."[10] How does it feel, dear reader, to realize that the wicked men of the Illuminati and of the Lodge and other secret societies consider you, me, and everyone outside their own special preserve, as "profane, lewd, and unworthy?"

Symbols as Secrets

To maintain their rotten and corrupt body of secrets, the Illuminati leaders and groups employ symbols. The rites, ceremonies, hand signs, and grips of the Illuminists are based on the science and art of symbolism.

It is said that symbolism began as recorded in the Bible's book of Genesis when God put a "mark" or sign on Cain who had slain his brother, Abel. Throughout human history, marks, signs, pictures, and hieroglyphs came to be used to convey words, ideas, concepts, and secrets.

"By symbols," wrote Thomas Carlyle in Sartor Resartus, "is man guided and commanded, made happy made wretched. He everywhere finds himself surrounded with symbols, recognized as such or not recognized."[11]

As you'll discover in Codex Magica, the elite use many symbols and signs to hide and obfuscate their magical work and alchemy. In the Blue Lodge (the first three degrees), the initiate takes an oath of obligation, pledging:

> I will always hail, EVER CONCEAL, AND NEVER REVEAL, any of the arts, parts, or points of the hidden mysteries of Ancient Free Masonry... [12]

The Order of the Eastern Star, the women's Masonic organization, informs its new members that the Order teaches them of their duties and obligations "by means of SECRET SIGNS AND PASSWORDS."[13] The initiate is further instructed that she must bind herself "to preserve the most sacred SECRECY respecting the work of the Order."[14]

Symbols are more than just pictures. Consider: When you and I, as patriotic citizens, see the red, white, and blue flag of the U.S.A. waving aloft, many emotions are aroused in our minds and hearts. Memories sometimes gush forth, feelings of love of country, home, and family; perhaps deep appreciation for our country's founders, its Constitution, and for the soldiers and servicemen who have died to protect and keep us free. All this bound up in just one symbol.

To the Masons and other Illuminists, their occult symbols also embody a deep and varied set of meanings. Alex Home, in Sources of Masonic Symbolism, distinguishes between a mere "emblem" and a "symbol." An emblem is something that stands for something else, he says, while "a symbol has a moral and spiritual meaning."[15]

That "moral and spiritual meaning" is, of necessity, reserved as secret in nature by these corrupt cultists, because, if their secrets should be exposed to the light, their Great Work and Grand Plan would be vulnerable to destruction, as it should be. But kept secret, the symbols and signs of the Illuminati exert a strong force. Foster Bailey, 33°, in The Spirit of Freemasonry, explains:

> A symbol veils or hides a secret, and it is that which veils mysterious forces. These energies when released can have a potent effect.[16]

To the man whose entire life is immersed in magical symbols, signs, and codes, and who has taken a solemn oath to maintain secrecy in fear of disclosure, the world takes on a supernatural, paranoid quality. Indeed, such men are schizophrenic in tendency, being torn between their role in the normal everyday world and their underground existence in the sordid world of their occult fraternity. Illuminists are, indeed, very dangerous men.

Ancient Origins—Babylonian

Now it is important to understand that almost all the symbols and signs of the elite are very ancient in origin. Former Scottish Rite Freemasonry Sovereign Grand Commander Henry C. Clausen, 33°, who was appointed in 1942 by President Roosevelt to head up the Commission to Investigate the Pearl Harbor Attack, writes that the footsteps of The Order go deep, and its symbols are thousands of years old.

"They arose in ancient ages," Clausen states, "The signs, symbols, and inscriptions come to us from across long, drifting centuries and will be found in ancient Sumerian clay tablet libraries of the cities of Lir, Lagash, and others of the first true urban civilization. This, occurred about 600 years before Egypt was civilized..."[17]

In other words, Clausen is telling his Masonic readers that their signs and symbols came from Babylon.

The Holy Bible warns that the Ancient Mystery Religion of wicked Babylon will bounce back into demonic prevalence in the last days (see Revelation 13, 17, and 18), and here we have the Sovereign Grand Commander, the international chieftain of the Masonic Lodge, informing us of the Babylonian origins of the secret symbols and signs of his Illuminist Order.

When we realize that, for the elite, their symbols are claimed to be infused with dynamic life—to be real things, active images that make and testify and create, we begin to comprehend the powerful and explosive meaning with which the Illuminati endow their signs and symbols.

To them, these are not just geometric shapes, architectural patterns, lines, and circles. Their signs and symbols both live and possess creative power. They are archetypes and thoughtforms. In sum, they are real things that perform. One is reminded, therefore, of the "image of the beast" which, in the last days, is prophesied to both move about and to speak (Revelation 13).

Pity the Poor, Hoodwinked Mason

It's bad enough that the elite hide their dirty little (and big) secrets behind such smoke screens as secret hand signs, codes, etc. But what is remarkably obscene is that they hoodwink their own people.

The highest levels of the Freemasons, for example, have a special word for the manner in which they seek to deceive and mislead not only the "profane" (you and me!) but the vast majority of fellow Masons. That word is hoodwink. It is defined as the effort put forth by the lying men at the top echelons to keep lower-level members in darkness.

In the Encyclopedia of Freemasonry, editor Dr. Albert Mackey, 33°, a former Sovereign Grand Commander, claims that secrecy, silence, and deceit—in other words, hoodwink, is an absolute necessity so that, "the mysteries of our art should be preserved."[18]

Helena Blavatsky, co-Mason and founder of Theosophy, was unusually candid when she once remarked, "What is one to do, when in order to rule men, it is necessary to deceive them?...For almost invariably the more simple, the more silly, and the more gross the phenomenon, the more likely it is to succeed."[19]

Listen to the admission of Albert Pike, former Sovereign Grand Commander who Masonic historian Manley P. Hall, 33°, magnificently praised as a "Masonic Prometheus...a king among men by the divine right of merit:"

> Masonry, like all the Religions, all the Mysteries, Hermeticism, and Alchemy, conceals its secrets from all except the Adepts and Sages, or the Elect, and uses false explanations and misinterpretations of its symbols to mislead those who deserve only to be misled; to conceal the Truth, which it calls Light, from them, and to draw them away from it. [20]

What impudence! What arrogance! Pike is letting us in on the deceit. Even if a man is a Mason, he may not be adjudged worthy of being promoted as one of the "Adepts and Sages, or the Elect." In that case, along with non-Masons, he is purposely misled by "false explanations and misinterpretations." And according to Pike, he deserves to be misled.

Hoodwinked!* Pity the poor, foolish man who becomes a Freemason! In the very first degree ritual, that of Entered Apprentice, a blindfold is put over his eyes, and a cable-tow is hung around his neck. Symbolically, the dumb candidate is "HOODWINKED." Little does he know that his superiors intentionally set out to deceive the candidate and they contrive their deceit through all the ritual degrees up to and including the 33rd.

Secret Doctrine Withheld

George Steinmetz, yet another Masonic author, notes, "There is a SECRET DOCTRINE in Freemasonry! That secret doctrine is concealed, rather than revealed by the very lectures which, we (Masons) are told, offer a rational explanation of the ceremonies of initiation."[21]

Oh my! So the poor Masons must sit and listen to a bunch of boring lectures, with superiors rattling on and on about what are described as the "Mysteries," when, really, it's all just malarkey because the true explanations—the SECRET DOCTRINE—is concealed to all except the few favored "Adepts."

This is why, when I interview lower-level Masonic friends of mine who are more than happy to privately confide to me all the "secrets" they have learned, I often find that almost everything they think they know is pure junk. The hard facts—the really useful info—is reserved for the Masonic muckety-mucks, though it may be discovered with diligent investigation by others, too, no matter how much the Masonic order vainly attempts to conceal and deny.

As Albert Pike relates, "What is most worth knowing in Masonry is never very openly taught. The symbols are displayed, but they are mute. It is by hints only... that the initiate is put upon the track of the hidden secret." [22]

How does one finally discover the inner secrets of Freemasonry? My own experience provides the answer. It has taken me many years of meticulous research and study of the Ancient Mystery Religions of Babylon, Sumeria, Greece, Rome, China, etc. I have spent many nights reading old textbooks and treatises on medieval and occult subjects; conducted intensive investigation of the rituals and symbols of scores of secret societies and orders; and spent years examining the true teachings and practices of New Ageism, witchcraft and Satanism. Moreover, without study of the Holy Bible and constant referral back to it, much of the knowledge I have acquired could not be properly understood.

Masonic expert Lynn F. Perkins alludes to the gigantic amount of extracurricular research and work needed to uncover the greatest secrets of the Masonic Fraternity. He writes:

> The true wisdom is concealed and hidden, not only from those who do not join the Masonic Order but also from those who "take" the degrees; and it will remain > hidden until each Mason seeks revelation and finds the Truth for himself. There are no interpretations in the Ritual; they have to be sought elsewhere."[23]

Pike, echoing Steinmetz, Hall, Perkins and all the other high-level Masonic authorities, goes so far as to mock and disparage lower-level Masons, especially those who have earned only the first three degrees ("the Blue degrees"). After acknowledging that the lower-level brethren are "intentionally misled," he goes on to say that it is not intended that the initiate understand the symbols and deepest secrets of the Order, but worse, the Masonic Lodge's rituals and lectures are designed so that the lower-level Masons shall imagine he does understand them! It is only at a later time, as he has moved up the ladder of degrees, that the purposely dumbed-down Mason discovers he's been had, that he's been played for a fool. In other words, he's been hoodwinked!

So, in effect, Masons are lied to, tricked, made fun of, and intentionally led astray, with only a little knowledge added to their brain reservoirs as they advance up the chain. Meanwhile, the poor, pitiful souls imagine they are really in on all the super-duper secrets of the Craft. Their Masonic superiors play them all for suckers.

P.T. Barnum, of Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey Circus fame, surely was right when he exclaimed, "There's a sucker born every minute." To which yours truly, author of Codex Magica, might add: "...and a 32nd or 33rd degree Mason is behind the veil laughing his head off and rolling in the aisle every time a new sucker is initiated into the 1st degree of Freemasonry."

Shining Light on the Darkness

The Brotherhood of Darkness, as a good friend of mine, Dr. Stanley Monteith, calls the Illuminati, is quite confident it can easily maintain the highest level of secrecy regarding the actual meaning and import of its signs and symbols. Its leaders believe they can even afford to communicate these signals and messages in plain sight, sure in the knowledge that the trance-like masses are incapable of recognizing the awful, ongoing masquerade of deception that stares them right in the face.

Martin Short, who authored a book, Inside the Brotherhood, exposing the Masonic Order inside Great Britain, observed that Masons, believing their secrets to be oblivious to detection, are known to mutter words of near-contempt as they sing a little ditty called "The Entered Apprentice's Song." A verse of this melody goes:

> The world is in pain, Our secrets to gain.
> And still let them wonder and gaze on;
> They ne'er can divine, the Word or the Sign
> Of a Free and Accepted Mason [24]

Oh, we can't, can we? Perhaps it is true that the uninformed "world" at large cannot divine the Word and Sign of the Mason, but the readers of Codex Magica shall do exactly that. Let us therefore move forward with eager anticipation as we uncover in this book many of the most precious and despicable secrets of the elite—things they never in a million years thought we would discover.

Lives of Quiet Desperation... and Torment

Why have the Illuminists succeeded in their hoodwinking efforts up to now? Is it not because of the gullibility of the general public? It has been said that, "most men lead lives of quiet desperation." This is true, and so it is that in their silent morass of desperation, most seek to dull their senses through alcohol, drugs, sex, and entertainment. Tormented within, but doing their utmost to keep a smile on their faces, unable to face the truth, too frightened to even admit to themselves that anything is awry, most men do not even know who their tormentors really are.

To escape reality, these men shrink from the facts, hoping against hope that all will turn out satisfactory in the end. The reality that a monstrous conspiracy exists against them and against their loved ones becomes an enormous burden they simply cannot bear. Cowards, it seems, die a thousand deaths.

Swedish researcher Juri Lina, whose book, Architects of Deception, is a revealing, fact-filled expose of the secret society of Freemasonry, warns that the ideology of "Illuminism," propagated by international Freemasonry and other secret elite groups, is an overwhelming, hidden danger to all of us. It has already brought the most violent upheavals and revolutions and is responsible for the "moral and spiritual degeneration of the individual."[25]

Yet astonishingly, writes Lina, most men and women are hopelessly oblivious to the very forces that most affect their lives on a daily and continuing basis. Lina consequently puts forth this word of caution:

> Those who do not examine the different aspects of the conspiracy will remain incapable of understanding the world...Our rulers want us to believe that a lack of historical knowledge and ignorance about the secrets of nature constitutes true knowledge.[26]

Lina laments the rampant ignorance by the masses who possess little or no understanding of the vast evil on their very doorstep about to break down the door and enter therein. Wisely, he contends that the ignorant, while not the inventors of evil things, nevertheless are accomplices and contributors to evil. "Not being aware of these facts," he writes, "is in itself an evil because ignorance serves evil."[27]

"The little Man Who Wasn't There"

Dr. Peter Ruckman, author of many fine books exposing the conspiracy and defending the Bible, in his newsletter recently penned an article about "The Little Man Who Wasn't There."[28] Ruckman sagely observed that historians, like other establishment "experts," can scarcely be trusted, for they invariably write a history they would like to believe. They limit themselves to reporting only that which comports and agrees with the socially accepted view of history and "truth." If a set of facts is unpleasant or inconvenient to the officially approved mantra, or version, of events, reality must suffer. Facts must become non-facts and lies must be converted into "reliable truths." Ruckman remarks:

> When I was a boy we repeated several little doggerels that turned out to be gems of wisdom in content. One went: "Last night I saw upon the stair a little man who wasn't there; he wasn't there again today; oh gee, I wish he'd go away![29]

"Some nonexistent spooks," Ruckman adds, "are very persistent."[30]

In Codex Magica, we shine a bright spotlight on the little man sitting on the stair, and — voila! — we discover the incontrovertible fact that he is not only there, he is not a little man at all. He's a giant, dark, wicked, corrupt, conspiring, sly, cunning, devious, dangerous ogre who fully deserves all the contemptible attention we can focus on him. He's more than a spook, he's a bloodsucking parasite, a monster who is sitting on the stair blocking us from entering, a criminal thug lying in wait to waylay you and me and rob us of our belongings, our health, our very lives.

Without him sitting there detrimentally blocking our path, the world would be a far better place. Certainly a safer and happier place.

"Two Plus Two Make Four"

Bob Whitaker, a South Carolinian who has done many fine and adventurous things in his life, teaching college classes, serving as a senior staffer on Capitol Hill, and writing copy for the Voice of America radio broadcast, points out that anyone today who simply believes the obvious is ignorantly and unfairly branded an extremist, a conspiracy-monger, a racist, or worse. Men are not free, Whitaker suggests, to tell the truth:

> In George Orwell's book 1984, it turns out that the whole hideous totalitarianism that crushed the hero is based on ending one simple, useless-sounding freedom; "Freedom," it says, "is the freedom to say that two plus two make four."[31]

How incredible! Whitaker is right on target. Who would have ever thought that in the once great United States of America would reside almost 300 million souls, virtually every one of whom today is shaking in his boots, quivering, numb with fear over what dreadful things might happen if he just once simply put his foot down, gritted his teeth, and spit out the words:

I see the little man on the stair. He is there!
And two plus two makes four.
And that's all there is to it. Period!

How sad that most men, by their cowardly silence, become secret collaborators, acquiescing in their own enslavement. What a marvelous and wonderful world this would be if just a small group of honest and thoughtful, courageous men and women would view the revealing and provocative photographs, illustrations, and proofs in Codex Magica and exclaim with all their might in a loud, loud voice to all within hearing range: "I see it. I no longer will remain bound by the willful ignorance that binds the multitudes. I will tell others. I will speak out until, someday, maybe soon, the whole, rotten occult Illuminati establishment comes crashing down!"

TWO

The Megalomania and Rage of the Psychopaths—Why the Illuminati Do What They Do

All of my means are rational, only my ends are insane.

— "Captain Ahab" in Moby Dick
by Herman Melville

Why do the Illuminati do what they do? After many years of research and investigation into their behavior and conduct, and understanding their goals and ambition, I am persuaded these men fit the definition of psychopathic personalities. They are psychopaths and as such they are afflicted with the dangerous malady called megalomania.

Here is how Webster's Dictionary defines these words:

> Psychopathic personality: 1. An emotionally and behaviorally disordered state characterized by clear perception of reality except in the individual's social and moral obligations and often by the pursuit of immediate personal gratification in criminal acts, drug addiction, or sexual perversion. 2. A person having a psychopathic personality.

> Megalomania: 1. A mania for great or grandiose performance. 2. A delusional mental disorder that is marked by infantile feelings of personal omnipotence and grandeur.

In sum, the psychopath possesses a clear perception of reality—he knows full well what he's doing—but he refuses to abide by society's morals. Instead, he pursues personal gratification in such things as criminal acts, drug addiction and sexual perversion.

Combined with feelings of megalomania, the psychopath has visions of his own omnipotence—he thinks he is a god—and has delusions of grandeur. Since he is persuaded he is divine and not bound by the rules that apply to other, less godly beings, the psychopath is a dangerous person, indeed. Dr. Essi Viding, of the Institute of Psychiatry at the prestigious King's College in London, England, has done extensive study of the motivation and behavior of the psychopathic personality. Dr. Viding cautions that the psychopath "shows a lack of remorse, conscience, and understanding of the feelings of others."[1] Sounds like a psychological description and profile of a lot of our world's foremost political and corporate leaders today, doesn't it?

Insane, Parasitic, Immoral, and Dangerous

Frustrate the unbridled ambition of the psychopath and he strikes out in a controlled, yet insane, fit of anger and rage. If the psychopath holds a position of great responsibility—say, President of the United States or dictator of a technologically advanced nation, he can do some major damage.

William Krasner, in an article way back in 1946 entitled Neurotica, warned of the dangers that lie ahead for societies who fall into the grip of the criminal psychopath. He wrote:

> The psychopath is a disruptive, parasitic, immoral influence. Any group, while it may for various reasons support and even honor the psychopath... in direct proportion to the extent that the psychopath is tolerated, that his attitudes find support in the culture pattern, to that extent it is an unhealthy society.[2]

Tragically, America has actually become a dangerous haven for mentally disordered psychopaths. The Council on Foreign Relations, an Illuminist organization, whose 3,000 members run almost every facet of our federal government, especially at the highest official level, is no doubt populated by a majority of psychopaths.

The Masonic Order in the U.S.A. has some two million initiates who have voluntarily undergone occultic-laced rituals to be accepted as common brethren. The ranks of the Masonic Order are loaded, I believe, with dangerous psychopaths. The United Nations organization, endorsed and funded by our Congress, is a seething cesspool of unrepentant psychopaths.

Liars and Deceivers

Psychopaths are inveterate liars and deceivers. In fact, they lie on an Orwellian scale. If confronted with a situation in which veracity and truth are prerequisite, the men who run America's federal government or who sit as CEOs of this nation's top financial institutions and corporations, have the psychopathic "talent" of looking the citizenry square in the face and insisting that, "two plus two do not make four."

Being deceivers and practitioners of the Craft (witchcraft), the psychopaths who lead the inner circle of the Illuminati are more than capable of standing before the cameras and working magic and occult ritual right before our very eyes, pretending all the while they are simply acting normal as usual. It has been said that if one really wants to hide a great secret, he should conceal it in plain sight. Well, this maxim certainly applies to the disordered, but somehow illogical, behavior of the men of the Illuminati. It is not rational to do what these men do in public, in plain sight, yet they do it and expect to get away with it. And they do get away with it! Or at least, they did, before this book was published revealing their unseemly, scripted, ritual behavior.

Why all the occultic ritual rigmarole? Why do some of the world's richest and influential men take the risks they do in working their demonic magical acts in plain sight, so that they are pictured doing it in major newsmagazines and newspapers, on television, and in other avenues with huge potential audiences?

Edgar Allen Poe, the famous novelist of dark mood and mysterious suspense, once wrote a tale, "Perverse of the Imp," in which he suggested that criminals often have an overwhelming, all consuming desire to publicly confess their devious crimes. Could it be this is why the Illuminati so flagrantly flaunt their occultic wares? Is it that they possess a unique taste for deceit and chicanery? Or is the performance in plain sight accomplished because it is believed to infuse power and mastery into their sought for aims and goals?

Mockers and Tricksters

Do they simply enjoy mocking and tricking us? Teasing and playing with our minds, realizing that the vast majority of people in society are willing dupes? It was, after all, serial killer John Wayne Gacy—certainly a psychopathic personality — who once bragged, "A clown could get away with murder." Gacy, you see, enjoyed dressing up as a mischievous and gleeful clown and visiting hospital wards to cheer up young male patients. He also took great pleasure, in the confines of his home, in torturing and killing young boys.

All of these are reasons why psychopaths of the Illuminati pose and parade occultly in front of cameras, exchange ritual handshakes, and otherwise taunt the public. Remember, according to Webster's, the psychopath is immoral, selfishly flaunts societal mores, is infantile in personality, is delusional, and has feelings of grandeur and omnipotence. Men who think they are omnipotent gods must take extreme delight in putting things over the masses whom they consider inferior and sub-human.

Twelve Keys to Understanding

Moreover, after long and careful consideration I propose that in addition to these factors, there are at least twelve other reasons, or factors, why the Illuminati persist in their seemingly delusional and infantile behavior. Each of the twelve reasons is represented by one of the key words listed below:

- Secrecy
- Magic
- Build
- Power
- Pride
- Elitism
- Signal
- Wealth
- Please
- Invocation
- Encourage
- Rebellion

It is important we examine these twelve keys to understanding why the Illuminati do what they do. We have already covered the topic of the elite's obsession with Secrecy in Chapter One. In the following sections and pages of this present chapter, we will look at the remaining 12 keys. We begin with the Illuminati's employment of Magic to accomplish their ends.

- MAGIC

Magic is defined in The New Encyclopedia Brittanica as "ritual performance or activity believed to influence human or natural events through access to an external mystical force beyond the ordinary human sphere."[3] This is an exceptionally accurate description of what magic is and reveals to us exactly why the Illuminati consider magic of such extraordinary importance in the accomplishment of their aims.

That magic is an occult activity is also indicated in The New Encyclopedia Brittanica. So we are not talking here about magicians playing parlor tricks or entertainment extravaganzas—pulling rabbits out of hats, sawing beautiful girls in half, being chained in an aquarium full of water and escaping, etc. Instead, as the encyclopedia so well puts it, magic is ritual performance. It is an occult ritual.

In this occult ritual, the "magician," the Illuminist, believes he can "influence human or natural events." So in Codex Magica, we see pictured the Illuminati giving secret signs, sharing concealed grips and handshakes, displaying symbols and communicating hidden messages. We realize that in performing these magical works, the Illuminist actually believes he is influencing human behavior or otherwise causing real events to occur in a particular, planned way or intended manner. Magic happens! is a popular slogan among witches, occultists, and Illuminists—things change, reality is transformed. Alchemical transformation occurs. Society is shaped by occult plan.

However, to accomplish these aims, this shaping of society, the Illuminist, as an occult practitioner, fully understands that he is accessing, as the encyclopedia definition explains "an external mystical force beyond the ordinary human sphere."

Now, the Illuminist may imagine that he is merely accessing the "cosmic energy force" or that he is tapping into a "fourth dimension," or the "ethereal atmosphere."

Thus he may well lay claim that his magical work, or activity, is benign—that it is simply white magic, good magic, the right-handed path as the Satanists and other occultist call it.

But as we shall see, the highest authorities in the occult world admit that there is no essential difference between white magic and black magic (the supposedly bad, evil, left-handed path). Magic is magic.

Who, or what, then, is the Illuminist accessing in his ritual performance of magic? From my many years of research and investigation into the works and plans of the Illuminati, witches, Satanists, shamans, masons, and other occultists, I declare without hesitation that what these men are doing—knowingly in some cases, unwittingly in others, is calling on, that is invoking devils from an invisible realm ("beyond the ordinary human sphere").

The occult and the Masonic communities can call these evil presences by any coverup name they wish—the Great White Brotherhood, Shamballa, planetary entities, the Hierarchy, etc., but, in fact, the working of magic, I am convinced, is nothing less than the invocation, or inviting, of devils.

This, indeed, is a very dangerous activity; yet the Illuminati has designed its many rituals, signs, codes, symbols, architecture, art, and other devices so that the world around us has become a veritable Grand Theater of the Occult. Because of the Illuminati, the whole world is enchanted, dark with supernaturalism, and the one the Holy Bible calls the Prince of the Power of the Air, also referred to as Satan and Lucifer, must be very proud of his human minions.

• BUILD

You will find pictured in Codex Magica a variety of different types of people. There are the celebrities and the rich and famous, the glitzy or jet-set people who are into Illuminism, occultism, and witchcraft because it is trendy and fashionable. Among this group are some who are into the Jewish Cabala—movie and Broadway stars, singer/entertainers, activists, and so forth. These are often ignorant people who are used by the Illuminati to extract money, for sex, and as novelties. When the money runs out, they grow too old for use as sex partners, or the novelty wears out, they are often cast out or retired and no longer have access to the "Inner Circle" of the Elite.

Then there are the do-gooders — people who support revolution and the socialistic, globalist, environmentalist, and similar aims of the Illuminati for what they fancy is the good of society. Sometimes these people sign up for Cabala classes taught by rabbis; they eagerly join liberal social issue organizations and may also be involved in the secret societies and orders, though at a lower level. Again, we see these people are mere dupes.

Finally, we see several strata of Illuminati elite—major politicians and bureaucrats, including Presidents, Prime Ministers, Chancellors, etc., as well as some corporate CEOs, financiers, media moguls, and others. These are major players, but again, they are dupes because there is a secret, invisible, arcane or hidden "Inner Circle" which works behind the scenes and tells these major players what to do.

This higher level of the Illuminati elite have historically thought of themselves as

The Builders. There is even a classic Masonic textbook by this very title. The Builders believe that Jehovah God did Adam and Eve a disservice by driving them out of the Garden. They rankle at the fact that Nimrod, the King of Babylon, was confounded in building the Tower of Babel, and they are seized with rage over the destruction of their Temple in Jerusalem.

Indeed, the Builders are angered that every time they have sought to bring the world together as One, they have been thwarted by God. All of their chosen disciples, the Caesars, Charlemagne, Napoleon, Hitler, Stalin, FDR, Mao, saw their grand plan of conquest go down to resounding defeat. But still, they strive to complete their assigned mission.

Now it is the New World Order (or Bush's "democracy for all nations") they have in mind. The United Nations is to be "reformed," that is—strengthened. The few rogue nations that remain must be dealt with.

The economies of all the nations must be equalized, enterprise extinguished, constitutions amended or ignored, private property seized or regulated severely, religions transformed, etc. Those are the goals.

In other words, to build their New World Order, the elite intend to destroy the existing World Order. The old must go to make way for the new. It is the Hegelian Dialectical Process that is being used to achieve this prime objective. What is above must become what is below states the Illuminist law of alchemical transmutations.

J. Robert Oppenheimer, the Soviet spy who oversaw the Manhattan Project, the building of the first atomic bomb, and was present when the humongous mushroom cloud rose with its imploding plumes of fire, is said to have exclaimed, "I am became the destroyer of worlds." Few realized that this is a quote right out of the Hindu scriptures, the "Bhagavad Gita, and it was supposedly from the Hindu sun god, Krishna. Oppenheimer, a Jew, appointed to his august scientific position by 33rd degree Mason, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was deep into the occult and was a cabalist magician.

As Michael Hoffman II and a few other keen-minded observers have pointed out, the A-bomb project, the transmutation of matter into intense forms of energy, was long an alchemical objective of the Illuminati magicians. Like the Hindu god who represents them, it is the fondest desire of these wicked, nihilistic men that they become the destroyer of worlds.[4]

And then, from the burned out carcass, like the Phoenix rising from the ashes, is to come the New City of Glory, the Kingdom of the Illuminati, ruled by their god-man King and His Master, Satan. This is the ultimate, all-consuming, repugnant goal of The Builders, to undo what God has done, to defile and utterly destroy planet earth and to rebuild it in their image.

The prophetic Scriptures tell us that this grandiose Plan—the Great Work of the Illuminati—will never fully come to fruition. The Kingdom shall not become the province of the rebellious Illuminati and their dark, occult master, Satan. Here is Almighty God's glorious declaration of how it all shall end:

> "And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, THE KINGDOMS OF THE WORLD ARE BECOME THE KINGDOMS OF OUR LORD, AND OF HIS CHRIST, AND HE SHALL REIGN FOREVER AND EVER...

> And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they shouldest he judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." - recorded in Revelation 11:15, 18

God's incomparable will and plan shall prevail. His Christ and His people shall reign triumphant forever, and the evil shall be judged. And what of the Illuminati, the destroyers of the earth, the ones whom Satan's servant, Oppenheimer, trumpeted were the "destroyer of worlds?" The Scriptures give testimony to their fate; they too, shall be judged, so that God "shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

- POWER

The hunger for power motivates the human disciples in the Illuminati structure. Because they serve Satan, they instinctually know they are also serving the will of his human hierarchy. They expect to be rewarded for this service to the evil side.

George Bernard Shaw, who maintained an overwhelming hatred for God and for Christianity, wrote of a "will" incarnated in higher consciousness man (the elite) that shall "finally mould chaos itself into a race of gods."[5] To fancy yourself as in a state of becoming divine, as so superhuman, special and superior you shall achieve elevation as one of a "race of gods," is an intoxicating prospect.

"Do As Thou Wilt"

The Bible says of the Antichrist, he "shall do according to his will" (Daniel 11:36). Aleister Crowley, head of the occultic order, Ordo Templi Orientis, prided himself on being the "wickedest man on earth." Crowley preached that Satanists had only one commandment: "Do as thou wilt shall be the whole of the law."

Only gods can do as they will. That translates into awesome power. Changing reality by the force of one's will is, in fact, the very essence of magic and witchcraft. F. Aster Barnwell, in his sinister book, The Meaning of Christ For Our Age, equates superior human will with god-consciousness. Through development and exercise of will, or magic, says Barnwell, a man may live forever as a god. Illumined by occult knowledge, the person is able to utilize pent-up psychic energy forces to effect material reality. Barnwell refers to this psychic energy force by the Hindu term "Kundalini," or "serpent power."[6]

A man possessing serpent power is said to operate in a spiritual realm. As such, he is immune to and beyond any human spectrum of morality. Whatever he wills is good, based solely on the results and not on any relative moral scale. In essence, the ends justify the means. In such a relativistic theology, black magic is no lesser in moral standing than is white magic. Black is white, bad is good, and all things are reversed.

Power is the Ultimate Aphrodisiac

Oh, how thrilling to the egomaniacal Illuminati is the realization that they possess and wield such awesome power within the planetary realm. Power is addictive. Former Secretary of State and Illuminati insider extraordinaire Henry Kissinger once smiled and confided, "Power is the ultimate aphrodisiac."

To communicate ultra secret, coded, visual messages of an evil and conspiratorial nature to each other or to the whole group by way of the world's most influential media, with no fear of being reprimanded or of ever being punished for the crime must, indeed, be akin to ingesting a mind-altering, soul-satisfying aphrodisiac. These men lust for power, and conveying secret messages unintelligible to the ignorant masses must give them great emotional delight. It inspires in them the desire to accomplish even greater occult aims.

As Shakespeare once wrote, "The world is mine oyster which I, with sword, shall take and plunder." Yes, the world is their "oyster," and some in the Illuminati hierarchy are so infused with the carnal ambition and lust to power they even seek to conquer and reign the starry realm beyond the surly bounds of this planet. It was British colonialist plotter Cecil Rhodes who once declared, "I would annex the planets if I could."

Somewhat less grand and pretentious in his ambition for power but nevertheless worth recalling is former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, so full of himself sitting at the top of the heap in the U.S. Congress that he once told an audience: "My goal is to shift the entire planet. And I'm doing it!"[7]

- PRIDE

A perverse sense of false pride is a major factor that motivates men to be active as Illuminati operatives and to communicate by secret handshakes, signs, and by other occult media.

To smugly conceive of oneself as superior in enlightenment, in class status, in social connections, and in other artificial aspects is common to the elite. The promotion upward of the initiate degree-by-degree is purposely designed to create the impression that he is gaining knowledge forbidden to the unenlightened multitudes outside the order. A system of awards, jewels to be worn, covert handshakes and cryptic signs shared also reinforces the ideology that the individual is special and superior.

To Be In On the Joke

To be pictured in a nationally circulated magazine is ego-building enough for the Illuminist. But to identify with members of an exclusive and powerful secret organization by purposely giving a secret hand sign in that picture and realize that only other elite are "in" on the joke, so to speak—that can, indeed, engender a rush of perverse satisfaction and haughty pride. The attitude is, "Ha! Aren't we pulling one over on them! What control we have over the masses. What swill they can be made to swallow!"

Jim Keith, a first-class conspiracy researcher who some believe was murdered by the elite during what was supposed to have been a minor surgical procedure on his knee, believed that the perverse satisfaction and exaggerated pride of these men is a natural outgrowth of their keenly observing how much control over others their elite status confers on them and their associates. This is especially true given the Illuminati's control and manipulation of nations like the U.S.A., Russia and Germany, nations with vast technological prowess that fosters the growth of Big Brother government control. He writes:

> Beneath the cloak of the prime conspirators are larger groups of rich peasantry and landlords dominating a huge mass of poor serfs and less-than-serfs whose labor and lives are sucked to provide the lifeblood to nourish the upper portions of the pyramid. This ancient structure is perfectly visible to anyone with the eyes to be appalled.
> It is also obvious that the ruling class cabals and spy organizations which we do know about are pointed in roughly the same direction: the total control and "utilization" of the mass of mankind by whatever means it takes. Aside from all the lofty banter about the "perfecting of mankind," what is desired is the perfecting of the systems of control.
> Control is the shared goal of these numerous conspiring individuals, groups, and governments, and in that sense they work together, collaborating here, working individually there, creating an evolving noose of murderous technological expertise that swiftly tightens around humanity's throat. With this goal in place, with money and the tools of advanced technology in hand, the overall program of accomplishment crystallizes. [8]

Absolute Power Corrupts Absolutely

Exaggerated, self-absorbed pride becomes especially evil and dangerous when prideful men acquire power. It was Lord Acton who, in 1886, uttered the well-known maxim that, "power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Unduly prideful men are imbued with that unrighteous temperament because they often have unfettered access to power—power over people, over organizations, over resources, and over nations. Power to reward or to punish chosen disciples, friends, or enemies, even power to take life.

The best of historians now admit, for example, that President Franklin D. Roosevelt and his corrupt, Masonic associates knew in advance of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor that catapulted the United States into war. The Illuminati wanted world war, and the American airmen, soldiers, and sailors who died on December 7, 1941 were considered necessary to precipitate the USA's entrance into World War II.

The U.S. Government also had prior knowledge of both the 1993 Oklahoma City bombing of the Murrah Federal Building and the 9/11 bombing attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon. The massive loss of life was no obstacle as far as the elite were concerned. Their cold-blooded agenda is calculated to engender chaos and destruction in a never-ending, alchemical process of bringing Ordo ab Chao (order out of chaos). To the elite, murder is business as usual. And so, once again, we discover that a moral vacuum is inherent in the minds of these men of perverse pride.

• ELITISM

Closely linked with their perverse and exaggerated pride is the corrupt reality that the men of the Illuminati do, indeed, run most things in society. They are the elite, and, unfortunately, they are afflicted with elitism. They do receive unfair advantage and exalted status in society. Sadly, the dumbed down masses adore the men and women of the elite.

Elitism is a sickness, a disease. The men (and women) who are pictured in Codex Magica giving secret signs and sharing covert hand grips no doubt enjoy a smugly satisfying sense of perversity in knowing they are deceiving those whom, they are persuaded, are the ignorant and unknowing multitudes.

The Inner Circle and Their Puppets

The elite of the Illuminati are themselves divided by rank and authority. There is a hidden inner circle, followed by a several hundred-member core. Next, we have perhaps three to five thousand in a larger circle of influence, and then finally, another ten thousand puppets.

The latter group, the puppets, have no real influence on matters of importance. This group includes celebrities, media representatives, educators, and others who are only vaguely aware that an elitist global conspiracy exists. They simply know that they must hew to the "party line." The puppets also realize they must maintain a strict form of political correctness by promoting globalism and the approved socialist agenda. They are required to rigorously adhere to the "script" provided and continue to loyally wear the individual "mask" they have been supplied.

John Swinton, newsman and former editor at The New York Times once shocked his audience at a luncheon meeting of the press by boldly confessing:

> There is no such thing in America as an independent press. You know it and I know it... The business of the Journalist is to destroy truth; To lie outright; To pervert; To vilify; To fawn at the feet of mammon, and to sell his county and his race for his daily bread. You know it and I know it and what folly is this toasting an independent press?
> We are the tools and vassals for rich men behind the scenes. We are the jumping jacks, they pull the strings and we dance. Our talents, our possibilities and our lives are all the property of other men. We are intellectual prostitutes.

Swinton appears to have known very well that the careers and activities of his peers in the media are strictly controlled and regulated by their elite masters. And this rankled him. But then, after Swinton's comments that day, little was ever heard again from the man.

The Group Mind and the Insectoids

As Michael Hoffman II once sagely noted, the analogy of "insects" often resides in the true tale of the initiates of secret societies and orders. This is because these men are themselves deceived by Lucifer, and so they go about deceiving others. Thus there is a Group Mind resident in all these people, whether an Illuminatus is a member of the inner circle or is a lowly puppet. It is for reason that Professor Adam Weishaupt, co-founder of the classical Order of the Illuminati (May 1, 1776), called his sect the Beenan Order (Order of the Bees).

Jim Keith, in Mind Control and UFOs, also noted this hive mentality. Keith wrote that in the South American nation of Columbia, there is a German community which, even today, over 60 years after World War II, uses the swastika as its icon. This group calls its compound "Hormiga," in honor of the obedient worker ant, yet another form of Illuminati insectoid.[9]

Thus, we find the beehive or anthill as apt metaphors for the servants of the Illuminati. It is fascinating to realize that these people are servile, weak, and crawling little personalities. They echo in unison the words "Yes, Master" to their superiors, the potentates of the various secret societies and orders.

The underlings of the Illuminati, in effect, are abject and craven cowards, groveling in fright and terror before their Illuminist chieftains; yet, they act in public as though they are superior beings—oh, so special and "hoity toity," as the saying goes.

Believing in their own inflated self-worth, they consider themselves members of a higher-level caste while categorizing the masses outside their group as like so many cattle or sheep—even as "useless eaters."

They Look Down On the Inferior Goyim

Such is the distorted view of the Jewish Illuminati who derogatorily refer to Gentiles as the goyim (cattle).

The late Dr. Israel Shahak, Professor at Hebrew University in Israel, a man I respected greatly, was a constant critic of such a deviant, superiority attitude. Shahak noted that many Zionist Jews are unashamed advocates of human slavery:

> The Israelis have resuscitated a book in Spanish by Jews dating from the 14th century which has been adopted for use as a manual of religious instruction in Israel's secondary schools. It explains why non-Jews ought to be the slave of Jews because Jews are the elite of the human race. Because of this they deserve to have slaves, and these slaves must be non-Jews.[10]

This outrageous and imperious attitude does not take those of us by surprise who have studied the Jewish Talmud, the rabbis' holiest book. According to the Talmud, Gentiles are not even to be considered humans: "The goyim (Gentiles) are not men, but beasts" (Baba Mezia fol. 1146).

It should be further noted that the Encyclopedia Britannica says, "The Talmud is still the authoritative and practical guide of the great mass of the Jews." (From the 9-volume German language translation of The Babylonian Talmud in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.)

Slaves and Beasts

Slaves and beasts! That is what the Zionists of Israel consider those who aren't Jewish. Now we discover what the elitist, favored sons of the Zionist Illuminati think of you, me, and the masses. No wonder they kill without conscience through their instigation of world wars, through initiation of regional conflicts, and through assassinations and other criminal deeds. The elite plot and carry out heinous terrorist acts and institute financial crises and cultural upheavals to force the Hegelian dialectical process along its desired path toward a New Age New World Order.

Deaths are "acceptable losses," the Illuminati reason, and pain and suffering are necessary for requisite changes to occur in society. In any event, since those outside The Order are relegated to the lowly categories of "slave and beast," why wring one's hands or otherwise unduly concern oneself with whether such miscreants as you and me live or die? The Malthus Principle suggests to the Illuminati that periodically thinning the global population is a good thing. Evolution, they believe, calls for the survival of the fittest, and they view themselves as superior and most fit to rule.

Elitism is certainly a disease, a mental disease, and those afflicted with it experience no guilt whatsoever in performing magical rituals of all kinds to enhance and accentuate their elite status and signal their superior "knowledge" to their occultic peers.

• SIGNAL

Scan the pages of this book, Codex Magica, and you immediately discover that the conspirators of the Illuminati have a deep, dark desire to signal each other. They seem to be obsessed with flaunting their special ties with each other as well as their membership in the Brotherhood of the Elite at large.

Could it be that these men—sharers of occult secrets and sharers of crimes—also share a joint consciousness and recognition of their mission as individual members of a commonly shared destiny? I believe that is the case.

In Conscious Evolution, Dr. Barry McWaters acknowledges this commonality, this attempt to unify on the part of the insiders, each of which, he acknowledges, make a "unique contribution:"

> In this way the differentiated parts...come to recognize that our common task is a Trans-human one, a goal beyond ourselves. [11]

McWaters notes that, "Many people have opened themselves to serve as channels." By their individual acts of performing rituals, including the communication of signs and symbols which embody intense energies and are magical in effect, there is expected to arise a "transformed humanity, creating a new heaven and a new earth to manifest itself."[12]

In effect, the co-conspirators are performing a psychic form of magic. By the combination in the ethereal world of millions of ritual acts by individuals, it is believed that a collective transformation of mankind and of earth will take place. When a critical mass is achieved, a quantum leap in consciousness will spontaneously occur. The catalytic process of magic on a mass, continuing scale will help push this process along to completion. Then and only then will the Universal Mind, long a cherished goal of the elite, be realized.

Meanwhile, the co-conspirators believe they are mass-conditioning humanity and helping to build archetypes of energy forces in the collective consciousness that tend to create a binary, dialectical process of chaos that will result in the Hegelian achievement of equilibrium. This, they are convinced, will catapult the world into a global-wide Zionist state, ruled by an enlightened dictatorship made up of Masonic overlords who wisely rule and are beyond good and evil.

In effect, the co-conspirators are persuaded they are each a cell, or molecule, playing a certain role within a greater organism. Their deceit is to imagine themselves an energy unit, or snapshot within a holographic universe in which all things are related and are one: "Further, not only is there one unity, but there are unities within unities within unities."[13] But of course, at the top of their unified pyramid is the controlling entity with the all-seeing eye. That, indisputably, is Lucifer.

Interesting is the fact that each of the co-conspirators fully recognize what the others are doing. Each understands the mask he must wear and the signals to be given. In a Public Broadcasting System (PBS) documentary, the story is recounted of the day President Harry S. Truman, a 33rd degree Mason, met Hollywood director and actor Orson Welles (War of the Worlds and Citizen Kane fame). Truman smiled and said to Welles, "You're the second greatest actor alive today. I'm the first."

• WEALTH

What would compel grown men to act like immature, two-bit stage actors, twisting and distorting their fingers, hands, and bodies into ridiculous symbolic gestures in what appears to be a ludicrous campaign to force magical change or to convey secret messages via the media to fellow conspirators equally brainwashed? Most of these men are wealthy. Is that a factor? Does wealth confer on a man the unbecoming non-quality of stupidity? Is the secret coding and sending of messages, by word and by visual means, a process or activity of stupid, wicked rich men?

Not all wicked and powerful men are wealthy, but many are. Disproportionately so. Having studied the lives and work of the elite, I can testify that their idle lifestyle and wealth often becomes an impediment to their moral development and to their potential exercise of good judgement and common sense. This is especially true of members of Dynasty family lines—the Bushes, Kennedys, Clintons, Roosevelts, Bronfmans, Rothschilds, the royal families in Europe, etc.

Idiotic Behavior, Witchcraft and Magic

Wealth and idleness lead to boredom, and boredom to idiotic and aberrant, bizarre behavior. But though we may laugh at what seem to be the comedic and unfruitful attempts of the elite to use coded messages and symbolism in magazines, newspapers, on TV, and in other media, for them this is no laughing matter. It is serious business. It is ritual witchcraft, and without it, their lives would revert to the mundane. Witchcraft and magic having become an essential part of their lives, they are addicted and must continue. As one famous witch once remarked, "I had no self-control. My appetite for performing spells and working magic eventually became insatiable. Satan kept wanting more and more, and I had to provide it."

The scriptures say that the love of money is the root of all evil. Not just of some evil, but of all evil. The concentration of wealth into fewer and fewer hands translates into the concentration of evil into fewer and fewer hands. The idle wealthy soon lose perspective and are out of touch with the serfs and vassals. The slave state, at its zenith, is run by dullards, silly men who have convinced themselves that a secret handshake made in front of a camera—or a hand sign flashed by them on a TV news program — turbo-props their personal progress in the ranks of the elite. They are also convinced that their use of covert signs, grips, handshakes and symbols helps in their acquisition of greater satanic powers, leading to greater control by them over the unknowing peasantry.

Foolish, But Also Dangerous

Tragically, these men, though often foolish and dull, are dangerous to us all. The silly man who is given control and management over the keepers to the keys to the nuclear-tipped ICBMs that sit deep inside the earth is, indeed, a dangerous man. So, too, are men whose banking, financial, and corporate decisions can plunge entire nations into desperate straits of bankruptcy and ruin.

It is, moreover, no consolation to realize that the stupid and self-indulgent who populate the highest reaches of the Illuminati ranks are often cunning, sly, devious, and ethically-challenged.

The imbecile son of a wise king is always less wise than his father, but upon his father's passing, he nevertheless assumes the throne. How often does history show that heredity renders a nation a cruel blow when the next generation takes command? In that instance, the cry of the people invariably rings out: "The King is dead—oh no! —Well, okay, long live the King."

Rarely do the men at the top echelons of the Illuminati deserve their powerful and influential positions based on merit. Their reign is based on, first, heredity, and, next, on cronyism and toadyism. Survival and promotion is not according to survival of the fittest, but survival of the most wealthy and the most favored.

Sometimes, modern man looks at old newsreel footage of monsters like Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Hitler, Castro, and Mussolini, and they ask, How could entire nations have ever believed in such cartoonish, even outlandish, characters? But, remember, we see these men only in retrospect, and we fancy ourselves as being too smart to have ever been taken in by such odd personalities.

Someday, an evil one will come who will be so wicked and diabolical he shall cause the masses everywhere to revere and honor him as a "saint above saints." The scriptures say virtually the whole world will believe in and follow him. The Illuminati elite surely will give this evil tyrant all their allegiance. They, along with the duped masses, will fall prey to the Strong Delusion, they will believe the Lie, and they will be Damned (II Thessalonians 2).

• PLEASE

To please their master, Lucifer, is the highest priority of the Illuminati. Illuminist Albert Pike, 33°, former Sovereign Grand Commander whose commentary on Freemasonry's rituals, Morals and Dogma, is the classic learning textbook for all Masons, issued instructions on July 14, 1889, to the Supreme Councils of the World identifying the Master whom Masons universally worship and venerate:

> That which we must say to the crowd is — we worship a God, but it is the God that one adores without superstition... To you, Sovereign Grand Inspector Generals, we say this; that you may repeat it to brothers of the 32nd, 31st, and 30th degrees—The Masonic religion should be, by all of us initiates of the high degrees, maintained in the purity of the Luciferian doctrine.[14]

Pike's embrace of the "Luciferian doctrine" is not surprising. Manly P. Hall, 33°, considered by Freemasonry as the Lodge's greatest scholar of the 20th century, taught that the energies of Lucifer were necessary for the successful Masonic warrior. Meanwhile, John J. Robinson, whose book, Born in Blood, was celebrated by top Masonic Lodge officials as an accurate history of the Knights Templar and of Freemasonry, insisted in his later book, A Pilgrims Progress, that Lucifer is not Satan or the devil. Instead, Robinson insisted that Lucifer is an angel whose guidance and help can be employed either for good or for evil. Of course, Robinson's writings make clear that pleasing Lucifer is high-up on the Lodge's list of priorities.

Lucifer the Divine

Eliphas Levi, the cabalist magician whose artist depiction of Baphomet, the androgynous goat god, is illustrated elsewhere in this book, was more to the point. He recognized that Satan and Lucifer are, indeed, one and the same. But Levi also taught that Satan, believe by true Christians to be the enemy of God, is, in fact, man's helper and benefactor. Indeed Levi praised Satan, or Lucifer, as the "angel presiding over the light of truth."

"Lucifer is divine and terrestrial," said Levi. "He is the Holy Spirit" and is the "light-bearer in us. It is our mind."[15]

Thus, we discover the cabalistic philosophy is not only that Lucifer is divine. He is integrated into and is one with the mind of the men who make up the Illuminati elite. Lucifer and these men are of one mind. This brings to pass the prophecies of Revelation 17 where we are told that the conspiracy of the elite in the endtime shall be composed of world leaders who will be of "one mind for they will give all of their power and strength to the Beast."

Unlike Eliphas Levi, most Illuminists are hesitant to identify Satan as their Lord.

Instead, they point to the Grand Architect of the Universe as their deity, or to a hazy and nebulous, unnamed "God." We have discovered that most of the Illuminati elite make the ridiculous claim that they neither worship nor even believe in a being, or entity, named Satan. Many laugh—at least publicly—at the notion of a real entity known as the Devil. The Masonic Lodge not only publicly disavows worship of Satan, but also vainly attempts to cast Lucifer, pseudonym for the Devil, in the mold of a good angel, ostensibly sent here on earth only to assist man and introduce man to the "better angels."

The One About Whom Naught May Be Said

In her eye-opening book, The Initiation of the World, occultist Vera Stanley Alder reinforces this pretense of the elite. She remarks that it is "Deity" without a name that is admired and worshipped. Furthermore, this mysterious Deity is esoterically described by her as the "ONE ABOUT WHOM NAUGHT MAY BE SAID." Ironically, Alder does have a lot to say regarding the "one about whom naught may be said." In fact, she praises this unnamed god as a being of immense "wonder and magnitude." She suggests, too, that the One the elite worship may properly be referred to as the "absolute." Alder also remarks that the entity she recognizes as the divine "One" is made up of "forces," and he has dominion over certain—again unnamed — greater or lesser entities.[16]

Of course, a rose by any other name is still a rose. And no matter how reluctant or tentative are the magicians of the Illuminati to come right out and identify the One whom they serve, we who have long studied these maladjusted rulers and their psychophants need not dodge the issue. Without question, a great many of the Illuminati know without a doubt whom they serve: Satan, also called Lucifer, the Devil, the Adversary. Their secret hand signs and grips, their symbols and their logos, indisputably prove this is so.

• INVOCATION

That demon principalities are invoked in the rendering of Masonic signs and other magical operations by the elite is a clear indication that these men are involved in witchcraft. It is not believed that the universe is some neutral machine, operating in a non-theological, pure, mechanical manner. Rather, there are believed to exist certain otherworldly spiritual hierarchies, entities that aid the elitist in creating a powerful effect upon the world. As witchcraft teacher Paul Huston explains:

> "There simply exists power to be tapped to do good or to do evil...There exist certain entities who will aid you in your spells...You may call these entities gods, spirits, or watchers; or depersonalize them as powers or forces..."[17]

The Hierarchy

These gods, entities, powers, or forces are said to be hierarchically arranged:

> "At the top, we have Great entities often known as Watchers, Mighty Ones, or gods...which can be contacted to bring a certain power to your rituals.
> Then there are spirit entities or demons halfway between men and gods in their constitution...Of course there are many minor, elemental spirits."[18]

Huston says that talismans, images, and symbols—and hand and body signs and the positions and prescribed actions of body parts—will "partake of the nature of a spirit or elemental." In other words, spirits are attracted and supposedly go to work on behalf of the person who wears or displays the magical talisman, charm, image, idol, or symbol, or who practices and puts into operation a particular hand sign, handshake, body movement, or position, or ritual, whether that ritual is simple or sophisticated.

The more sophisticated and complex rituals and the more detailed, intricate, and powerful is the design of the talisman, symbol, hand sign, etc., the more likely a higher level entity—a being higher on the spiritual totem pole or pecking order so to speak—will be induced to participate in performing the desired magical act. That is, the greater the force of magic that will be applied. A great Entity, perhaps a prince or other high-up territorial potentate in the demonic spiritual realm, is naturally thought to possess the power to force changes in the real world. It is no accident that in the Bible, the last day, endtimes world ruler and his earthly human companions are said, to worship the "God of Forces."

Ritual Ceremonies and Demons of Secret Societies

The leaders of the secret societies of the Illuminati would have to be supreme dullards not to recognize the demonic forces that are invoked in the ceremonial working of the various ritual degrees. C.W. Leadbetter, a 33rd degree Mason and occultist who was allied with Annie Besant and her Theosophical Society in the 1920s, is just one of many Masonic leaders who have acknowledged the participation of devil spirits. For example, Leadbetter says that the ritual for the 30th degree brings forth an angel who is "a great blue Deva of the First Ray." In the 33rd degree, Leadbetter relates, two "splendid fellow workers, spirits of gigantic size as compared to humanity and radiantly white in color are present."[19]

In fact, Leadbetter said that the ritual for the 33rd degree actually links the Sovereign Grand Inspector General of Freemasonry with the "Spiritual King of the World Himself; That Mightiest of Adepts who stands at the head of the Great White Lodge, in whose strong hands lies the destinies of earth."[20]

- ENCOURAGE

The frequency of the higher-level elite conveying occultic messages via hand signs, arm gestures, body postures, and similar means encourages lesser disciples. It reassures them that they are part of a cohesive and unified whole, members of a distinctive body of powerful and influential world movers and shakers. It is an awesome feeling, no doubt, to find oneself in company with the aspiring and actual rulers of the planet.

Naturally, for the lesser initiate, seeing the top adepts displaying Masonic, Rosicrucian, O.T.O., and other signs and symbols in major propaganda and cultural organs (TV, newspapers, magazines, internet, books, public forums, etc.) also instills fear and dread. Fear and dread of what the Organization — powerful as evidenced by its public display of its chief symbols to a profane, ignorant mass audience —might do to them if they ever should be so bold or so foolish as to damage its assets, reveal its secrets, or betray it:

> There is an inevitability...which is at once its horror and its joy...once an accepted disciple has definitely undertaken the work in preparation for initiation, there is for him no turning back. He could not if he would...
> He has heard the voice of his Master. Occult obedience gives place to enlightened will. He can now be trusted to walk and work alone because he is unalterably one with his group, with the Hierarchy, and finally with Shamballa (hell).[21]

The Carrot and Stick Approach

Thus, we see in use by the top ranks of the elite the carrot and stick approach. If the fledgling initiate strays from the fold, or, worse, reveals any of the secrets of the Brotherhood, he will get the stick of punishment. But if he cooperates, he will be rewarded. He will find himself in the enviable position of being lauded as a co-creator of the world aborning.

C. Fred Kleinknecht, 33°, Sovereign Grand Commander of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, in March, 2002, in The Scottish Rite Journal, boasted of this Creator role. In an article entitled, "A Brave New World of Heroes," Kleinknecht encourages Masonic disciples by emphasizing:

> One of the great lessons of the Scottish Rite is this: We do not inherit the world, we create it.
> "O brave new world, that has such people in it!" —This line from Shakespeare's The Tempest seems particularly appropriate...[22]

In practicing magic by employing secret signs, the sharing of covert handshakes, the use of power-attracting symbols, the use of hidden codes and other ritual means, the deceived initiate believes he is helping to build that Brave New World—a "better" world. Better, that is, for he and his magical associates. He is working as a member of the Group to alchemically break down and build back up society into a new order of things. He is, as we shall see, engaging in the rabbinic and cabalistic practice of Tikkun Olam, the repair and reconstruction of the world.

- REBELLION

The illuminated elitist does not regard himself as a man, but as a god. As such, he is, in fact, a rebel, engaged in rebellion against the one, true God. Collectively, the elite fancy themselves to be God. How does a mere human being arrive at such an imagined exalted state of existence?

Vera Stanley Alder, in her celebrated textbook, The Initiation of The World, writes that once the Illuminist has been raised to become a "unit within a great brotherhood," he progresses toward fusion and unity with the all-consciousness. In this state...

> Man is no longer worshipping God, asking things of God, trying to become like God. He knows that he is God...He is.[23]

They Hate Without A Cause

Here, then, we find an arrogant expression of hubris, pride, and, most of all, rebellion. Rebellion against God, against His Truth, and against His people. The Illuminati are revolutionaries. Their revolt has no rational cause. Christ Jesus noted: "They hate me without a cause." The Illuminist strives for liberty and fulfillment of self-interest and will apart from God and His Will. That is why this brotherhood of evildoers are rebels, opposers of good, colluders with any and all forms of apostasy.

The propensity of the Illuminati to engage in rebellion, against God, country, and even organized civilization itself is evidenced in the inner meaning of their centuries old rallying cry: "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," the esoteric meaning of which is liberty from the dictates of God, equality of all men only in death, and the unity of evildoers. Truly, the man who has taken vulgar and bloody oaths to defend The Order and has vowed to protect its secrets against onslaught by would be interlopers and intruders is not above killing those who oppose his ambitious personal goals or who stand in the way of the attainment of the objectives of the Order of the Illuminati.

"In Freemasonry It Is Permitted to Kill"

Consider the military trial of the Freemason, Cabrinovic, assassin of the Archduke Ferdinand of Austria, Hungary, a fateful event that touched off the deadly and fiery conflict of World War I. Cabrinovic's testimony at his trial provides us a graphic example of the rebellious spirit of the men of the secret societies and orders.

Asked if he had conspired with other Freemasons to murder the Archduke and thus set off a saga of anarchy and mayhem throughout Europe, Cabrinovic told the military court, "Yes, I knew we were all Freemasons, and this strengthened my resolve... Freemasonry strengthened my intention. In Freemasonry it is permitted to kill."

Ah yes. "In Freemasonry it is permitted to kill," testified the assassin Cabrinovic. How exquisitely truthful the man was as he sat in the witness chair, being called to account for his horrific crime.

When we examine the historical record of the world's most despicable mass murderers and revolutionaries, we find that almost all of them were members of Freemasonry and other secret societies of the Illuminati:

> Robespierre was a Freemason; Weishaupt was a Freemason; Napoleon was a Freemason; Lenin was a Freemason; Stalin was a Freemason; Mussolini was a Freemason; Truman and Roosevelt were Freemasons; Ariel Sharon is a Freemason; Bill Clinton is a Freemason; Fidel Castro is a Freemason.

Is There No Help For the Widow's Son?

At his trial for conspiracy to commit homicide, satanist rebel Charles Manson was observed giving a variety of Masonic hand signs, including the Masonic sign of distress. The same sign was reportedly given by Mormon founder Joseph Smith as he lay dying on the floor of an Illinois jail on a variety of criminal charges. Lying bleeding and desperate, Smith's raspy voice could be heard crying out the plaintive, Masonic wail, calling on Masons to help a brother in dire trouble, "Is there no help for the widow's son?"

Joseph Smith no doubt could not believe that he, a man who claimed to be God's Chosen Prophet but who secretly worshipped Lucifer; he, a man of such superior intellect and endowed with the occult gift of spiritual enlightenment, was about to meet his Maker, a victim of a vigilante mob who despised him.

Jack Parsons, American rocket scientist, founder of California's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, and a priest of the O.T.O., was, like Mormon Joseph Smith, a premier servant of Satan and a rebel against God. He even fancied himself to be the prophesied antichrist. Parsons wrote this chilling paragraph in his diary:

> And thus was I antichrist loosed in the world; and to this am I pledged, that the work of the beast shall be fulfilled, and the way for the coming of BABALON be made open and I shall not cease or rest until these things are accomplished. [24]

A few years after writing this, Jack Parsons was killed in an explosion in a laboratory at his home, which also served as a meeting place for other members of his satanic order. He evidently was not to become the prophesied antichrist, a fact Parsons now knows only too well, residing as he is in some subterranean cell somewhere in a place called hell.

Concealed Messages—The Importance of Hand Signs to the Illuminati

And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads...

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry (p.91)

As we shall see, the llluminati worship deity by many names in many disguises. One such name and disguise is "Jahbuhlun." In pursuit of their worship of this false god, Jahbuhlun, they have devised many rituals in which they employ "hidden" hand signs. In all the 33 degrees of Scottish Rite Freemasonry and in the rituals of the York Rite, the Order of Skull and Bones, the Ordo Templi Orientis, the Grand Orient Lodge of France, the Grand Lodge of Jerusalem, and on and on in almost all the secret societies and orders, handsigns, and handshakes are prominent.

In Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia we read: "The hand is important in Freemasonry...for the purpose of giving and receiving modes of recognition."[1] In

A Degree indescribably more august, sublime, and important than any which precede it, and is, in fact, the summit and perfection of ancient Masonry. It impresses on our minds a belief in the being of a God, without beginning of days or end of years, the great and incomprehensible Alpha and Omega, and reminds us of the reverence which is due to His Holy NAME.—Historical Landmarks, vol. i. p. 86.

Masons pay homage to their Satanic god, Jahbuhlun, in performing the ritual "Three Times Three" in the Royal Arch, or Seventh Degree. (page 225 from Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, 3rd edition)

The second sign of the Super Excellent Master Mason simulates gouging out the eyes of a "traitor" to Freemasonry.

J. C. Coopers's An Illustrated Encyclopedia of Traditional Symbols[2], the author notes that hand signs include the following symbolic meanings:

Hand on Breast—submission and the attitude of a servant or slave
Crossed at wrist (X) — binding or being bound
Hand on neck—sacrifice
Clenched fist—threat, aggression
Raised hand—adoration, worship, horror, amazement
Both hands raised, palm outward—weakness, supplication, acknowledgment, adoration, admiration
Raised to head—thought, care, intellect, wisdom

The International Secret Language

Is the occult hand sign, in its many forms and varieties, the international secret language of the Freemasons and other covert societies? Manfred Adler, in his German-language book, The Freemasons and The Vatican, says the answer to this question is, yes.[3] He writes that according to the findings of a United States Senate Committee that investigated the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), "Ninety percent of the secret news is transmitted via the media, in particular the press, with the aid of coded texts and pictures."[4]

Messages in the Media

Others, too, besides Adler, have noted the frequent use of hand signs in the media as signals of secret society insiders. Juan Maler, Argentine author and Masonic researcher, explains that the use of the hand sign is for the uninitiated a completely trivial and inconspicuous gesture. "But for the members of the Secret Societies, the hand sign is used as a sign of recognition by those who are in a leading position or who have a mission to fulfill and usually appears with a relevant text."[5]

Johannes Rothkranz, German authority on Masonic signs, suggests that, "If one collects the photos of well-known personalities from the daily papers, then one possesses, in a very short time, a great number of conspicuous and — for those who understand the signs—also meaningful poses."[6]

According to Rothkranz, the historic handshake between Helmut Kohl, then the Chancellor of West Germany, and Modrow, the head of the Communist East German regime which sealed the deal for German reunification was clearly a Masonic handshake. Rothkranz further notes that the historic handshake of the two elitists was shown at length on European television.[7]

A Symbol of Power

Why is the use of the hand considered to be so significant as a means of concealed communications by occultists? The Herder Dictionary of Symbols states that the hand is "a symbol of activity and power." It notes that finding oneself "in the hands of a ruler or god means being in that person's power, but also standing under that person's protection."[8] The dictionary goes on to say that the "shaking or offering of the hand is a sign of friendly openers, devotion or forgiveness." But a closed hand signifies secrets or keeping silent. Other uses of hand signs are to indicate fear, threats, devotion, admiration, and argument.

The Herder Dictionary explains, too, that, "In antiquity, covered or veiled hands were generally customary when one approached high dignitaries." Hands with palms resting on one's knees express deep concentration and reflection.[9]

The hand can also be used as a threat to any would-be traitors or betrayer of the Illuminist cause. In the authoritative Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry we find an example of this in the second sign of the Super Excellent Master Mason. The sign consists of raising the right hand, making the two first fingers like a fork, and simulating the gouging out of the eyes of a "traitor."

On the Other Hand...

There is a great symbolic difference between the use of the left and right hands. The right hand is said to be the hand of blessing, a good and positive influence, and those who use it in the occult world are known as those on the "right-handed path." This is considered "white magic."

Those on the left-handed path, however, are practitioners of "black magic." Full-fledged Satanists are typically of the left-handed path, though, in reality, it does not matter to the devil which hand is used!

The left hand is ever considered the sinister hand. It is associated with words like diabolical, witchlike, clever, deceptive, sly, cunning, evil, wrong, backward, and perverse. The evil eye is said to be the left eye. Some early Christians (for example, the writer of the apocryphic Gospel of Nicodemus) taught that of the two thieves crucified next to Jesus, the one at his left side rejected truth and was consigned to hell.

In heaven, Jesus, of course, is believed to sit at the right hand of God, not the left. In Ecclesiastes, a book of the Old Testament in the Bible, it is said that, "A wise man's heart is at his right hand, but a fool's heart is at his left." (Eccles. 10:2)

Witches throughout history have danced in ritual circles to the left, that is, counterclockwise. Druid priests do likewise as they dance and march around the holy stone at Tara, Shrine of Mother Earth. To blaspheme God, some Satanists and witches derive pleasure in giving the sign of the cross with their left hands.

But while witches and deep occultists are aware of the sinister nature and meaning of the left hand symbolically, one of the foremost Masonic authorities evidently has a more favorable view. Professor James Curl, author of the reference book, The Art and Architecture of Freemasonry, writes that, "The left hand is the symbol of equity."[10] In other words the symbol of justice and fairness. Strange, indeed, unless one elevates the devil to the virtuous level of one who serves justice and brings equity or equality. But then, why would a Masonic authority think otherwise of the Lodge's true Grand Master, the Prince of the Power of the Air, aka Lucifer?

An Indicator of Attitude

According to most reference books of the occult, the positioning of the hand on a particular part of the body indicates one's mental attitude and inner meaning. A hand placed on the breast indicates a tender, loyal or sympathetic attitude. Placed on the neck, the hand denotes sacrifice and penalty, while the joining of hands signifies mystic marriage and fidelity.

Grand Master Jacques de Molay of the Knights Templar, predecessor to today's Freemasonry and other secret societies. Accused of blasphemy and of worshipping the grotesque idol of Baphomet, the horned goat-god, de Molay was burned at the stake by the King of France on March 11, 1314. The sign he is giving his captors seems clearly to be the vulgar and obscene "up yours" gesture. Although de Molay was reputed also to be a homosexual, today's international Masonic Lodges honor their former Grand Master by naming their youth groups the "de Molays."

Three or more people linking hands signifies the joining of forces or energy, and is expressive of a virile fraternity and of solidarity in the face of danger.

The authors of A Dictionary of Symbols note that the hand expresses "ideas of action, as well as those of power and dominion." They say it is also a sign of royalty. The Jewish Kabbala (or Cabala) teaches that the left hand is the "hand of punishment," while the righthand is the "hand of blessing."[11]

The same reference guide explains that the word "manifestation" derives from the same root as "manus," the Latin word for hand. "What is manifest can be held in, or grasped by, the hand."[12]

The Fingers Can Be Revealing

The position of a specific finger, or fingers, of a hand may also denote great importance. Sammy Davis, Jr., the black entertainer and member of the infamous Sinatra "rat pack," confessed in his autobiography, Yes, I can, to being a Satan worshipper. The talented singer/dancer said that as a Satanist he painted the fingernail of his left-hand "pinkie" finger ebony black as a sign. "The chicks loved it," said Davis, "and found it really a sexual turn-on." Some Islamic imams (teachers) preach that the hand of Fatima, a revered daughter of Mohammed, represents the summation of the whole religion of Islam, and that Fatima's index finger points heavenward to Allah.

A hand with finger pointed to or touching the lip indicates, "Be silent." A finger touching or pointing to the head signifies "intellect or wisdom."

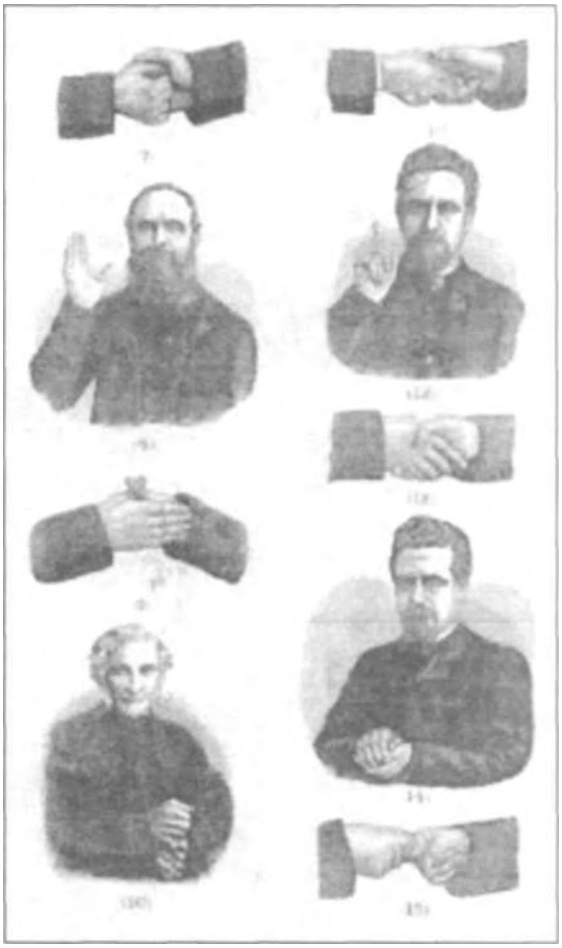
The pictures and illustrations in this section and the immediately following sections give evidence of the importance the Illuminati minions give to the use of hands, either in handshakes and grips, or in various poses. The old phrase, "a show of hands" certainly has a multiplications of meanings to the members of secret societies.

Open to Interpretation?

A word of caution and advice is in order, however. Although I have used the best reference guides and the best knowledge obtainable from myriad investigative sources, it is sometimes very difficult to judge and evaluate a particular handshake, hand sign, pose or grip. For one thing, even though a masonic reference book or occult textbook may clearly spell out the specifications for a type of grip or sign, the people who practice it are not always so precise.

I noted in a 20-year career in the U.S. Air Force that while the military manuals and guidebooks clearly explain how to perform a hand salute, not all in uniform complied. Some high-ranking officers render a shoddy, confusing, lackadaisical salute while others give a snappy, precise salute exactly as the textbook prescribes. One can see a hundred different types of salutes at a typical Air Force Base exchanged on a given day, each a little bit different in one aspect or the other. And, of course, if you compare the way the U.S. military salutes with the salute of a British Sergeant Major, the difference is striking, indeed.

Still, even taking into account the human factor, it is possible to identify many of the hand signs and poses given and used by the elite. Check out my selection on the pages that follow and see if you agree.



Many secret orders and societies display and use secret handshakes and signs. In Wales (Great Britain) the Order of the True Ivorites was established in 1836 and prospered for many years. Some believe two lodges of Ivorites still exist today. Pictured here are some of their secret signs and handshakes.

The Axis of Death

Over my many years of exposing the lies and evils of Freemasonry, the Ordo Templi Orientis, the Rosicrucians, and other treacherous cultic secret societies, I have been challenged by many Masons. Their typical complaint is, "How dare you say such things about Masonry! Why, I'll have you know I am a Christian, and there is nothing in the Lodge or its rituals that would not be acceptable to my Christian faith."

Of course, it is super-easy, almost like taking candy from a baby, to disabuse the Masonic whiner and complainer hollering that you or I have slandered the Masons by denying their order's "Christian attributes." After all, there are scores of points to make that blow apart the silly notion that the Masonic Lodge or similar groups are even vaguely "Christian" in nature. But the easiest way to handle such a complaint is to ask the Mason if he has reached the Royal Arch Mason ritual level or equivalent (13th degree in the Scottish Rite). If he answers "yes," then, uh oh, he is in big, big trouble.

What About Jahbuhlun?

I then ask him about the name of his sacred god revealed in the Royal Arch degree ritual; that is, I ask him about Jahbuhlun. And usually, I can hear either a long uninterrupted stutter, or else simply a great gasping sound. Generally, that ends the discussion right there. A Mason definitely does not want to publicly discuss that name, Jahbuhlun. Anything but that. Bamm! He's gone. And I can understand why.

Ed Decker, a friend of mine, a good Christian who is an ex-Mason and ex-Mormon, now heads up a Christian ministry aimed at helping men get out of these cults. In a book that Ed edited, entitled, The Dark Side of Freemasonry, he writes that while Christians know full well that the sacred name of God is Jesus, the Mason is at first denied knowledge of the sacred name of their God and then belatedly finds out that the name of the Mason deity is definitely not Jesus, the name above every other name (Philippians 2:9-11).

The Lost Name of God

The Blue Lodge Masons, encompassing the first three degrees of Masonry, are instructed that they are seeking the Lost Word or the Lost Name of God...It isn't until they reach the level of Royal Arch Masonry (seventh degree, York Rite) that they discover that the Lost Name of God wasn't lost after all. It's at this level that they learn the sacred name of Masonry's God.

They find that the sacred name of (the Masonic) God is composed of three names representing the three identities of God. It is so sacred it takes three Royal Arch Masons to be able to speak it.. Jahbuhlun. The three Masons grip hands high and low and chant, "Jah-buh-lun, Jah-buh-lun, Jah-buh-lun, Je-hov-ah." The name Jahbuhlun has three syllables representing a composite God made up of three subordinate deities. The Masonic material identifies the three as Yah (or Yahweh), Baal, and Osiris. Logically, the name should be spelled Yah-Baal-On, but Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor admits that over the years the spelling has been "corrupted" by Freemasonry until it reached its current form.[1]

Decker correctly asserts that, "What these men are doing is worshipping a demon god so far removed from the real God that this worship must surely defile the holiness of God and guarantee those who pronounce that name in such a ceremony a swift ride to Hell..."[2]

C.C Zain, a Freemason who is part of a group called "The Brotherhood of Light," is developer and author of an entire course on Ancient Masonry having to do with "The Spiritual Significance of Masonic Rituals, Degrees, and Symbols." Zain points out that the name Jahbuhlun is Masonry's Grand Omnific Word, the name of their omnipotent deity. He further shows the significance of the fact that the name Jahbuhlun has nine letters and is made up of three syllables, Jah, buh, lun. In the ritual for the Royal Arch Degree, since there are three Royal Arch Masons pronouncing the name three times each, altogether, says Zain, twenty-seven syllables are pronounced. This, he explains, represents "the twenty-seven days it takes the moon to pass through the circle of zodiacal signs."[3]

Interestingly, in the ritual drama, the three Masons doing the pronouncing of Jahbuhlun are said to have come from Babylon! So, we have a ritual—the 13th degree in the Scottish Rite and 7th in the York Rite—in which three "Masters" come from Babylon (the font of all evils, see Revelation 13, 17, and 18 in the Holy Bible) to instruct the candidate on how to build the Royal Arch (symbolically, how to rebuild the Jewish Temple in Jerusalem and thus establish the kingdom of the elite and their devil god on earth).

The Lost Word Found

Moreover, the three messengers from Babylon inform the candidate that the true name of God, the name that had been lost for so long, is not Jesus, but is Jahbuhlun. They conveniently omit mention of the fact that this is, in fact, the name of a monstrous DEVIL GOD, that the name is an unholy and blasphemous composite of Jahweh, Baal, and Osiris, or On. (On is a city in Egypt where the worship of the sun god, Osiris, is alleged to have begun. Somehow, many in Masonry today honor and revere Osiris under the name of On, the name of his city, curiously spelled Un in the name: Jahbuhlun.)

No wonder Masonic authority W.L. Wilmshurst, in his highly thought of (by Masons) The Meaning of Masonry, proclaims this degree so vital to the transformation of the candidate's life. He even suggests that in attaining this Degree, one "exhibits the attainment of a new order of life."[4]

The Royal Arch Degree, Wilmshurst emphasizes, provides "a supremely high level of thought and instruction" for the Mason attaining it.[5]

Born Again or Demon-Possessed?

What does Wimshurst mean when he says the adept has attained a "new order of life?" I believe the candidate receives a counterfeit born again experience, receiving the very spirit of Lucifer into his bosom as a result of conforming to the requirements of this degree. In accepting the devil god Jahbuhlun as the sacred name of God the man rising to this level in Masonry or a similar sect becomes demon possessed, full of the devil, headed for hell, prepared to do the most wicked and foul deeds possible for his hidden deity, Baphomet, aka Lucifer, aka Satan, aka Jahbuhlun.

Now, the fatal (ending in spiritual death) sign that is taught for this degree is the one you will find men giving in the photographs in this chapter. Notably, only higher-level initiates and adepts will typically be seen giving this evil sign stamping them as demon-possessed disciples of Satan. I call this sign the Hidden Hand of the Men of Jahbuhlun.

From Washington to Rothschild

Regrettably, America's first President, George Washington, exhibited this sign, if the painter of one of his most famous portraits is to be believed. Subsequent Presidents, men like Franklin Pierce and Rutherford Hayes, were disciples of Jahbuhlun, as was President Teddy Roosevelt. We also have communists Karl Marx, Vladimir Lenin, and Joseph Stalin giving the sign, plus Napoleon, Salomon Rothschild, and many others whose images and pictures you will find in the ensuing pages, as they perform this devilish sign.

Wine From A Human Skull

Many other facets and activities pertaining to this degree's ritual stamp it as pure Luciferian and its holder as a Lucifer worshipper. During the initiation into the seventh degree Royal Arch Mason (York Rite) or 13th degree (Scottish Rite), the candidate drinks wine from a human skull. By this monstrous act, he reinforces the fact that he has taken an oath swearing to "have his skull struck off and his brains exposed to the scorching rays of a median sun" should he ever divulge Masonic secrets. He goes on to demand that if he does divulge secrets, may all the sins of the dead person whose skull he is drinking from be heaped upon his, the candidate's, head.[6]

So we see that the Mason's newfound "God," Jahbuhlun (Jah-Baal-On), is a rigid taskmaster who does not look kindly on traitors and blabbers. It was the Canaanite god Baal, of course, to whom the backslidden Jews and pagans sacrificed their children in the fire. You'll recall that the prophet Elijah brought the message of God's judgement against those who worshipped bloodthirsty Baal, who, in reality, is merely an idolatrous representation of Satan. Yes, Baal is the devil.

To attempt in vain to combine the name of the true God with that of false gods like Baal and On is particularly evil and grievous to the true God in heaven. Yet, the Mason does exactly this with Jahbuhlun and then compounds his grave error by adopting as one of his chief logos the sign of the double-headed eagle (symbolizing one body of God, two heads!)

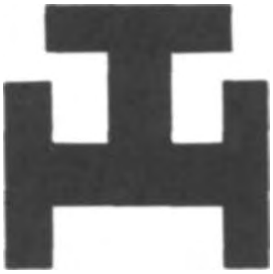
The Triple Tau

Yet another proof of the deviltry of the Jahbuhlun hoax is the symbol of the Triple Tau, which is the most important symbol of the Royal Arch Degree. Made up of three interlinking tau symbols (T), these three are said to represent a triad of sacred, Jewish powers of king, priest, and prophet. In other words, the Mason assumes a trinity of



The Triple Tau is the most significant symbol, or logo, of the Royal Arch Mason. It represents the Mason who has reached either the seventh degree of the York Rite or 13th degree of the Scottish Rite as embodying within the attributes of the Godhead, or Holy Trinity, by blasphemously declaring himself to be the great I Am That I Am, thus identifying himself with Satan's promise in the Garden, "ye shall be as gods."

Jewish spiritual powers.[7] Actually, this trinity of the Jews is in competition with the true Godhead of the Bible: Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

"I Am that I Am," the Mason Proclaims

Equally blasphemous is that in the lecture on the seventh, or Royal Arch Degree, of the York Rite, the Mason initiated is asked the question, "Are you a Royal Arch Mason?" His answer is required to be: "I am that I am."[8]

In other words, in this degree's ritual the Mason has not only acknowledged that the devil, in the guise of Jahbuhlun, is his sacred Lord, but he now is declaring that he, himself, a mere man, is the great I am! In other words, he is saying, "I am God!"

Uncovering the Hidden Hand

Now you see why I entitled this chapter, "The Hidden Hand of the Men of Jahbuhlun." In the early degrees, the Mason is told that the name of God has been lost. He's even told that he should use a substitute name for God, MAHABONE. But later, after he's swallowed whole the rotten fabric of degree ritual after degree ritual, the bamboozled and propagandized fellow is finally told that the one he is to worship goes by the name Jahbuhlun and that he is now ready to declare himself, a man, as the great I AM.

Obviously, the Illuminati's Masonic elite do not want the general public to know these terrible things. After all, incredibly, Freemasonry's public image is that it is some kind of "Christian" group. So, the pretense must be maintained and the secrets buttoned up from the "profane and vulgar" masses (you and me, dear reader). Therefore, the name of the horrible god whom the Masons worship must stay hidden.

The name and identity of the hidden god must be concealed at all costs, and thus an appropriate hand sign has been devised to represent this grotesque coverup: the Sign of the Hidden Hand.

How to Perform the Sign

Figure 34 shown here is taken directly from Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor (3rd Edition). It pictures the Royal Arch Mason performing the magical Sign of the Master of the Second Veil, which I informally and more informatively call here the Sign of the Hidden Hand of the Men of Jahbuhlun. According to Duncan's the candidate presents this sign when he is approached by three sojourners from Babylon. Their objective: Rebuild the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem and eventually establish a world empire of the Jews.

SIGN OF THE MASTER OF THE SECOND VEIL.

In his teaching course on Ancient Masonry, C.C. Zain of The Brotherhood of Light explains that the ritual for this degree requires a keen understanding of astrology. But, its performance is said to be derived from a passage in the scriptures. "The sign is made," writes Zain, "by thrusting the hand into the bosom and again drawing it out."[9] The official Masonic explanation for this sign—a myth intended to divert the profane from the truth — is that it refers to the fourth chapter of Exodus in the Holy Bible: "And the Lord said unto Moses, put now thine hand into thy bosom; and he put his hand into his bosom; and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow."

Leprous, indeed, is the hand of the Mason who vainly seeks to hide and coverup his fides oath of allegiance to Jahbuhlun, his sacred god. But, believe me, there is no relationship of the Mason to Moses, a prophet of God who loyally worshipped the true I AM, the God who reigns for all eternity in heaven.

but further you cannot go without my words, sign, and word of exhortation. My words are Shem, Japhet, and Adoniram; my sign is this, [thrusting his hand in his bosom;] it is in imitation of one given by God to Moses, when he commanded him to thrust his hand into his bosom, and taking it out it became as leprous as snow. My word of exhortation is explanatory of this sign, and is found in the writings of Moses, viz.: fourth chapter of Exodus:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Put now thine hand into thy bosom;—and he put his hand in his bosom; and when he took it out, behold his hand was leprous as snow, &c.

This is a Conclave, governed by an Invincible Knight of the Order of St. Johns of Jerusalem.

The officers are as follows:

Invincible Knight, presiding, sits in the east.

SUPER-EXCELLENT MASTER.

A Lodge of Super-Excellent Masters consists of the following officers, viz.:

Most Excellent King (representing Zedekiah, the last King of Israel) presides, and sits in the east.

Companion Gedaliah (so called) is the second officer, and is seated in the west.

First Keeper of the Temple is seated on the right of Gedaliah.

Third Keeper of the Temple is seated at the door inside the hall, to guard it.

Three Heralds, stationed outside the door, with bugles in their hands.

Three Royal Guards, (including Captain,) stationed near the King.

A Recorder, or Secretary, sitting at the right in front of the King.

The Altar is placed in the centre of the hall, and the general business is conducted similar to that in other degrees. The Council is opened as follows:

Below: Once again, we find the Captain of the Guard giving the "hand in bosom" sign (officially the sign of the Master of the Second Veil), this time during the ritual for the degree of Order of Knights Templar. The triangular-shaped altar with the coffin and its skull and bones emblem is revealing.

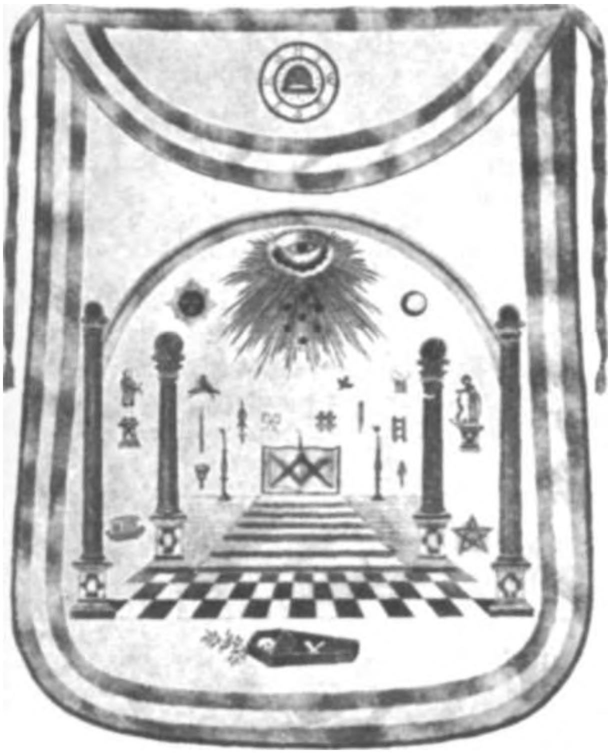
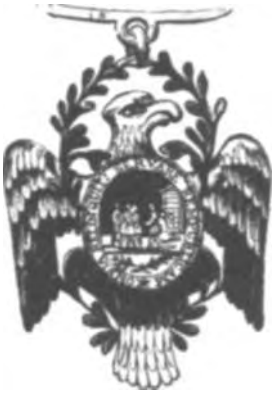
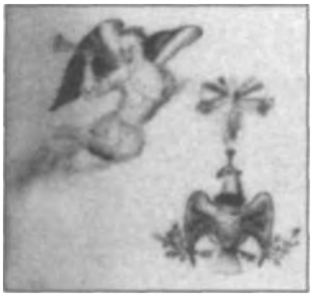
George Washington in a Masonic pose. Around his neck is the emblem of the moon goddess, feminine complement to the sun god, Osiris, secretly worshipped in occult Freemasonry. This emblem, combined with the diamond-shaped device just above it, indicates that Washington had taken the vow of vengence to all enemies of the Order of the Illuminati.



The Marquis de Lafayette of France presented George Washington with this Masonic apron which is now preserved in the library of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia. It contains many occultic symbols, the meaning of which presumably is reserved for higher-level Masonic brethren. Many, however, are outed and explained in this book, to the chagrin, I am sure, of the Masonic brotherhood.



Emblem of the exclusivist Order of Cincinnati (also called the Society of Cincinnati) worn by elite members. The secret society met in private and was headed by George Washington.

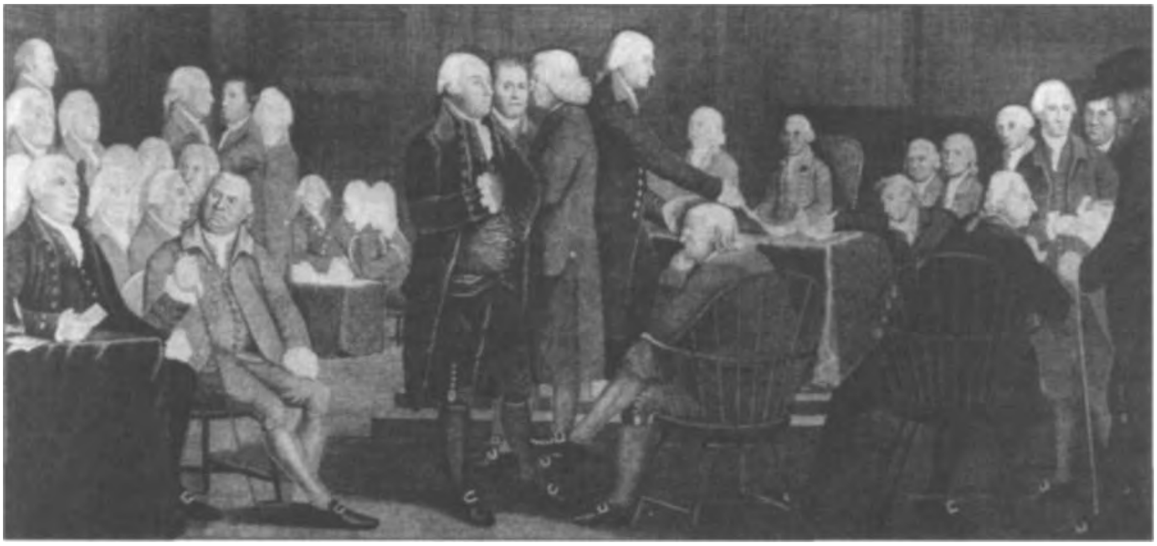


Artwork from a china set which displays symbols important to the Society of the Cincinnati, a secret order of elitist rich men begun after the Revolutionary War, headed by George Washington. The symbols include a strange crowned angel blowing a horn and a phoenix bird with a torch aflame in its head from which issues a swirling fire, or sun sign. The Society of the Illuminati was eventually disbanded when public awareness grew that this small band of conspirators seemed to be exercising undue control of governments.

G:Washington

Initiates of many occult societies, including Masons and Rosicrucians, select a mark peculiar to them which they affix to their signature. This is George Washington's signature. See if you can find his "mark."

President George Washington takes the oath of office as the first President of the United States following the adoption of the U.S. Constitution by the states. The gentleman standing directly behind him is giving a decidedly diabolical version of a secret society hand sign. (G. Washington: Master Mason, by Allen E. Roberts, Macoy Publishing & Masonic Supply Co., Inc., Richmond, Virginia, sketch by Ronald LeHew)



Many paintings and drawings depicting delegates who drafted and approved the Declaration of Independence show one or more of the delegates secretly identifying his secret society membership through a hand signal. The name of Jesus is never mentioned in either the Declaration of Independence or the subsequent United States Constitution. Instead, our nation's founders used vague, Illuminist coded terms like "Nature's God" or "Providence." Benjamin Franklin, a key leader of the delegates, was both a Grand Master Mason (Lodge of Nine Sisters, Paris, France) and a Rosicrucian. Thomas Jefferson, who helped draft the Declaration of Independence, wrote favorably of the Order of the Illuminati and its founder, European Jesuit Professor Adam Weishaupt.

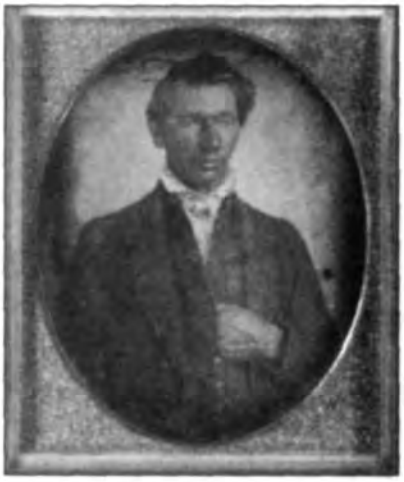
COMMANDER OF THE AMERICAN ARMY, 1775. PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, 1789.
INITIATED NOVEMBER 4TH 1752, IN FREDERICKSBURG LODGE No 4, VIRGINIA.

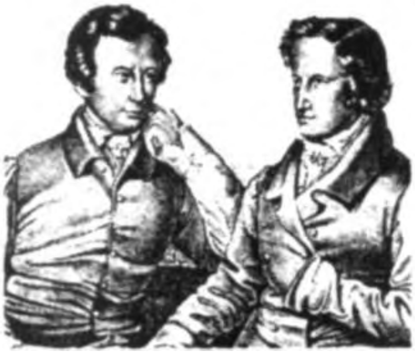
This poster showing America's first President, George Washington, as a Mason, is distributed by the George Washington Masonic National Memorial Association. It was printed in the Scottish Rite Journal (August 1992).

This caricature drawing of Abe Lincoln pictures him as a high-level Mason giving the left-handed path (darkly occultic) hand sign. However, there is no evidence that Lincoln was ever an initiate of the Lodge (see below). Indeed, he was murdered by a plot spawned by Illuminati Masons and Jesuits. Could it be the elitists are simply trying to ward off accusations of their infamous act by falsely claiming, belatedly, that Lincoln was one of their own?

In this photo printed in U.S. News & World Report magazine (December 22, 2003). President Abraham Lincoln is seen visiting a Union military camp. Fascinating is the fact that the men on either side of Lincoln are giving the Masonic "Jahbuhlun" sign while Lincoln is not.

Here is yet another vain attempt to portray Abraham Lincoln as a secret member of the Lodge. Offered by the auctioneer at Christie's in New York as an authentic, 1843, early photo of Lincoln. Experts were skeptical that the portrait is really that of Honest Abe. More Masonic skullduggery?





This old woodcut engraving of the famous United States explorers Lewis and Clark, western pioneers and mappers, lets us see the secret Masonic connection.

Booth and his elder brother, Edwin, were both members of the Masonic Lodge, but because of John Wilkes' notoriety, the Freemasons quietly removed his name from their rolls. To this day the Scottish Rite's membership office maintains that only brother Edwin was a Mason (Photo from book, American Brutus, by Michael W. Kaufman).

This photograph of Lt. Elisha Hunt Rhodes is from a 1993 book entitled Freemasons at Gettysburg, by Sheldon A. Munn. The caption above the photograph said that Lt. U.S.A. President Teddy Roosevelt, seen reviewing the troops onboard a Navy ship, is giving the secret sign of the followers of the god, Jahbuhlun. Was it Teddy who once said, "Speak softly and keep your hand well hid," or was that, "Speak softly and carry a big stick?"

Karl Marx, the Jewish radical who inspired Lenin and Trotsky with his Communist theories, was secretly a High Priest of Satan (see Richard Wurmbrand's book, Marx and Satan). Shown here in his official portrait, Marx is giving an enigmatic Masonic hand sign (see Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 74).

Vladimir Lenin, Jewish Mason who led the Communist overthrow of the Czar in Russia, gives the hidden sign of the men who worship the god, Jahbuhlun. Lenin and his cohorts established the Red Terror, the brutal massacre of tens of millons.

Later, in the Nazi era, a blimp, named after the General, The Hindenburg, was destroyed by flames while attempting to land in New Jersey (U.S.A.) after a celebrated transatlantic flight. Many lives were lost.

Mekhonoshin (right) wears the Illuminati phyrgian cap.

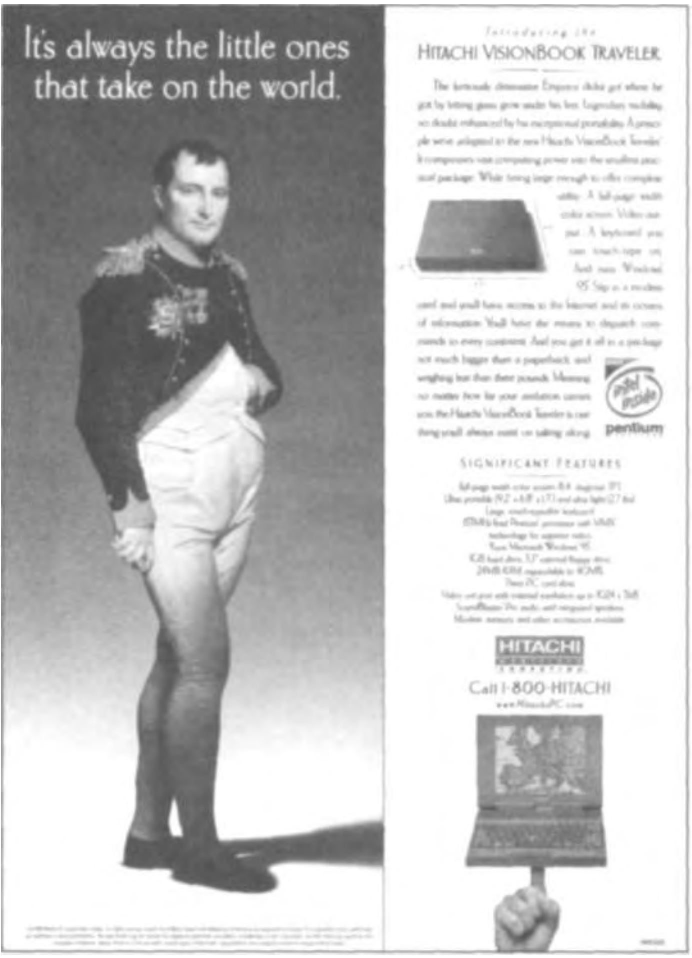
Sculptor Auguste Bertholdi was a member of Paris, France's Grand Orient Lodge. It was Bertholdi (1834-1904) who sculpted the Illuminati's monumental Statue of Liberty which now graces New York's harbor. The statue is replete with Secret Society coded messages and symbols of a particularly blasphemous nature. Yet, the vast majority of Americans adore the Statue of Liberty and naively see in her only virtue and goodness.

In the mid-nineteenth century, French writer Victor Hugo (author of Les Miserables) cut a huge swath in occult circles. Here we see the mystical minded Hugo giving a clear hand sign of Masonic Luciferian design. It was Victor Hugo who wrote the story, "The Man Who Laughs," about a boy whose face had been horribly shaped into a permanent smile by fiendish cosmetic butchers. The grotesque tale was the basis for Batman's "Joker" character. It was alleged that Victor Hugo was not only a Rosicrucian but was also Grand Master of the occultic order known as the Priory of Sion.



It's always the little ones that take on the world.

Now we find yet another indication of Napoleon's secret society involvement. Wearing red, the color of Rothschild and blood, Napoleon signifies his left-hand path orientation. The symbology of the three-towered church in the background of the painting (behind the curtain!) signifies the boast that Napoleon, a political sovereign, is also Lord over the spiritual realm.

In this famous painting of Napoleon, the Emperor is depicted using his right-hand in giving the Royal Arch Mason handsign.

The Alphabet

Irish-American politician and author Ignatius Donnelly caused a sensation in 1882 with his book, Atlantis: The Antediluvian World. Donnelly claimed scientific evidence for the existence of the fabled Lost Continent of Atlantis, which sunk under the sea, predecessor of modern civilization. Donnelly's book even contained a chart showing the alleged evolution of alphabets from the time of Atlantis to the eras of the Mayas, Egyptians, and Hebrews, etc. The Illuminati elite of today believe they are, indeed, descended from the god-men and priests who, alone, escaped the tragic fall of the fabled Atlantis. More recently, Disney Studios did a movie, Atlantis, based on the theme, a movie saturated with esoteric codes and symbols.

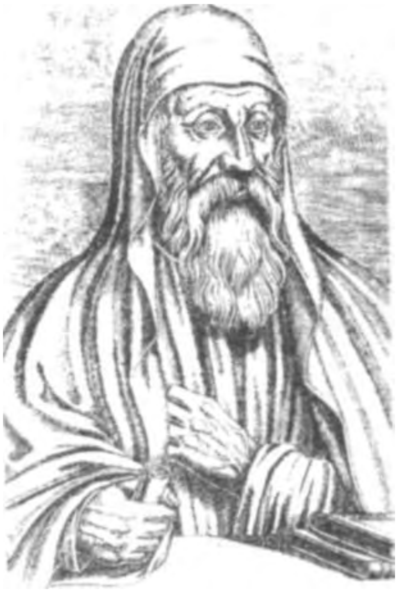
How deeply was the Vatican and its Black Pope of the Jesuit Order involved in the 1865 plot to assassinate President Abraham Lincoln ? Burke McCarty, in an extraordinary 1924 book, The Suppressed Truth About the Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, alleges that the powerful and influential Giacomo Antonelli, Cardinal and Secretary of the Papal States under Pope Pius IX, supervised the plot from afar and even hid a murderous associate of assassin John Wilkes Booth in the Vatican State, where he had fled, to protect him from execution by American authorities who sought his extradition. In the book, researcher McCarty includes this photo of Cardinal Antonelli without, however, explaining the obvious secret society hand sign of Antonelli.



Origen (185-254 A.D.) is often called an "early church father." But, in fact, Origen brought many heresies, including Gnosticism (Illuminist ideology) into the Church. Origen, a much quoted scholar, hailed from Alexandria, Egypt, giving us yet another clue to his heretical philosophies. In this revealing pen and ink drawing, it appears that Origen's left-hand is demonstrating the mysterious sign of an ancient secret society.

This issue of the intriguing publication, Paranoia magazine, included a feature article examining the tragic life of popular young actor River Phoenix, who died of a drug overdose on Halloween in 1993. The article's writer, Al Hidell, told of Phoenix's upbringing in the sordid sex cult known as the Children of God, also called "The Family." The cult practiced incest, holy prostitution, and other wickedness. River Phoenix, who was celebrated for his roles in such movies as Stand By Me and Running On Empty, evidently could not escape his past. Why he is shown in the photo giving the sign of Masonry is not mentioned in the magazine, but some authorities say that Children of God leader David Berg had high-level political and Masonic Lodge connections.

For He's a Jolly Good Fellow—Sign of the Devil's Claw by Men of the Craft

A naughty person, a wicked man, walketh with a froward mouth. He winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers...

-Proverbs 6:12-13

While the word "craft" can properly be used to describe an art, science, skill, or process practiced by a profession or occupation, in the occult world, the word takes on a much darker significance and is often called, the "Craft." It refers to a devious process practiced by like-minded fellows who are bent on, and have agreed to follow, the ritualized path prescribed to effect the magic of the Great Work of alchemical transformation.

The Fellow Craft degree (2°) of Freemasonry is found in both the largest bodies, the York Rite and the Scottish Rite. According to Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia, the Order of the Illuminati, formally founded by Adam Weishaupt and Baron Von Knigge in 1776, divided its rites into three principal classes and the second of the second class of rites was the Fellow Craft, 2°.[1]

Reinforcing the authoritative Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia is the work of other Masonic and occult researchers who report that the Fellow Craft degree was awarded in the 2° of the Order of the Illuminati. In the book, Witchcraft, Magic, and The Supernatural, published in Great Britain, we find information about Sir Francis Dashwood, leader of Britain's 18th century "Hell Fire Club." It is said that Dashwood, a notorious yet rich Rosicrucian magician, greatly influenced America's visiting Benjamin Franklin, who frequently sought him out for occultic advice and information. Indeed, some believe that Dashwood was as important to the Illuminist

Sir Francis Dashwood, leader of England's 18th century "Hell Fire Club," practiced the dark side of magic. The nobility and rich frequented his group and called on him for rituals and advice. (From: Witchcraft, Magic and the Supernatural, London: Octopus Books, 1974, p. 33).

cause on the isle of Great Britain as Adam Weishaupt was on the European continent.[2]

The Cunning vs. Those of Lesser Wit

The late Sovereign Grand Commander (Scottish Rite), Dr. Albert Mackey, 33°, in his classic encyclopedia reference book, says that the Fellow Craft degree implies "mutual trust" among the "brethren" of the Order. But he notes it is in a lower degree. The Masons, in the Middle Ages, he writes, were divided into two classes, Masters and Fellows:

> Those who were of greater skill held a higher position and were designated as Masters while the masses of the Fraternity, the commonality, as we might say, were called Fellows.[3]

Put another way, Mackey says that those possessing more "cunning" were graded as Masters, while the Fellows were of "lesser wit."[4]

But of course, today, most all Masons begin by being initiated into the First Degree (Entered Apprentice). Then, the new Member is said to be passed into the Second Degree (Fellow Craft), and next is raised in the Third Degree (Master Mason). These are the three degrees of what is called the Blue Lodge of Freemasonry.

Why Is It Employed By High level Illuminists?

In this chapter we will reveal a number of high-rank llluminists giving the Sign of Fellow Craft (2°) Mason. Now since this degree is of lower status, this begs the question of why such famous, publicly acclaimed men as evangelists Billy Graham and Pat Robertson, as well as occult leader Annie Besant, Russian President Boris Yeltsin, and international financier Sir James Rothschild are all displaying the Fellow Craft sign. The answer is a fascinating one.

Mackey writes that the degree—and thus its primary sign—denotes a "fellow workman," a commoner. In other words, it represents the masses of common people. It represents, adds Mackey, the "Stage of manhood" and the maturation of humanity by progression of man's "reasoning faculties and...intellectual powers."[5] In essence, the Fellow Craft degree represents man progressively brought to a high status of possessing the supreme wisdom of the serpent. Man as a whole becomes god through reason. Therefore, the promise of the serpent made to Adam and Eve is realized: "Ye shall be as gods."

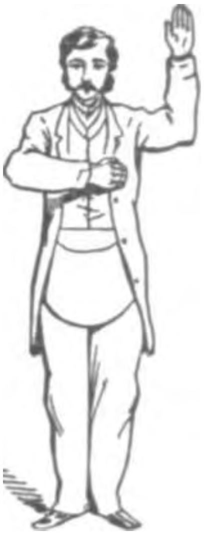
Wisdom of the Serpent

Those who display this sign, the Sign of the Fellow Craft, to their fellows in the Craft (the Illuminist, magical cult) are those chosen and ambitious of instructing the masses on the wisdom of the serpent. Since religious, or spiritual wisdom, is deemed essential and of a high order in Satan's kingdom, it is only natural that his human representatives on earth who are leaders in the religious field show this sign of recognition. Besant, a Theosophist, also displays the sign as her cult organization is based on serpentine occult wisdom, the perennial philosophy. Yeltsin was acclaimed by the press as popular leader of the Russian peoples' revolution, and Rothschild desires to rule on the throne over all humanity as head of the Illuminati's Inner Circle.

Also pictured here, in the pages that follow, giving the sign: Jesse and Frank James, outlaws celebrated as "Robin Hoods" who, it is claimed, showered some of their stolen wealth on the poor; Anton LaVey, who founded the Church of Satan in 1966 proclaiming it a Temple of Reason for those of wisdom and who sought mass membership as patronage; Socialist Eugene Debs, who claimed to represent the common man; and John Wilkes Booth, alleged assassin of President Abraham Lincoln. Booth was a Freemason and as such, was a fomenter of international revolutions of the people; Lincoln was not a Mason and sought to quell insurrection of the masses.

The Sign of a Fellow Craft Mason is made by raising the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers crooked. Then, draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop to the side.

In performing the sign, the individual is taking his right hand, making a type of beastly devil's claw out of it and then raking it across the breast from left to right. C. F. McQuaig, in The Masonic Report, calls this the Penal sign. It is made to remind the person giving it of his oath taken, that if he discloses the secrets of the Order or gives aid and comfort to its enemies, he should have the right breast torn open and the heart torn out. In sum, this is a ghastly sign warning of death to he who dares betray the Order of the Illuminati.



Sign of the Fellow Craft, or Second Degree. Notice the right hand position on the breast with the fingers crooked in somewhat of a loose "fist." After both arms are in the position shown the left hand is quickly dropped. Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor (id. Ed., p. 16) says: "In making the due guard and sign of the Fellow Craft, or Second Degree, care must be taken to drop the left arm suddenly and with spirit, as soon as the two motions are accomplished."

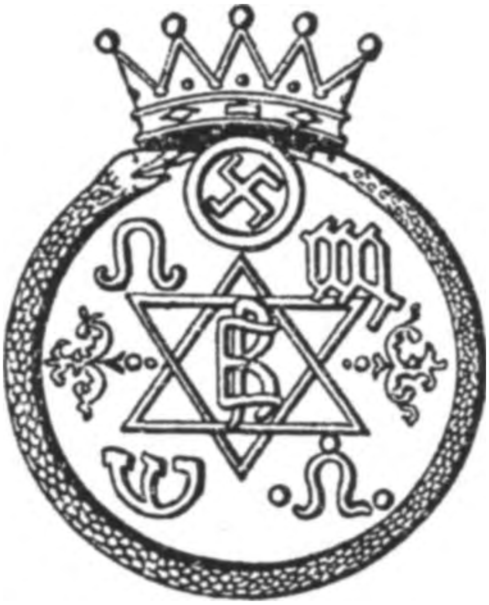
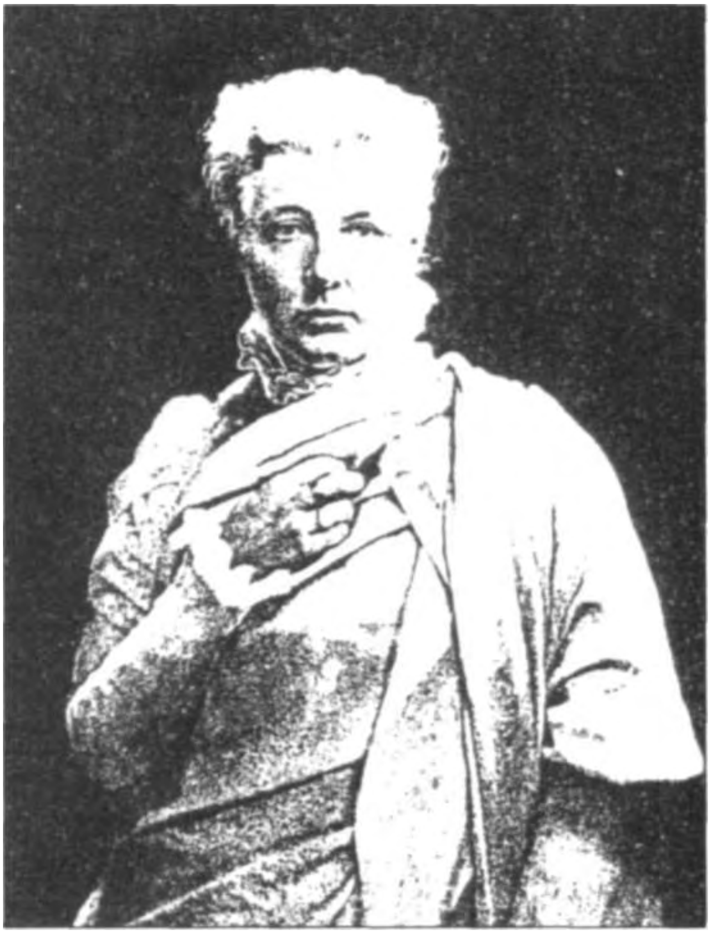
Illuminati servant Pat Robertson, founder of CBN and The 700 Club, giving his, by now, notorious Masonic sign on the cover of Time magazine, February 17, 1986. Robertson went on after this magazine's publication to become a big star in Republican Party politics. Interestingly, Robertson was ordained for the ministry at a Norfolk, Virginia, church named, appropriately, the Freemason Street Baptist Church. In the author's opinion, this cover of Time is clearly a staged event, and both the publisher and Robertson full well knew what they were doing. Robertson has long been allied with the Vatican's Sovereign Military Order of the Knights of Malta (SMOM). His father, as a U.S. Senator from Virginia, was chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

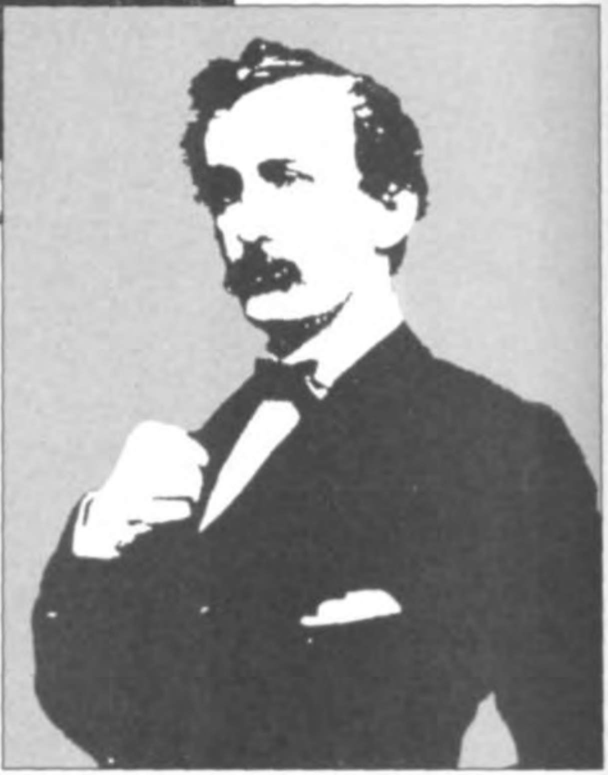


Annie Besant, a Co-Mason (women's branch) took over the Theosophy cult at the passing of Colonel Olcott. The logo of Theosophy is blatantly occultic, combining the crowned Oroboros serpent with both the Jewish Star of David, or six-pointed star, and the encircled swastika.



Another photo of theosophist Annie Besant giving the sign. Besant, like her mentors, Colonel Olcott and Russian mystic Helena Blavatsky, believed in the "pure doctrine" of Lucifer, which they called the perennial philosophy and the "Secret Doctrine."

Celebrated western outlaws Jesse and Frank James were both Freemasons. According to Ralph Epperson, researcher and noted conspiracy and Masonic exposer, Jesse James, a 33rd degree Mason, in 1867 became head of the Knights of the Golden Circle, the predecessor to the Ku Klux Klan. Masonry fostered the fictional tale that the James gang stole from banks and gave to the poor, being Robin Hood type heroes. Nothing could be further from the truth. In actuality, excess funds from their robberies went into the coffers of their secret order.



John Wilkes Booth, the assassin of President Abraham Lincoln, was a Knights Templar Mason. His Catholic superiors in Rome were also Lodge initiates as was Booth's actor brother, Edwin, who is listed as a Mason in 10,000 Famous Masons.

Even presidents in peril could bolster dispirited Russians

Forget lofty expectations of bygone summits. President Clinton's meeting with Boris Yeltsin in Moscow this week may go down in history as the summit of survival. Bruised and battered by political misdeeds, Clinton and Yeltsin begin talks Tuesday, with the goal of doing nothing to worsen already shaky futures.

And that political reality begs the inevitable question: Why bother?

The undeniable answer: Better to engage Russia than to ignore its problems.

Yeltsin's hold on power may be gossamer, and Russia's economy a wreck, but neither vulnerability negates the power Russia retains.

The Russian government still controls more than 6,000 nuclear warheads, each a significant threat in the wrong hands. Russia holds a third of the world's gas reserves, about 50 billion barrels of oil reserves and other vital resources that could be critical as other sources become less plentiful or less accessible.

And though the state of Illinois produces more goods than all the Russian people, Rus-

Russian President Boris Yeltsin was known to be a dupe of Jewish Illuminati interests. Following the fall of the Iron Curtain, these Illuminati Jews carved up Russia, seizing every asset of value and leaving the everyday Soviet citizenry in desperate economic straits. Yeltsin, a hopeless drunk, shows his loyalty to Illuminist interests with his clenched fist masonic pose.

Anton Szandor LaVey, notorious founder of the Church of Satan, died on October 29, 1997, days after completing his final contribution to Satan Speaks!

Satan Speaks! collects together sixty unorthodox, paradoxical and humorous essays by the most misunderstood man in America.

Marilyn Manson pays tribute to Anton LaVey in his foreword, and Blanche Barton, mother of Xerxes Satan LaVey, provides a poignant introduction.

Anton Szandor LaVey is the author of The Satanic Bible, The Satanic Rituals, The Satanic Witch and The Devil's Notebook. He is also the subject of a biography, The Secret Life of a Satanist, by Blanche Barton.

Baphles Me!—Horned Beasts, Leaping Goats, Satanic Beards, And Other Messages of Evil

I possess more exalted titles than I have ever been able to count. I am supposed to know more secret signs, tokens, passwords, grandwords, grips, and so on, than I could actually learn in a dozen lives. An elephant would break down under the insignia I am entitled to wear.

Secret Societies (audiotape 1987)

Many believe that Satanism and Luciferian worship are miles apart from the rituals, practices, and philosophies of the secret societies and the Order of the Illuminati. In fact, there is no real distinction between these groups. As Dr. Michael Aquino, hard-core satanist and founder of the Temple of Set once acknowledged, the satanists merely have a "more precise" understanding of occult reality.

Aleister Crowley, the late British satanist, who relished calling himself, "the wickedest man on planet earth," no doubt would have agreed with Aquino. Crowley was initiated into a number of different Masonic fraternities, satanic rites, and occult groups, including the Rite of Memphis, Mexican Scottish Rite 33°, Grand Orient 33°, and the Rite of Misraim. In 1912 he was honored by fellow Luciferians of the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.), being acknowledged for his superior Gnostic knowledge and giftedness and given the following exalted rank and title:[1]

Aleister St. Edward Crowley 33°, 90°, 95°, X°
National Grand Master General for Great Britain and Ireland
Mysteria Mystica Maxima

"An Elephant Would Break Down..."

Crowley claimed that from Bucharest, Hungary to Salt Lake City, Utah, he was showered with honors, titles, degrees and occult paraphernalia. So much was he recognized that a bemused Crowley wittily remarked, "an elephant would break down under the insignia I am entitled to wear."[2] It was Napoleon who once observed how easy it is to win men over through flattery simply by bequeathing a title to them or pinning a medal or token on their chest.

Crowley's wicked philosophies and his ritual experimentation—such as the "Babalon Working" ritual designed to invoke the coming of Antichrist—greatly inspired copycats and imitators. Such include L. Ron Hubbard, who reportedly studied Crowley's works and went on to found the fake religion called Scientology; Anton LaVey, who founded the Church of Satan and authored The Satanic Bible; and Alfred Kinsey, notorious sex researcher whose Kinsey Institute pandered to kinky homosexuals and vicious pedophiles.[3]

Crowley often acted nutty and bizarre, but he was so trusted by the British government that it enthusiastically used his services in an Intelligence unit during the World War II conflict against the Nazis.

Crowley's adoption of the hermaphroditic, horned goat-god Baphomet as his own magical name indicates how powerful is this idol to Illuminists. Crowley certainly knew who Baphomet represents. In his book, Magic in Theory and Practice, he states:

L. Ron Hubbard

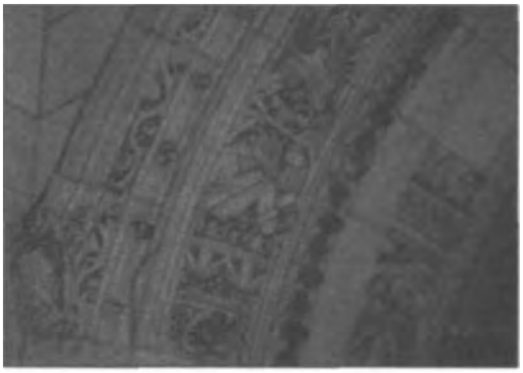
> This serpent, Satan, is not the enemy of man... He is 'The Devil' of the (Egyptian) Book of Thoth, and his emblem is 'Baphomet,' the Androgyne who is the hieroglyph of arcane perfection...But moreover his letter is Ayin, the Eye; he is

> Light and his zodiacal image is Capricornus, that leaping goat whose attribute is liberty.[4]

No doubt the Inner Circle of the Illuminati have specific objectives in mind that are being met by men like Crowley, LaVey, Hubbbard, and Kinsey. These men and their followers are used to degrade and debase humanity, vulgarize religion, and destroy sane and moral culture. In truth, the philosophies of these evil men are in accord with that of the Illuminati. At the core level of Weishaupt's philosophy was always the "elevation" of humanity to god-status.



This Baphomet in a man's suit is carved in the stone arch of a Yale University building that houses the University's education and sociology departments. Yale is also home to the Illuminati's Order of Skull & Bones. (Photo: Yale University)

"Do As Thou Wilt..."

The pitch was to inspire men to reject God's laws and God's religion and strike out in liberty, doing one's own thing. In other words, live free beyond any bounds of morality or propriety. Lust, free sex, immoral conduct, rape, pillage, plunder—all are permitted the New Man of Reason. As Crowley's One Great Commandment put it, "Do As Thou Wilt Shall be the Whole of the Law."

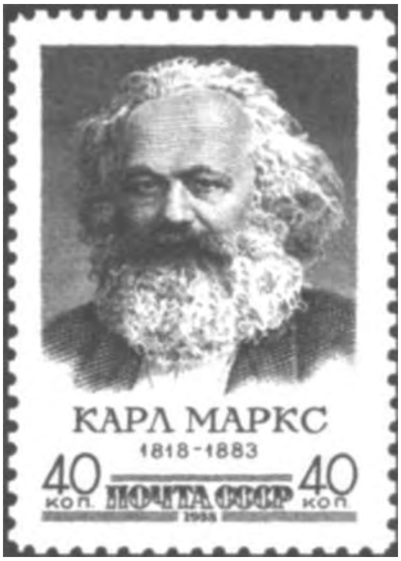
Now Baphomet, the androgynous horned, half man-woman, half goat god of the medieval Knights Templars, inculcates this "Do your own thing" philosophy of Illuminism. He is the very image of the freethinker, the Mason and Illuminist who raises the "Torch of Liberty"—the fire of hell and light of Lucifer. The Knights Templar, predecessor to today's Freemasons, revered Baphomet as the deity of wisdom. Look closely at the reverse side of the U.S. dollar bill and you will find the horns of Baphomet meticulously designed and imbedded.

In this chapter, you will discover more about Baphomet; about the Green Man; about Pan, the horned witch god; and about Crowley and his Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.). Since the days of Alexander the Great, the horned god has been worshipped by a significant portion of mankind. The Holy Bible records, for example, the worship of Baal, the horned fire god. Michaelangelo and some other artists, strangely, created sculptures blasphemously showing Moses, the biblical prophet, with horns. All of these horned deities and images represent lust, because the horn is itself a phallic symbol in the occult world.

Of Stars and Goatees

In recent times, Communist revolutionaries adopted the Star, also symbol of Baphomet (see the star on the Baphomet goat's forehead in this chapter), and some—Karl Marx, Che Gueverra and others—adopted the huge and straggly beard in honor of the goatee of Baphomet, the deity whom they secretly worshipped. Revealingly, the late Anton LaVey, spouting his hellish philosophy in his final book, Satan Speaks, says of Baphomet's beard: "The essence of Satanism is...the beard of wisdom on the goat within the inverted star."[5]

Many Hollywood celebrities have become involved in the depths of satanism. Beautiful actresses like Jayne Mansfield and Marilyn Monroe were used as sex tools by the elite, and men such as singer Sammy Davis, Jr., as well as dozens of rock 'n' roll entertainers, were used as Illuminist toys, providing fun, games, and entertainment for the elite. Davis was made an honorary 11° in Dr. Michael Aquino's Temple of Set cult. Blonde bombshell actress Jayne Mansfield was so enamored of satanic worship that she had a pink and black Baphomet idol custom-made just for her. She wore the idol around her neck at a San Francisco Festival in 1966. Hollywood involvement in satanic darkness continues today, though the names have changed.



This postage stamp issued by Russia in 1938 honored Comunist theoretician, Karl Marx. Marx, a Jewish Zionist and Mason, was also a Satan worshipper. His straggly, unkempt beard honored the beard of the Illuminati diety, Baphomet, and represented "Cosmic Intelligence and Will."

Anton Szandor LaVey, founder of the Church of Satan, died on October 29, 1997. Oddly, Edmund de Rothschild, senior head of the Rothschild banking dynasty, died the same day. LaVey said that the beard of Baphomet was a sign of wisdom.

According to one respected source, U.S. President George Herbert Walker Bush (Bush the Senior) once stunned congressional leaders when he made an entrance into the Oval Office wearing a goat's head mask![6]

The He Goat of Prophecy

Significant, indeed, is the biblical passage in Daniel 8:8-22, which symbolically pictures a great world leader in the last days as a "he goat." This he goat, say the scriptures, becomes very strong and his power is symbolized by a horn that arises from his forehead. This strange and evil creature makes war on the host of God and stamps upon them. Is this not an image of the Beast, Baphomet, worshipped in secret by the Illuminati?

The Baptism of a Satanic Witch

In the ceremonies of pagan religions, baptisms—counterfeits of the Christian sacrament—were conducted as rites of initiation. Below is the modern-day account of one such dark baptism, exactly as it is recorded in the book, The Satanic Witch, by Anton LaVey, head of the Church of Satan. LaVey has declared that the goal of his unholy church is to usher in a "New Age." (The person being baptized is LaVey's daughter, Zeena, and the words are hers.)

> My baptism was indeed the reversal of a Christian baptism. Instead of being dunked into a cold bath by a strange, sexless man to be cleansed of "original sin," we celebrated man and nature as they really are.
> As I sat wearing the red robe my mother made that morning, I toyed with the Baphomet amulet dangling around my neck. Imperiously, I surveyed the sea of black-hooded celebrants. It took me a few years to realize that some of them may have been more fascinated with the naked woman sprawled on the altar than with me. The gothic strains of a Hammond organ echoed against the black and red walls...I delighted in being the focal point of all this activity.
> My father, the High Priest, raised his ceremonial sword in benediction. I felt a great sense of warmth and respect. How many people can honestly say they have this feeling at any point in their life? "I have something they don't," I thought proudly, in keeping with the indulgent philosophy of Satanism. Since that night I understood what it means to be a Satanic Witch, a woman who makes full use of her feminine wiles. Throughout my life I would replay the words intoned during my baptism:
> The many footed walkers give you the strength, the power of red fang and claw, all the madly dancing demons fill you with the lost knowledge of ancient ones. Small sorceress, the most natural and true magician, your tiny hands have the power to pull the living heavens down and from its shards build a monument to your own sweet indulgence... And with these others in the devil's fane, you will so cause the heads of men to reel and spin, you will fill them with desire. And so we dedicate your life to love, to passion, to indulgence, and to Satan and the way of darkness, fane. Hail Zeena! Hail Satan!

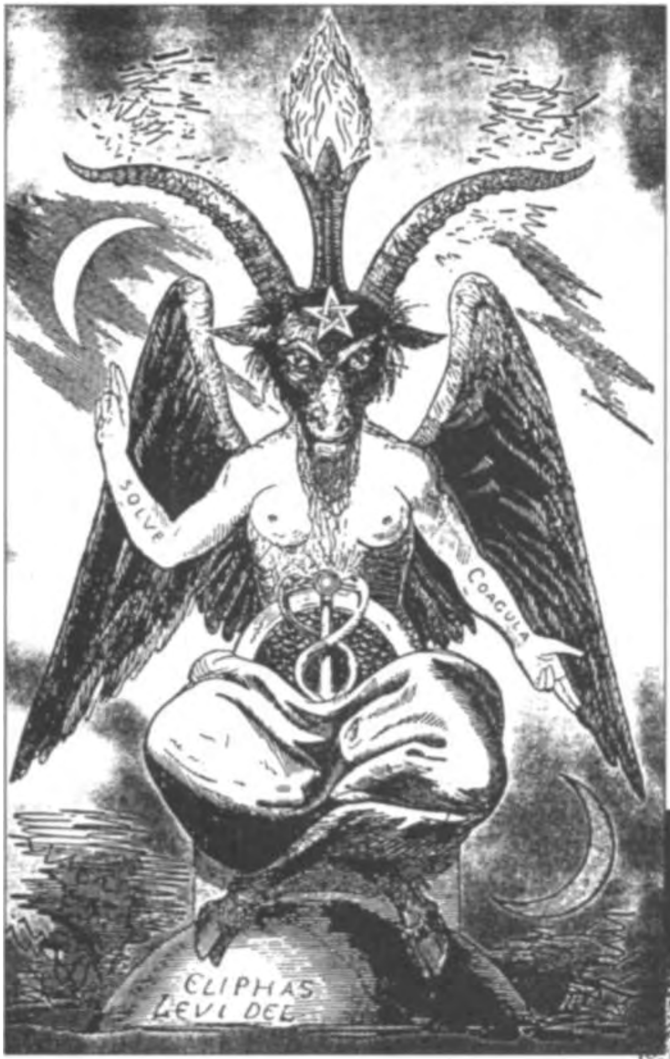
A Generation Mesmerized

Recently, countless youth have been brought into Satan's kingdom through movies, TV cartoons, video games, comic books, and other means. The Harry Potter witchcraft books have initiated many into the darkest elements of hellishness. Occult fantasy movies (Star Wars, Jedi, etc.) have erased any conception of absolutes and have increasingly brought youth into satanic philosophies. The end result is an entire generation mesmerized, all marching in formation through the haze trance-like into a 21st century existence to be ruled over by Illuminati dignitaries. Never before in history have so many been trained and indoctrinated to the tenets of Satanic Illuminism. The hidden entity behind the idol Baphomet must be very proud of his newfound slaves.



Baphomet, the great Luciferian goat god worshipped by the Knights Templar, by gnostics and satanists, and by many others involved in the Illuminati network, is a symbolic, yet graphic representation of the Adversary, Satan himself. Pictured as androgynous (combination male and female), we find his right hand pointing upward, toward the light and his left hand pointing downward, toward the dark regions. The satanic star is on his forehead. Two balanced serpents are in his genital area, and he has a torch with fire coming out of his head. And there are many other symbols represented as well, each packed with malevolent, occult content and meaning.

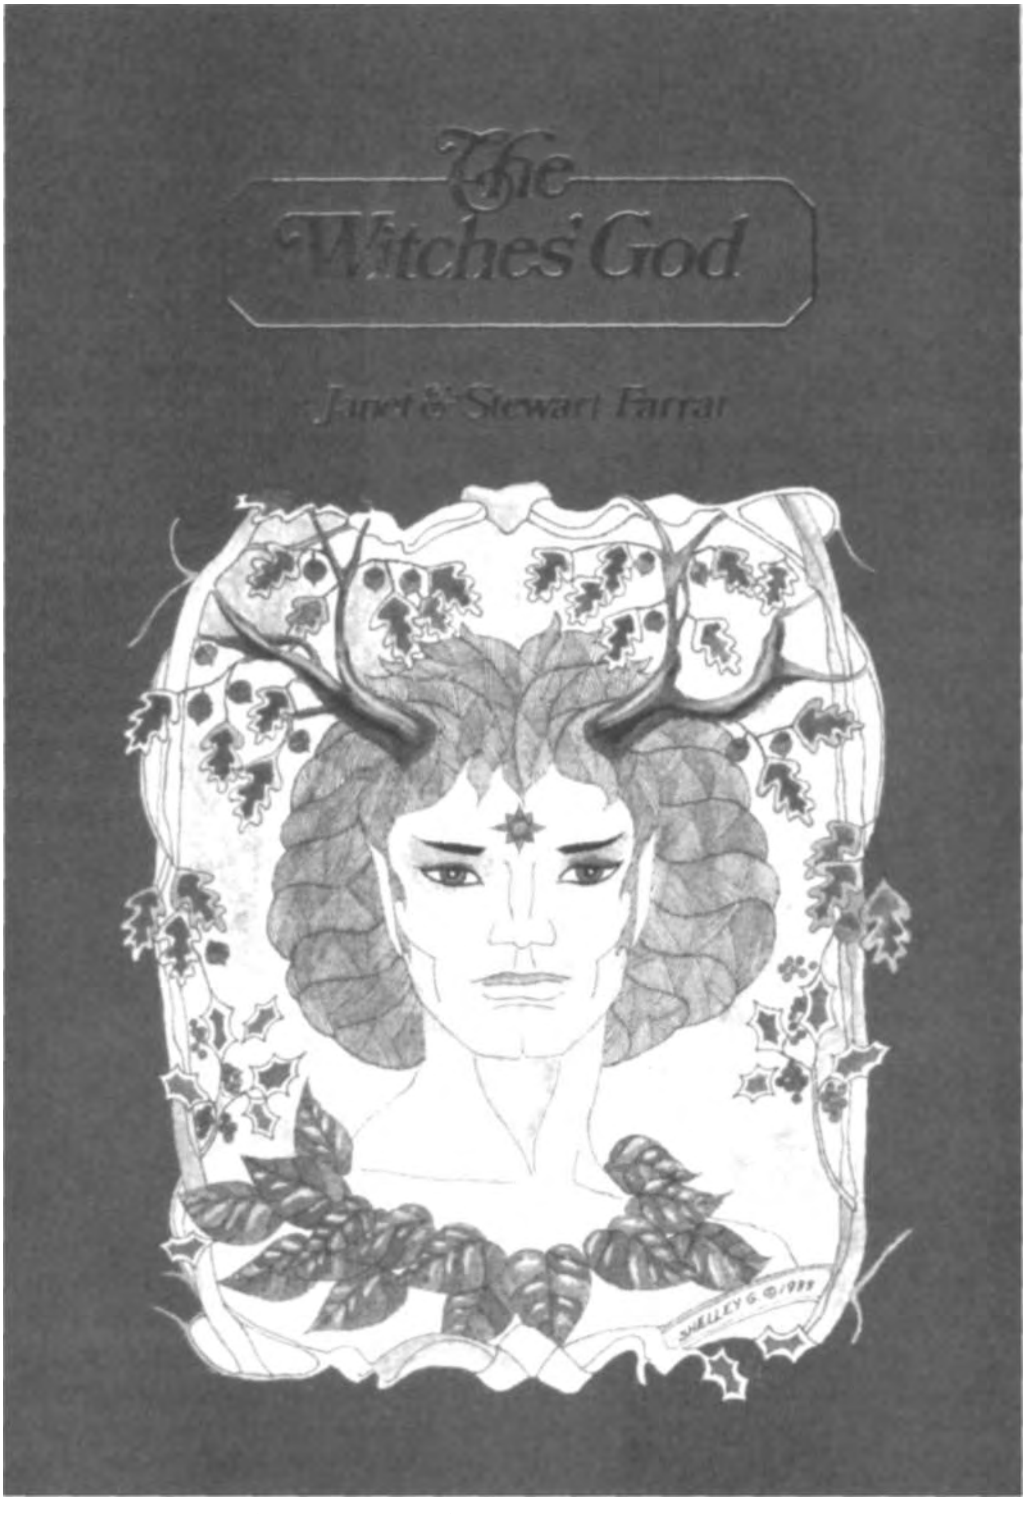
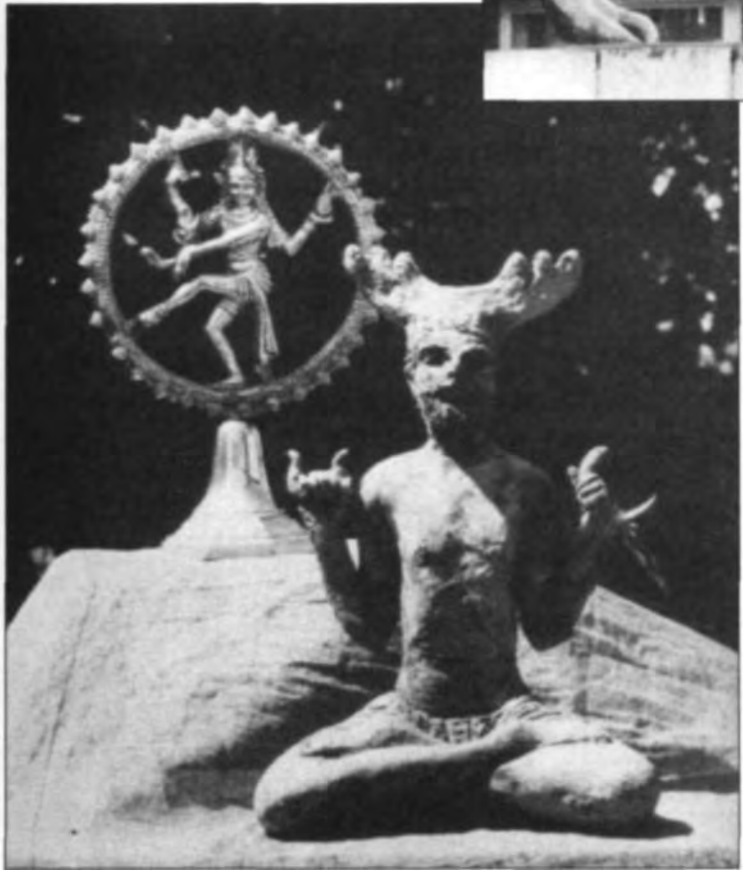
The Shepherd.

In his Songs of Innocence, English artist and author William Blake etched, printed and hand-colored this illustration for his poem, "The Shepherd." To Christians, the Shepherd is Jesus Christ. But to Blake, as we see here, the Shepherd is Lucifer, beard and all, with serpentine-topped staff. (1802; Harry Ransom Center, University of Texas at Austin)

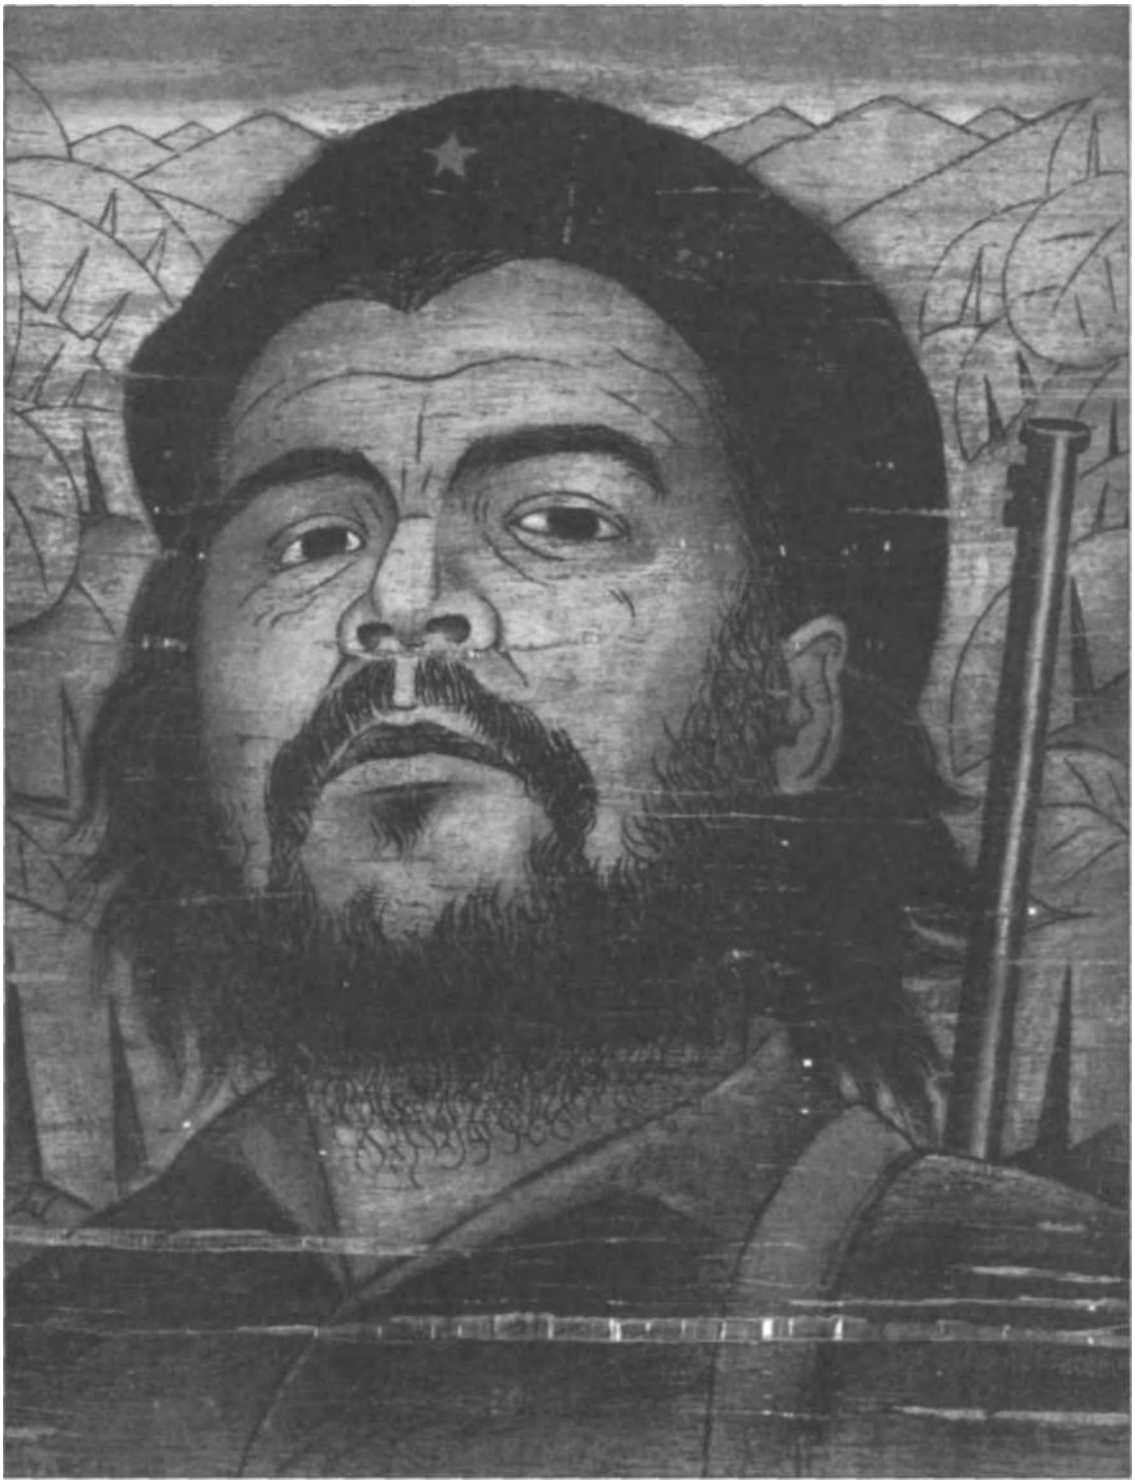


Pan, the horned god of the mountains, forest, streams, and valleys, is almost universally worshipped by witches, as the honor bestowed upon him by the title and cover art of this recent book indicate. The ivy and holly are his favored vegetation (thus, the ivy-covered buildings on the campuses of Harvard, Yale, and other elite establishment colleges and the name, Hollywood). Pan, whose father is Hermes, god of secrecy, is often pictured as the Green Man, a vegetation-covered deity. The tale of the jolly green giant is a myth begun by his admirers. Who, really, is Pan? Well, of course, Pan is simply the Devil in a new disguise.

This statue of Pan, with cloven hoofs, horns, and beard, resides in Hyde Park, London, England. It is part of a sculpture collection called "Family of Man," by artist Jacob Epstein. How is it that the people of London, thought to be mainly Christian believers, so easily tolerate this idol of Satan himself housed within their very midst? Have the Illuminati who placed it there already gained such immense power that the people are so pitifully weak and helpless?



Cernunnos, the druidic, horned god of nature, wears horns that are deer antlers. Sitting lotus-like in this museum setting in Britain, his altar is surmounted by the dancing figure of the Hindu Sun God, Shiva. Check out Cernunnos' horn-in-hand salutes to Satan—remarkably similar to the "Il Cornuto" or "El Diablo" hand signs so prevalent at today's modern rock music concerts.



The bearded revolutionary rebel is symbolic of Baphomet, who also has a beard. This artist rendition of notorious Cuban guerilla leader Che Gueverra does bear a remarkable resemblance to Eliphas Levi's famous drawing of Baphomet, complete with the stars on their respective heads.

This is the interior front page in Aleister Crowley's infamous, channeled treatise The Book of The Law (1904). It includes at top the seal of the Ordo Templi Orientis (OTO), a Luciferian secret order whose initiates included Jack Parsons, American pioneer in rocket fuel technology, L. Ron Hubbard, founder of Scientology, and numerous British intelligence officials. Crowley was its "Father" and Chief. The signature of Baphomet is observed along with the diamond-shaped "deluxe Tau," which is the mark of a very high-level leader of the Illuminati. The letter "B" in the name Baphomet is designed to produce three 6s; thus, 666, the number of the beast (Revelation 13). The Book of The Law was supposedly dictated to Aleister Crowley by a demon spirit calling himself "Aiwass" (or, Horus). Its text is a confusing bunch of gibberish which Crowley insisted is written in code or cipher.

President George Herbert Walker Bush. We do not know what the star and longhorn stand for on his cap, nor the meaning of the sash around his neck. Speculatively, perhaps it has something to do with a Texas state group or a Texas (Lone Star State) cattlemen's association, etc. However, from Australia come two reports that the senior George Bush once stunned congressional leaders waiting to see him in his oval office at the White House. The President entered his office wearing a goat's head mask! (Peter Sawyer's Inside News, November 1991 and South East Christian Witness, January 1992, p. 5 and July /August 1989, p. 9)

Archaelogists believe they've found the lost tomb of Alexander the Great

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
The Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt — Archaeologists believe they've found the tomb of Alexander the Great in the Egyptian desert, solving one of the great mysteries of ancient times, the head of Egypt's antiquities department said today.

"I do feel that this is the tomb of Alexander," Abdel-Halim Noureddin, chairman of the Egyptian Antiquities Organization, told The Associated Press. "All the evidence is there."

"We have dreamt about this for a long time," he said. "When you find it, you never quite believe it."

Noureddin, one of the nation's ranking Egyptologists, spoke after visiting the site near the oasis of Siwa in the Western Desert.

Alexander, king of Macedon, was one of the greatest generals of all time and one of the dominant personalities of the ancient world. He led his armies out of Greece in 334 B.C. at the age of 22, creating an empire that covered much of Asia and spreading Greek culture throughout the Mideast and Asia.

He is believed to have been planning a voyage by sea around Arabia when he caught a fever and died at Babylon in 323 B.C. at the age of 33.

His burial place is one of the great unsolved mysteries of the ancient world. History has it that after the Macedonian warrior died in Babylon, now in central Iraq, his body was moved to Syria and then to Egypt.

But the burial place was never found.

Last weekend, Greek archaeologists looking for the site disclosed that they had found two limestone plaques near what appeared to be a large tomb at Siwa, 50 miles east of the Libyan border.

The plaques were written in Greek and recount how Ptolemy, Alexander's aide and successor, brought his master's body to the tomb and buried it, according to newspaper reports.

Noureddin said there was no question that the site "is a royal tomb." Its size, he said, indicates that "it is not for the ruler of the area or the province."

Newspaper reports described it as 130 feet long and 65 feet wide and built with large stones.

The inscriptions provided "very good evidence" that the tomb was Alexander's, Noureddin said.

Greek-language specialists in the Egyptian Antiquities Organization will translate the writing on the plaques, he said.

The Greek archaeological team, headed by Leana Souvaltze, has been digging at Siwa for four years. Noureddin said the team would continue its work and that he would send other specialists to see the site.

The Siwa oasis, the Mediterranean port of Alexandria and the ancient Egyptian capital of Memphis have been considered the most likely sites for Alexander's burial place.

Other evidence suggesting he was buried in Siwa appears in references at the tomb to Amun, the sun god.

About 570 B.C., the Pharaoh Amasis built a temple in Siwa to Amun, and the temple oracle gained fame for answering even the most difficult questions. The Greeks later called the god Zeus.

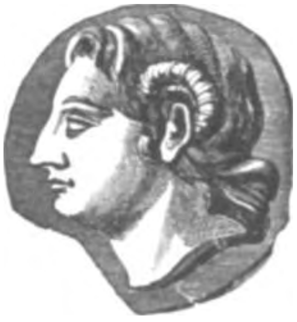
Alexander went to Siwa in 332 B.C. for a private audience with the oracle. According to legend, the oracle told Alexander he was divine and Egypt's rightful owner. Alexander took Egypt without a struggle, then died at Babylon nine years later.

Tomb of Alexander found

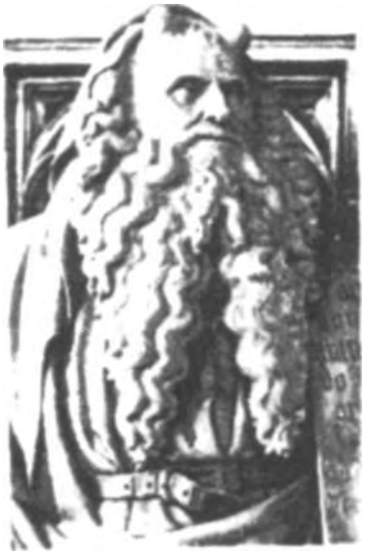
Kingdom of Alexander the Great between 334 B.C. and 323 B.C.

AP/Wm. J. Castello

According to this news account from The Associated Press (April 1, 1995), the tomb of Alexander the Great was found at Siwa, in Egypt.

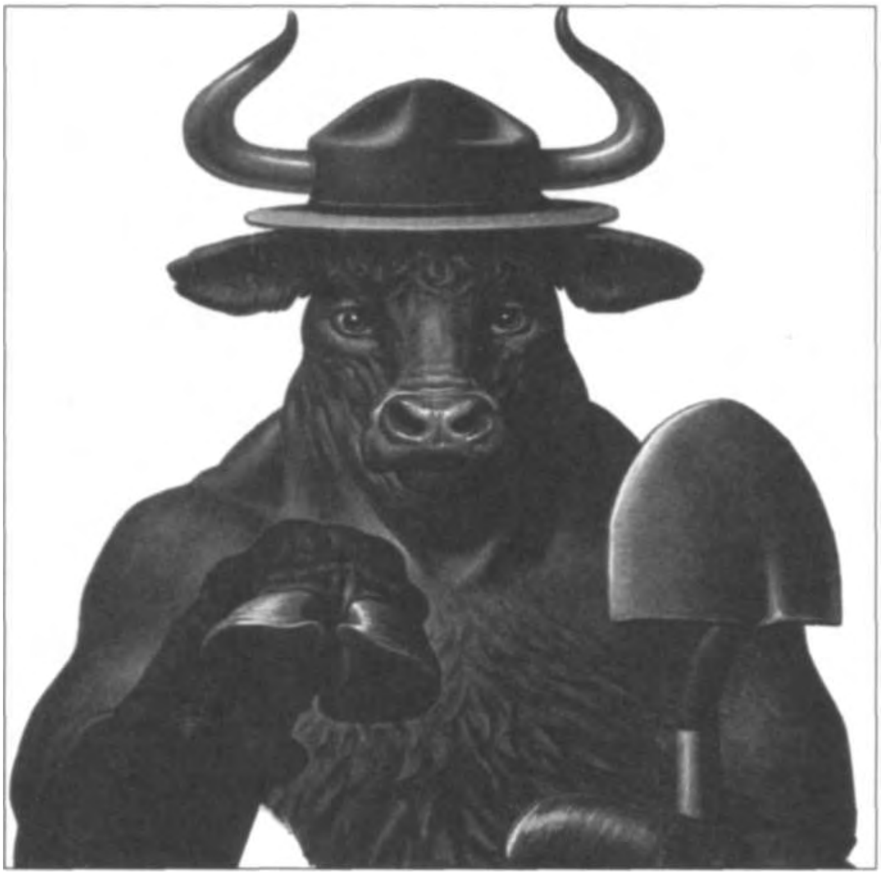


Adorers of the Greek conqueror, Alexander the Great, attributed horns to him. This was thought to be emblematic of a person's divine power and spiritual acumen. Coins bearing Alexander's visage were struck picturing the Greek military leader as a bull with horns and the lit torch in his head.

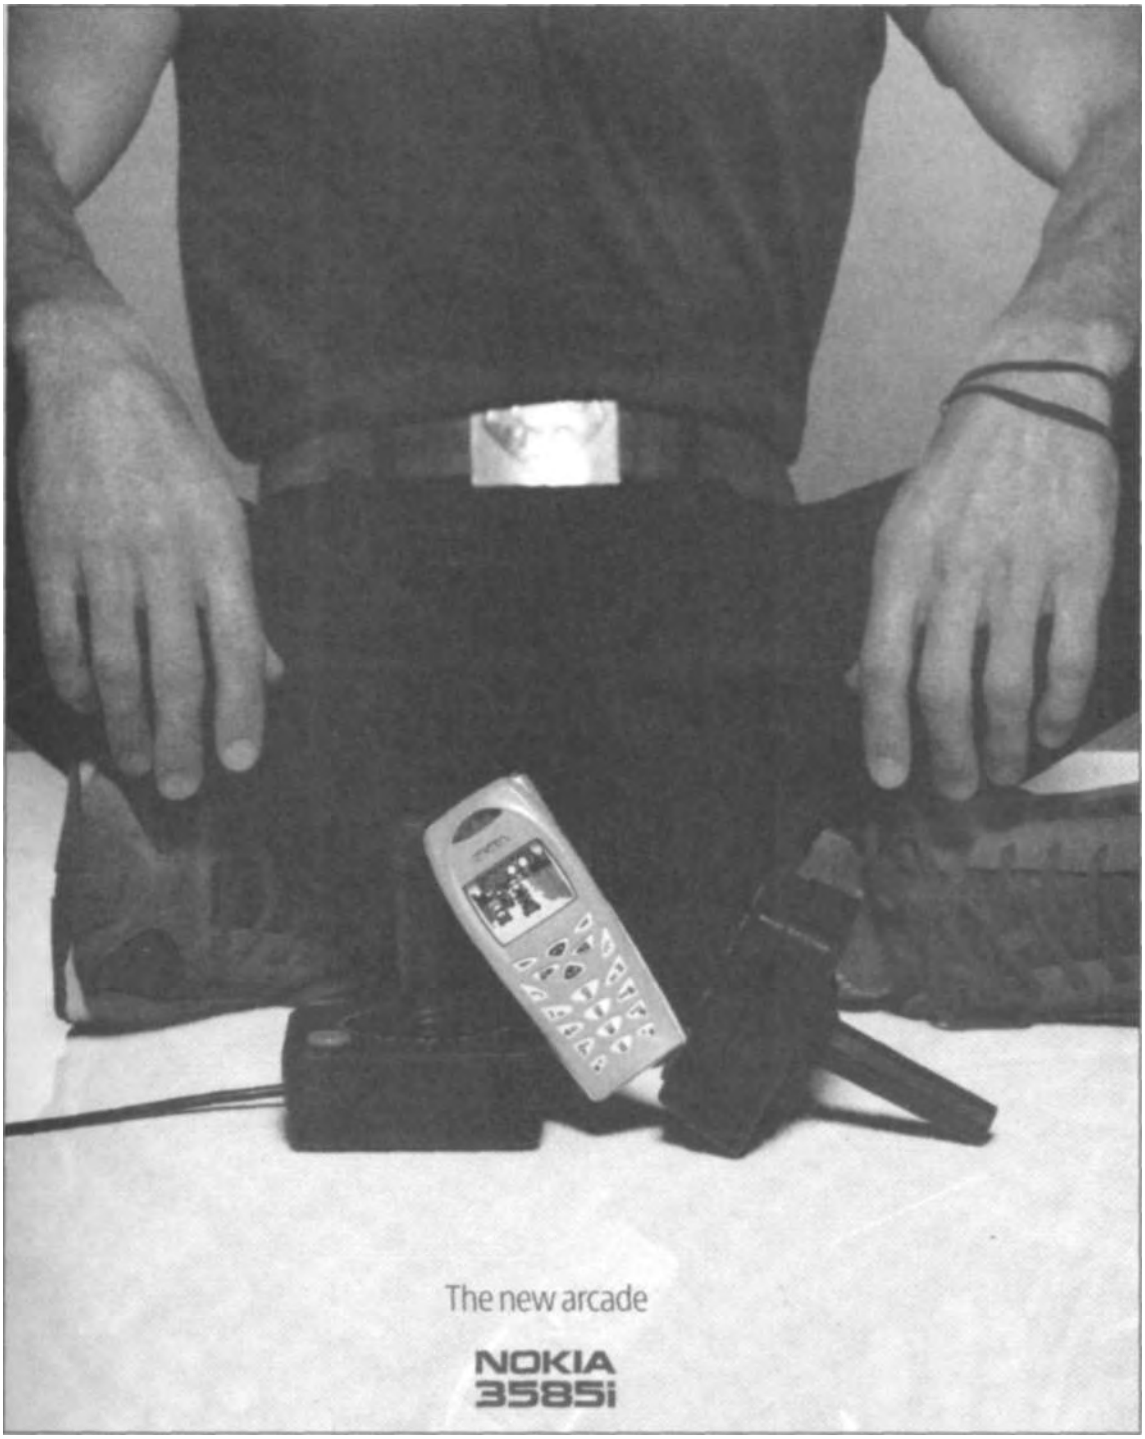


Strangely, many medieval artists, especially those clandestinely dabbling in the occult arts, often portrayed Moses as a bearded human figure with horns. (The Herder Dictionary of Symbols, Chiron Publications, Illinois)

The devil has long been conceived in the popular imagination of the masses as a creature with horns, cloved feet and claws, and tail.



Smokey the bull?



This ad for Nokia telephones appears harmless enough. But look closely at the subtle, horned image of the man's silver belt buckle. Also, he is wearing what appears to be the string cord on his left wrist characteristic of followers of the occult Cabala (or Kabbalah).

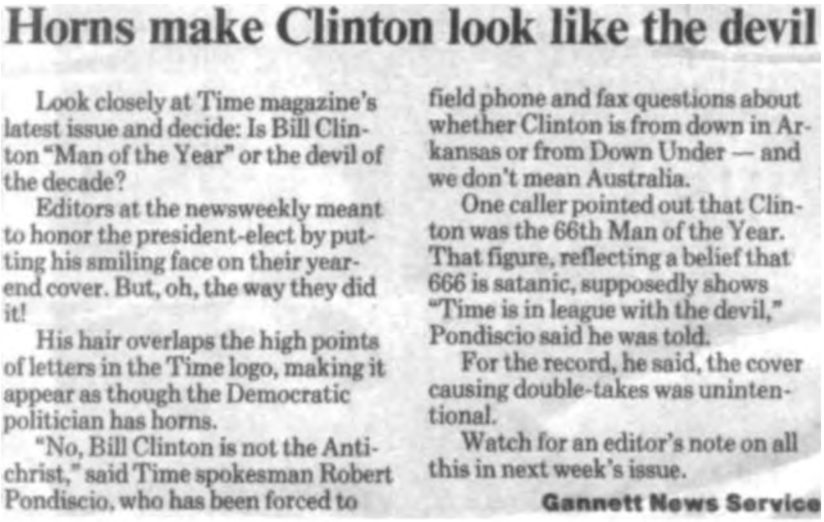
TIME
President-elect
Bill Clinton

President Bill Clinton was named "Man of the Year" by Time magazine. The editors stretched the letter 'M' to make it appear as if Clinton had horns.



Horns make Clinton look like the devil

Look closely at Time magazine's latest issue and decide: Is Bill Clinton "Man of the Year" or the devil of the decade?

Editors at the newsweekly meant to honor the president-elect by putting his smiling face on their year-end cover. But, oh, the way they did it!

His hair overlaps the high points of letters in the Time logo, making it appear as though the Democratic politician has horns.

"No, Bill Clinton is not the Antichrist," said Time spokesman Robert Pondiscio, who has been forced to field phone and fax questions about whether Clinton is from down in Arkansas or from Down Under — and we don't mean Australia.

One caller pointed out that Clinton was the 66th Man of the Year. That figure, reflecting a belief that 666 is satanic, supposedly shows "Time is in league with the devil," Pondiscio said he was told.

For the record, he said, the cover causing double-takes was unintentional.

Watch for an editor's note on all this in next week's issue.

Gannett News Service

Gannet News Service, one of America's largest daily newspaper chains, ran this story about the Time cover that made President Clinton look like the devil. All unintentional, said Gannett. Sure it was!

"That which we must say to the CROWD is we worship a god, but it is the god that one adores without superstition. To YOU Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, we say this, that you may repeat it to the brethren of the 32nd, 31st and 30th degrees - the MASONIC RELIGION should be, by all of us initiates of the high degrees, maintained in the purity of the LUCIFERIAN doctrine. Baphomet !!

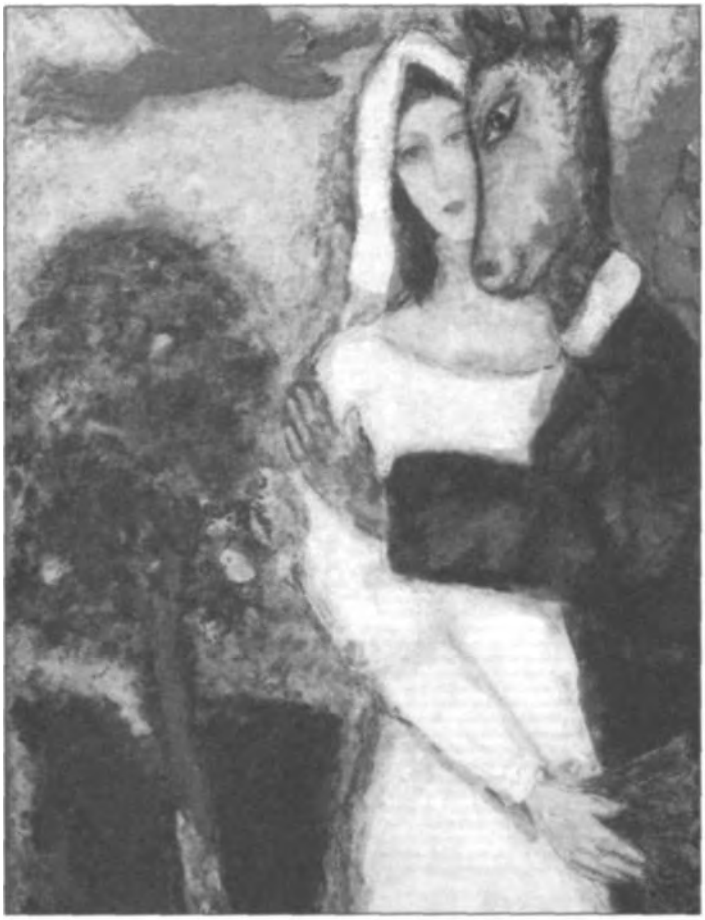
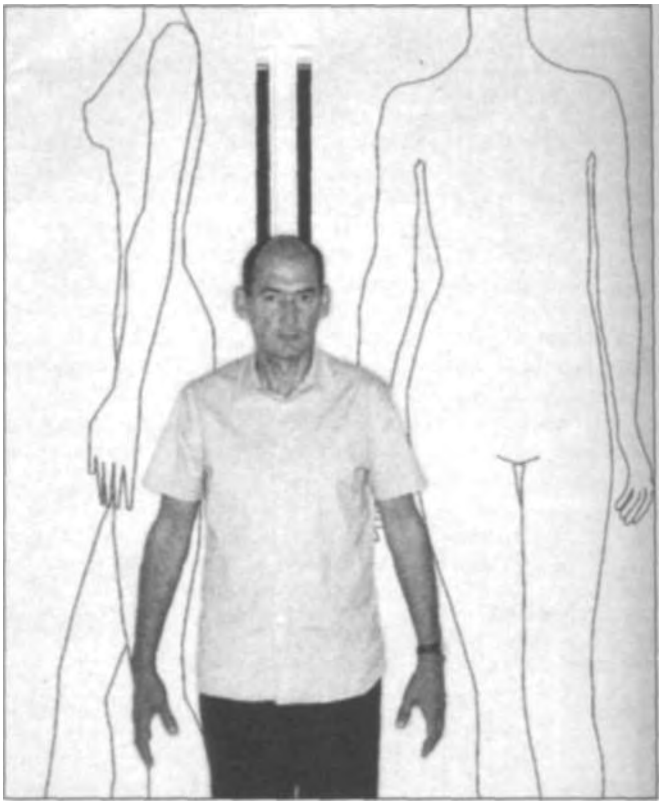
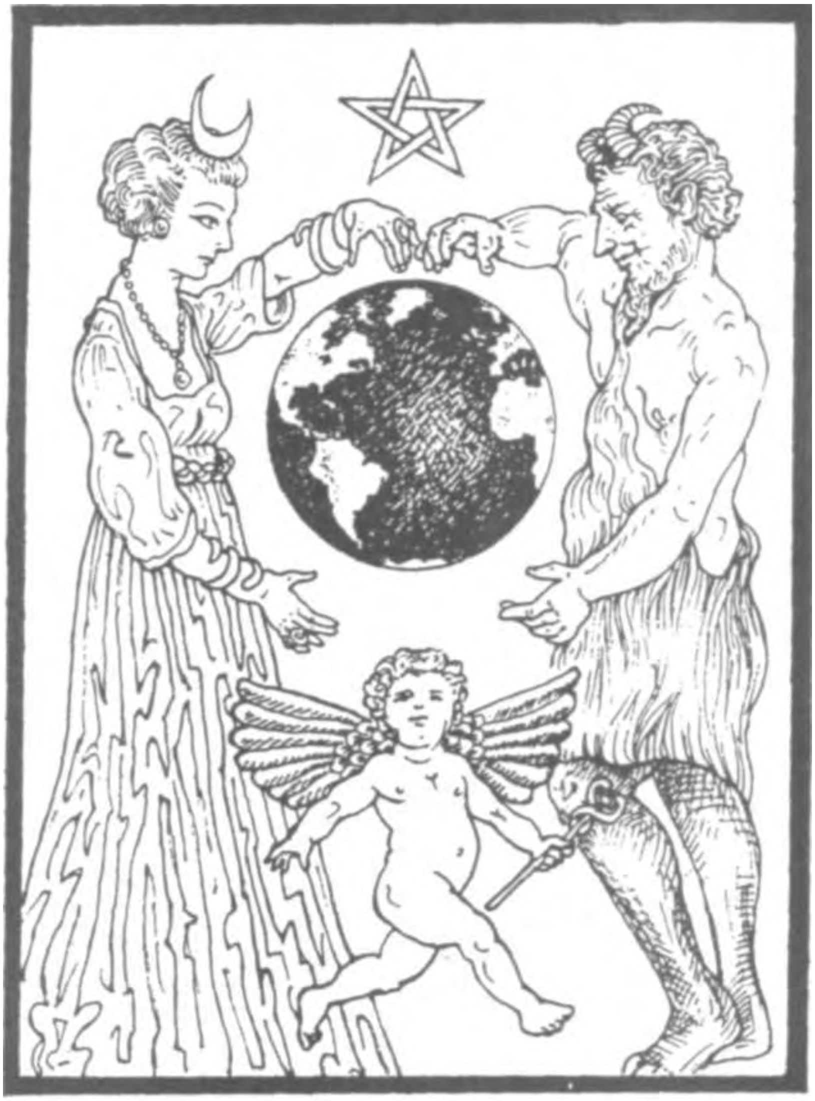
The symbol of the androgynous beast-god, Baphomet, turns out to be remarkably similar to the symbol worn by the Sovereign Grand Commanders of the Scottish Rite, the world's largest Freemasonry group. This is shown on these two pages of a popular tract by Chick Publications. They show Albert Pike, 33rd degree, 19th century Sovereign Grand Commander following the American Civil War, quoted as adoring Lucifer. Also wearing the symbol, Henry C. Clausen, 33rd degree, Sovereign Grand Commander in the 1970s and 1980s. Clausen wore the symbol as does the current Sovereign Grand Commander, C. Fred Kleinknecht.



Highly acclaimed artist Marc Chagall, a Russian-born Jew, gave us this painting, entitled Midsummer Nights Dream, in 1939. Drawing on the theme of "Beauty and the Beast," the painting has a horned goat as a bridegroom, and a wedding couple being influenced by a red-colored angel.

Dutch architect Rem Koolhaas is in great demand. In recent years he's designed a Guggenheim Museum, public libraries, Prada stores, an addition for the Whitney Museum in New York, and published several bestselling books. Featured in Newsweek (January 28, 2002, p. 56), Koolhaas apparently is communicating an esoteric message. The parallel vertical lines are undeniably reminiscent of horns. The nude images on either side of the architect cry out lust and sex, while the face, arms and body posture are also meaningful.





A well-known witchcraft newspaper carried this illustration (top) of the Goddess and her consort and master, the Horned God (Lucifer). The cupid-like angel is their Son. "TRADITIONAL MAGICKS FOR THE NEW AEON"

The demon, Mephistopheles, shown being conjured up by a magician in Masonic scholar and 33rd degree Illuminatus Manly P. Halls 1928 occult book classic, Secret Teachings of All Ages, bears a remarkable resemblance to Yoda, the wise ascended master of the Star Wars saga, Return of the Jedi. Look closely and you'll see a painting of Baphomet, the androgynous goat god, on the wall at left and also a skeleton's head at top right.

This is a member of the radical environmentalist group, Earth First. He's decked out as Pan, an ancient, mystical Greek deity who had a mistress said to be the "Earth Goddess."

"El Diablo" Shows His Horns—The Devil Rides Out!

> People that are Christians now, but were Satanists, recognized President Clinton's signal at his inauguration as a sign of Satan. That seems fairly cut and dried, and it is. Clinton communicated what he wanted to the people to whom he wanted to communicate. The whole affair with him flashing the Satanic handsignal took only a couple of seconds.
> Fritz Springmeier
> Bloodlines of the Illuminati

It is being flashed everywhere—on TV, in newspapers and magazines, at sporting events, and even at presidential inaugurations. I'm referring, of course, to the sign of El Diablo, the horned devil, also known as the sign of Il Cornuto and as Diabolicus. It began in the modern era with the followers of satanic cults, the members of the official Church of Satan, and heavy metal rock music bands and fans flourishing the sign of two separated fingers upward sign. The rock bands made it popular and trendy, and now it seems almost everyone is doing it.

Three versions of the "El Diablo," the sign of Satan, the horned god. The hand sign at right is also the deaf's gesture, or signing, for "I love you," a fact which has many people confused.

I Love You, Devil?

The sign often is confused with the deaf's signing of the phrase, "I love you." While at first this appears an odd resemblance, we register an "ahh, I get it!" emotion when we discover that the person who invented, or created, the hand sign system for the deaf, Helen Keller, was herself an occultist and Theosophist. Did Keller purposely design the deaf's "I love you" sign to be such a remarkable imitation of the classic sign of Satan? Was Keller saying, basically, "I love you, Devil?"

Then, we have the confusion of the El Diablo hand sign with the University of Texas "hook 'em horns" sign. Texas' mascot is the longhorn cow and it is only natural that the horns sign be employed by the student body, alumnai, and fans of that great institution.

When Jenna Bush, the daughter of President George W. Bush, gave the horns sign at the 2004 presidential inauguration, it shocked the world. Most viewers of international TV did not know that Jenna is a recent graduate of the University of Texas. However, at that same inaugural gala, the President also was photographed giving the sign, and so was the other Bush daughter. Not only that, but the First Lady, Laura, and even the President's mother, Barbara Bush, got into the mix. They, too, were seen giving the sign. Hmmm.

Partying, Drinking, Rebellion, Or...?

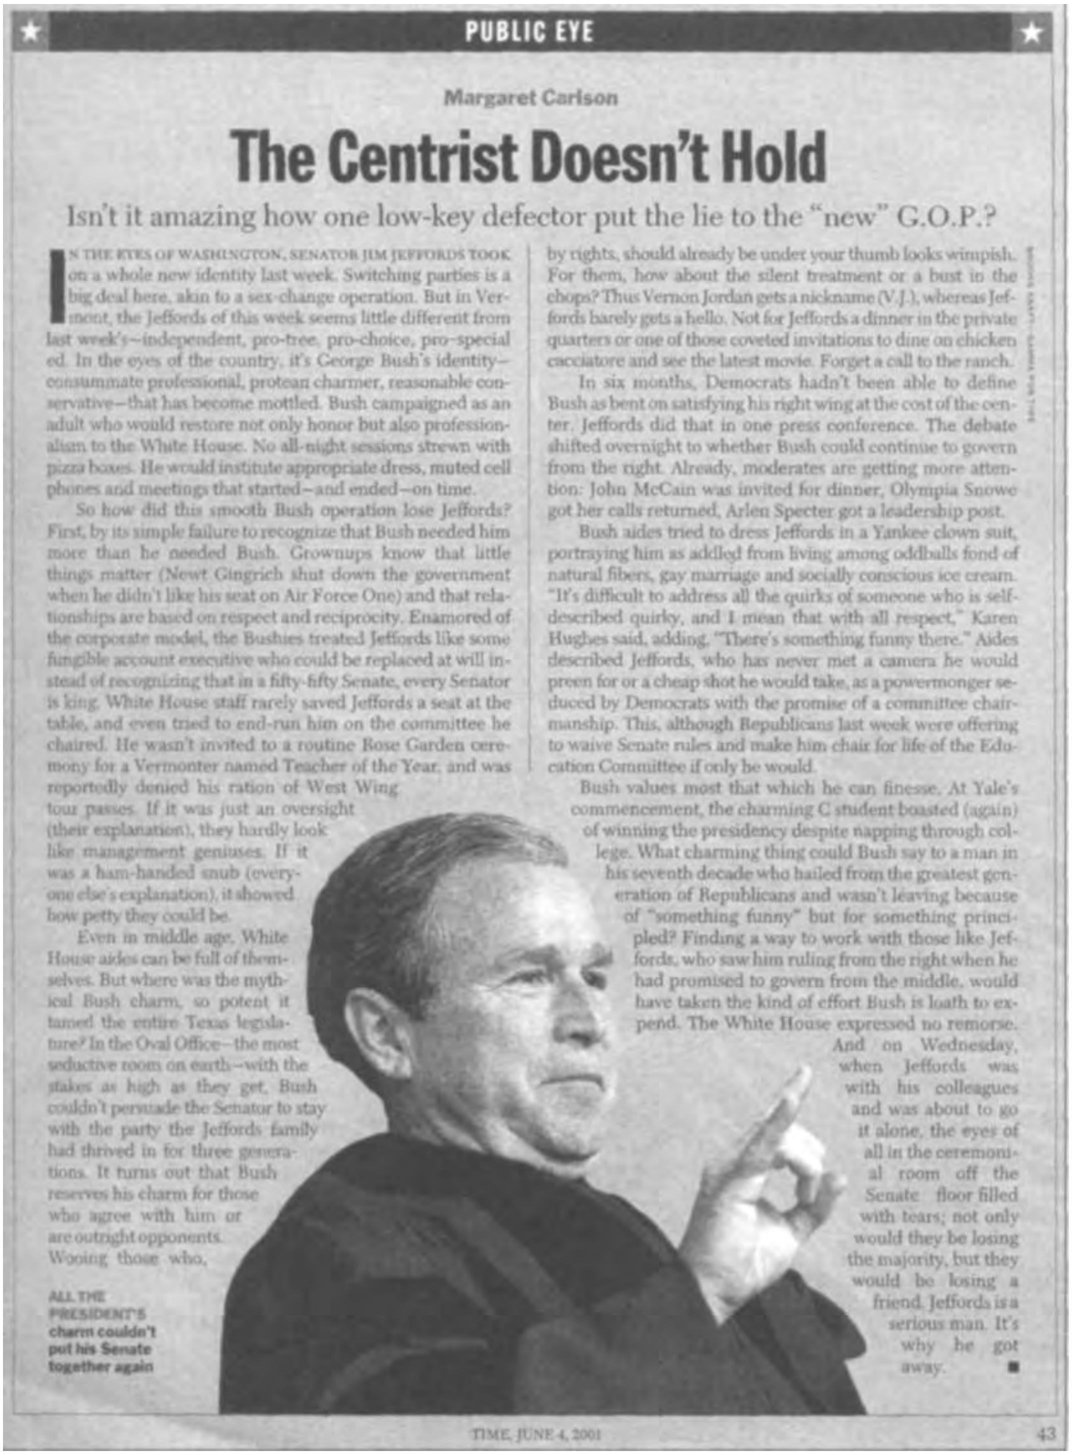
With the rapid rise in popularity of the El Diablo sign among rock fans, many people seem to be blissfully unaware of the satanic background and dark history of this sign. To some, giving the sign more likely indicates their eagerness and gusto for fun, partying, drinking, and youthful rebellion.

Thus it is that I leave it to you, the reader, to decide which of the persons shown here, in this chapter, in rendering the El Diablo sign, are paying homage to Satan and which are employing it for some other purpose. I have my own opinion, what's yours? For example, in the picture shown here you'll discover former President Bill Clinton, from Arkansas, and Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi giving the sign. Are they telling us they are Texas Longhorns fans or that they love Satan?

A final word: Even if you and I are willing to overlook the giving of this sign by many as not intentionally satanic, we cannot dismiss the evidence that many, if not most, who employ the sign are, in fact, thereby honoring Satan, the rebellious dark angel. The case here, later in this chapter, of the vampire satanists who stabbed a victim 66 times and drank his blood undeniably stamps the El Diablo hand sign given by the murderers as intensely satanic in nature.

Neither can the picture here of the Hindu sect member, the witch, and of Anton LaVey, High Priest of Satan, giving the sign also be disputed or explained away.

As for the photos of the top-ranked Christian evangelists shown in the pages that follow, what do you have to say, dear reader? Are these men servants of the One, True God as revealed in the Holy Bible, or do they cryptically serve His Adversary, Lucifer? Judging from their hand gestures, what do you say?



PUBLIC EYE

The Centrist Doesn't Hold

Isn't it amazing how one low-key defector put the lie to the "new" G.O.P.?

IN THE EYES OF WASHINGTON, SENATOR JIM JEFFORDS TOOK on a whole new identity last week. Switching parties is a big deal here, akin to a sex-change operation. But in Vermont, the Jeffords of this week seems little different from last week's—independent, pro-tree, pro-choice, pro-special ed. In the eyes of the country, it's George Bush's identity—consummate professional, protean charmer, reasonable conservative—that has become mottled. Bush campaigned as an adult who would restore not only honor but also professionalism to the White House. No all-night sessions strewn with pizza boxes. He would institute appropriate dress, muted cell phones and meetings that started—and ended—on time.

So how did this smooth Bush operation lose Jeffords? First, by its simple failure to recognize that Bush needed him more than he needed Bush. Grownups know that little things matter (Newt Gingrich shut down the government when he didn't like his seat on Air Force One) and that relationships are based on respect and reciprocity. Enamored of the corporate model, the Bushies treated Jeffords like some fungible account executive who could be replaced at will instead of recognizing that in a fifty-fifty Senate, every Senator is king. White House staff rarely saved Jeffords a seat at the table, and even tried to end-run him on the committee he chaired. He wasn't invited to a routine Rose Garden ceremony for a Vermonter named Teacher of the Year, and was reportedly denied his ration of West Wing tour passes. If it was just an oversight (their explanation), they hardly look like management geniuses. If it was a ham-handed snub (everyone else's explanation), it showed how petty they could be.

Even in middle age, White House aides can be full of themselves. But where was the mythical Bush charm, so potent it tamed the entire Texas legislature? In the Oval Office—the most seductive room on earth—with the stakes as high as they get, Bush couldn't persuade the Senator to stay with the party the Jeffords family had thrived in for three generations. It turns out that Bush reserves his charm for those who agree with him or are outright opponents. Wooing those who, by rights, should already be under your thumb looks wimpish. For them, how about the silent treatment or a bust in the chops? Thus Vernon Jordan gets a nickname (V.J.), whereas Jeffords barely gets a hello. Not for Jeffords a dinner in the private quarters or one of those coveted invitations to dine on chicken cacciatore and see the latest movie. Forget a call to the ranch.

In six months, Democrats hadn't been able to define Bush as bent on satisfying his right wing at the cost of the center. Jeffords did that in one press conference. The debate shifted overnight to whether Bush could continue to govern from the right. Already, moderates are getting more attention: John McCain was invited for dinner, Olympia Snowe got her calls returned, Arlen Specter got a leadership post.

Bush aides tried to dress Jeffords in a Yankee clown suit, portraying him as addled from living among oddballs fond of natural fibers, gay marriage and socially conscious ice cream. "It's difficult to address all the quirks of someone who is self-described quirky, and I mean that with all respect," Karen Hughes said, adding, "There's something funny there." Aides described Jeffords, who has never met a camera he would preen for or a cheap shot he would take, as a powermonger seduced by Democrats with the promise of a committee chairmanship. This, although Republicans last week were offering to waive Senate rules and make him chair for life of the Education Committee if only he would.

Bush values most that which he can finesse. At Yale's commencement, the charming C student boasted (again) of winning the presidency despite napping through college. What charming thing could Bush say to a man in his seventh decade who hailed from the greatest generation of Republicans and wasn't leaving because of "something funny" but for something principled? Finding a way to work with those like Jeffords, who saw him ruling from the right when he had promised to govern from the middle, would have taken the kind of effort Bush is loath to expend. The White House expressed no remorse. And on Wednesday, when Jeffords was with his colleagues and was about to go it alone, the eyes of all in the ceremonial room off the Senate floor filled with tears; not only would they be losing the majority, but they would be losing a friend. Jeffords is a serious man. It's why he got away. ■

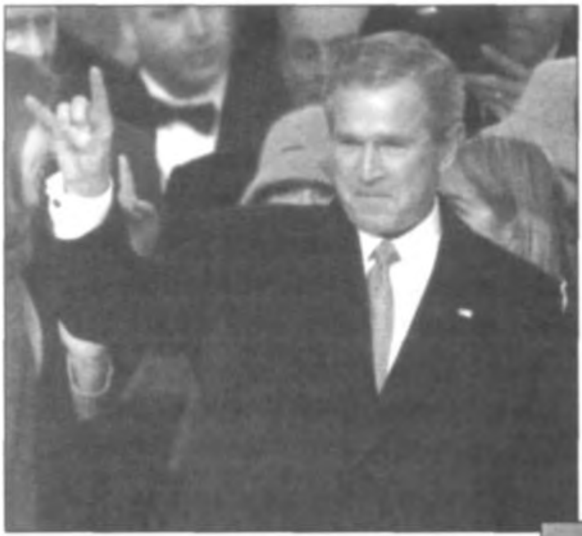
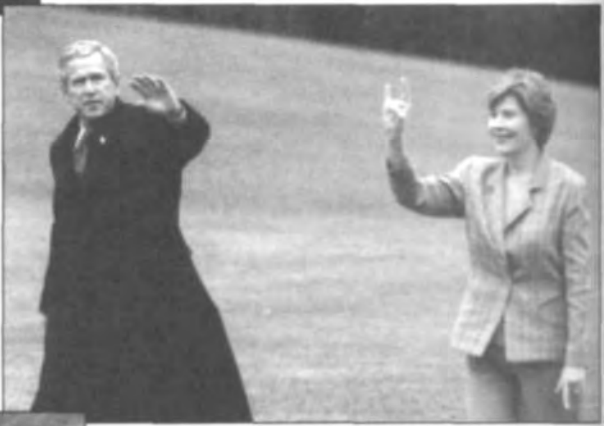
TIME, JUNE 4, 2001 43

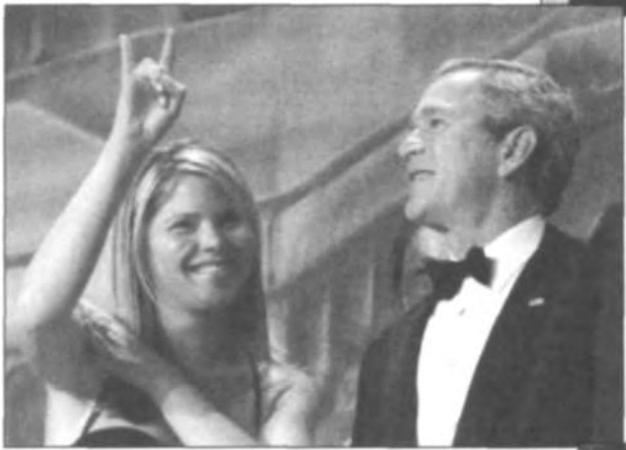
This photograph of President George W. Bush in Time magazine (June 4, 2001) is curious. It shows Bush presenting the horned devil sign. Also, the simultaneous joint use of the circle is evident. Nowhere in the article does the author explain why Bush is making this sign or even explain why he is dressed in what appears to be college robes. Just as curious, the article, including the caption, mentions the word charm, charmed, or charming a grand total of exactly six times. A charm, of course, is a magical talisman. The text also includes the eyebrow-raising phrases: "There's something funny there" and "something funny..." Yes, indeed, there is something funny and strange at work here.



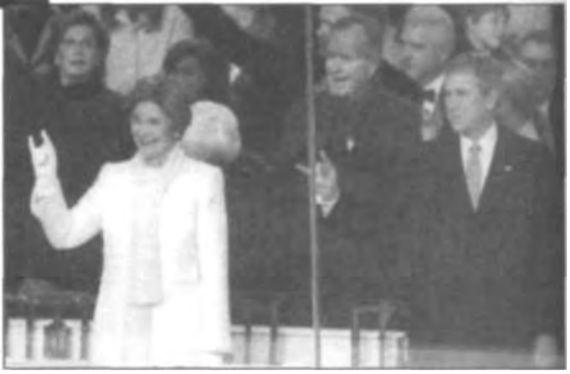
President George W. Bush is very adept at giving the sign.



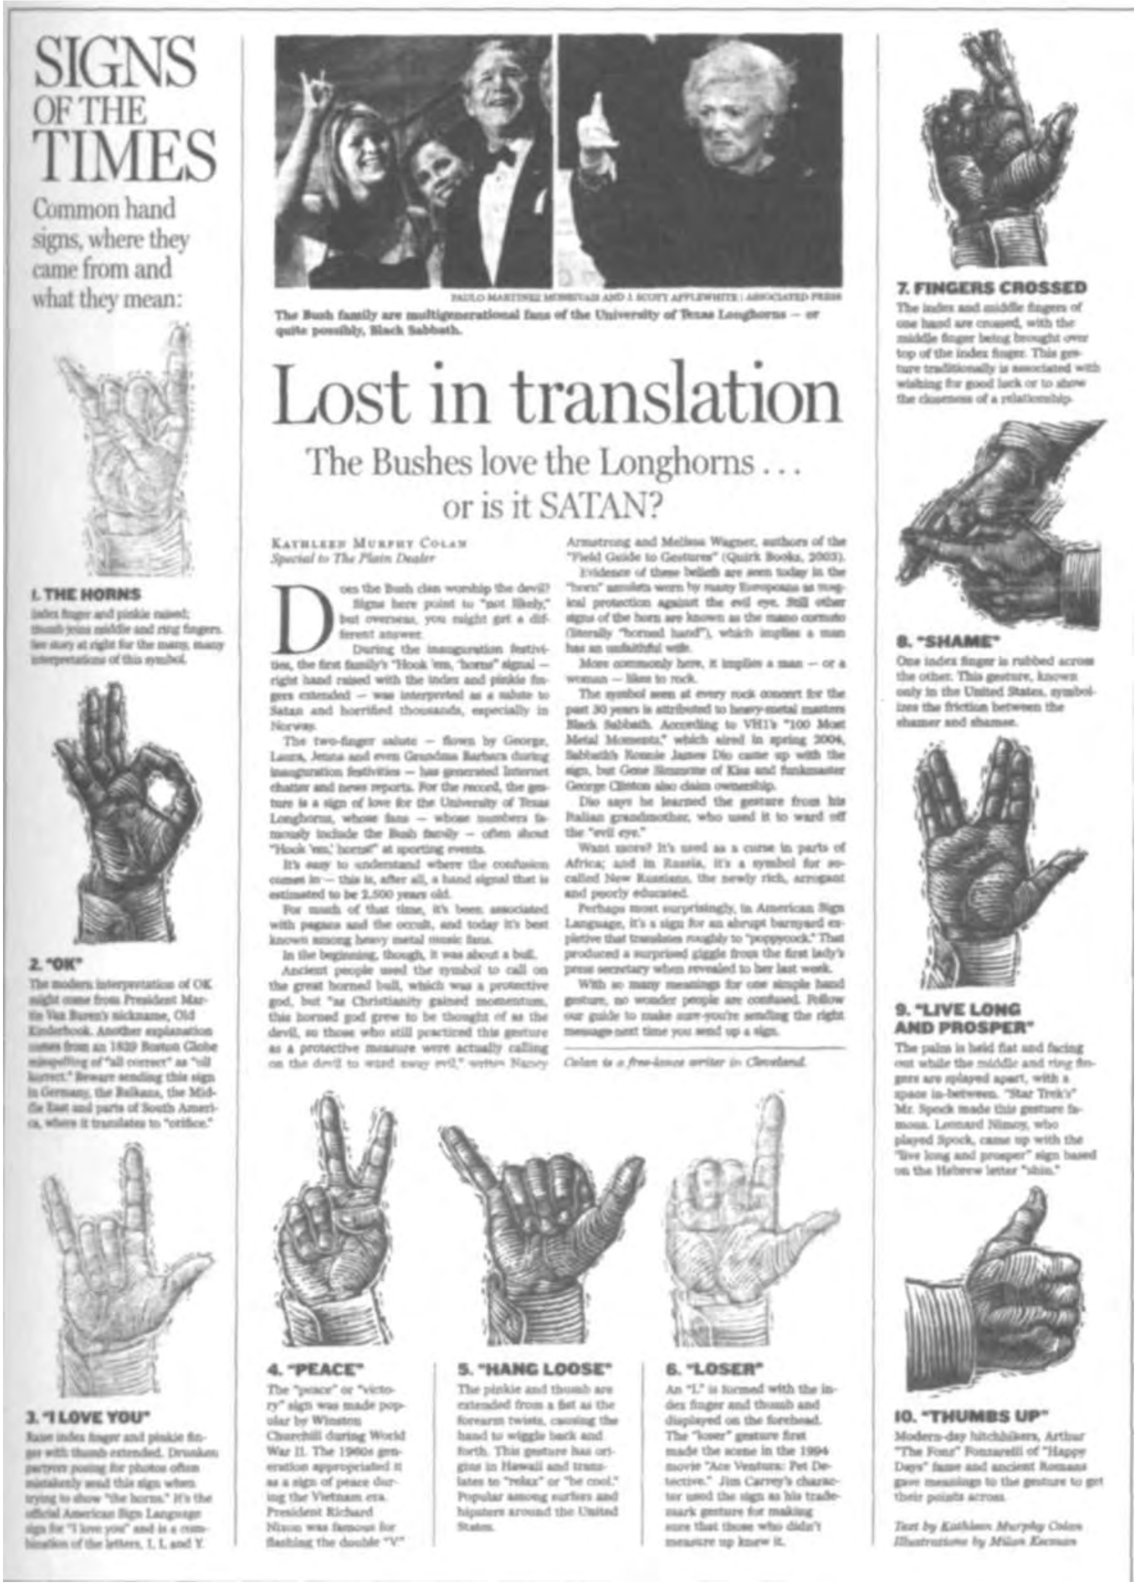
Laura Bush, First Lady, sends out a diabolical message. Laura, a liberal, is pro-abortion. She has encouraged Americans to send money to Afghanistan for the restoration of a giant stone statue of Buddha partially destroyed by Islamic militants.



Jenna Bush gives the sign on-stage, in front of tens of millions of TV spectators, at her Dad's inaugural in 2005. With her left hand, Jenna also gives the female delta (vulva) sign.



Laura joins in the fun with George W.



SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Common hand signs, where they came from and what they mean:

1. THE HORNS
Index finger and pinkie raised; thumb joins middle and ring fingers. See story at right for the many, many interpretations of this symbol.

2. "OK"
The modern interpretation of OK might come from President Martin Van Buren's nickname, Old Kinderhook. Another explanation comes from an 1839 Boston Globe misspelling of "all correct" as "oll korrect." Beware sending this sign in Germany, the Balkans, the Middle East and parts of South America, where it translates to "orifice."

3. "I LOVE YOU"
Raise index finger and pinkie finger with thumb extended. Drunken partyers posing for photos often mistakenly send this sign when trying to show "the horns." It's the official American Sign Language sign for "I love you" and is a combination of the letters, I, L and Y.

The Bushes love the Longhorns . . . or is it SATAN?

KATHLEEN MURPHY COLAN
Special to The Plain Dealer

Does the Bush clan worship the devil? Signs here point to "not likely," but overseas, you might get a different answer.

During the inauguration festivities, the first family's "Hook 'em, 'horns'" signal — right hand raised with the index and pinkie fingers extended — was interpreted as a salute to Satan and horrified thousands, especially in Norway.

The two-finger salute — flown by George, Laura, Jenna and even Grandma Barbara during inauguration festivities — has generated Internet chatter and news reports. For the record, the gesture is a sign of love for the University of Texas Longhorns, whose fans — whose numbers famously include the Bush family — often shout "Hook 'em,' horns!" at sporting events.

It's easy to understand where the confusion comes in — this is, after all, a hand signal that is estimated to be 2,500 years old.

For much of that time, it's been associated with pagans and the occult, and today it's best known among heavy metal music fans.

In the beginning, though, it was about a bull.

Ancient people used the symbol to call on the great horned bull, which was a protective god, but "as Christianity gained momentum, this horned god grew to be thought of as the devil, so those who still practiced this gesture as a protective measure were actually calling on the devil to ward away evil," writes Nancy Armstrong and Melissa Wagner, authors of the "Field Guide to Gestures" (Quirk Books, 2003).

Evidence of these beliefs are seen today in the "horn" amulets worn by many Europeans as magical protection against the evil eye. Still other signs of the horn are known as the mano cornuto (literally "horned hand"), which implies a man has an unfaithful wife.

More commonly here, it implies a man — or a woman — likes to rock.

The symbol seen at every rock concert for the past 30 years is attributed to heavy-metal masters Black Sabbath. According to VH1's "100 Most Metal Moments," which aired in spring 2004, Sabbath's Ronnie James Dio came up with the sign, but Gene Simmons of Kiss and funkmaster George Clinton also claim ownership.

Dio says he learned the gesture from his Italian grandmother, who used it to ward off the "evil eye."

Want more? It's used as a curse in parts of Africa; and in Russia, it's a symbol for so-called New Russians, the newly rich, arrogant and poorly educated.

Perhaps most surprisingly, in American Sign Language, it's a sign for an abrupt barnyard expletive that translates roughly to "poppycock." That produced a surprised giggle from the first lady's press secretary when revealed to her last week.

With so many meanings for one simple hand gesture, no wonder people are confused. Follow our guide to make sure you're sending the right message next time you send up a sign.

Colan is a free-lance writer in Cleveland.

4. "PEACE"
The "peace" or "victory" sign was made popular by Winston Churchill during World War II. The 1960s generation appropriated it as a sign of peace during the Vietnam era. President Richard Nixon was famous for flashing the double "V."

5. "HANG LOOSE"
The pinkie and thumb are extended from a fist as the forearm twists, causing the hand to wiggle back and forth. This gesture has origins in Hawaii and translates to "relax" or "be cool." Popular among surfers and hipsters around the United States.

6. "LOSER"
An "L" is formed with the index finger and thumb and displayed on the forehead. The "loser" gesture first made the scene in the 1994 movie "Ace Ventura: Pet Detective." Jim Carrey's character used the sign as his trademark gesture for making sure that those who didn't measure up knew it.

7. FINGERS CROSSED
The index and middle fingers of one hand are crossed, with the middle finger being brought over top of the index finger. This gesture traditionally is associated with wishing for good luck or to show the closeness of a relationship.

8. "SHAME"
One index finger is rubbed across the other. This gesture, known only in the United States, symbolizes the friction between the shamer and shamee.

9. "LIVE LONG AND PROSPER"
The palm is held flat and facing out while the middle and ring fingers are splayed apart, with a space in-between. "Star Trek's" Mr. Spock made this gesture famous. Leonard Nimoy, who played Spock, came up with the "live long and prosper" sign based on the Hebrew letter "shin."

10. "THUMBS UP"
Modern-day hitchhikers, Arthur "The Fonz" Fonzarelli of "Happy Days" fame and ancient Romans gave meanings to the gesture to get their points across.

HIT WITH A 'HOOK'

Countries criticize the first family's Longhorn salute as an insult.

By JACK DOUGLAS JR.
STAR-TELEGRAM

FORT WORTH, Texas — President Bush may have inadvertently ruffled feathers overseas by flashing a "Hook 'em 'Horns" sign during last week's inaugural parade.

Bush and the rest of the first family raised their right hands in the traditional " 'Horns" salute — customary among University of Texas Longhorns — as the school's band marched in front of the presidential reviewing stand Thursday.

But in Norway and some other parts of the world, a nearly identical hand gesture is considered an insult or, worse, a sign of the devil. In Mediterranean countries, it implies a man is a cuckold, the victim of an unfaithful wife. In parts of Africa, it is used as curse. In many European countries, it is used to ward off "the evil eye."

In Russia, it's a symbol for "New Russians," the newly rich, arrogant and poorly educated. In sign language, it means an off-color word for bull feces. A headline in the Norwegian Internet newspaper Nettavisen expressed outrage at the first family's collective gesture last week, saying "Shock greeting from Bush daughter" above a photo of Bush's daughter, Jenna, smiling and waving the sign, according to The Associated Press.

The originator of the "Hook 'em, 'Horns" sign said he doesn't see what all the fuss is about.

"I think 'silly' would be a very kind word for it," said H.K. Pitts, 73, who was a University of Texas student in 1955 when he came up with the hand signal. "It's much to do about nothing," said Pitts, who went on to teach history at Texas A&M University-Kingsville.

"I wouldn't think many Norwegians up there watch Longhorn football," he said. "So I'm not concerned about it that much, to tell you the truth."

Yet another article, this one in Fort Worth's Star-Telegram newspaper. The editors insisted that the Bushes were only displaying the "Hook 'em Horns" sign common to University of Texas Longhorns fans. The article points out that in Africa and Europe, the sign is clearly the devil's own. Doesn't it seem odd to you that even Mother Barbara Bush is giving the sign? And, after all, neither George nor Laura were ever students at the University of Texas! George was a bonesman at New England's preppie school, Yale.

Workplace: Flush with offers of $20 an hour, benefits and even stock options, Internet interns these days are in the driver's seat. BY LAUREN BARACK

WORKING THE SUMMER BEFORE her senior year was a necessity for 20-year-old Kara Kotwas, who is paying her way through a computer-graphics-design program at Syracuse University. When she signed up for an internship, she expected not only hands-on experience with a reputable firm, but also a nice compensation package. "Some companies treat internships like a charity," says Kotwas. "But I can't imagine not getting paid for what I do."

Fortunately Kotwas, like a host of other college students this year, entered the internship market at just the right time. "I went into one interview and they offered me $8 an hour and I was totally surprised. It was enough to make me say 'No way.'"

With unemployment at a low of 4 percent, it's a buyer's market not just for job seekers in high tech, but also for interns. Tech companies and Internet start-ups are choosing to fill the gaps, at least in the short term, with what was once cheap labor. Now, interns pull in upwards of $20 an hour, with science and business majors typically earning the most. Recently Cisco Systems CEO John Chambers told an audience of cheering interns they would each receive 500 stock options—as long as they came back to work for the company after graduation.

One step at a time: Nathan (left) and Jason Kuder went from internship to ownership in just a few months

Kodak, where Kotwas spent her summer designing and laying out packaging in Rochester, N.Y., offered her $600 a week, plus health insurance, a rental deposit, commuting expenses and college credit.

Desiree Sylvester knew she needed experience before graduating last spring from Santa Clara University with a degree in communications. But she didn't blink an eye when Hewlett-Packard offered her $16.50 an hour—or $2,640 a month before taxes—last summer to intern full time as a writer on its internal Web site. "I didn't even think it would be unpaid," the confident 21-year-old remarks.

Killing for SA

Ever since Charles Manson and his Family made the headlines, murder has been a whole new ball-game, in which Satanic cult trappings, media stardom and anti-authoritarian rebellion without-a-cause have been inextricably entwined.

Now Daniel and Manuela Ruda, a pair of self-proclaimed vampiric Satanists, have shocked the world with their brutal 'ritual killing', tales of demonic possession and courtroom antics.

Whether the Rudas are mad, bad or just dangerous to know, the usual claims of large Satanic networks and more killers-in-waiting have emerged in the wake of this high-profile case.

On 31 January, Daniel Ruda, 26, and his wife Manuela, 23, were found guilty of killing Frank Hackert "for Satan", and were sentenced to 15 and 13 years respectively. Manuela attended the regional court in Bochum, western Germany, in full gothic garb, her head partly shaved to reveal an inverted crucifix and a target tattooed on her skull. Her final gesture was to make a Satanic sign with inch-long black nails.

Manuela ran away to England at the age of 16, living first in London where she met other Satanists and attended vampire "bite parties" where people drank each other's blood. She then went to Scotland and worked in a hotel bar in Kyleakin, Skye. When the hotel closed for the winter, she paid four visits to the Leopard Man of Skye [see panel]. Back in Germany, she had her teeth removed and animal fangs implanted. On Hallowe'en night in 1999 she dedicated her soul to Satan and promised to serve him after her death.

they stabbed him 66 times and drank his blood

That year she met Daniel Ruda, a car parts salesman, when he advertised in Metal Hammer magazine's lonely-hearts column as a "raven-black vampire" seeking a "princess of darkness who hates everyone and everything". They married on 6 June 2001 and chose Daniel's workmate Frank Hackert, 33, for sacrifice because he was "so funny and would be the perfect court jester for Satan". (Some reports call him Frank Haagen.) They denied murder, claiming they were only following Satan's order to "kill, sacrifice, bring souls". Manuela explained: "It was not something bad. It simply had to be. We wanted to make sure that the victim suffered well."

They invited him to a party in their flat in Witten on 6 July 2001. As Ruda hit him on the head with a hammer, his wife shouted "Stab him in the heart!" Manuela saw the light in the flat flicker as Hackert died. "That was the sign that his soul was going down," she said. He was stabbed 66 times. The couple then prayed to Satan, cut a pentagram on the dead man's stomach, drank his blood from a bowl on an altar topped with skulls, and copulated in a silk-lined, oak coffin in which Manuela usually slept. Manuela was disappointed she didn't turn into a vampire, "because as a vampire I would not have needed the streets."

Shortly after the killing, Manuela wrote to her mother: "I am not of this world. I must liberate my soul from the mortal flesh." Her mother alerted the police, who raided the Rudas' flat. Skulls, bloody scalpels, vampire teeth and coloured contact lenses lay scattered around, and the blood-spattered walls were hung with knives and machetes. Hackert's mutilated and party-decomposed body was found with a scalpel protruding from his stomach, near a death list of 15 other intended victims.

Psychiatric experts claimed that the couple suffered from "severe narcissistic personality disturbances," while Judge Arnjo Kerstingtombroke maintained that the case "was not about Satanism but about a crime committed by two people with severe disorders. Nothing mysterious or cult-like happened here; just simple, base murder." Admirers and supporters of the Rudas were dotted about the courtroom, and the pair had received so much fan mail that Kerstingtombroke added that he was worried by the "limitless stupidity of many members of the public."

Daniel Ruda's lawyer was equally unconvinced by his client's claims of acting under Satanic orders and believed these were simply a cover for his desire for fame: "He says, 'I want to get on stage, I want that everybody knows me.... I want to be as famous as Charles Manson and so I have to kill someone.'"

Ingolf Christiansen, who investigates occult groups for the Lutheran church, claims that Satanism has 7,000 adherents in Germany. It first hit the headlines there eight years ago when a 15-year-old member of a group called Satan's Children in the eastern state of Thuringia was strangled by three fellow cult members. On 26 August 2001, three teenage followers of a Satanic cult committed suicide by throwing themselves off the 240ft (73m) high Göltzschtal bridge near Chemnitz in eastern Germany. D. Telegraph, 28 Aug 2001, 18 Jan, 1 Feb 2002; D.Express, Metro, 18 Jan, Sunday Times, 20 Jan; Scotsman, 21 Jan 2002; Guardian 1 Feb 2002.

THE VAMPIRES OF ISLINGTON

Manuela Ruda's account of how she drifted into vampirism and Satanism during her time in North London has certainly put the wind up the Islington Gazette, whose recent statement that "a secret colony of 'vampires' is operating within Islington's bars and nightclubs" make Tony Blair's old stamping ground sound more like Anne Rice's New Orleans.

There are certainly plenty of London clubs (some, like Slimelight, in Islington) where like-minded Goths can dress up and get together – and it seems a small step to London's vampire scene. This apparently started at Torture Garden nights, originally held in Islington, though blood-letting and drinking were not openly practised. Steve Wilson, a member of the London Vampire Group, told FT that while most vampire events are really just fancy-dress affairs, outsiders like Manuela could easily be drawn into more serious activities like sado-masochism and blood-drinking. A search of the internet reveals that such things are commonly practised by many 'vampires'. "I'm not saying that there aren't any blood-drinkers in Islington," said a local Police Constable, "but it's very much an underground scene."

In the US, the vampire subculture appears to be far bigger – an alternative community for alienated youths who see themselves as a tribe or family rejecting (or rejected by) their culture's mainstream. Like all subcultures, this has its own rules, terminology, preferred texts (Anne Rice), lame in-jokes and (of course) schisms (sanguinarians versus psychic vampires). A perusal of the many websites devoted to vampire culture turns up helpful advice on blood-letting, how to deal with 'hunters' and easing migraine (to which your average vampire is, it seems, prone). A dangerous blood-drinking cult in our midst... or trekkies with fangs? Islington Gazette, 31 Jan 2002.

Those who claim that if the thumb is diplayed, it is not the "El Diablo" Satan hand sign may just want to take a gander at the cover of a recently published (2005) book by Sondra London entitled True Vampires—Blood-Sucking Killers Past and Present. Published by Feral House, a book company originally founded by Anton LaVey, High Priest of the Church of Satan, the cover clearly demonstrates that, for hard-core Satanists, there is no real difference in meaning whether the sign includes the thumb or does not.

Manuela Ruda, 2 i, (shown at left in sun glasses giving the "El Diablo" hand sign), and her husband, Daniel, 26, a pair of self-proclaimed vampire satanists from Germany, sacrificed a victim to Satan. The pair ceremoniously stabbed the man exactly 66 times with a dagger. Then they drank his blood. Some might say that Manuela's hand sign is merely the deaf's "I love you," but the couples' grim conduct indicated otherwise. Also shown: Manuela's head, shaved to reveal an inverted Christian cross. Manuela also had a rough-edged, blood red circle tatooed on her scalp. The two were trained to be Satan worshippers while visiting Scotland. (From news report and article in Strange Times magazine, Great Britian)

Satanist's Daughter To Keep the 'Faith'

Famed devil-worshiper died last week

By Susan Sward
Chronicle Staff Writer

It was a news conference unlike any other: Black velvet curtains kept the autumn sunlight out of the living room in the Richmond District Victorian. Daggers hung on the wall. A skull perched on top of the organ.

At the center of the room yesterday stood a wax figure of Anton LaVey, the founder of the Church of Satan who had died 10 days before. His skin was shiny white, his head shaved, his cape black. On his chin was a beard usually described as Mephistophelian.

On either side of LaVey sat two of his High Priestesses — his longtime companion, Blanche Barton, and his daughter, Karla LaVey.

The reason for the news conference, the two women explained, was to announce that they will be carrying on LaVey's work.

"It makes it like old times," murmured Karla LaVey, a black-haired woman in her mid-40s. "We haven't done anything like this since the 1960s," she told the dozen

> LaVey preached that life should be lived to the fullest, and he complained that he never got enough credit for helping start the human potential movement.

But there was always a sense that LaVey might not be taking himself entirely seriously. Asked by Chronicle reporter Jerry Carroll in 1986 what this devil business was all about, LaVey replied with a tincture of melancholy, "It's a living."

In recent years, LaVey's name appeared infrequently in the mainstream press.

Christian Rock?—Is there such a thing as Christian rock'n'roll? This book , authored by a mother of a young man who was a member of a rock band, was intended to defend Christian rock music. But perhaps tellingly, the cover seems to show one person giving the horned devil sign and a couple more displaying the F...k You! sign (finger in middle of hand upraised)—all at a Christian rock concert! Also, lights displayed in three triangles are in the background. The triangle has three sides. Three plus three equals nine. The number nine in occult numerology conceals the number 666, the number of the beast, since adding the digits 6+6+6=18=9. Whether the cover artist and the author were aware of these oddities is unknown.

This issue of Newsweek trumpeted "Jesus Rocks!" The article talked about the popularity of rock'n'roll Christian bands. But, get a load of the hand signs of several of these "Christian" youth.

"LITERATURE IS MY UTOPIA," SAID KELLER, HERE READING IN BRAILLE

Helen Keller (1880-1968), shown here at her desk, creator of the deaf signing system. The brilliant Keller was a pitiful character in some ways. Stricken blind and deaf at an early age, she nevertheless went on to considerable achievements in life. But Helen Keller also got involved in occultic sects like Swedenborgianism and Theosophy. Did her membership in these groups inspire Keller to choose a hand sign for the deaf, translated as "I love you", which is today often used interchangeably with the universal "I love (and/or worship) Satan" hand sign?

Helen Keller with Alexander Graham Bell. Keller wrote a book, My Religion, in which she explained her occult religious views and her enthusiasm for the teachings of mystic Emmanuel Swedenborg. Was the architecture of the deaf signs based on Keller's aberrant religious views?

Shocked and offended, many in the audience abruptly got out of their seats and walked out of the room.

"This was beyond bad taste," said Rick Neiswanger, who attended the exhibition but had no idea that Penn & Teller would pull such a blasphemous stunt.

Secret Handshakes of the Illuminati

The secret hand signs of Illuminists are thought to work magic, to evoke supernatural beings, and, of course, to communicate messages. For example, the higher degree Mason, Rosicrucian, or other Illuminist can discern at what ritual level a brother in the Craft is 'at by testing his handshake, or grip. It is, therefore, an important mode of recognition. The commonly used phrase, "Get a grip," has Masonic origins.

The handshake, or grip, is a sign of unity, oneness of purpose and allegiance or devotion to joint cause. It is considered a bond, or seal, of acknowledgment between Illuminist brethren. The Masonic authorities speak of a "mystic tie" or spiritual union. Certainly, demon powers do congregate together and enjoy one another's foul company.

The God of Fidelity

The Illuminist handshake, the clasping or joining of hands, can have many meanings. Its simplest is as a symbol of fidelity. Interestingly, Dr. Cathy Burns, in her informative expose, Hidden Secrets of the Eastern Star, notes that even at this basic level,

The instructions issued the candidate of the Entered Apprentice, or First Degree, of Freemasonry include these given here. Notice that the candidate is asked, "How shall I know you to be a Mason?" His answer: "By certain signs, a token, a word, and the perfect points of my entrance." Then, when he is asked, "What are tokens?," he replies, "Certain friendly or brotherly grips, by which one Mason may know another in the dark as well as in the light." (Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, p. 42) the Illuminist is signifying allegiance to a deity other than the Christian God. For example, Dr. Burns quotes Albert Mackey, 33°, former Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite, who admits:

> The right hand has in all ages been deemed an emblem of fidelity, and our ancient brethren worshipped Deity under the name of Fides or Fidelity, which was sometimes represented by two right hands joined...
> Numa was the first who erected an altar to Fides under which name the Goddess of Oaths and Honesty was worshipped.[1]

Burns points out that this reference to the worship of the Roman pagan goddess is literally repeated by the initiate in the very first degree of the Masonic ritual. Yet the Holy Bible commands: "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." (Exodus 20:3) and goes on to emphatically state: "Make no mention of the names of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth." (Exodus 23:23)

In volume 1 of Albert Mackey's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry, a large section is devoted to a discussion of the hand and hand signs. Mackey states: "In Freemasonry, the hand as a symbol holds a high place...The same symbol is found in the most ancient religions and some of their analogies to Masonic symbolism are peculiar."

Mackey revealingly says that the hand is deemed important "as that symbol of mystical intelligence by which one Mason knows another in the dark as well as in the light."

He goes on to discuss the use of the hand in such ancient Mystery Religions as Mithraism and in worship of the Sumerian, Assyrian, and Babylonian gods. He notes that the tradition of the red seal attached to important documents is a throwback to the ancient use of the bloody hand as a way of authenticating documents.

Examples of Grips and Handshakes

I have included in this section of Codex Magica drawings of a number of Masonic handshakes taken from official Masonic publications and from other objective sources. In addition to Freemasonry, there are scores of Illuminati secret societies and many have their own unique handgrips and signs. Moreover, the Mormon Church, the Sufi Muslim Brotherhood, and even the notorious Mafia have their own identifying handgrips and signs. In the pages that follow in this chapter, you'll see a large number of well-known persons sharing handgrips and handshakes that clearly are Masonic and Illuminist.

Subject to Interpretation

It is true that a handshake can be a questionable thing in its interpretation. All of us have attempted handshakes when greeting old friends and meeting new acquaintances. Sometimes your hand and theirs do not quite meet and clasp as you and they intended. It might be the fit of the hands due to the relative difference in size of each person's hands; or perhaps the distance between the two persons' bodies, causing a longer or shorter reach; or some other factor (Maybe the individual is short or tall, is just not good at shaking hands, etc.)

I have done my best to take all these uncontrollable factors into consideration here and I include only what I believe to be indisputable Masonic and Illuminist handshakes, tokens, and grips. Naturally, one must especially consider who is shaking whose hand — and whether the person is known to be an Illuminist, a Mason, a Rosicrucian, an O.T.O. adept, or so forth. With these caveats in mind, let us take a look at the secret handshakes of the Illuminati. But first this brief article by Christopher Story.

(NOTE: The following article by Englishman Christopher Story was originally published in the Economic Intelligence Review, (Westminster, England) and was reprinted in Des Griffin's Midnight Messenger (May/June 2004). It is reprinted here for the reader's interest.)

Handshake Diplomacy: An Outbreak of the "Grips"

"They are out of the gate, and nothing will stop them." This description, by one of the sharpest of our informants, with the hectic pace associated with the imposition of the New Underworld Order, sums up the way the world is being turned upside down "as we speak." That's why the press is publishing all these "grips." And the newspaper editors have shown themselves to be only too willing to oblige. A huge photograph showed Tony Blair, our Fabian revolutionary Prime Minister, shaking hands with Adrian Nastase, the son of Illie, a leading Communist who "survived" the fall of Ceausescu. The Romanian Prime Minister is shown doing a five-knuckle grip (five-point degree), indicating to those whom Lenin called "the interested" that he's "a member of the club." Masons call their handshakes "grips" —hence the saying, "Get a grip."

Let's "get a grip" with what's going on here. All of a sudden, newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic have taken to publishing large photos of our "chosen ones" indulging in various manifestations of Masonic "grips." There was that Kerry-Clinton handshake published in The Washington Times in March.

In that instance, Clinton was demonstrating, for those "in the know," just who was boss, and how high up in the geomasonic stratosphere he is (right at the top). The "grip" in question was a Ma-Ha-Bone Lion's Paw Grip, which leaves the junior party in no doubt who's in charge (and in pain as a consequence).

On 26th March, British newspapers carried an enormous picture of Tony Blair's "grip moment" with Libyan dictator, Muammar Qadhaffi. Before proceeding, it needs to be said that these close-ups of Qadhaffi's face reveal this man to be burdened with the most evil physiognomies on record —far nastier than those of Adolf Hitler and Saddam Hussein combined: in fact Saddam looks quite benevolent beside this creature.

For his part, Blair looked extremely uneasy, his eyes watery, and his faced tensed up after what may have been some unspeakable encounter or other about which the record is silent (worse case scenario). Beneath the main picture, The Times had taken the trouble to provide us with three smaller close-ups of the "grip moment"-the newspaper's management being clearly signed up, in advance, to the significance of these New Underworld Order handshakes.

Our expert geomasonic handshake analyst writes that "the Blair-Qadhaffi handshake is a Shibboleth Grip which denotes fellowship and total agreement. The purpose of these photographs is to tell fellow Masons that these two are 'one.'" Beneath the photograph was a caption containing the following odd language:

"Clearly he (Blair) has not read Emily Post, the doyenne of 20th Century etiquette. "The proper handshake,' she wrote, 'is made briefly...and one should look into the countenance of the person whose hand one takes' (Blair was looking at the camera instead of course). But more to the point, this gratuitous reference to Emily Post was intended, our U.S. based expert writes, 'to show compatibility with the USA Scottish Rite. The palmetto in the background (there was a garish green wallpaper behind the pair—Ed.) reminds me of the State Flag of South Carolina (Charleston, on the 33rd parallel is the headquarters of the US Scottish Rite masonry — Ed.), and also relates to the prominence of the Middle East in all things occult."

On the same day (i.e., the photo research had been done well in advance), The Independent newspaper carried a double spread entitled: "PLEASED TO MEET YOU: THE HISTORIC HANDSHAKES THAT SHOOK THE WORLD." It showed the following geomasonic grips: Gerry Adams and Clinton, 12th December 1995: Shibboleth; Kim Jong-Il and Kim Dae-Jung (of the two Koreas), 12th December 2000 (Ma-Ha-Bone Grip (master masons); Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin, with top Mason Clinton looking on, 13th September 1993: Ma-Ha-Bone Grip (Lion's Paw, master mason; Pervez Musharraf and Atal Vajpayee, 6th January 2002: Shibboleth Grip ("friendship"); and most revealing of all Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev, meeting for the first time in Versoix, Switzerland, 9th November 1985. In this picture, Reagan is shown gripping with the Supreme Master Grip with a pronounced Ma-Ha-Bone Lion's Paw. Gorbachev attempts the same but Reagan won't allow the same grip. This shows that Reagan demanded (and kept) the "upper hand."

TEXAS INCREASES CONNALLY GUARD

At Least 20 Extra Troopers Are Assigned to Hospital

TYLER, Tex., Nov. 24 (UPI)—The Chief of the Texas Highway Patrol ordered at least 20 extra men into Dallas today to guard Gov. John B. Connally Jr., who is recuperating in a hospital.

"We have complete respect for the Dallas Police Department and we do not mean to imply that we do not," Col. Homer Garrison Jr., head of the Department of Public Safety, said.

Governor Connally was shot when President Kennedy was assassinated. He was reported to be up and around today at Parkland Hospital and well enough to shave himself.

A temporary headquarters for his staff has been set up at the hospital.

"The Governor's security is always our prime concern," Colonel Garrison said. "By law we guard the Governor in the mansion. Wherever the Governor is that's where our prime concern is.

"Here (at Parkland Hospital) we will use whatever security measures we think necessary for his protection.

Put another nickel design in – two, actually

Back of Jefferson coin recognizes two historic events

By Barbara Hagenbaugh
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON — Coin collectors, get ready for more change.

Drawing on the enormous popularity of the state quarter program, the U.S. Mint on Thursday unveiled two new nickels it hopes will also lure collectors.

The nickels, which mark the 200th anniversaries of the Louisiana Purchase and the Lewis & Clark expedition, are the first redesign of the 5-cent piece in 65 years. The two will hit cash registers in 2004 and will be followed by new designs in 2005.

The "heads" side of the nickels will continue to feature Thomas Jefferson throughout. In 2006, Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's home in Virginia, will return, but the image might be redesigned.

The state quarter program, which is at the halfway point after beginning in 1999, has turned millions of Americans into coin collectors. That has made the U.S. Mint one of the few government agencies that makes more money than it spends and has thrilled members of the coin-collecting community, who were frustrated by the infrequent redesign of the nation's change.

"There are a lot of people interested in coins, and a lot of that can be traced to the state quarters," says Beth Deisher, editor of Coin World, a weekly publication for coin collectors, and Coin Values, a new monthly publication aimed at novice collectors.

Mint officials are preparing for a run on the current nickels, which might be seen as collector's items, and will soon be selling uncirculated coins on their Web site.

The first nickel out next year will be released in the spring. It depicts the Jefferson Peace Medal, which was presented ceremoniously to Native American leaders. It commemorates the Louisiana Purchase, the 1803 purchase of more than 800,000 square miles of territory from France for $15 million, which doubled the size of the USA. The second, which will come out in the fall, features Meriwether Lewis and William Clark on a keelboat as they set out in search of a passage to the Pacific Ocean.

The nickels' introduction was delayed this year after Virginia lawmakers in Washington complained about the removal of Monticello from the coin. Mint officials negotiated with the lawmakers, promising to return Jefferson's home to the 5-cent piece in 2006.

5 cents' worth: Special editions of the nickel will feature two new designs on the back. One commemorates the Louisiana Purchase, left; the other, the Lewis & Clark expedition.

American coinage and currency frequently has borne hidden messages and symbols of the Illuminati. This new clipping from USA Today newspaper discusses and pictures the new nickel (5c coin) released in 2004 to commemorate the Louisiana Purchase of 1803. The coin bears the image of the Masonic handshake and also the occultic "X."

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that if any part of this my solemn oath or obligation be omitted at this time, that I will hold myself amenable thereto, whenever informed. To all which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, with a fixed and steady purpose of mind in me to keep and perform the same, binding myself under no less penalty than to have my body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the North and South, my bowels burnt to ashes in the center, and the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven, that there might not the least tract or trace of remembrance remain among men or Masons of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be, were I ever to prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Master Mason; so help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

Master, to candidate—What do you now most desire?

Candidate—Light.

Master—Brethren, please to stretch forth your hands and assist in bringing this new-made brother to more light in Masonry. "And God said, Let there be light, and there was light."

[The candidate has the bandage dropped from his eyes in the same manner as in preceding degrees, with three stamps on the floor, and three clapping of hands.]

Master, to candidate—On being brought to light, you first discover, as before, three great lights in Masonry, by the assistance of three lesser, with this difference, both points of the compass are elevated above the square, which denotes to you that you are about to receive all the light that can be conferred on you in a Mason's Lodge.

The Master steps back a few steps, and then advances again.

Master—Brother, you now discover me as Master of this Lodge, approaching you from the east, under the sign, step, and due-guard of a Master Mason.

The sign is the hailing sign of distress given on page 29. The words accompanying it are, "Is there no help for the widow's son?" As the last words are uttered, you let fall your hands in a manner to indicate solemnity. The due-guard is given by putting the open right hand to the left side of the bowels, the palm of the hand flat, and downwards; then draw it quickly from the left to the right, and let it fall by your side.

After thus instructing the new candidate, the Master approaches him, and taking him by the hand, says:—Brother, in token of a continuation of true brotherly love and esteem, I present you with my right hand, and with it you will receive the pass-grip and word of a Master Mason. Take me as I take you.

The pass-grip is given by pressing the thumb between the joints of the second and third fingers where they join the hand, and the word is TUBAL-CAIN.

As the Master gives the grip, the following dialogue ensues, the Senior Deacon answering for the candidate:

Master—What is that?

Senior Deacon—The pass-grip of a Master Mason.

Master—Has it a name?

Senior Deacon—It has.

Master—Will you give it me?

Senior Deacon—I did not so receive it, neither can I so impart it.

Master—How will you dispose of it?

Senior Deacon—Letter, or syllable it.

Master—Syllable it, and begin.

Senior Deacon—No, you begin.

Master—No, begin you.

Senior Deacon—TU

Master—BAL-

Senior Deacon—CAIN.

Master—TUBAL

Senior Deacon—TUBAL-CAIN.

22 RICHARDSON'S MONITOR OF FREE-MASONRY.

Sign and Due-guard of a Fellow-Craft.

This sign is given by taking hold of the left breast, with the right hand, as though you intended to tear out a piece of it, then draw your hand, with the fingers partly clenched, from the left to the right side, with some quickness, and drop it down by your side.—The due-guard is given by raising the left arm until that part of it between the elbow and shoulder is perfectly horizontal, then raising the rest of the arm in a vertical position, so that that part of the arm below the elbow, and that part above it, forms a square. The two are always given together, and are called the sign and due-guard of a Fellow Craft.

Master—Brother, I now present you with my right hand, in token of brotherly love and confidence, and with it the pass-grip and word of a Fellow Craft Mason.

The pass-grip is given by taking each other by the right hand, as though going to shake hands, and each putting his thumb between the fore and second finger, where they join the hands, and pressing the thumb between the joints.

This is the regular pass-grip of a Fellow Craft Mason, and the name of it is SHIBBOLETH. Its origin is explained hereafter. In some Lodges the word is given in syllables, but usually it is pronounced entire.

The real grip of a Fellow Craft Mason is given by putting the thumb on the joint of the second finger where it joins the hand, and then each one should crook his thumb so he can stick the nail into the joint of the other. The name of the grip is JACHIN.

After the Worshipful Master has given the candidate these grips in due form, he says—Arise, brother Jachin, from a square to a perpendicular; go and salute the Junior and Senior Wardens, and convince them that you have been regularly passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. [The candidate goes and salutes the Wardens with the Fellow Craft sign.]

After saluting the Wardens he is conducted back to the Worshipful Master in the east, who thus addresses him: Brother, I now have the honor of presenting you with a lamb-skin apron, as before, which I hope you will continue to wear with honor to yourself, and satisfaction to the brethren; you will please carry it to the Senior Warden in the West, who will teach you how to wear it as a Fellow Craft Mason.

The candidate goes to the Senior Warden, who ties on his apron, and turns up one corner of the lower end, tucking it under the apron string.

Senior Warden—At the building of King Solomon's Temple, the workmen were distinguished by the manner in which they wore their aprons. Fellow Crafts wore theirs in the manner I have here arranged.

The candidate is again conducted by the Senior Deacon back to the Worshipful Master in the east.

Master—Brother, as you are dressed, it is necessary you should have tools to work with: I will, therefore, present you with the tools of a Fellow Craft Mason. They are the plumb, square and level. The plumb is an instrument made use of by operative Masons to raise perpendiculars; the square, to square their work; and the level, to lay horizontals: but we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to use them for more noble and glorious purposes. The plumb teaches us to walk uprightly, in our several stations, before God and man; squaring our actions by the square of virtue; and remembering that we are traveling on the level of time to that "undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns." I further present you with three precious jewels; their names are Faith, Hope, and Charity; they teach us to have faith in God, hope in immortality, and charity to all mankind. The greatest of these three is Charity; for Faith may be lost in sight, Hope often ends in fruition, but Charity extends beyond the grave, through boundless realms of eternity.

The Senior Deacon now conducts the candidate back to the preparation room.

MOST EXCELLENT MASTER'S DEGREE: THE INITIATION. 61

solemn oath or obligation of a Most Excellent Master Mason, which I assure you, as before, is neither to affect your religion or politics. If you are willing to take it, repeat your name and say after me:

I, John Smith, of my own free will and accord, in presence of Almighty God, and this Lodge of Most Excellent Master Masons, do hereby and hereon, most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, in addition to my former obligations, that I will not give the secrets of Most Excellent Master to any one of an inferior degree, nor to any person in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, and within the body of a just and lawfully constituted Lodge of such; and not unto him nor them whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be, after strict trial and due examination, or lawful information.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will obey all regular signs and summonses handed, sent, or thrown to me from a brother of this degree, or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted Lodge of such; provided it be within the length of my cable-tow.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States; also, that of the Grand Chapter of this State, under which this Lodge is held, and conform to all the by-laws, rules and regulations of this, or any other Lodge of which I may hereafter become a member.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will aid and assist all poor and indigent brethren of this degree, their widows and orphans, wheresoever dispersed around the globe, as far as in my power, without injuring myself or family.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that the secrets of a brother of this degree, given to me in charge as such, and I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secret and inviolable in my breast, as in his own, murder and treason excepted, and the same left to my own free will and choice.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will not wrong this Lodge of Most Excellent Master Masons, nor a brother of this degree, to the value of anything, knowingly, myself, nor suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will dispense light and knowledge to all ignorant and uninformed brethren at all times, as far as is in my power, without material injury to myself or family. To all which I do most solemnly swear, with a fixed and steady purpose of mind in me to keep and perform the same; binding myself under no less penalty than to have my breast torn open, and my heart and vitals taken from thence, and exposed to rot on the dunghill, if ever I violate any part of this, my solemn oath, or obligation, of a Most Excellent Master Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

Master to the candidate—Detach your hands and kiss the book six times. [Candidate obeys.] You will now rise and receive from me the sign, grip and word of a Most Excellent Master Mason.

The sign is given by placing your two hands, one on each breast, the fingers meeting in the centre of the body, and jerking them apart as though you were trying to tear open your breast: it alludes to the penalty of the obligation.

The grip is given by taking each other by the right hand, and clasping them so that each compress the third finger of the other with his thumb. [If one hand is large and the other small, they cannot both give the grip at the same time.] It is called the grip of all grips, because it is said to cover all the preceding grips.

Master (holding candidate by his hand and placing the inside of his right foot to the inside of candidate's right foot) whispers in his ear—RABONI.

Should there be more than one candidate for initiation, the ceremony stops here until the others are advanced thus far, and then they all receive the remainder together.

A noise of shuffling feet is now heard in the Lodge, which is purposely made by some of the members.

Checkmate for Fidel?

Some Cubans believe that a papal visit would endanger the Castro regime; others fear it might give the Communist leader a new propaganda victory. But everyone agrees the Pope's trip would be an important challenge to the Communist government.

By KRISTINA ARRIAGA DE BUCHOLZ

Back in April 1966 Father Miguel Angel Loredo was arrested at his church in San Francisco, Cuba. He was taken to the forced-labor camps on Isla de Pinos and put to work in the quarries. One morning while he was there, the guards pulled him aside—for no reason except that he was a priest—stripped him, and beat him with their bayonets. Unconscious and bleeding from his mouth and nose, he was sent back to prison, where he would spend ten more years.

Thirty years after his arrest, Father Loredo traveled to Rome to witness an audience between Pope John Paul II and the man who was responsible for his torture, Fidel Castro. He was delighted. "I really enjoyed watching Fidel Castro meet with the Pope," he said with relish. "I think this was a great victory for his Holiness," he added. "He's poised to checkmate Fidel."

Others are not so sure. Whether the Church in Cuba is in position to win this chess match is a highly controversial question. The much-publicized audience at the Vatican took place after a long, amply documented history of virulent repression of believers in Cuba. As the Pope accepted Castro's invitation to visit the Communist island in 1997, some Cubans predicted that Castro would control the visit for his own purposes. Indeed, they complained that the Cuban dictator had turned his meeting with Pope John Paul into an opportunity to seduce the West—yet again—into believing that he is prepared to allow democratic change. Other Cubans breathed a little easier, believing and praying that this meeting with the Pope, and the prospect of a papal visit to their island nation, had the power to change Cuba forever.

> "Who provides you with food? Fidel. Who takes care of you? The Revolution."

A history of repression

During his 35-minute private meeting with Castro, during which the two men spoke in Spanish, Pope John Paul reportedly discussed ways to protect the role of the Church and the place of the faithful in Cuban life. A few days later, some results were already evident; 15 priests and 25 nuns were granted visas to move to Cuba, where they will assist the 250 priests already living there, who now serve a population of 4.5 million Cuban Catholics. And in the aftermath of the meeting, Castro told reporters that he had been deeply moved by his session with the Holy Father. In a response to his critics, he added that his Cuban Revolution had never wounded the dignity of a Catholic priest.

Father Loredo laughed out loud when he heard that last statement. Since 1959, Castro has done much more than merely wounding the dignity of Catholic priests. Shortly after he took power, the Jesuit-educated dictator nationalized all private schools (including Catholic schools) and expelled most priests from the country. Many of the clerics who stayed behind were imprisoned—like Father Loredo—or sent to rural provinces. By 1963 the priest population had dropped from 800 to 200; out of 2,500 nuns only 300 remained on the island.

From the outset of his revolution, Castro sought to fill the spiritual void he had created by cleverly providing Cubans with new mottoes. "Inside the

U.S., Islam not in conflict, Clinton says

Tells U.N. that only foe is terrorism

By Barbara Slavin
USA TODAY

President Clinton made an overture Monday toward Muslim nations, saying that terrorism was a global problem and those who view a clash between the West and Islam as inevitable are "terribly wrong."

"False prophets may use and abuse any religion to justify whatever political objectives they have — even cold-blooded murder," Clinton told the U.N. General Assembly. "But that is not our understanding of Islam."

Coming a month after bombings at two U.S. embassies in Africa, which killed more than 250 people and injured 5,500, and the retaliatory U.S. missile strikes in Afghanistan and Sudan, Clinton's speech was seen as a gesture to the wider Muslim world.

Since the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, some political scientists have theorized that the next major geopolitical fault line will be between Muslim and Judeo-Christian societies.

But Clinton, noting that a quarter of the world's population — including 6 million Americans — are Muslim, said the only dividing line was between those who support or practice terror and those who regard it as murder.

Clinton noted that there are 1,200 mosques and Islamic centers in the USA.

"The 6 million Muslims who worship there will tell you there is no inherent clash between Islam and America," Clinton said.

Zalmay Khalilzad of the Rand think tank in Washington called the president's comments at the United Nations "a good idea" after the anti-Muslim anger generated in the USA by the embassy bombs, which U.S. officials blamed on Saudi financier Saudi Osama bin Laden. U.S. retaliation for the attacks, in turn, produced widespread Muslim anger.

By Don Emmert, Agence France-Presse

General Assembly opens: President Clinton, with U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, was among nearly 50 government leaders present.

In recent years, Khalilzad said, there has been a U.S. tendency to replace talk of a communist threat with that of a Muslim one. U.S. policy on issues from terrorism to weapons proliferation have focused on Muslim nations.

Clinton, however, said all nations are victimized by terrorism, including Iran. He cited attacks around the world, from Ireland to the former Yugoslavia to Japan.

Khalilzad said the president's speech also appeared to be directed at Iranian President Mohammed Khatami, who spoke after Clinton.

The Iranian leader also condemned terrorism and called for U.N.-sponsored talks to resolve a long-standing conflict among Muslim rivals in Afghanistan.

Nine Iranians were killed there last month by the dominant Afghan faction, but Khatami said Iran, which has massed nearly 300,000 troops on the border, preferred a diplomatic solution.

British Nationalists Jailed for Criticizing Radical Islam

By Peter J. Huxley-Blythe

At 7 a.m. on Dec. 14, 2004, and long before daylight, four plainclothes detectives woke up British nationalist Nick Griffin and his family at their farm in mid-Wales and arrested him. The leader of the British National Party (BNP) was then taken on a long cross-country journey to a Halifax police station where he was questioned by detectives until his release at 5:30 that afternoon.

RACIAL HATRED?

The charge against Griffin, 45, was that he was suspected of inciting "racial hatred" against the British Muslim community. This arose after the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) had secretly filmed some BNP members and then screened it on television as a "sting" program on July 15 last year. At that time, Griffin is allegrd to have said, among other things, that Islam was a "vicious, wicked faith."

"I was brought here, kept in the cell for a little while and interviewed by two police officers," said Griffin upon his release. "We knew this was going to happen. The Crown Prosecution Service [CPS]—we've Evidence used in his arrest was provided by a BBC film crew which had been secretly filming Griffin and other members of the BNP.

political rival."

And from what has happened it would appear other arrests have been well orchestrated, too.

The day before Griffin was arrested, the founder of the BNP, John Tyndall, 70,' who lives in Hove, in Sussex, was also arrested because of a speech he had made in Lancashire.

WHO'S ALIEN TO BRITAIN?

Some observers believe the reason for Tyndall's arrest was a speech he made in response to Tory leader Michael Howard's claim that the BNP was "alien" to Britain. Tyndall reportedly responded, "the BNP could hardly be as alien to Britain as Mr. Hecht," a reference to the fact that the Romanian family name of Hecht had been anglicized to become Howard in the late 1940s.

As a result of the television program, 12 men were arrested, but six of them were not charged with any offenses.

A Yorkshire police spokesman is reported as saying to the British press that the BBC had given the police 300 hours of film and that "a team of officers had been working 10 hours a day, five days a week" viewing the film material.

Frenchman Jean-Marie le Pen (member of Paris' Grand Orient Lodge) warmly welcomes Masonic brother Nick Griffin, leader of the British National Party (BNP). Jean-Marie le Pen, head of a supposed right-wing populist party in France, is oft criticized in that country's press for what they say are his anti-Semitic views. In fact, by this hand grip and by other clear Masonic gestures he has made publicly, it appears that le Pen is a covert Mason, which would make him more akin to Zionism and its Communist Hegelian philosophy.

ROVE Rhymes With 'Love'?

Karl Rove has earned a lot of nicknames, among them "The Architect," "King Karl" and even "Turd Blossom," as George W. Bush affectionately calls him. But what about Karl Rove, political heartthrob? As a keynote speaker at the Conservative Political Action Committee's annual conference last week in Washington, the newly appointed White House deputy chief of staff attracted an overflow crowd of nearly 1,000 GOP faithful, including hundreds of college students who crammed into the room. At the back of the pack stood Michelle Morrow, 19, applauding wildly and taking pix with her digital camera. "He is my political idol," she said. "I wish I could meet him." She's not alone. To raise money on the campaign trail last year, Rove offered "private briefings." Cost: $4,000 per person, plus another $1,000 if you wanted a picture with the strategist. For the budget-conscious, there's always the ILoveKarlRove.com Web store, which sells, among other things, a $10 thong emblazoned with his photo inside a large pink heart. Rove, who was unavailable for comment, tries to downplay his celebrity. When introduced at CPAC as a fan of Mark Hanna's, President William McKinley's political guru, Rove insisted that he admired McKinley more. "McKinley was the guy in charge, not Hanna," Rove said. "The president reminds me of that all the time."

President Bill Clinton meets in 1995 with Pope John Paul II. The Pope is extending his left hand in a Talmudic attempt to conceal the Masonic grip that is about to occur. Dr. Dennis Cuddy, premier researcher of the global conspiracy and expert on occult symbols, writes: "Some Christians have wondered why Pope John Paul II seemed to use a hand gesture when photographed with Gorbachev in 1989 that was similar to the real grip of the Master Mason (a grip shown in *Duncan s Masonic Ritual and Monitor, 3*d edition, 1976) and Star Trek Spock's 'Vulcan Salute.'" Neal Wilson, president of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists (left) exchanges an indisputable (in my opinion) Masonic handshake with Konstantin Kharchev, the Soviet Union's Chairman of the Ministry of Religious Affairs. The occasion was a socialist-sponsored environmental conclave, called the International Forum for a Non-nuclear World and the Survival of Humanity, February 13-15, 1987. The leadership of the Seventh-day Adventist Church (SDA) is heavily Masonic. Many SDA officials have cooperated with pro-Communist, anti-Christian lobby groups such as Americans United, People For the American Way, the American Civil Liberties Union, and the Jewish ADL. These groups veil their anti-Christian positions with high-sounding goals like "liberty" and "separation of church and state." (Photo and article: Ministry magazine, May/June 1987, p. 7)

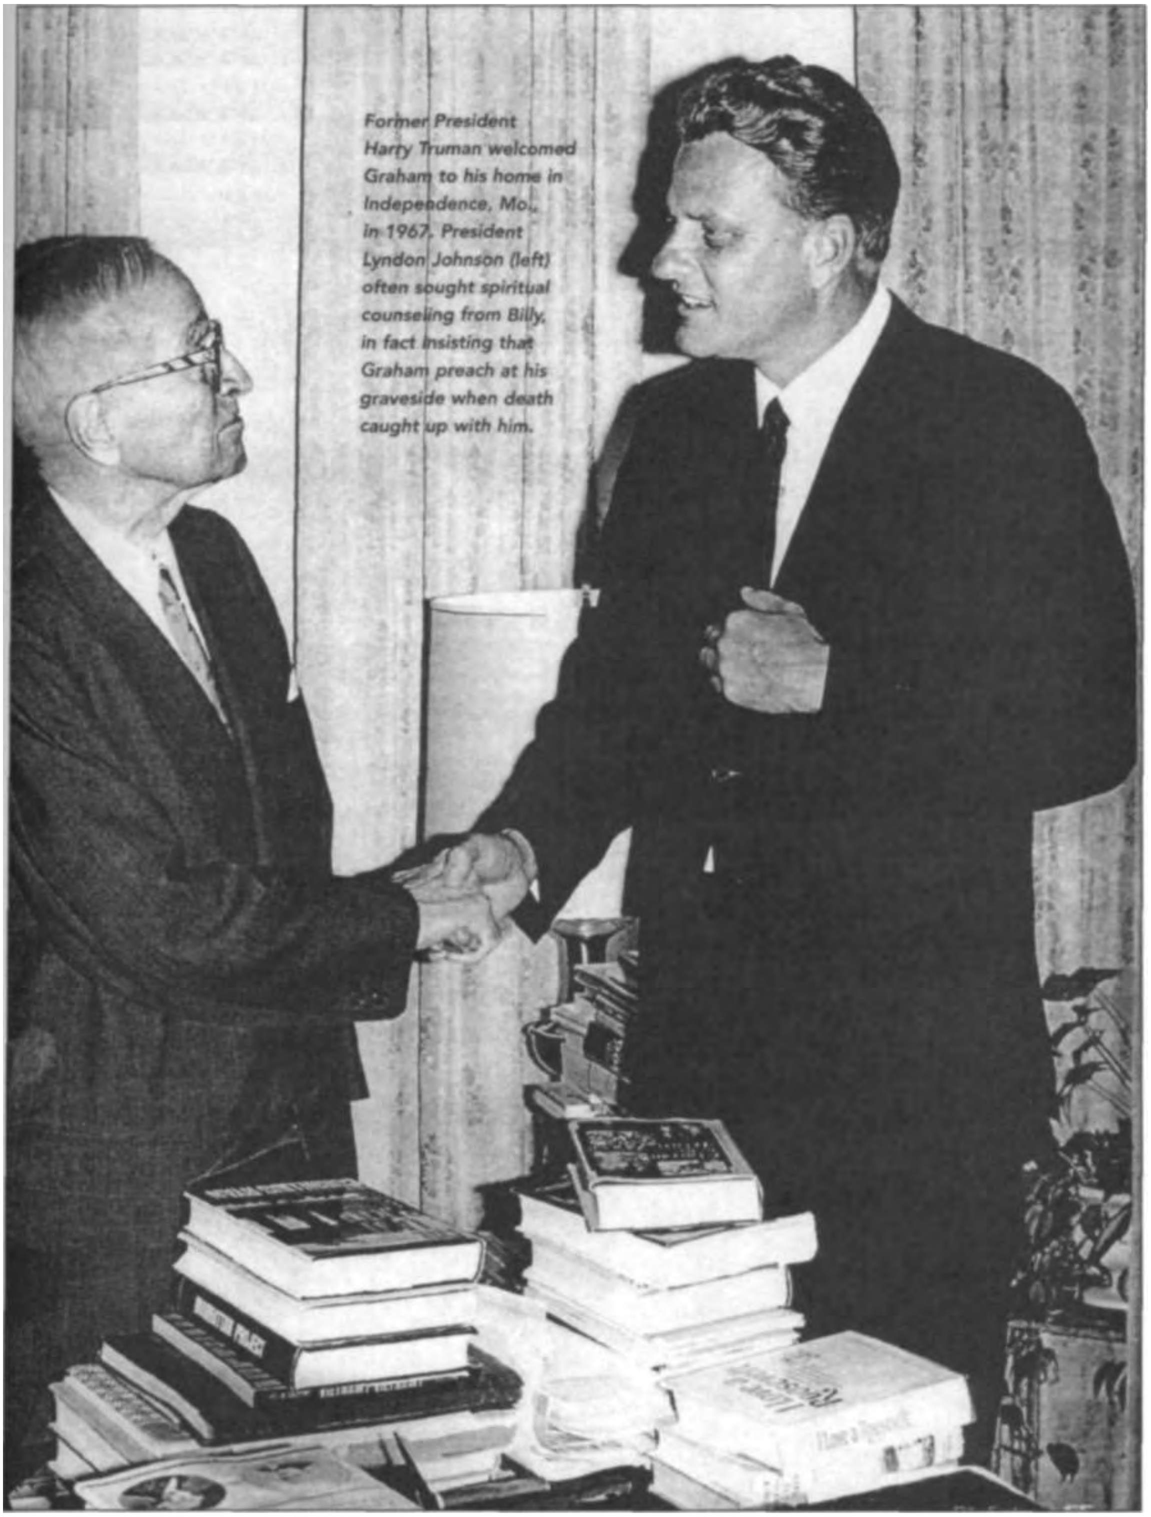
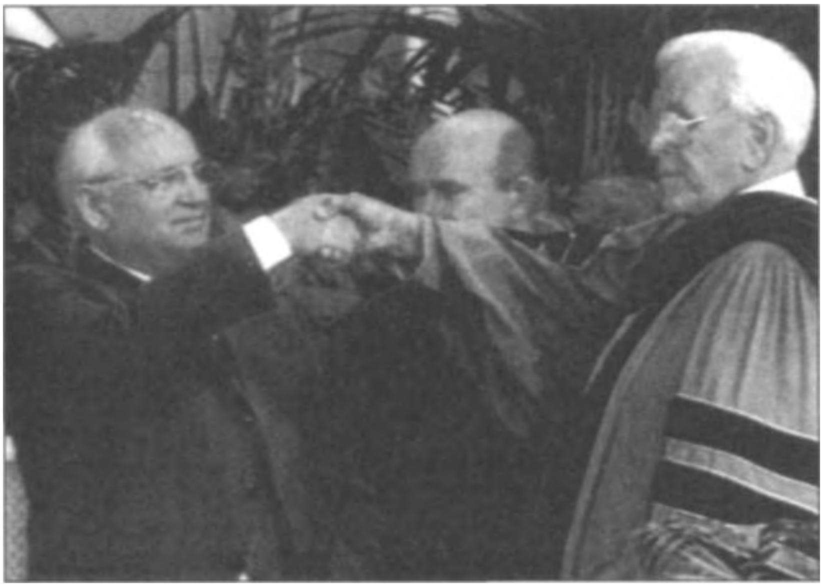
Three world-renowned Christian evangelists were present in 1966 at the House of the Temple, the headquarters of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, in Washington, D.C. The occasion was the elevation of men newly chosen to the elite 33rd degree. The three were Billy Graham, Norman Vincent Peale, and Robert Schuller. Statues of the three Masons have been erected in the courtyard of the Crystal Cathedral in Garden Grove, California.



Former President Harry Truman welcomed Graham to his home in Independence, Mo., in 1967. President Lyndon Johnson (left) often sought spiritual counseling from Billy, in fact insisting that Graham preach at his graveside when death caught up with him.

Evangelist Billy Graham shares an indisputably Masonic handshake with fellow 33rd degree Mason, former President Harry S. Truman. Also, observe Graham's left hand, held in the Masonic position. According to Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia, Truman was elected Grand Master of all Masons in Missouri in 1940. A 33rd degree, Truman's Masonic funeral was the first to ever be televised worldwide.



The Crystal Cathedral's Reverend Robert Schuller, 33rd degree Mason, shares a clearly Masonic handshake with former Soviet Communist Party boss, Mikhail Gorbachev. Gorbachev, an initiate of the Grand Orient Lodge, Paris, France, spoke at Schuller's church.

A rose by any other name is still a rose.

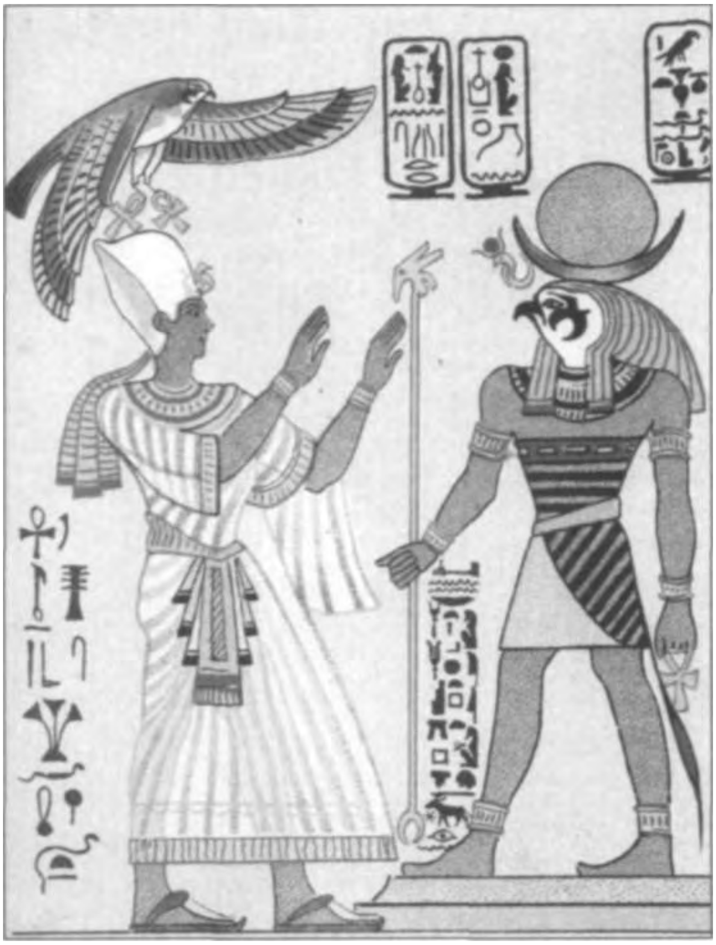
-Old Proverb

In Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, an authoritative reference sourcebook, we are told that in the ritual for the Masonic degree of Most Excellent Master of the Royal Arch Mason, all present are required to give a "Sign of Admiration or Astonishment." It is explained that this sign is similar to that gesture expressed by the illustrious Queen of Sheba on her first viewing the fabulous edifice of Solomon's Temple.[1]

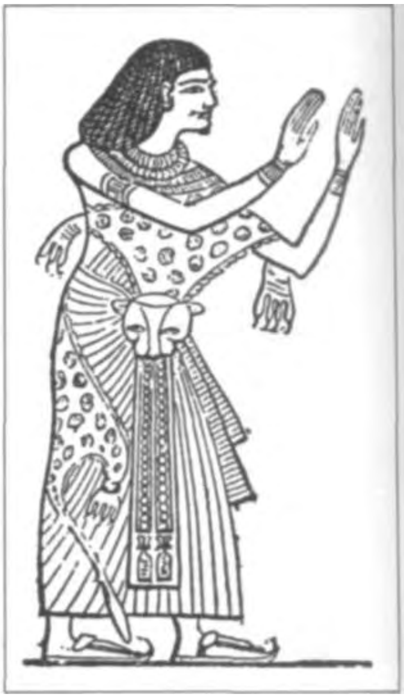
In Duncan's Masonic Monitor and Guide the group present for that same degree ceremony is further told that this sign alludes to "the wonder and admiration of our ancient brethren who were present to view the interior of that magnificent edifice (Solomon's Temple) which King Solomon had erected, and was about to dedicate to the service of the Supreme Being."[2]

The arms raised with the palms of the hands facing forward is a supplicatory gesture, meaning passive acceptance, surrender, or an appeal for mercy. Caesar, in his Gaelic Wars, noted the use of this sign by Gaelic women, who apparently were signaling subjection to, or acceptance of, their Roman conquerors.

A single hand raised with palm outward represents a hand to heaven acknowledging the gifts or help received from extraterrestrial sources. It can also mean invocation, the calling down of powers or energy from the heavens or from ethereal sources (hell). Yet another meaning is that the hand with all five fingers showing, palm outward, indicates that one is giving honor and admiration to the Underworld Deity. Its essential meaning: "Thank you O Subterranean Lord for your deceptive wisdom and for your cunning aid in our struggle to overcome our enemies and to effect the Great Work."



Pharaoh Ramses paying homage to the god Horus, son of Osiris, the sun god deity symbolized as the all-seeing eye in the capstone on the U.S.A.'s dollar bill. Quite possibly, the Masons' Sign of Admiration and Astonishment came from practices of adherents to the old Mystery Religions of Babylon and Egypt. (From book, Other Worlds, Hilary Evans, Readers Digest Books, 1998)



On all occasions when the Egyptian high priest was called to officiate, he wore his robe of office, the spotted leopard's skin. The priest then led the rituals in worship of the "Hidden One," the concealed mystery divinity, known esoterically as Saturn, the sixth planet from the sun. Here we see the priest, attired in leopard's skin, hands upraised, palms outward, exactly as is done in various Masonic, Rosicrucian, witchcraft, Thelemic, and O.T.O. rituals to this day. (Hislop's, The Two Babylons, p. 45)

As we shall see in this chapter of Codex Magica, this sign has been displayed in public media by Presidents, presidential candidates, Prime Ministers, and many other VIPs throughout history including the Emperor of France, the Freemason Napoleon Bonaparte.

Clinton the Devil, President of the U.S.A.

President Bill Clinton was named Time magazine "Man of the Year" in 1993. On the Time cover making the announcement, President Clinton's head was pictured with the "M" in the Time masthead of the magazine stretched and appearing to be two horns on Clinton's head.[3] Were the magazine's editors telling us that Clinton is the devils' man, or was it some strange coincidence?

Even more weird and dramatic, inside that same issue was a photo of Clinton in his Oval Office holding his hands and arms in the Masonic display of the sign of admiration. Now, get this: carved on the President's desk in the Oval Offices directly in front of Clinton is the eagle, in the presidential seal or logo, with its face turned to the left. But on the carpet just in front of the desk one finds the presidential seal facing toward the right: Two eagles, each facing in the opposite direction.

This is clearly the double-headed eagle of Freemasonry, a symbol representing the Serpent, honored as the Sun God in the Mystery Religions with its eagle-like, all-seeing eye. In other words: Lucifer! Solar God of Bill Clinton and the Illuminati.

Meanwhile, in Clinton's left hand (see page 183 of Codex Magica) is a rose —sign of the Illuminati's blood covenant and the Rosicrucian Order. You will also find here a photo of former Yugoslav Serb leader Slobodan Milosevic, likewise holding a rose in his hand, the right hand. In Satanism the left-handed path is the most magical and powerful, but more evil. Clinton (left-hand) is still today recognized by the world as a great leader. Milosevic (right-hand) is in disgrace, in a prison cell, after being felled by Clinton and his Illuminati cohorts, proving that it's not nice to attempt to doublecross your Illuminati overlords, Mr. Milosevic!

In this chapter you will find not only Bill Clinton, Slobodan Milosevic, John Kerry, and others giving enigmatic ritual messages, but, also, we will examine other signs in which the Illuminati signal with the arms and either or both hands.

The Grand Hailing Sign of Distress

One classic Masonic pose, duplicated by or similar to that employed in many other Orders, is the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress. Theoretically, this is used in extreme circumstances in which a Mason or other elitist finds himself in a crisis or in a bind. In such an emergency he gives the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, sometimes called the "High Sign." At that point, brethren who recognize the secret sign of alarm are expected to come to his rescue. Comically, mass murderer Charles Manson was observed giving this sign and a number of others during his trial for conspiracy to commit murder. Reportedly, Manson believed the judge in his case was a 33° Mason and would rescue him. It was all to no avail.

Likewise, Mormon Church founder Joseph Smith gave this sign while under siege of a lynch mob at the Nauvoo, Illinois jail where he had been incarcerated.

Smith knew that the angry mob was comprised mainly of Freemasons because he, too, had been one of them until he was excommunicated. The Masons didn't take too kindly to Masonic Brother Smith's stealing their symbols and ceremonies and incorporating them into his Mormon (LDS) Church rituals.[4]

As Joseph Smith lay dying on the jailhouse floor, he cried out, "Is there no help for the Widow's Son?" This is the enigmatic saying taught Masons, stamping Smith as a follower of the Great Goddess, patroness of the Masonic fraternity. The Bible in Revelation 27 refers to her as "Mystery, Babylon the Great, Mother of Harlots."

John J. Robinson, author of a celebrated book, Born in Blood defending Freemasonry and blasting its critics, also referenced the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress sign taught in the 3° ritual:

> After brief ceremonies, the blindfold is removed, and the newly sworn Master Mason is taught several secrets of that degree. He learns the penal sign, the hand signal based on the penalty of the Master Mason's oath, which is to pass the hand in a slashing motion, palm downward and thumb toward the body, across his stomach. The due-guard of the Master Mason repeats the position of his hands on the Holy Bible and the compass and square as he takes the oath: with his upper arms along his sides, forearms out straight, with palms down.
> To this point, the ceremony is much like that of the first two degrees, but now is added a third sign, the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress of the Master Mason, given with the upper arms parallel to the ground, forearms vertical with hands above the head, palms forward. For those times when the Master Mason is out of sight of possible help, or in the dark, he is taught to summon assistance with the word, "O Lord, my God, is there no help for a Son of the Widow?" a reference to Hiram, legendary master craftsman at the building of the Temple of Solomon, about whom the initiate has yet been told nothing, and whom Masons identify with the metalworker that scripture describes as "a son of a widow of Naphtali."[5]

Note that Robinson makes mention of the "penal sign, the hand signal based on the penalty of the Master Mason's oath." In Codex Magica, you will see several examples of this signal, including a photo of Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin and one of former House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

In his book Freemasonry, Jack Harris, a former Master Mason who renounced the Order after converting to Christianity, quotes at length the ritual according to the State of Maryland's Masonic Manual.[6] That manual assures the Mason that at his death, if his good works are sufficient, "a kind messenger from the Supreme Grand Master will be sent to translate us to that all perfect, glorious and celestial lodge above, where the Supreme Architect of the Universe presides."

According to Harris the ritual continues as follows:

> All officers and members bow toward the East. The Master raps the lodge down (1 rap). Also explained to the brother in the third degree lecture is what he is to do in times of peril or danger. He is instructed (if he can be seen) to throw up both arms over his head and let them fall by three distinct motions. This is the great hailing sign or sign of distress, and never should be given except in a lodge for instruction, or if his life is in danger. If a Mason sees this sign, he is to flee to his rescue if there is more probability of saving the brother's life than of losing his own.

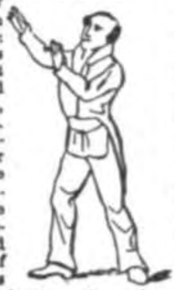
At times when this sign could not be seen, such as in the dark, a spoken signal is substituted: "O Lord, My God, is there no help for the widow's son?" A Mason hearing these words would be equally bound to flee to the brother's rescue if there were more probability of saving his life than losing his own life.[7]

THE INEFFABLE DEGREES: PERFECT MASTER. 135

Master—Before you can be admitted to this privilege, it will be necessary for you to join the funeral procession of Hiram Abiff.

Candidate is then conducted several times round the Lodge, the brethren joining in the procession, and singing a dirge from text-book, after which he passes to the tomb of Hiram Abiff, joined by the Master, (personating King Solomon.)

Master (looking at inscription J. M. B. on the tomb, and making sign of admiration)—It is accomplished and complete.



The brethren now make the same sign of admiration, viz.: raise hands and eyes upward, and then let the arms fall crossed upon the abdomen, looking downwards.

Master and brethren now resume their proper places, while the Master of Ceremonies instructs the candidate how to approach the east, and to take upon himself the obligation in this degree, as follows: by four times four steps from a pair of compasses, extended from an angle of seven to that of sixty degrees. Candidate then takes the obligation, which enjoins secrecy, and to obey the orders and decrees of Council of the Princes of Jerusalem, under penalties in all former degrees, and of being smitten to the earth with a setting maul, &c.

Master (drawing green [illegible] from can-let the right arm fall perpendicularly on the right side. This alludes to the penalty of being smitten down with a maul.

Second sign is that of admiration—Raise the hands and eyes upwards, as in the engraving, then let the hands fall crossed in front, at the same time casting the eyes downwards.

The pass-word is ACCASSIA.

The token is that of a Mark Master, given on the five points of fellowship, [page 42.] Mysterious word, JEVA, pronounced Je-vau.

Master then invests candidate with the jewel and apron of a Perfect Master, and informs him that the jewel should remind him to measure his conduct by the exact rule of equity.

Master then instructs candidate in the history of the degree, as follows:

After the body of Hiram Abiff had been found, Solomon requested Adoniram to make suitable arrangements for his burial. The brethren were ordered to attend with white aprons anc

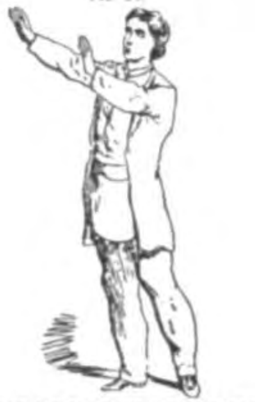
In the ritual for the Perfect Master degree of Freemasonry, the Master of the Lodge and the brethren make the Sign of Admiration, illustrated on page 135 of Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry and described as: "raise hand and eyes upward, and then let the arms fall crossed upon the abdomen looking downwards." The sign may be made with both hands or with either the left or right hand extended only.

212 MOST EXCELLENT MASTER, OR SIXTH DEGREE

The brothers now all join hands as in opening, and while in this attitude the Right Worshipful Master reads the following passage of Scripture, 2 Chron, vii. 1, 4.

FIG. 30.

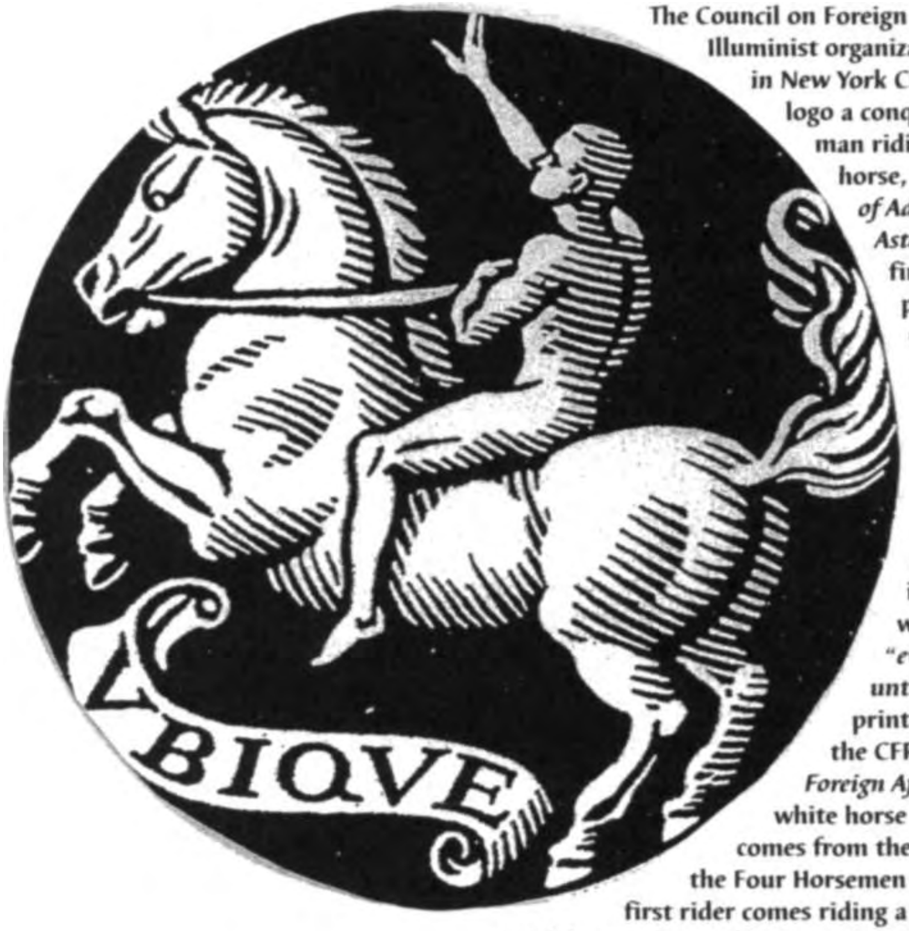


SIGN OF ADMIRATION, OR ASTONISHMENT.

"Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house. And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good (here the Master, who is high-priest of the Chapter, kneels and joins hands with the rest), for his mercy endureth forever."

They all then repeat in concert the words, "For he is good (here one of the brethren, standing behind the candidate, throws a piece of blazing gum-camphor or other combustible matter into the pot of incense standing on the altar, around which the brethren are kneeling), for his mercy endureth forever," six times, each time bowing their heads low toward the floor. The mem-

Sign of Admiration, or Astonishment, as practiced in the sixth degree of Royal Arch Masonry—the Most Excellent Master ritual. During this same ritual, the participants bow their heads low toward the floor exactly six times, balance six times, and then balance six more times. Thus, 6+6+6, or 666. And this happens in the ritual for the 6th degree (Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, p 212-213). It is taught that the sign of Astonishment or Admiration is given in remembrance of the emotion felt by the Masons in the days of King Solomon at the moment they viewed the inner sanctuary of the newly completed Temple of God in Jerusalem.



The Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), an Illuminist organization headquartered in New York City, has as its official logo a conquering, wild, naked, man riding a rampant white horse, while giving the Sign of Admiration and Astonishment. The fingers of the hand are pointed toward the CFR's hidden Master in the Stars, the Prince of the Power of the Air (Lucifer). Notice, too, the black, circular background and the cryptic latin inscription, ubique, which means "everywhere." This logo, until recently, was printed on every issue of the CFR's official publication, Foreign Affairs. The man on a white horse theme, I believe, comes from the Bible's Revelation 6, the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. The first rider comes riding a white horse and proclaims to the world, "Peace," which claim proves to be a monumental lie.

Mikhail Gorbachev, Soviet President and Chairman of the Communist Party, visits the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) in New York City. The presiding head of the organization proudly shows him a copy of the very first edition (1921) of Foreign Affairs, the CFR's official journal which has annotated notes of Vladimir Lenin written by him personally on the margins of some pages. Lenin obviously was a servant of the Illuminati, too. Note that the awed Gorbachev respectfully gives the Illuminist/Masonic Sign of Admiration and Astonishment with his right hand, only this time it is lain on the display case parallel to the "sacred" document to which his focus and devotion is directed.

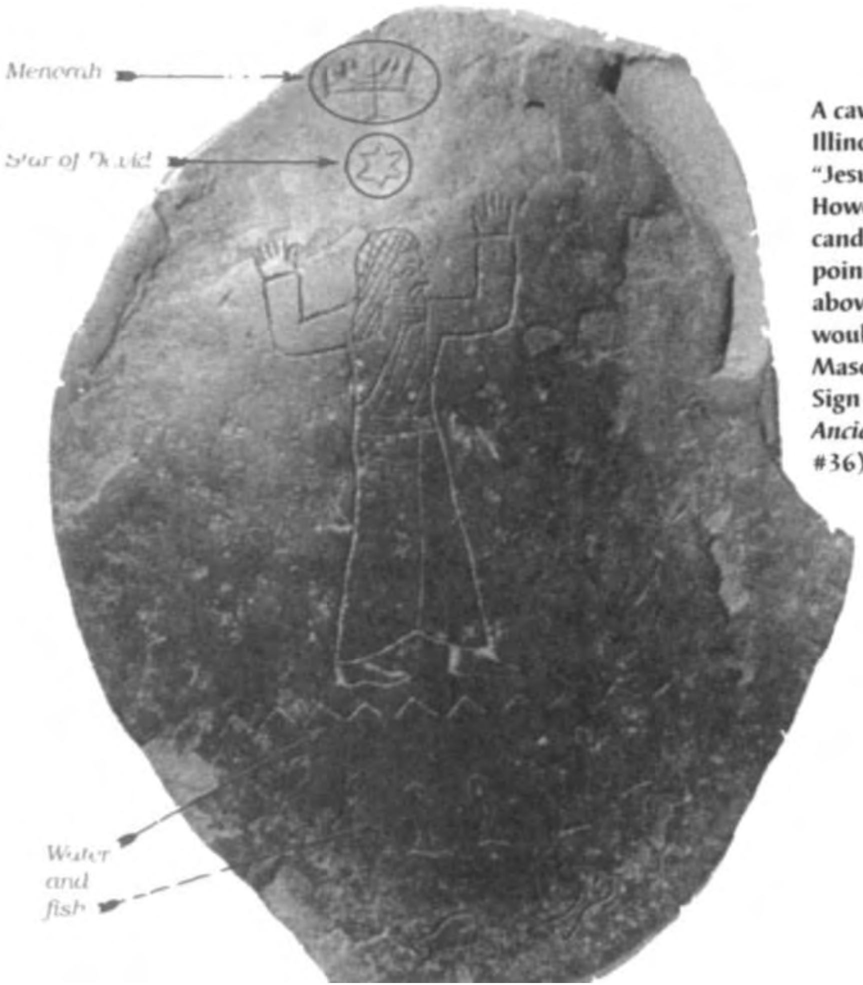
Newly elected President Bill Clinton holds out his arms in the Masonic gesture of admiration and astonishment. Was it just his joy at becoming President, or was Clinton paying homage to the entity represented by the combined double-headed eagle carved on the front of the wood desk and imprinted in the Great Seal logo on the carpet? (From Time magazine, January 4, 1993, p. 29)

Slobodan Milosevic, President of Serbia, holds a rose aloft in his right hand signifying he is an initiate of the Rosicrucian Order. Milosevic failed to carry out the wishes of the Illuminati to the letter. Therefore, in this same issue of Time, he was called "The Butcher of The Balkans" and the "high priest of ethnic cleansing." Later, Milosevic was arrested, thrown in prison, and tried by an international court for supposed "crimes against humanity." (From Time magazine, January 4, 1993, p. 45)

Satanic, muddle-headed rock'n'roller Ozzy Osbourne, who once bit the head off a bat at a rock concert and sometimes led altar calls for the devil, raises his hands at a White House dinner hosted by President George W. Bush and wife, Laura Bush. Osbourne was so happy to be invited, he arrived early. Bush, at the podium, publicly recognized and applauded Ozzy and told him how much Bush's mother, Barbara, enjoyed his albums!

This is Senator John Kerry, arriving in Ohio for a campaign stop while running for President of the United States in 2004. See how Kerry's hands and arms are extended in salute to the sun, as its rays burst through the clouds. A sun worshipper? Strange, unless one understands that it is entirely possible Kerry was giving the Masonic sign of adoration and admiration to the one the scriptures call the "Prince of the power of the air" (e.g. Satan!). Interestingly, neither the caption of the Time magazine (March 15, 2004) photo nor the accompanying article gave any clue or mention at all of why Kerry's arms were outstretched in this position.

In this celebrated painting, The Battle of the Pyramids, by Baron Antoine Jean Gros, Napoleon is shown presenting the Masonic and Rosicrucian sign of astonishment or admiration at the sight of the marvelous sight of the pyramids of Giza. From written historical accounts, we know that the French Emperor did, indeed, experience feelings of amazement and admiration upon viewing the spectacle of the Egyptian pyramids. This particular sign can be accomplished either with the left or the right arm extended and the palm facing toward the object of admiration, or astonishment.



A cave stone found in Illinois seems to depict "Jesus" walking on water. However, why the Jewish candelabra and the six-pointed Star of David above his head? And why would Jesus be giving the Masonic Grand Hailing Sign of Distress? (Photo: Ancient American, Issue #36)

This illustration in Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry (1860) shows the Master Mason giving the "First Sign, or Due Guard" with his hands upright "in the manner of giving the grand hailing sign of distress." Compare this with the image inscribed on the cave stone above.

This goddess statuette was on display in the chambers of Alex Sanders, well-known British warlock (witch) as he led a witchcraft ritual. Witches worship both the goddess and the horned, male god. (Photo: Witchcraft, Magic and the Supernatural, Octopus Books, Hong Kong, 1974)

Instructional material for educators in the Fort Worth, Texas, Independent School District included this drawing of 13 goddess worshippers (13 comprise a witches coven) on a succession of six circle platforms paying homage to the Sun. The illustration originally came from an Italian foundation dedicated to the work of New Age evolutionist and educator Maria Montessori.

In the Babylonian religion, as the initiate entered into the "Mysteries," part of the ritual was the drinking from the cup of the Woman (the Goddess). Here, in this ancient woodcut we find a supplicant kneeling while raising his hands in submissive fashion after just drinking from the cup. The priest (at right) appears to be administering an oath while offering an oblation—perhaps a wafer, piece of bread, or honycomb—with his left hand. (Kittos' Biblical Cyclopedia; reprinted in Alexander Hislop's The Two Babylons, First Edition 1916, American Edition by Loi/eaux Bros., 1916)

"I Gruesomely Swear That I'm On the Square"—More Revealing Signs of Illuminati Cultists

A number of hand signs are used by Illuminist to indicate their allegiance to their Order and to demonstrate their knowledge that to divulge its secrets shall bring gruesome and swift, perhaps fatal retribution.

When President Richard M. Nixon resigned the office of the presidency on August 9,1974, he signaled the Dueguard and Sign of a Royal Arch Mason. As the Nixon audiotapes since released by the Nixon presidential library clearly show, Nixon and his "Prussian Guard," White House Chief of Staff Robert Haldemann and top aide John Erlichman, plotted to thwart the power of the Jewish Illuminati media that poisons the mind of America. They also conspired to overthrow the elaborate FBI and intelligence network historically run behind the scenes by the Jewish-led Illuminati chieftains.

Nixon knew what he was risking. He well knew that John F. Kennedy's murder was orchestrated by the Jewish Illuminati with the backing of Zionist Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson and with the connivance of J. Edgar Hoover's Mafia-infiltrated FBI and the Skull & Bones-run CIA. Nixon had been a close associate of David Rockefeller and had met privately with the Rothschilds a number of times. Nixon also had attended the notorious homoerotic occultic rituals of the Bohemian Club outside San Francisco. Still, as President, he had hoped to mount an offensive against the elite and dislodge them from their position of awesome power in the United States.

Instead, it was Nixon and his entourage who were dislodged, falling from grace and being ousted, even though Nixon's so-called crimes ("Watergate," etc.) were paltry compared to the colossal criminal treachery of predecessors like Wilson and Roosevelt, and successors like Clinton and both Bushes.

Captain William Morgan, in the nineteenth century, suffered a worse fate, being murdered in a Masonic ritual and his disfigured body dumped into a lake. Incensed by this outrage, John Quincy Adams, sixth President of the United States, in his classic exposure of the Masonic murderers (Letters on Freemasonry), minced no bones in declaring the Freemasons as "Luciferian" and as a grave threat to America.

In this section, we examine a few of penal (penalty) signs and also signs given to communicate the message, "on the square," a phrase made common in the American lexicon by its frequent usage by Masons. Along the way, we shall note the Illuminist involvement of such infamous folks as the Russian mystic and master seducer, Grigore Rasputin, former U.S.A. President Jimmy "Peanut" Carter, Cuban strongman Fidel "Odd Fellow" Castro, and Master Mason and Illuminist thug extraordinaire, Joseph Stalin, the half-Jew who massacred some 50-60 million innocents while heading up the Illuminati's experimental Bolshevik regime. And we'll also take a brief look at a hand sign of Illuminist Al Gore, some Confederate officers into Masonic skullduggery, Timothy McVeigh's rancid "F...you" signal, and a few other choice hand poses of elite servants.

> "Masonry ought forever to be abolished. It is wrong—essentially wrong—a seed of evil, which can never produce any good."
> —John Quincy Adams

John Quincy Adams, sixth President of the United States, was a determined opponent of the secret society and fraternity of Freemasonry, the Masonic Lodge. The question of Freemasonry and the controversy over its character has long been debated. But for John Qunicy Adams, writer, poet, faithful husband, patriot, former Ambassador and Secretary of State, and President, there was no question. The teachings and practices of the Lodge, Adams asserted, are detrimental, noxious, and unfortunate. John Quincy Adams was persuaded that the Masonic Lodges were a bane to society, evil, and Luciferian.

This unusual book, Letters on Freemasonry, first published in 1833, is finally back in print. Until now, it was virtually impossible for the general public to obtain a copy. It is now available for $22 postpaid through Power of Prophecy Ministries, 1708 Patterson Road, Austin, Texas 78733, or call toll free: 1-800-234-9673.

Carter's skills can smooth U.S.-Cuban hostilities

We need to listen to former president Jimmy Carter about Cuba ("Cuba opens door to Carter" News, Monday).

If the United States had normalized relations with Cuba 40 years ago instead of acting like a spoiled child who had his hands smacked, we would not have a communist nation 90 miles off 125,000 people to South Florida.

Supreme Court Justice nominee Clarence Thomas, appearing before a U.S. Senate Committee, in 1991, holds his right hand up to take the Oath. But at the same time, Thomas places his left hand and arm in such a fashion as to present the familiar Dueguard of a Fellow Craft sign of Freemasonry.

22 RICHARDSON'S MONITOR OF FREE-MASONRY.

Sign and Due-guard of a Fellow-Craft.

This sign is given by taking hold of the left breast, with the right hand, as though you intended to tear out a piece of it, then draw your hand, with the fingers partly clenched, from the left to the right side, with some quickness, and drop it down by your side.—The due-guard is given by raising the left arm until that part of it between the elbow and shoulder is perfectly horizontal, then raising the rest of the arm in a vertical position, so that that part of the arm below the elbow, and that part above it, forms a square. The two are always given together, and are called the sign and due-guard of a Fellow Craft.

After the Worshipful Master has given the candidate these grips in due form, he says—Arise, brother Jachin, from a square to a perpendicular; go and salute the Junior and Senior Wardens, and convince them that you have been regularly passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. [The candidate goes and salutes the Wardens with the Fellow Craft sign.]

After saluting the Wardens he is conducted back to the Worshipful Master in the east, who thus addresses him: Brother, I now have the honor of presenting you with a lamb-skin apron, as before, which I hope you will continue to wear with honor to yourself, and satisfaction to the brethren; you will please carry it to the Senior Warden in the West, who will teach you how to wear it as a Fellow Craft Mason.

The candidate goes to the Senior Warden, who ties on his apron, and turns up one corner of the lower end, tucking it under the apron string.

DUE GUARD OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Hold out the right hand a little from the body and on a line with the lower button of the vest, the palm being open and turned down-ward; also raise the left arm so as to form a right angle at the elbow, from the shoulder to the elbow being horizontal and fore-arm perpendicular.

SIGN OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Made from the due-guard by dropping the left hand carelessly to the side and at the same time raise the right hand to the left breast, with the palm towards the breast and the fingers a little crooked; then draw the hand smartly across the breast from left to right and let it drop perpendicularly to the side.

SIGN WITHOUT DUE GUARD.—The usual way outside the lodge). Draw the right hand, palm open and fingers a little crooked, smartly across the breast from left to right and drop it carelessly by your side.

PASS GRIP OF A FELLOW CRAFT.—Take each other's hands as in ordinary hand-shaking and press the top of your thumb hard against the space between the first and second knuckles of the right hand. Should the person whose hand you hold be a Fellow Craft, he will return a like pressure on your hand, or else may give you the grip of an Entered Apprentice.

An excerpt, page 107, from the 1826 book Freemasonry Exposed by Captain William Morgan, showing the sign and due-guard of a Fellow Craft Mason. Morgan, a Mason of 30 years standing, renounced the cultic secret fraternity and decided to expose their evildoing. Shortly after his book was published, outraged Masons kidnapped Morgan, then murdered him and mutilated his body in a Masonic death ritual. The murder caused a public uproar which ended in the majority of the members of the wicked secret society across America leaving the Lodge. Morgan's murder even inspired John Quincy Adams, the sixth President of the United States, to write and publish his own expose of Freemasonry. In Adam's book, Letters on Freemasonry, the distinguished former President branded Freemasonry as "Luciferian."

Russian Orthodox priest Grigori Rasputin was not only an occultic Mason, but also engaged in Dionysiac sex orgies and rituals. A cult developed around the hypnotic Rasputin after the monk was said by the Czarina to have healed her young son who suffered from a blood disease. Those jealous of the growing political power of the "Mad Monk Rasputin" eventually had him assassinated. Rasputin is shown here giving the left-handed path version of the penal sign of the Fellow Craft degree of Freemasons.

THE LIGHT OF KRISHNAMURTI

By Gabriele Blackburn

THE LIGHT OF KRISHNAMURTI

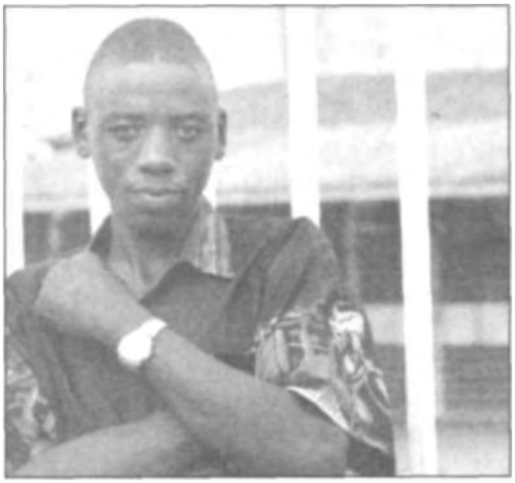
The Light of Krishnamurti relates the many-faceted mystical and spiritual occurrences of J. Krishnamurti as experienced by Gabriele Blackburn, a spiritual healer and clairvoyant. This is the story of the author's life in relationship to these events, their extraordinary meaning, and the profound effect they had on her. In a simple, direct, factual manner, she tells how his friendship, personal interviews, and the understanding of his teachings, helped her to resolve a life crisis, and discover an insightful way of living. This book voices the quality of the clear Light of truth which casts no shadow. It is a personal testimony to the sacred life and teachings of Krishnamurti, that Gold Light of eternity.

An advertisement for a biography of India's Theosophy guru, Krishnamurti. Occultist Annie Besant, who took over as leader of Theosophy after the death of its founder, once touted Krishnamurti as the "Christ of the New Age." The guru's pose here shows he's "on the square" and honors the trifold deity of Illuminist sects.



This man, in 1994, participated in the brutal, genocidal massacre of 3,000 Tutsi tribes people who sought refuge in a church in Rwanda, Africa. In this news article (Austin American-Statesman, April 11, 2004), he says he is repentant and is rehabilitated. The cultic positioning of his arms and clenched fist say otherwise.

Rock star Ozzy Osbourne lets his Masonic friends know he's "on the square" with this hand/arms pose. (USA Today, November 29, 2002, P. 10A)

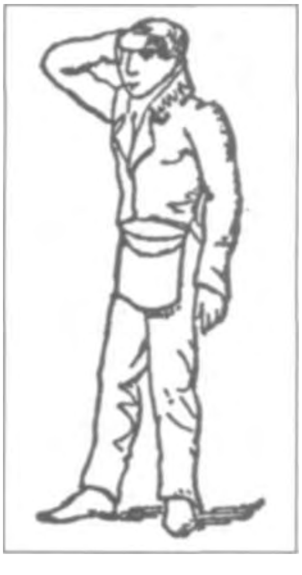
Jewish actor E. G. Marshal who played a crusading lawyer on TV's The Defenders show in the 1960s and starred in many movies, shows that, masonically, he's "on the square."

A somber Richard Nixon, having just resigned the high office of President, waves goodbye from his helicopter, August 9, 1974. Few people, understood that the defeated ex-President was actually signaling the Dueguard and Sign of a Royal Arch Mason (7th degree). The film of this historic event shows Nixon stiffly raising his right hand to his forehead, the hand and arm horizontal, the thumb toward the forehead. He then dropped it perpendicularly by his side, turned and entered the aircraft. This exactly fits the description given of the Royal Arch Duegard and Sign in Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, 3rd Edition, Crown Publishers, p. 251 (see figure 36). According to Masonic teachings, the brother who descends into the "vault" and discovers deep secrets and then reveals them to the profane (that is, to outsiders) or who turns against the Order and/or his Masonic superiors, must be duly punished for his transgressions. He must receive the penalty due him. Richard M. Nixon was favored by the Illuminati, gained access to their innermost secrets, and then threatened to expose them. Swift punishment followed.



The 7th degree sign given by resigning President Nixon, as illustrated in yet another official Masonic scourcebook, Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 79.

JEWISH WORLD 23

JEWISH TIME

A report in Pravda, the official Soviet daily, said 48 years ago last week that a predominantly Jewish group of doctors was arrested for conspiring to kill the Soviet leadership, in collusion with the CIA, the Zionist Organization, and the Joint Distribution Committee. The report touched off a wave of antisemitic attacks, including dismissals from key economic, cultural, and academic posts. It remains unclear where that anti-Jewish effort would have led had Stalin not died six weeks after its publication. Some scholars contend the Soviet dictator was serious about deporting some two million Jews from the western USSR to Siberia. On April 4, 1953, one month after Stalin's death, Pravda conceded that the "doctors' plot" story was fabricated by the KGB. However, Stalin's successors retained – until Mikhail Gorbachev's Glasnost era – the emigration ban which kept Soviet Jewry from m ing to the free world generally, and to Israel in particular.

This photograph of Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin in Pravda (January 20, 1953, reprinted in Jewish World, January 2001, p. 23), the official communist newspaper, shows him clearly signaling the Sign of A Master Mason. Compare Stalin's arm and hand with the illustration of Figure 6, page 18, from Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. (Note: Stalin gives the sign with his left hand, indicating he follows the diabolical "left-handed path of occultism.")

Rudolf Steiner, a Hitler contemporary in Germany, displays the Master's Grip. During the Nazi era, Steiner became world-famous for his Masonic and Rosicrucian based teachings. This picture comes from his book, The Way of Initiation—how to Attain Knowledge of the Higher Worlds, published by Macoy Publishing and Masonic Supply Co., New York City. Steiner also created the teaching system for the Waldorf schools, very popular today in the U.S.A.

and see if the Master's word cannot be found. He searches, and soon reports—No trace of it, my lord!

The Master and brethren all give the grand hailing sign of distress (page 29) and exclaim—O Lord, my God, I fear the Master's word is forever lost!

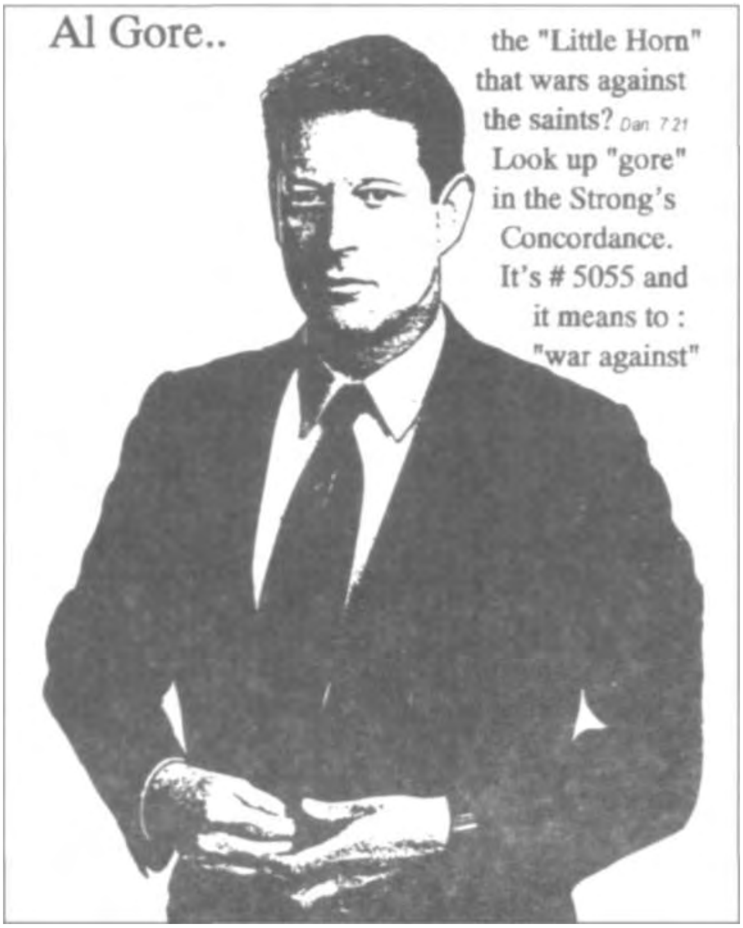
The Master directs that the body be raised by the Entered Apprentice's grip.

A brother takes the candidate by that grip (page 11) and pulls so as to raise him a little, then lets him back and says—My lord, the body cannot be raised by the Entered Apprentice's grip; the skin cleaves from the flesh.

The Master and brethren again give the grand hailing sign of distress and repeat aloud—O Lord, my God, I fear the Master Mason's word is forever lost!

The Master orders another of the twelve to raise the body by the Fellow Craft's grip. He takes hold of the candidate by that grip, pulls him partly up, lets him fall back, and says—My lord, the body cannot be raised by the Fellow Craft's grip; the flesh cleaves from the bone. All again raise their hands, as in the hailing sign of distress, and exclaim,

The Master's grip is given by taking hold of each other's right hand, as though you were going to shake hands, and sticking the nails of each of your fingers into the joint of the other's wrist where it unites with the hand. In this condition the candidate is raised, he keeping his whole body stiff, as though dead. The Master in raising him is assisted by some of the brethren, who take hold of the candidate by the arms and shoulders. As soon as he is raised to his feet they step back, and the Master whispers the word MAH-HAH-BONE in his ear, and causes the candidate to repeat it, telling him at the same time that he must never give it in any manner other than that in which he receives it. He is also told that Mah-hah-bone signifies marrow in the bone.



Former Vice President Al Gore, who ran for the presidency on the Democrat Party ticket in 2000, appears to be in the process of making the Master's Grip of the 3rd degree of Freemasonry, indicating he is, as a minimum, a Master Mason. (Photo: from Exodus III, Volume 2, Number 1) Note: A sign similar to that of the Master's Grip is that of the Most Excellent Master as illustrated on p. 61 of Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry.

solemn oath or obligation of a Most Excellent Master Mason, which I assure you, as before, is neither to affect your religion or politics. If you are willing to take it, repeat your name and say after me:

I, John Smith, of my own free will and accord, in presence of Almighty God, and this Lodge of Most Excellent Master Masons, do hereby and hereon, most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, in addition to my former obligations, that I will not give the secrets of Most Excellent Master to any one of an inferior degree, nor to any person in the known world, except it be to a true and lawful brother of this degree, and within the body of a just and lawfully constituted Lodge of such; and not unto him nor them whom I shall hear so to be, but unto him and them only whom I shall find so to be, after strict trial and due examination, or lawful information.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will obey all regular signs and summonses handed, sent, or thrown to me from a brother of this degree, or from the body of a just and lawfully constituted Lodge of such; provided it be within the length of my cable-tow.

Furthermore do I promise and swear, that I will support the constitution of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States; also, that of the Grand Chapter of this State, under which this Lodge is held, and conform to all the at all times, as far as is in my power, without material injury to myself or family. To all which I do most solemnly swear, with a fixed and steady purpose of mind in me to keep and perform the same; binding myself under no less penalty than to have my breast torn open, and my heart and vitals taken from thence, and exposed to rot on the dunghill, if ever I violate any part of this, my solemn oath, or obligation, of a Most Excellent Master Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same.

Master to the candidate—Detach your hands and kiss the book six times. [Candidate obeys.] You will now rise and receive from me the sign, grip and word of a Most Excellent Master Mason.

The sign is given by placing your two hands, one on each breast, the fingers meeting in the centre of the body, and jerking them apart as though you were trying to tear open your breast: it alludes to the penalty of the obligation.

The grip is given by taking each other by the right hand, and clasping them so

Mormon (LDS) woman gives a sign in a LDS Church ritual ceremony. It is exactly the same as that of Freemasonry, as proven by this excerpt from page 17 of Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, illustrating the sign of an Entered Apprentice. Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon Church, borrowed many of his church's signs, grips, symbols, and rituals from the Masonic Lodge. In fact, Smith was excommunicated by the Masons for having done so. (Photo of Mormon woman is from Mormonism, Masonry and Godhood, by Dr. Cathy Burns, Sharing Publishing, Mt. Carmel, Pennsylvania)

All the Pyramid's Men

The Confederate officer on the left is First Lt. John Oden, of the Tenth Alabama Volunteer Infantry who fought at First Manassas, Chancellorsville and Antietam. where he was seriously wounded. Lying bleeding. Oden used a stick and his own blood to draw masonic symbols on a paper. Then he called out to the Union troops on picket duty to take the paper to any Yankee who was a Freemason.

It was carried to a Union Colonel who was a mason, but not of a high enough degree to comprehend Oden's symbolic message. Another mason, Union Capt. Perry was summoned and he recognized the drawings and announced that a fellow mason was in distress. Four Northern masons crept out to the field, placed the wounded Southerner on a cot and carried him to the field hospital of the 5th New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry where he was treated. When the Union Army moved on, Oden was sent to the private home of a physician to recuperate, rather than to a prisoner of war camp. Lt. Oden survived the War Between the States.

While at first sight, this is a touching story of the brotherhood of Freemasonry, some of the glow dims when we recall that a non-mason, Christian Confederate would have been left to bleed to death. Moreover, if cooperation like this existed between brother masons in the field, one is left to wonder at what degree collusion between Confederate and Union Freemasons of high office and rank, took place behind the scenes.

This photo and accompanying text comes from the book, Secret Societies and Psychological Warfare, by Michael A. Hoffman, II, a book highly recommended by the author of Codex Magica.

And More Revealing Hand Signs...

This photograph in Time magazine (February 14, 2005) pictures an Islamic mob rallying in Karachi, Pakistan. The demonstrators were declaring their support for A. Q. Kahn, called the "Father of the Islamic Nuclear Bomb." What is especially interesting are the many varied hand gestures of the people in the crowd. Intriguing, to say the least.

Environmental activists, members of Greenpeace, show their signs. Several display the so-called "V" sign of the Illuminati. The fellow at top left has his fist clenched in a communist mode. The peace symbol, an upside-down broken cross inside a circle, is painted on the banner behind them. (Photo: The Toronto Star, July 23, 1995, p. F1)

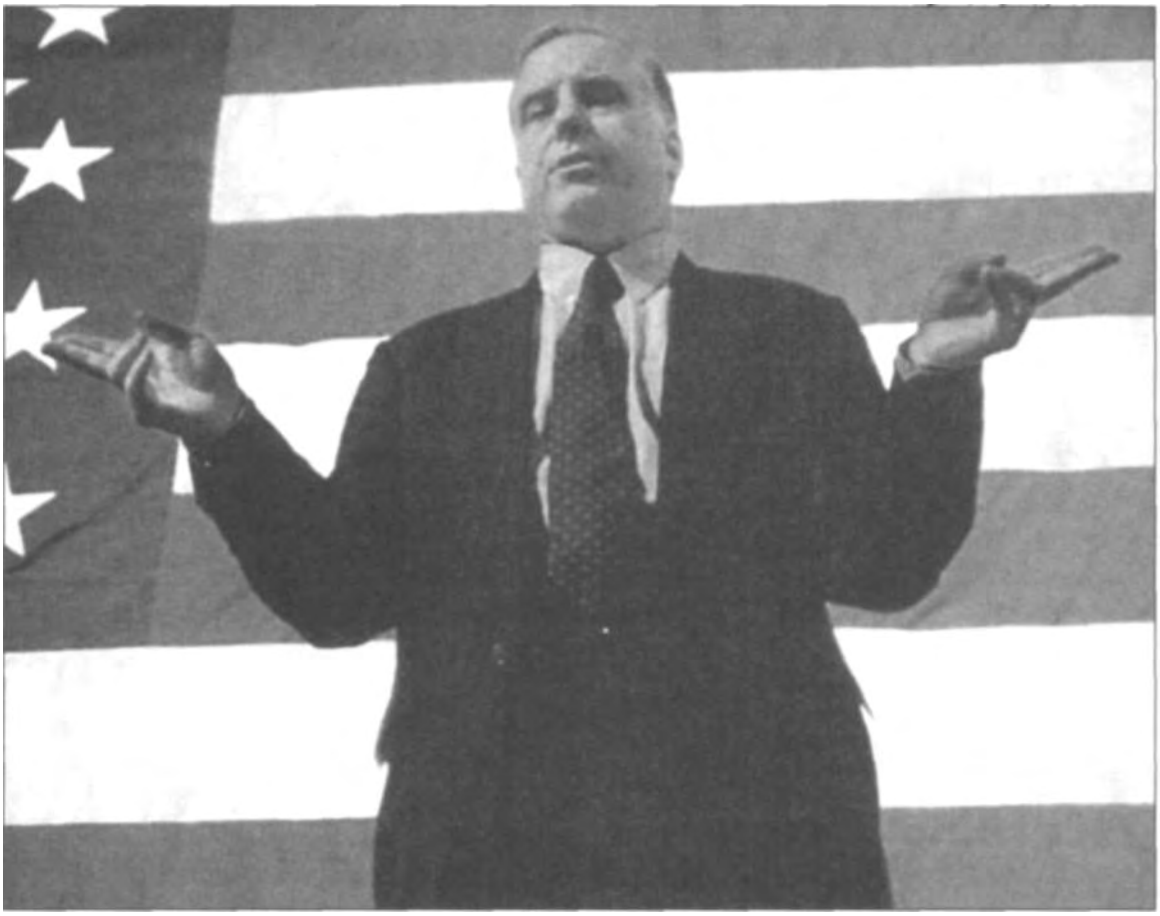
John Meriwether, manager of Wall Street's Long-Term Capital Management hedge fund, lays his left hand on the table as an unusual, but no doubt planned mode. (U.S. Mews and World Report, May 3, 1999, p. 45)

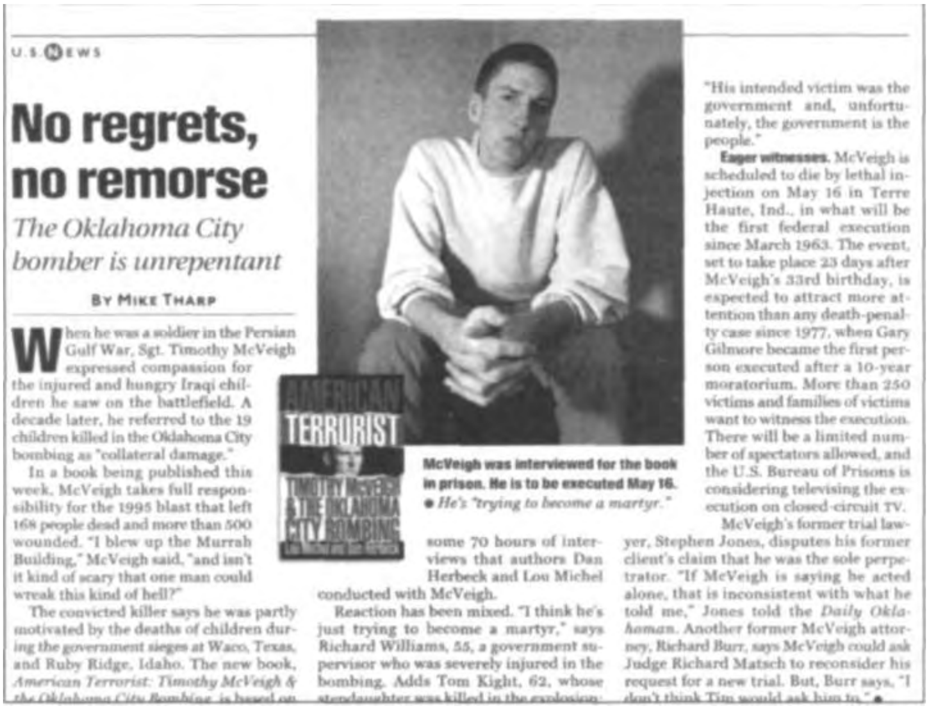
Entertainer, Lyle Lovett, who once was married to actress Julia Roberts, presents an odd hand sign. (Texas Monthly magazine, July 2003, p. 19)

Academy Award winner Meryl Streep, who has been observed giving the Il Cornuto horned devil sign, in this picture in Newsweek (September 26, 1994) looks to be just sitting and relaxing. Actually, Ms. Streep displays a cabalistic pose.



Former Vermont Governor, Howard Dean, Chairman of the Democrat Party's National Committee (DNC), signs with both hands. (Business Week, January 12, 2004, p. 35)

Robert Schuller, pastor of California's Crystal Cathedral, is a 33rd degree Mason. The hand sign he is giving is typical for Schuller.



AMERICAN TERRORIST
TIMOTHY McVEIGH & THE OKLAHOMA CITY BOMBING

U.S. NEWS

No regrets, no remorse

The Oklahoma City bomber is unrepentant

BY MIKE THARP

When he was a soldier in the Persian Gulf War, Sgt. Timothy McVeigh expressed compassion for the injured and hungry Iraqi children he saw on the battlefield. A decade later, he referred to the 19 children killed in the Oklahoma City bombing as "collateral damage."

In a book being published this week, McVeigh takes full responsibility for the 1995 blast that left 168 people dead and more than 500 wounded. "I blew up the Murrah Building," McVeigh said, "and isn't it kind of scary that one man could wreak this kind of hell?"

The convicted killer says he was partly motivated by the deaths of children during the government sieges at Waco, Texas, and Ruby Ridge, Idaho. The new book, American Terrorist: Timothy McVeigh & the Oklahoma City Bombing, is based on some 70 hours of interviews that authors Dan Herbeck and Lou Michel conducted with McVeigh.

Reaction has been mixed. "I think he's just trying to become a martyr," says Richard Williams, 55, a government supervisor who was severely injured in the bombing. Adds Tom Kight, 62, whose stepdaughter was killed in the explosion: "His intended victim was the government and, unfortunately, the government is the people."

Eager witnesses. McVeigh is scheduled to die by lethal injection on May 16 in Terre Haute, Ind., in what will be the first federal execution since March 1963. The event, set to take place 23 days after McVeigh's 33rd birthday, is expected to attract more attention than any death-penalty case since 1977, when Gary Gilmore became the first person executed after a 10-year moratorium. More than 250 victims and families of victims want to witness the execution. There will be a limited number of spectators allowed, and the U.S. Bureau of Prisons is considering televising the execution on closed-circuit TV.

McVeigh's former trial lawyer, Stephen Jones, disputes his former client's claim that he was the sole perpetrator. "If McVeigh is saying he acted alone, that is inconsistent with what he told me," Jones told the Daily Oklahoman. Another former McVeigh attorney, Richard Burr, says McVeigh could ask Judge Richard Matsch to reconsider his request for a new trial. But, Burr says, "I don't think Tim would ask him to." ●

McVeigh was interviewed for the book in prison. He is to be executed May 16.
● He's "trying to become a martyr."

Timothy McVeigh, put to death by lethal injection after conviction of perpetrating the murder of 168 people in 1995 by blowing up a federal building in Oklahoma City, remained an enigmatic personality to the end. But this picture of McVeigh in prison shortly before his execution may be revealing as to the man's character. What at first appears to be just the man's thumb sticking out may actually be the magical sign called the manofigo (a clenched hand or fist, the thumb jutting out). In some secret societies and witchcraft sects the thumb thus symbolizes the phallus inserted as a creative act. In sum, in this posture, McVeigh, realizing it is the final image or one of the last of him that the outside world—his accusers—will probably see, is saying, "F..k you!" The article accompanying the picture of McVeigh would seem to buttress this theory. It is titled, "No Regrets, No Remorse," and says the Oklahoma City bomber is "unrepentant." The angry scowl on Timothy McVeigh's face is also indicative. (Photo: U.S. News & World Report, April 9, 2001)

At left, the magical manofigo or mano in fica hand sign. At right is a second version. Timothy McVeigh's hand sign above is a third version. The mano in fica is of oriental origin. It represents a lingam-yoni (penis-vagina) formed by the thumb protruding between any of the fingers. To early Christians, it was called manus obscenus, the obscene hand.

The vicious Michael Chertoff, son of a Jewish Rabbi, former U.S. Justice Department prosecutor who is active in the anti-Christian group, the ADL, lets the elite see who he is by giving the vulgar and coarse manofigo hand sign. Chertoff is President George W. Bush's Director of Homeland Security. Many believe Chertoff is an Israeli Mossad asset.

"Cross My Heart and Hope to Die"—The Mysterious "X" factor

An X is an ancient symbol for change or transformation.. .long associated in medieval and renaissance art with the coming of the Messiah who shall make all things new.

—Jim Tresner, 33°
Scottish Rite Journal

The Illuminist/Masonic meaning of the X is simply this: It is the sign of Osiris, the great (Egyptian) sun god...

—Texe Marrs
Dark Majesty

The sign, or letter, X, has a long history of use in the Ancient Mystery Religions, in apostate Judaism, in Freemasonry, and in the occult. The Illuminati elite use it to this day to symbolize key phenomena and mark significant events.

The mysterious letter X seems to take on a wide and varied life of its own, with or without the secret aid of the elite sponsorship. Mark Euston, of the Christian Intelligence Resource Network, in a letter to the author, detailed some of the many examples of the use of the letter X. For example, the well-known science fiction TV show, The X Files. Pornographic movies are rated X and the more sensational movies in the raw flesh category are touted as XXX, or triple X. Euston noted that we have the Microsoft Corporation creation of X-box, the movie X-Men, off-brand products are called "Brand X," and of course, there is the U.S. terrorist prison camp, Camp X-Ray at Guantanamo, Cuba. Today's youth have been called Generation X, and a lot of folks are concerned about a planet, or star, reported to be speeding toward us called Planet X that has occult significance.

Euston asks about all the usages of X, "Are these just strange coincidences, some type of mind control trigger, or a subliminal conditioning of some kind?" Good question.

Another friend, Kathy Creek, wrote and asked if I had noticed the many new drugs being released by pharmaceutical firms with either a V, Z, or an X in their name? She mentioned an ad she had seen for Clarinex, an allergy drug that had a little sun sign used to dot the letter "i" in Clarinex.

John Myers, another astute friend interested in such topics, sent me a lengthy letter and included an excerpt from author Edward Waite's reference book, A New Encyclopedia of Freemasonry. Myers wryly observed that, "generally, things that are bad are X-rated." He mentioned, too, the interesting use of the letter X in the Rx of drug stores; the use of the four-letter, abbreviated word Xmas to replace Christmas, and the fact that, in Black's Law Dictionary, it says that the sign or mark of X is sometimes made as a substitute for a man's signature on legal documents.

And the continued use of the mysterious X abounds. Children at play can be heard to say, "Cross my heart and hope to die." In the Greek alphabet, the letter Chi is denoted with the symbol X, and given the numerical designation of 600. The numeroligists say that triple X, then, would yield the number 666.

Black Muslim leaders obviously see X as a substitute name of great spiritual significance. Two well-known Black Muslim leaders have been named Malcolm X and Louis X, names they chose for themselves. The latter, who was born Louis Eugene Wolcott in 1933 in New York City, changed his name to Louis X after his conversion to Islam by Black Muslim leader Elijah Muhammed. Today, he is known as Louis Farrakhan. It is well-known that Farrakhan is a 33° Prince Hall Mason.

X as Symbol for the Sun God

According to Dr. C.J. Koster, head of the Institute for Scripture Research in South Africa, X was the emblem of the Chaldean (Babylonian) sky god. Koster says that X was an ancient symbol of the sun deity and that the letter carried with it sexual connotations. In the old Semitic languages, X represented the cross.[1]

Freemasonry early-on latched onto this letter exactly because of its paranormal significance as a sign of Lucifer, the solar (sun) god. The Masonic Lodge also uses X because of its sexual meanings and its Babylonian origins. Writing in the Scottish Rite Journal, the official journal of the Mother Supreme Council, 33°, Jim Tresner discussed the use of X in the ritual ceremony for the 17°, Knight of the East and West.[2] Tresner, a 33rd degree Mason, emphasized that the 17th degree ritual is "one of the most powerful and profound degrees of the Rite."[3]

"Here," said Tresner, "we encounter raw spiritual energy" and "we begin to glimpse the spiritual power which is available" to the person who is able to access it.[4]

X as Symbol of Transformation

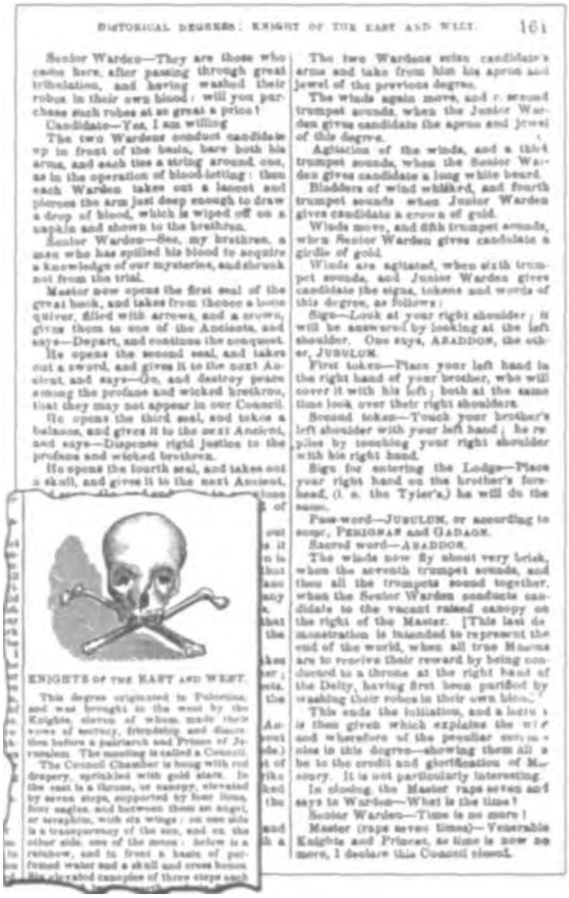
Tresner goes on to suggest that the X, representing the Roman numeral 10, also symbolizes the 10 yuds, or manifestations, of the Jewish Cabala's Tree of Life (the Sephiroth). He notes that the candidate for this degree wears two cordons, one black in color, the other white, which symbolizes the duality of Masonic doctrine.

"The fact that they cross each other," Tresner explains, "suggests the unions of opposites or equilibrium (Ordo Ab Chao)."[5]

"In crossing," says Tresner, "they form an X shape." X, he observes, "is an ancient symbol for transformation."[6]

"This degree," Tresner concludes, "provides a spiritual jolt or jump-start in preparation for the transformation, refinement, and redefinition to come."[7]

Tresner chooses his words very carefully...and very deliberately. But Christians who have studied the book of Revelation will intuit and understand what he is hinting at. I believe he is telling the Masonic candidates that this degree, in which the mark of X is prominent, is to prepare them to wage war against true Christians, and to exalt their Man-King as the events prophesied in Bible prophecy roll forward. Naturally, Tresner would probably deny this meaning, so I leave it to you, dear reader, to discern.



HISTORICAL DEGREES: KNIGHT OF THE EAST AND WEST. 161

Senior Warden—They are those who came here, after passing through great tribulation, and having washed their robes in their own blood: will you purchase such robes at so great a price?

Candidate—Yes, I am willing.

The two Wardens conduct candidate up in front of the basin, bare both his arms, and each ties a string around one, as in the operation of blood-letting: then each Warden takes out a lancet and pierces the arm just deep enough to draw a drop of blood, which is wiped off on a napkin and shown to the brethren.

Senior Warden—See, my brethren, a man who has spilled his blood to acquire a knowledge of our mysteries, and shrunk not from the trial.

Master now opens the first seal of the great book, and takes from thence a bone quiver, filled with arrows, and a crown, gives them to one of the Ancients, and says—Depart, and continue the conquest.

He opens the second seal, and takes out a sword, and gives it to the next Ancient, and says—Go, and destroy peace among the profane and wicked brethren, that they may not appear in our Council.

He opens the third seal, and takes a balance, and gives it to the next Ancient, and says—Dispense rigid justice to the profane and wicked brethren.

He opens the fourth seal, and takes out a skull, and gives it to the next Ancient,

KNIGHTS OF THE EAST AND WEST.

This degree originated in Palestine, and was brought to the west by the Knights, eleven of whom made their vows of secrecy, friendship and discretion before a patriarch and Prince of Jerusalem. The meeting is called a Council.

The Council Chamber is hung with red drapery, sprinkled with gold stars. In the east is a throne, or canopy, elevated by seven steps, supported by four lions, four eagles, and between them an angel, or seraphim, with six wings; on one side is a transparency of the sun, and on the other side, one of the moon; below is a rainbow, and in front a basin of perfumed water and a skull and cross bones. Six elevated canopies of three steps each

The two Wardens seize candidate's arms and take from him his apron and jewel of the previous degree.

The winds again move, and a second trumpet sounds, when the Junior Warden gives candidate the apron and jewel of this degree.

Agitation of the winds, and a third trumpet sounds, when the Senior Warden gives candidate a long white beard.

Bladders of wind whizzed, and fourth trumpet sounds, when Junior Warden gives candidate a crown of gold.

Winds move, and fifth trumpet sounds, when Senior Warden gives candidate a girdle of gold.

Winds are agitated, when sixth trumpet sounds, and Junior Warden gives candidate the signs, tokens and words of this degree, as follows:

Sign—Look at your right shoulder; it will be answered by looking at the left shoulder. One says, ABADDON, the other, JUBULUM.

First token—Place your left hand in the right hand of your brother, who will cover it with his left; both at the same time look over their right shoulders.

Second token—Touch your brother's left shoulder with your left hand; he replies by touching your right shoulder with his right hand.

Sign for entering the Lodge—Place your right hand on the brother's forehead, (i. e. the Tyler's,) he will do the same.

Pass-word—JUBULUM, or according to some, PERIGNAN and GADAON.

Sacred word—ABADDON.

The winds now fly about very brisk, when the seventh trumpet sounds, and then all the trumpets sound together, when the Senior Warden conducts candidate to the vacant raised canopy on the right of the Master. [This last demonstration is intended to represent the end of the world, when all true Masons are to receive their reward by being conducted to a throne at the right hand of the Deity, having first been purified by washing their robes in their own blood.]

This ends the initiation, and a lecture is then given which explains the why and wherefore of the peculiar ceremonies in this degree—showing them all to be to the credit and glorification of Masonry. It is not particularly interesting.

In closing, the Master raps seven and says to Warden—What is the time?

Senior Warden—Time is no more!

Master (raps seven times)—Venerable Knights and Princes, as time is now no more, I declare this Council closed.

Page 158 from Richardson s Monitor of Freemasonry, detailing the ritual ceremony of the Knights of the East and West. In this ritual, the sacred word Abaddon is expressed. Abaddon is a synonym for the name of the Devil who leads millions of demons out of the pit of hell to torment earth in the last days.

However, the Masonic author of the authoritative Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, no doubt lets the cat out of the bag, so to speak, by detailing how, during this ritual ceremony for the Degree of Knight of the East and West, the Sacred Word is given to the assembled members of the Lodge. That sacred word is a shocker: It is Abaddon.

Yes, Abaddon is the Sacred Word for the Masonic Knights of East and West. And the Holy Bible reveals exactly who Abaddon is in Revelation 9:11:

> And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Creek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

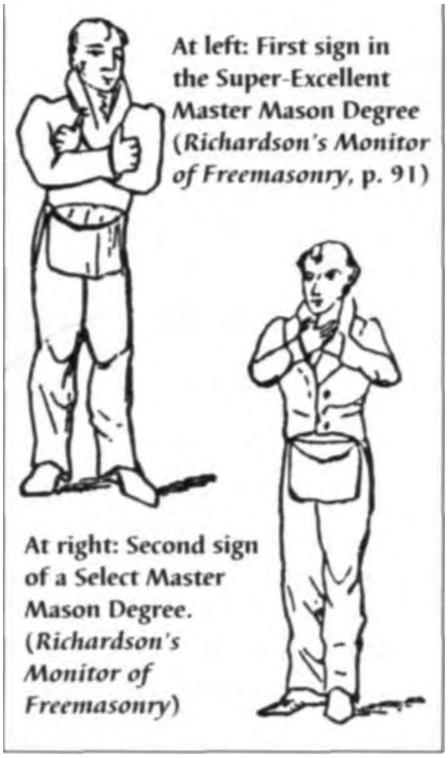
In Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry it is revealed that, following the announcement of the sacred word, Abaddon, the Lodge drama for this fateful degree provides a demonstration "intended to represent the end of the world."[8]



At left: First sign in the Super-Excellent Master Mason Degree (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 91)

At right: Second sign of a Select Master Mason Degree. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry)

How very appropriate. How very telling!

X Symbol in the Masonic Lodge

One thing is for sure: The Masonic Order uses the X not only for the revelatory 17th degree of Knights of East and West, but for others as well. In the Royal Arch's Super-Excellent Master's Degree, the First Sign given is the crossing of the hands over the breast/chest. This sign refers to the penalty assessed if any secrets learned are ever divulged.

Then, in the ritual ceremony for the Select Master Degree, the Second Sign is made by crossing the hands and arms just below the neck and dropping them downward quickly. Again, this is a reminder of the disclosure penalty, which is to have the body butchered and quartered.

In the ritual for the Intimate Secretary Degree, an X pattern is employed. Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry reveals what happens in the Lodge:

> The brethren now fall, each on his right knee, and they cross their hands and hold them up so that the thumb of the right hand touches the left temple, and the left thumb the right temple...[9]

The X as Tumbling Cross and Sex Symbol

In ancient India, the X symbol was equated with the vajra (jewel-phallus). Probably, this is yet another reason why the Masonic Lodge adopted this symbol for many of their ritual activities. Masonry is, in fact, a deviant sex cult.

In her interesting encyclopedia called The Woman's Dictionary of Symbols and Sacred Objects, Barbara Walker calls the symbol the "Cross Saltire" which means literally "tumbling cross" or a cross performing a somersault. In this sense, it is decidedly anti-Christ in nature.

The Church of Scientology, New Age in its beliefs, has as its logo a traditional cross (vertical) integrated with an X, or Cross Saltire. This is understandable since Scientology is unquestionably non-Christian.

Cross Saltire

X as Sign of Death

Finally, as if to signify the somber, ghastly meaning of the letter X in Freemasonry ritual, pomp and circumstance, it should be noted that upon his death, when the departed Mason's body is given a Masonic funeral by the assembled brethren, with his immediate family in attendance, the X again comes into play. The Monitor of the Work, Lectures, and Ceremonies of Ancient Craft Masonry for the Grand Lodge of the State of New York in part describes the ritual and scene prescribed for funerals as follows:

> The funeral honors are given by extending the hands toward the grave with the palms up, the brethren repeating in unison:
> 'To the grave we consign the mortal remains of our deceased brother.'
> The arms are then crossed over the breast, the left above the right, the fingers touching the shoulders...[10]

You'll find among the photos and illustrations in this section one of horror novelist Stephen King seeming to emulate exactly this funeral procedure of crossing the arms (X), the fingers touching the opposite shoulder. Is King, the master of death literature, in fact taking on the image of death, the grim reaper? Does King believe that this publicly displayed ritual act by him confers on the famous novelist the "raw spiritual energy" mentioned by Masonic authority Jim Tresner, 33°?

X—The Egyptian Connection

From what source do the Masons draw for this funeral symbolism of the X? In my book, Dark Majesty, I explain the Egyptian connection:

> In ancient Egypt, the mark of "X" and the symbol of cross-bones in the symbol of an X was very prominent in religious contexts. You can find the X on the walls of a number of ancient Egyptians temples and pyramids...It is the sign of Osiris, the great sun god...
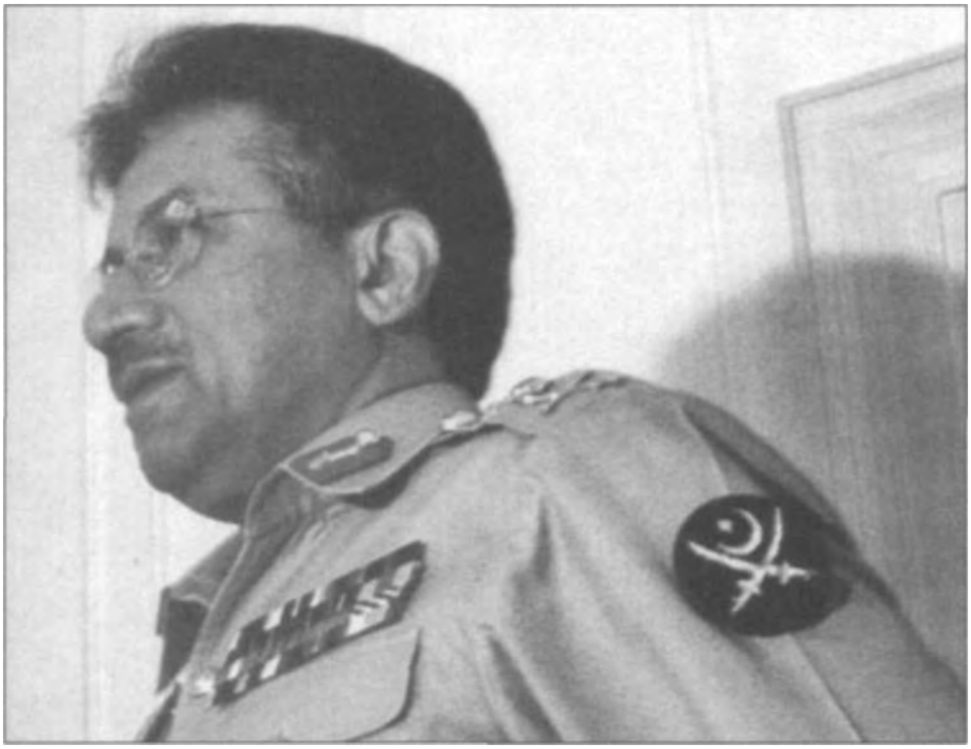
> The ancient pharaohs, when they were buried, had the legs crossed in the form of "X" as a sign of devotion to Osiris."

Today, as in ancient Egypt, Osiris the sun god is worshipped; now the homage and veneration comes from the Masons and their fellow Illuminists. These confused and perverted men mistakenly believe they are illumined (enlightened) by their solar deity, the Great Architect, Jahbuhlun, or Lucifer.

They have even arranged for Osiris' watchful eye, the all-seeing eye, to be pictured on each and every U.S.A. one dollar bill. It is the eye in the capstone surrounded by the rays of the sun announcing to the whole world the coming of a New Age, a New World Order (Novus Ordo Seclorum).

What a grand surprise these wicked men have in store for them when Jesus Christ, Lord of Lords, returns. II Thessalonians 2 says that the opposers of Christ—the leaders of Illuminati and their hordes of rapt followers — shall be utterly destroyed by the brightness of His coming. Until that great and momentous day, the pitiful men of the Illuminati shall continue to wallow with each other in the mire and muck. They will continue communicating the sign of X, the sign of their silly, fanciful god, all the while cursing the darkness rather than lighting a candle. Men blinded for all eternity by their rejection of the True Light.



The arm patch on the military uniform of Pakistan's President, General Pervez Musharraf, tells a number of tales. Against a black, circle background we find the familiar crescent moon and star of Islam (actually, pagan origin, being representative of Diana, the witchcraft "star" and "moon" goddess) as well as the two crossed swords (in the pagan era, a sign of Mars, god of war). It is doubtful Musharraf has any idea of the actual meaning of these symbols.

Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth of Great Britain, has a fortune of some $18 billion—and a crown with an "X" in its centrum. (Majesty magazine, Volume 25, August, 2004)

The "X" Team? In Time magazine (July 14, 2003, p. 79), it was reported that Marvel Comics intended to publish a comic book that featured a resurrected Princess Diana with superpowers. The title of the first edition was to be "Di Another Day." The plot was to have Princess Di and a number of mutant, resurrected from the dead partners gallivant around the world performing feats for the good side fighting evil. Princess Di and her mutant friends would all bear a logo on their chest of a (circle) sun sign with a bold red "X" superimposed on it.

Larry Summers, Secretary of the Treasury in the second term of the Bill Clinton Administration, signals to his associates in the Illuminati elite the strength of their Order. We see first his crossed "X" hand position, the left hand path dominant. Then there is the pillar of strength of Jaquin and Boa/ origins, and finally the black and white checkered "tresrleboard" upon which he stands, the science of polar opposites, the Hegelian dialectic, the high Masonic principle of equilibrium. Summers is currently President of Harvard University.

Madeleine Albright, socialist/communist former Secretary of State under President Bill Clinton, wears the X in gold on a black circle earring. Albright, whose father was once a Communist leader in Czechoslovakia, "discovered" she was Jewish at about the same time a few isolated reports came out on the internet. Jews with Communist backgrounds often hide their ethnic ties to coverup the fact that it was Illuminati Jews—mostly non-Russian Jews at that—who funded, fostered, and ran the Lenin/Stalin Red Terror in Soviet Russia. DONALD E. GRAHAM
AND KATHARINE GRAHAM

Photographed by Annie Leibovitz in the Washington Post newsroom in Washington, D.C., on September 4, 1997.

Donald Graham, 52, is chairman and C.E.O. of the Washington Post Company and publisher of The Washington Post. He was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and received a B.A. from Harvard in 1966.

Graham's first job with the Washington Post Company was as a metro reporter at the paper; he then moved to Newsweek. As chairman and publisher he has remained a friend and advocate of the journalists he employs. During the 1975 pressmen's strike Graham impressed colleagues by working at least two jobs and spending nights on his office couch to get the paper out. The Post missed only one day of publication.

Small, closely held, and thoroughly blue-chip, the Post Company boasts one of the best stock performances of any American media company. Ask shareholder and Graham-family friend Warren Buffett.

Katharine Graham, 80, is chairman of the Washington Post Company Executive Committee. She was born in New York City and received an A.B. from the University of Chicago in 1938.

She is the matriarch of a publishing dynasty worth $1.85 billion, and is one of the world's richest and most influential women. The Post empire includes the newspaper, Newsweek, and six TV stations.

Nixon attorney general John Mitchell warned, "Katie Graham is gonna get her tit caught in a big fat wringer" for printing the story of Mitchell's "secret funds" during the Watergate crisis. She was later presented with a wringer signed by the paper's staff. It remains in her office.

Graham ceded publishing duties to her son in 1979 (she retired as chair of the Post Company board in 1993), but continues to be synonymous with the paper she led to greatness.

four children, including two daughters with Winnie.

Mandela, 78, joined the pro-democratic African National Congress in 1944. He lead the A.N.C.'s nonviolent Defiance Campaign against the Afrikaner-dominated National Party's rule.
In the early 60s, when the A.N.C. was banned, he became a fugitive. For more than a year he eluded authorities, earning the nickname "the Black captured and later sentenced to life imprisonment without parole, for high treason.

When Mandela was released on February 11, 1990, he made a triumphant tour of North America and Europe.
Working with then president F. W. de Klerk (with whom he shared the 1993 Nobel Peace Prize), he brought about the first elections open to all

In these elections he was chosen president of South Africa with

Burbank, California, on August 26, 1997.

Born, Mount Kisco, New York. B.A., Denison University, 1964. Married, Jane Eisner; three children.

Eisner, 55, took the chairman's job at Disney in 1984. At that time, the company was a fading animation and amusement-park business valued at $2 billion. As of last August, the Walt Disney Company's market value was $53 billion. He is commonly referred to as the most powerful man in Hollywood.

Mickey Mouse is the world's most recognized mascot, and Eisner has diversified the Disney brand name and its corporate interests with staggering success. Beyond its TV, film, and amusement-park interests, Disney owns professional hockey and baseball franchises (the Mighty Ducks and the Anaheim Angels), publishing and software businesses, hotels, and a cruise line. The Disney-created town of Celebration, Florida, has been up and running since June 1996.

Disney's 1995 $19 billion acquisition of Capital Cities/ABC gave Eisner a vast platform for reasserting Disney's family-oriented brand identity. The Wonderful World of Disney has returned to ABC's Sunday-evening schedule. Like Walt Disney before him, Eisner introduces the program each week.

Eisner's base salary of $750,000 has remained unchanged for 13 years. What has changed is the value of his stock options, a fortune now estimated at $230 million.

geously curvy Guggenheim Bilbao), Taniguchi's self-effacing building rejects the status of icon, as if to murmur, "Don't mind me—just look at the art." After all, the art is the richest collection of modern masterworks in the world, from Monet's "Water Lilies" to Picasso's "Les Demoiselles d'Avignon" to Andy Warhol's soup cans. Some of MoMA's devout followers believed the museum—the first to create a department of architecture—betrayed its mission by building Taniguchi's scheme rather than something jazzier. But MoMA, 75 years old and hardly a haven for the avant-garde, makes no apology. "It's like having an English suit or an Italian suit," says museum director Glenn Lowry. "Yoshio's building is the English suit—it's not flamboyant but it's perfectly tailored and will be the same in 100 years as it is today."

Taniguchi likes to say his goal is to make the architecture "disappear." And while we don't believe him literally—his ego is fiercely invested in his design principles and his impeccable details—his understated approach at MoMA is to subtly and meticulously create experiences of shifting spaces, light and views as you move through the museum. He started with a homage, restoring the façades of the original 1939 museum by Philip Goodwin and Edward Durell Stone and Philip Johnson's 1964 east wing. He then turned his focus to the famous sculpture garden—"the heart of the museum," he says—and framed it with immaculately cool glass-curtain walls and deep, porchlike overhangs. Then, inside the museum, Taniguchi, in his quiet way, went to town: his new entrance cuts a wide public passage through the city block. From there, you cross a spacious ticket lobby and wham!—you're standing in a gorgeous 110-foot-high atrium, flooded with daylight,

The magazine touted Ginsberg's "genius" and praised him for his "hymn of alienation" during his earlier years—a valueless poem titled "Howl." In fact. Beat poet Allen Ginsberg was a warped, child molester advocate who boosted NAMBLA, the North American Man Boy Love Association. He was a reprobate pedophile, but a hero of Satanists, sadists, and assorted culture freaks, not to mention the Illuminati elite. In the years before his death, they rewarded him with a $1 million payment by Stanford University. In return, the University, a prime center of Illuminist instruction, got Ginsberg's "papers," which reportedly included " 300,000 utility bills, newspaper clippings, paper napkins, concert tickets, and anything else the gay poet chose to save."

Ginsberg is NAMBLA Booster

Pro-Pedophile Poet Paid $1M By Stanford

Stanford University just paid nearly a million dollars for a collection of gay poet Allen Ginsberg's papers and "memorabilia."

What do students get for this hefty expenditure? Among other things, they get a pair of Ginsberg's old tennis shoes. They get snippets of his beard from various trimmings. They get dried-out vines of hallucinogenic plants.

And they get more than 300,000 old utility bills, newspaper clippings, paper napkins, old concert tickets, and anything else the gay poet chose to save.

Conservative critics and alumni have questioned the price paid and the propriety of supporting Ginsberg in view of the fact that he is a long-time member and booster of the North American Man/Boy Love Association, a group of pedophiles that openly advocates sex between adult males and young boys. Most homosexual groups will have nothing to do with them.

Ginsberg writes, "I'm a member of NAMBLA because I love boys... Everybody does who has a little humanity."

Stanford officials denied having received any negative reaction to the purchase, though. "The NAMBLA thing is not an issue," Pete Rapalus of Stanford's media relations office told Campus Report. "The relevance of the acquisition has nothing to do with the [author]'s purported sexuality [emphasis his]," he said.

Critics also note Ginsberg's promotion of illicit drug use. He has been photographed carrying a sign that says, "Pot is a reality kick," and he has spoken with pride about the fact that we now have a president "who dared to put a joint to his lips."

Ginsberg himself acknowledges that Stanford has not been an admirer of his unconventional poetry in the past.

"Stanford was dominated by a very conservative, formalist poetry that very much rebelled against the kind of ecstatic, apocalyptic, William Carlos Williams-based naturalistic poetry we wrote," Ginsberg told the New York Times. "I gave readings for ten years or so, at every university up and down the coast, and the one place that never invited me was Stanford."

Gay poet Alan Ginsburg built the 300,000 piece collection because he believed his life "embodied the struggle for sexual, social and political liberation in the 1950's and 60's."

According to Rapalus, funding for the purchase came from the university's General Operating Budget, which is made up of tuition, grant, gift, endowment and other moneys. Though the school has "been going through cutbacks for years," Rapalus dismissed accusations of wastefulness saying, "This university has spent millions of dollars over the past few years on things that it considers worthwhile, while at the same time cutting its budget."

The three English professors who pushed for the purchase agreed that Stanford was an unlikely home for the collection. "If he came down tomorrow, nine-tenths of the English department wouldn't turn out for him," said Prof. Marjorie Perloff.

Nonetheless, the Stanford librarian who negotiated the deal praised the pedophilic poet, calling him "one of the most important figures in postwar culture, literature and politics."

Symbols galore adorn feminist Gloria Steinem's apartment decor in New York. She's wearing a black outfit with belt with a huge, round sun emblem and, naturally, her handsign is "X." Now 70-years-old, Ms. Steinem, like so many other "chosen ones," is not at all what she seems. The X symbol on the robe worn by Pope John Paul II is telling, as is the silver metal torch with its black flame. Silver is the metallic element of the ancient goddess, which the Pope would recognize in the form of Mary, Mother of Jesus. The X, of course, represents the Father deity. Not the Father God of the Old and New Testament, but of Babylon and Egypt.

Its advocates claim the X design of the old confederate flag (the "stars and bars") is adapted from the ancient and historic Saint Andrew's cross. This is far from certain. The Confederacy was secretly supported by Jesuits, Masons, and Jews (Rothschild interests) all of whom were aware of its true, occultic origins. Moreover, the degree of the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry emphasizes the X- shaped cross of Saint Andrew.

Albert Pike, former Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite, in his book, Morals and Dogma, considered by many Masons to be their "bible" and guide for daily living, has this illustration of an "X," in the form of a crossed gavel and a measuring stick, or rule. Pike explains the illustration by suggesting that Force (the brute power of the people) must be regulated by the elite: "The blind Force of the people is a Force that must be economized, and also managed... It must be regulated by Intellect."

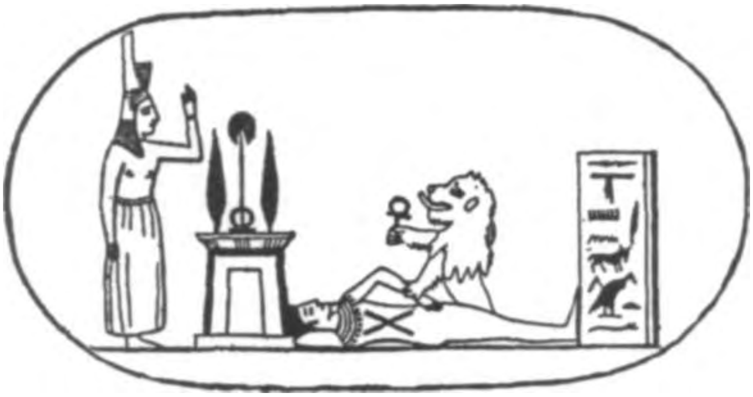
hour; and hence, in several African dialects, as names of the Sun, Airo, Ayero, eer, uiro, ghurrah, and the like. The royal name rendered Pharaoh, was PHRA, that is, Pai-ra, the Sun.

The legend of the contest between Hor-ra and Set, or Set-nu-bi, the same as Bar or Bal, is older than that of the strife between Osiris and Typhon; as old, at least, as the nineteenth dynasty. It is called in the Book of the Dead, "The day of the battle between Horus and Set." The later myth connects itself with Phoenicia and Syria. The body of OSIRIS went ashore at Gebal or Byblos, sixty miles above Tsur. You will not fail to notice that in the name of each murderer of Khurum, that of the Evil God Bal is found.

* * * * * *

Har-oeri was the god of TIME, as well as of Life. The Egyptian legend was that the King of Byblos cut down the tamarisk-tree containing the body of OSIRIS, and made of it a column for his palace. Isis, employed in the palace, obtained possession of the column, took the body out of it, and carried it away. Apuleius describes her as "a beautiful female, over whose divine neck her long thick hair hung in graceful ringlets;" and in the procession female attendants, with ivory combs, seemed to dress and ornament the royal hair of the goddess. The palm-tree, and the lamp in the shape of a boat, appeared in the procession. If the symbol we are speaking of is not a mere modern invention, it is to these things it alludes.



The identity of the legends is also confirmed by this hieroglyphic picture, copied from an ancient Egyptian monument, which may also enlighten you as to the Lion's grip and the Master's gavel.

In his classic Masonic textbook, Morals and Dogma, Scottish Rite legend Albert Pike suggests that "This hieroglyphic picture, copied from an ancient Egyptian monument, may enlighten you as to the Lion's grip and the Master's gavel," two standards of the ritual ceremony for the Master degree. In the picture, the candidate, lying on the floor, is about to be "raised" by the powerful grip of the Lion's paw. The lion is carrying in his right hand the Ankh, symbol of reincarnation, or regeneration. The "X" on the man's chest tells us this is Osiris, the Sun God who was slain but arose from the dead, being pieced back together by his beautiful Queen, Isis.

Q&A

LISA MARIE PRESLEY

Lisa Marie Presley's sophomore album, Now What, is due April 5.

You're rich and the daughter of a pop star. How come you didn't turn out like Nicole Richie? My mom, myself and Scientology. With reality shows like [Richie's], it's so easy to become a celebrity now, isn't it? It doesn't take much work.

It didn't take much work for you. When you made your first record, you were immediately booked on Letterman. Yeah, and my first live performance was on Good Morning America. I skidded through it. I had no chops yet.

Do you have chops now? I have my moments. Don't expect perfection. The way it all happened for me, perfection isn't in the cards.

Was this album easier to make than the first? There wasn't as much pressure. With the first one, nobody really knew me. I had to answer for myself.

Do you think about your dad before you go onstage? I can't say I think about him. Usually I just have terror stomach, which I know he had. I do the deep breathing and the pacing he did.

How often do you go back to Graceland? A few times a year. It's a beautiful, sad place for me. I still have family there. We have Christmas dinner at the house. I find it my responsibility to still go there and inject some life into it.

Are you what your daddy would call a Hard Headed Woman? Not at all. That's someone who's stubborn. I'm rebellious.

Your single Dirty Laundry, a 1980s Don Henley song, is about the bloodthirsty media. Explain. I thought that song was more relevant now than ever. Our entertainment now—the reality-show thing—is about watching the demise, humiliation and darkest hour of others.

Have you been asked to be a witness in the Michael Jackson trial? That's too much of a hot stove. There's a trial going on, so I can't say a word, and I'm pretty happy about that.

That Ravenous Dark Bird—Sublime Mysteries of the Illuminati's Double-Headed Eagle

And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

Two heads are better than one, except when they're on the body of only one eagle.

— Texe Marrs

Can the body of one bird have two heads? Is such a notion insane? I believe so. Insanity can be described as a demented man's firm belief that two totally contradictory and opposite things are nevertheless one and the same. If a man simultaneously embraces two competing, mutually exclusive ideas or philosophies, he can properly be deemed "out of his mind," or insane. If, for example, he is convinced that an apple is a bird or that the color black is actually white, then he is insane.

But the Illuminati do not agree. Their whole insane doctrine is based on the supposition that black is white, that good is evil, that two plus two equals five. They are men of insane minds. And they have developed an equally insane "scientific" system, designed to reprogram and recreate social material and spiritual reality to fit their perverted, upside down theology.

Universal Motion: Alchemy and Magic

Their scientific system, actually a form of witchcraft, is based on alchemy and magic. Its process is one of Universal Motion, designed to purposely foment diabolical chaos so that order may come out of two dynamic competing forces, Ordo Ah Chao. Their objective is the Great Work, the changing of man created in God's image into the image of a serpent-being void of morality and void of righteous, just values. In other words, the Great Work is designed to create and produce a race of soul-less satanic creatures.

To effect their Great Work, to transform and transmutate the world and humanity into the "new soul-less creature," heaven and earth must be destroyed, crushed, and thoroughly converted into a new paradigm. In essence, heaven and earth are to become hell. The will of Satan shall be done on Earth as it is in hell. This is the exalted, "Royal Secret." It is the Illuminati's core doctrine, their cardinal teaching, that out of bloody, universal chaos will ultimately come equilibrium and the Holy Empire of the Illuminati, to be ruled by their cabalistic Messiah, or King—actually the Antichrist. Pike revealed this ultimate objective to subordinate Illuminists on page 861 of his celebrated textbook, Morals and Dogma:

> The Royal Secret, of which you are a Prince, if you are a true adept...is that which the Sohar (an occultic and cabalistic text) terms The Mystery of the Balance. It is the Secret of the Universal Equilibrium...Such, my Brother, is the True Word of a Master Mason; such is the true Royal Secret, which makes possible, and shall at length make real, the Holy Empire of true Masonic Brotherhood.[1]

Ruining God's Creation

Ezekiel 28 tells us that, as first created by God, Lucifer was a beautiful creature, one of the most lovely in Heaven. His body was not of flesh but was made up of actual gems and jewels. Even more fantastic, musical instruments were incorporated into his being. A beauty to behold.

But then the deceitful Lucifer rebelled, taking down with him one third of the angels. He and they apparently became vile creatures, ugly and deformed, appearing in grotesque forms appropriate to their mental and spiritual deformities.

> How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, 1 will exalt my throne above the stars of God...I will ascend above > the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit. (Isaiah 14:12-15)

The Bible says that the angry and furious fallen Lucifer now walks to and fro in the earth like a lion seeking whom he might devour. His aim is to ruin God's creation, to bastardize and corrupt it, to change it into what he is—a monumentally ugly and warped creation, totally opposite of what God intended. Man and the world must be ruined, destroyed, transformed into a barren, non-producing, hideously shaped wasteland.

Men are to be made feminine; women masculine. Marriage is to be perverted. No longer between man and woman, it shall be used also to join men with men and women to women. Abortion—the reckless slaughter of innocents—is to be applauded. Sex is to become rife with perversion. Children are given over to the terrible passions of lustful pedophiles. Spiritual values are converted to material desires. False gods are exalted. False Bibles are invented. Murder and assassination become religious goals.

The Christian seeks as his life goal to become more and more like Jesus. But man and the world are progressively becoming more like Satan and his dark angels— more corrupt and evil every day, in every way. Evolution, oddly, becomes fact, except that man isn't evolving from apes, he is becoming an ape. He is transferred into base animal, devoid of God's values, without the mind of Christ, but instead filled with instincts and ambitions of pride, lust, murder, and envy.

As Above, So Below

This, then, is the end-goal of Illuminism: To destroy earth, debase civilization, end pure spirituality, induce chaos on earth, and bring order according to Satan's Illuminati script. Earth is to be hell and hell on earth: As Above, So Below.

This is the meaning of the double-headed Eagle; the androgynous joining of man and woman; the mixing of the yin and yang; the checkerboard, black and white floors of the Masonic Lodges; the mirror images of the Rosicrucians; the sulphurous tale of Beauty and the Beast; the witches parable of the lovely lady vs. the crone on her broom; the Druid/Satanic/Catholic alternating of black and white priest vestments; the front and obverse (hidden) sides of the Great Seal of the United States; the reversing of the cross and the reading of the Lord's Prayer backwards in satanic worship, ad naseum.

All fields, all things, must be reversed. Negative must be transmuted into positive. Bad will be good. Black shall be white. The ugly shall be adjudged beautiful and the beautiful is to be spoiled, scarred, and made repugnant and revolting. God shall be debased and Satan exalted.

Illuminism, therefore, is a system of dualism (thesis and antithesis) which cyclically repeats as synthesis results. Then, the conflicting forces of the duality cycle clash again, with synthesis being achieved once more. Always the synthesis, the temporary solution or form, is unfrozen, the process of two competing forces re-ignited, and the cycle is continued.

Chaos begets order, but chaos ensues again, followed by order, and so on. The conflict of opposites leads finally to system equilibrium which is disturbed once again by renewed conflict, and a new, temporary stage of equilibrium is achieved. Ever upward, evolving until perfection. So, the Illuminist is a perfectionist ever changing, seeking more light as he travels down that yellow brick road to tomorrow. As Bill and Hillary Clinton's favorite song intoned, "Don't stop thinking about tomorrow."

THE DOUBLE HEADED EAGLE — THE SUPREME SYMBOL

Manly P. Hall, 33°, the 20th Century's most revered Masonic scholar, titled this "The Double-Headed Eagle, The Supreme Symbol," in his classic book, The Secret Teachings of All Ages.

"Everything must change," was the slogan of the Illuminists who sparked the French Revolution.[2]

The Illuminists ruling America give us two political parties, Democrat and Republican (thesis and antithesis), both of which they control. But the conflict of these two opposites never leads to a real solution, only to a fluid, sketchy, "synthesis." Problems are never completely and satisfactorily resolved. The dualistic process is never ending. We are all citizens of "Neverneverland," and we don't even know it.

The Third Side to Every Issue

Here's how one Illuminist philosopher, satanic priest Anton LaVey, explained it:

> There are not always 'two sides to every issue.' That statement is a ridiculous slogan invoked by vested interests...
> In matters of significant concern, there is invariably another alternative: a THIRD SIDE, a satanic side.
> 'Two sides of the same coin' is what most major issues are artfully constructed to be. Subsequently, the populace lives by imperceptible Hobson's choices masquerading as opposing opinions.
> The two uppermost points of the inverted pentagram of Satan represent the dualistic nature of all things, as all things are naturally perceived. Man has always been motivated and controlled by whatever dualistic concept is in fashion, and always will be. Like it or not, it's the way things really are. Shades of gray only appear between established opposites.[3]

The Rosicrucian Orders and the Masonic Lodge incessantly teach this duality of all things in their rituals and lectures. In the book, The Rose Cross and the Goddess, Masonic advocate, Gareth Knight, speaks of this "dual polarity." In Masonic symbolism, Knight observes, this duality is expressed by the square and compass.[4]

One of the highest degree rituals in Scottish Rite Freemasonry is that which honors the Emperors of the East and West. It is symbolized, among other things, by the Masonic double-headed eagle. Two heads, one body. Again: duality.

The Universal Serpent Force

Albert Pike, the former Sovereign Grand Commander whose writings are so honored and venerated that Pike's body has been entombed in the Scottish Rite's international headquarters, The House of the Temple, in Washington, DC, taught that out of the ongoing universal motion of the conflict of opposites, a potent and magical force could be created or energized, so powerful that "a single man, who could possess himself of it, and should know how to direct it, could revolutionize and change the face of the world." In Morals and Dogma, he emphasizes:

> This force was known to the ancients. It is a universal agent, whose Supreme law is equilibrium...it was adored in the secret rites of the Sabbat or the Temple under the hieroglyphic figure of Baphomet or the hermaphroditic goat of Mendes...
> There is a Life-Principle of the world, a universal agent, wherein are two natures and a double current...It is the body of the Holy Spirit, the Universal Agent, the Serpent devouring his own tail...Force attracts force...[5]

The Jewish cabalists speak in mysterious, guarded terms of this same potent Force. They say it is produced from the uniting of the two triangles, male and female, in the sex act, releasing the generative energy of creation. The result symbolized is, of course, the Jewish Star of David, known as the Seal, or symbol, of Solomon or simply as the Six-Pointed Star. The cabalists say this Star represents the combined energy of good and evil becoming one Force; it represents the "white Jehovah and the black Jehovah." It is the epitome of the "As Above, So Below" doctrine. As LaVey put it, it represents "THE THIRD WAY."

To the Illuminati, nothing is static, everything is deceit; the Force is dynamic, ever-changing, the quicksand of light that diffuses and reappears only to disappear again. Dark is Light and Light is Dark and no one can divine a difference. Satan is therefore God and God is Satan, and the Serpent chases its own tail. Forever.

The Invisible Light

This is all insanity, of course, but to the Illuminist it is Reason. Thus, Francis Adams Moore, in the Lucis Trust publication, The Beacon, wrote an article entitled '"The Invisible Sun." In it, Moore speaks of "The Ageless Wisdom":

> The Ageless Wisdom teaches that this darkness out of which visible Light came, is actually the pure Light —the Light that is so brilliant, radiant, and transcendent it appears as darkness to the form world.[6]

To Moore, what we perceive as darkness is actually invisible Light. In all creation, he says, light and darkness are mixed and "their equilibrium is the mystery of mysteries."[7]

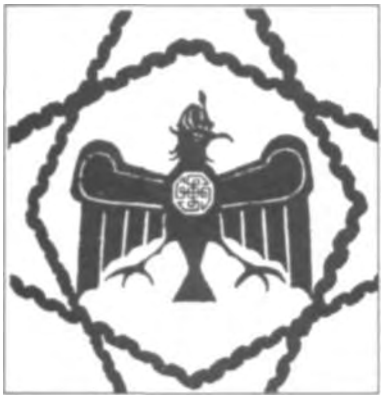
Once again we see the Illuminists' insane doctrine of duality. The bisexual is preferred, bad is good, and so on. Duality and synthesis, and more duality and synthesis, in never-ending incarnations of confusing light and shadow cycles of unreality blended with reality.

No wonder the Holy Bible says, "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." (James 1:8)

Yin and Yang

The satanic, Illuminist doctrine of duality is seen in the concept of yin and yang. These are the two opposites, one light and one dark, yet complementary and co-dependent. The two influences are said to be constantly influencing one another. They represent alchemical polarities, or dialectical opposites. Witchcraft can appreciate the yin and the yang and the Illuminist doctrine of "As Above, So Below." Paul Huston, in Mastering Witchcraft, explains the witches' parallel concept of Gnostic duality:

> In the beginning the Great Darkness, Diana, divided herself into two equal and opposite forces, night and day. The night was ruled over by Diana herself as the moon, the day by her alter ego and brother, Lucifer, the Sun.[8]



Detail from a Moslem coat-of-arms shows heraldic eagle bearing Sufi octagonal calligraphic motto on its breast. (From the book, A History of Secret Societies, by Arkon Daraul, Citadel Press, Secaucus, New Jersey, 1961)

The Eagle is the Sun

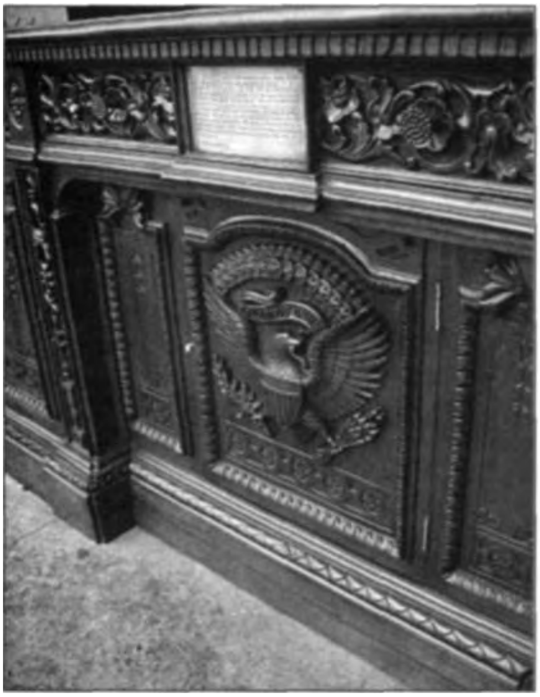
The Herder Dictionary of Symbols notes that the eagle has long been a symbol of power, endurance, and heavenward flight. It also symbolizes the sun (and the sun god) and spiritual majesty. Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia says that, "to the pagans, the eagle was an emblem of Jupiter, and with the Druids it was a symbol of their supreme god."

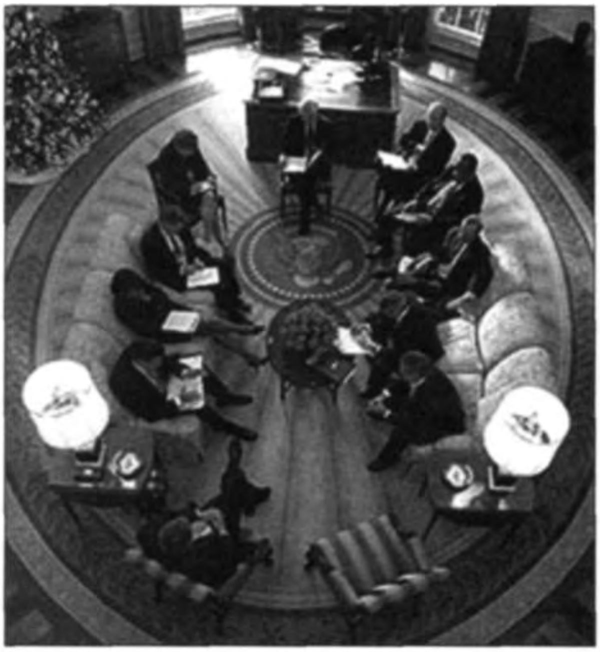
The eagle appears in the insignia of many nations, including ancient Rome, Nazi and modern-day Germany, Czarist Russia, and the United States of America. The Rothschilds adopted the double-headed eagle as the logo of the Rothschild Family Dynasty. The eagle is also represented in the Great Seal of the U.S.A. and it is revered as a holy sign by Sufi Moslems.

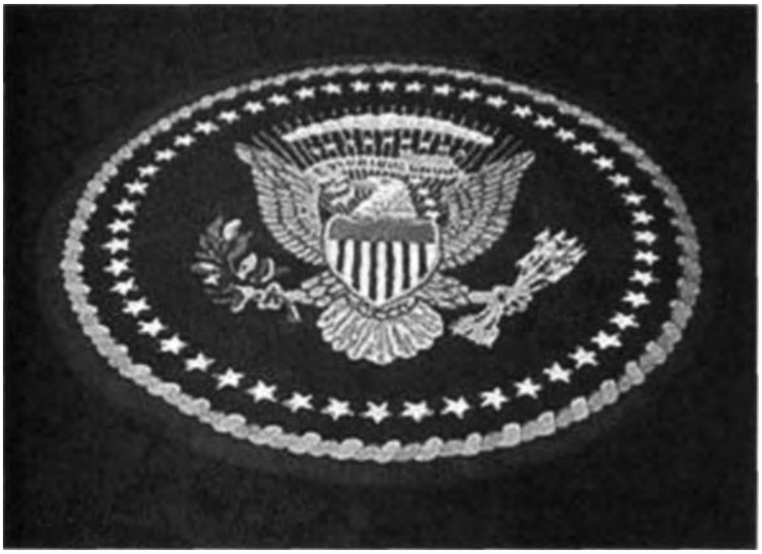
The Oval Office and The Eagle in the Great Seal

In Tlxe Wall Street Journal, former presidential speechwriter and now political commentator Peggy Noonan reported on an interview she had with President George W. Bush in the White House.[9] As she sat before him, a friendly Chief Executive Bush brought up the topic of the eagle symbol so prominently displayed in the Oval Office.

> The President noted the carved American eagle on the front of his antique desk, the one used by Ronald Reagan, John F. Kennedy, and Bill Clinton. The head of the eagle, he notes, is turned toward the arrows it holds in its talon. But look here, he says, at the American eagle in the presidential seal on the rug: The head is turned away and toward the olive branches he holds in his other talon. "Harry Truman changed it," he says. "He wanted America looking toward peace."[10]







These three pictures reveal a mystery. Top left is the President's classic oak desk in the Oval Office. This desk has been in place in the White House since 1887 when it was given as a gift to President Rutherford B. Hayes by Great Britain's Queen Victoria. The middle panel of the desk, bearing the presidential seal with the eagle facing to the right, was added by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to hide his use of a wheelchair. Roosevelt was a 32° Mason. Bottom left is the presidential seal woven into the Oval Office's carpet, displayed in front of the desk. This is the same presidential seal as is on the desk, except that here the eagle is facing the opposite direction—to the left. Then finally, above right, we see President George W. Bush and aides holding a conference in the Oval Office. Bush's carpet is a different, lighter color than that of the Clinton era, but the presidential seal of the carpet, or rug, continues to show the eagle facing to the left, while the desk has the bird facing to the right. In combination, this reflects the classic, double-headed (left-right) eagle of 33° Freemasonry. Notice also that, in Bush's carpet are added a number of brilliant, radiant sun rays arching out from the seal, indicating the "Illumination" of the Presidency of the United States. Moreover, at the Bush conference, the positioning of furniture and accessories (chairs/tables) provides the classic Masonic Lodge ritual arrangement, plus we have overall the Mason square and compass within a circle design. The red roses in the middle are also symbolic in that they represent the feminine aspect (vagina) while the eagle represents the masculine aspect (phallus).

Interesting stuff by Peggy Noonan. We must remember that President Truman was a 33rd degree Mason. "Peace" to a Mason means something entirely different than the same word means to you and me. In fact, to a Mason, peace is defined according to the Hegelian dialectical process of doublemindedness. Thus, the Hegelian motto: "Perpetual war for perpetual peace." What Ms. Noonan also failed to realize is that in turning the two heads of the eagle — one carved on the desk, the other on the rug—in opposite directions, the Illuminati is reproducing, or mimicking, the symbol of the double-headed eagle in Freemasonry.

A Ravenous Bird From the East

To the Illuminati, the eagle is a symbol of overriding importance and, in its double-headed form, the eagle represents the Illuminati's principal Luciferian doctrine of As Above, So Below. It also represents the Great Work of the Initiation of the World.

How prophetic, then, is the Bible verse found in Isaiah 46:11 which reveals that in the last days, a "ravenous bird from the East" shall be called forth by God to wreak havoc and destruction on rebellious mankind and the fallen world.

So when you see the duality principle ("As Above, So Below") represented in the photos and illustrations in this section, remember: You're observing the great secret in operation, the perennial teaching of the Hidden God, the God of the Mysteries, the God who it is said possesses the key to the invisible world (hell), the God of the Arch, the God of cunning, lies and deceit, the two-faced Deity, the Masonic double-headed eagle. In other words, bluntly stated, you are viewing Satan in disguise.

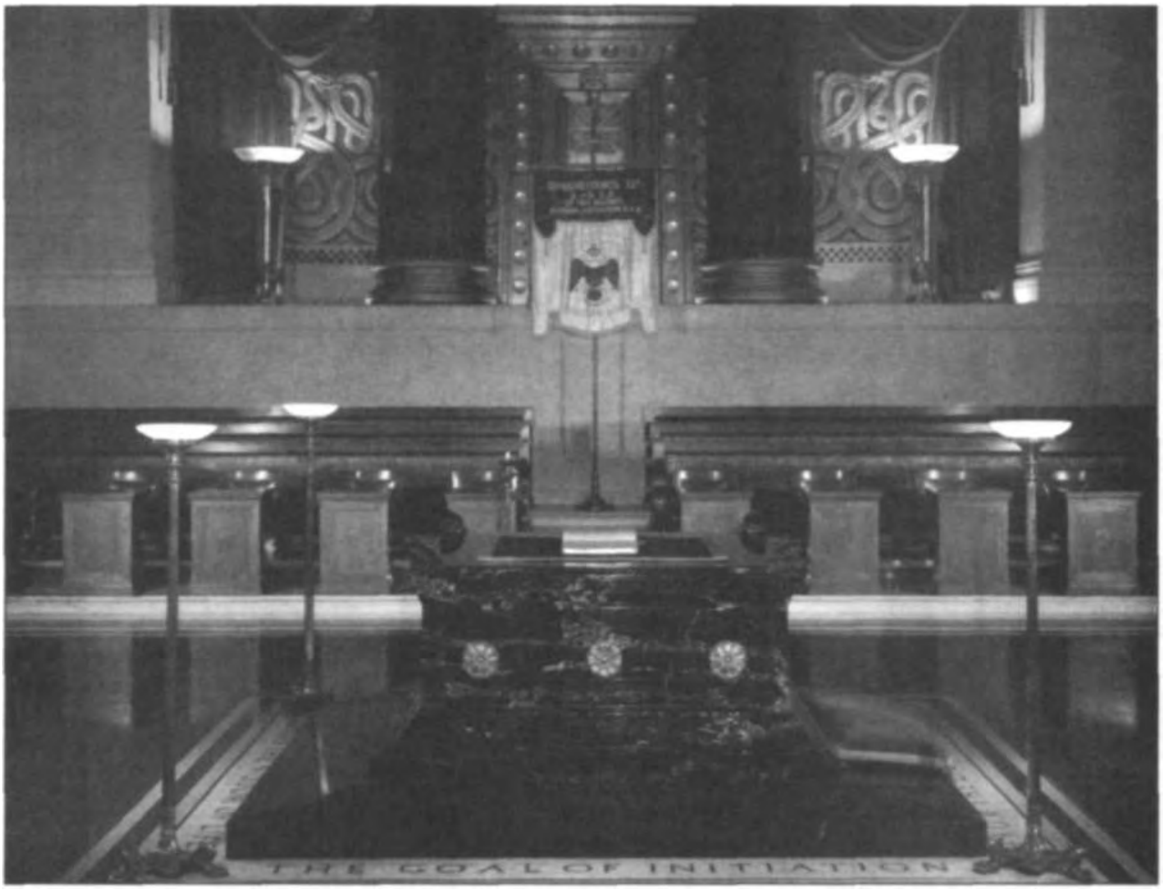
Among hard-core occultists deep into Babylonian and Egyptian lore and magic we find the worship of the two-headed Mammon Ra, the God of Prosperity and Riches. Mammon Ra is actually a powerful demon, one of the four great princes of hell. He is especially worshipped with great pomp by Jewish cabalists hungry and greedy for wealth and affluence.



Two golden phoenix serpents face each other inside the Temple Room of the Scottish Rite headquarters, The House of The Temple, in Washington, D.C. located exactly 13 blocks from the White House. While the focal point is the black stone altar with its three sun medallions, the two serpents provide the most grotesque sight. On the rug we read, "The Goal of Initiation," and, indeed, it is reportedly before this imposing black stone altar that the candidate for the 33rd degree kneels and drinks wine from a human skull.

The medical profession uses the winged caduceus, symbol of Mercury, the ancient god of commerce, as a universal sign, or logo. Medical doctors even take the Hippocratic Oath, vowing obeisance to Asclepius, the Greek god of healing. The caduceus design is of two serpents intertwined around a staff, or pole, facing each other. Again, this is evidence of Illuminist doctrine of the integration of opposites. The two serpents are the same as the emblem of Freemasonry-the double-headed eagle.

Below is an illustration of the Grand Hailing Sign of Distress, learned by initiates of the Order of Knights Templar. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry.)

FAREWELL

SETTING BILL FREE

COME SEE BILL BRADLEY!" SCREAMED THE YOUNG BLACK MAN STANDING AT THE corner of New York City's Bryant Park. Just blocks away, in another life, Bradley regularly packed Madison Square Garden to the rafters. But the evening before Super Tuesday, the crowd just swept past. When Bradley arrived for his last rally, the park lawn was untouched, his crescent of supporters thin enough to fit onto the concrete entry. Thankfully, night had fallen and the gas lamps burned low. One would not want a man so proud to see clearly their pitying smiles.

The next night Bradley lost every primary, and badly. As he conceded—"He won, and I lost," Bradley said simply—his wife Ernestine kept her eyes trained on him, as if hoping her gaze could soak up the sting. His young aides went into full bawl, some bending over in sobs. That it was over spilled into the smallest indignities: before Bradley was done speaking, the hotel staff began breaking down the bar and buffet.

NONVICTORY DANCE Bradley exults before withdrawing

And yet. The last few weeks, and imminent defeat, made Bradley a new man. Shoulders back and loden eyes alight, he joyfully returned to talk of a world in which everyone has health insurance, children live outside poverty and there is no soft money. As others cracked in sorrow, Bradley kept a slight smile Super Tuesday. "I knew I was going back to telling people what I believed at the end," he told TIME. "I had a great time."

Bradley, aloof and famously wary of the media, even embraced the youthful band of reporters who traveled with him at the end, joshing with them on flights. At his last press conference the questions were harsh, his answers often waspish. But Bradley added a coda. Grinning, he had an aide hand him a Tiffany's shopping bag, and he called reporters forward to hand them baby-blue boxes. Inside each was a running-shoe charm on a key chain. The gift came with tins of the lozenges he sucked on during the campaign. "Who is this guy, and what has he done with the Senator?" joked a reporter. "Too bad this guy didn't show up six months ago," answered another. "This might have been a different race."

Bradley's life has always been about winning—college All-American, Rhodes scholar, champion Knick, U.S. Senator. What is it like to be nearly 60 and fail, so soundly and so publicly, for the first time? "I once wrote, 'Defeat has a richness of experience all its own,' and that's probably true here too," he said.

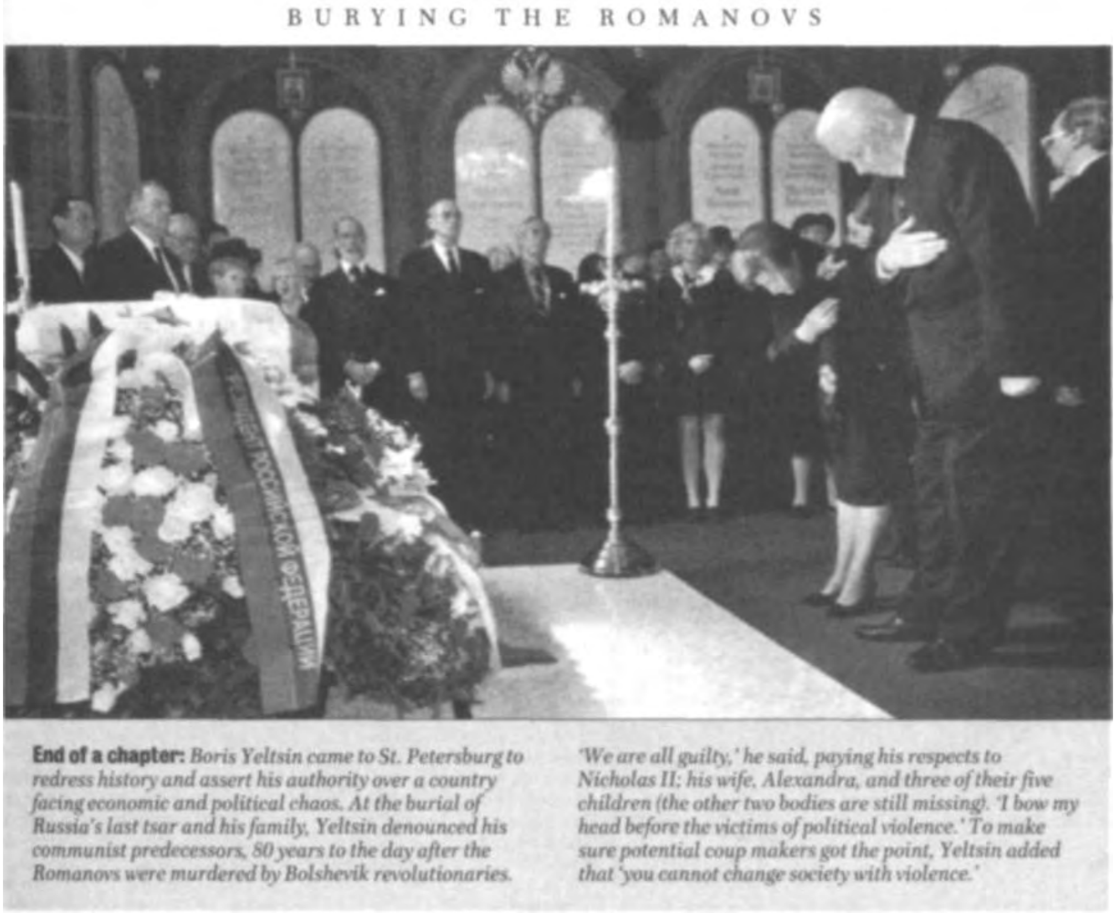
But failure has given Bradley back his freedom. Since he was a boy, he has lived in the stifling hothouse of others' expectations, put up as a presidential contender while still a gawky teenager. "Are you running, Bill?" others asked. "Are you running, Bill?" he asked himself. Now he has, and it is done. "Today means the closing of a chapter," he said about those expectations. "This is a loss, and you move on." Bradley, for the first time of his adult life, may now enjoy the serenity of knowing that no one is pressing for the next move. —By Tamala M. Edwards

PHOTOGRAPHS FOR TIME BY P.F. BENTLEY

Senator Bill Bradley does what is described by the press as a "nonvictory dance" after conceding defeat and bowing out of the 2000 race for the Democratic Party's nomination as President. In fact, Illuminati flunky Bradley was never intended to defeat the Illuminati's choice, Al Gore. But the elite needed someone to be the designated opponent and lose. That's all part of the Hegelian game of dialectics: controlled opposition. So, Bill Bradley did his duty, ran, and—predictably—lost. His so-called "nonvictory dance" is, in reality, his acknowledgement of the hidden influence of "as above, so below" (see Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, pp. 91, 93, 121). Bradley's underlying message to his Illuminist superiors: "I am in distress because of my loss, but I did it all for you!" (Photo: Time magazine, March 20, 2000)

The shadow figure in the background of this photo of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak faces the opposite direction. Appropriate considering the Masonic principle of the combining, or synthesis of opposites. (Photo: U.S. New & World Report, March 14, 2005, P. 30)

Sammy Davis, Jr., popular singer and entertainer, integrated the Illuminist sign, "As Above, So Below," into his dance performance. In his autobiography, "Yes, I Can," Davis confessed to being a past member of High Priest Anton LaVey's Church of Satan. In his performances, Davis often wore a satanic pentagram necklace. He also painted the fingernail black as a sign of his devotion to his master, the devil. One of Sammy Davis, Jr.'s most popular songs, The Candy Man, reportedly was secredy in praise of Satan, the Candy Man who brings his disciples gifts, such as illegal drugs like heroin and cocaine, and sexual favors.



BURYING THE ROMANOVS

End of a chapter: Boris Yeltsin came to St. Petersburg to redress history and assert his authority over a country facing economic and political chaos. At the burial of Russia's last tsar and his family, Yeltsin denounced his communist predecessors, 80 years to the day after the Romanovs were murdered by Bolshevik revolutionaries. 'We are all guilty,' he said, paying his respects to Nicholas II; his wife, Alexandra, and three of their five children (the other two bodies are still missing). 'I bow my head before the victims of political violence.' To make sure potential coup makers got the point, Yeltsin added that 'you cannot change society with violence.'

This article in Newsweek (July 27, 1998, p. 31) speaks for itself. Under orders from Bolshevik Communist butcher Vladimir Lenin, the Russian Oar and his entire family were slaughtered. In the center of this photo, above the windows you will see the golden, double-headed eagle.

CHIEF CHARLES MOOSE

The situation called for subtlety, smarts and swiftness, and for a few days people wondered whether a man named Moose was the right person for the task. But with all eyes on him, the Montgomery County, Md., police chief led some 1,000 investigators in a 22-day manhunt for the snipers who haunted Washington's suburbs. In the end, he got the duo believed to be the shooters, and America got a new hero.

Photograph for TIME by Brooks Kraft—Gamma

Mirror Image: In 2002, two snipers terrified Washington, D.C. suburbs with deadly and accurate shooting of innocent citizens. Police Chief Charles Moose, of Montgomery County, Maryland, led some 1,000 investigators in a 22-day manhunt. The press and media made Chief Moose into a celebrity and hero, though clearly his police skills were not just inadequate, they had proven to be vastly incompetent and bungling. Moose turns out to be a puppet of the Jewish ADL and a "Chosen One" of the Illuminati. This photo in Time (January 6, 2001) unmasks Chief Moose as a stooge of the elite. It illustrates perfectly the Satanic doctrine, "As Above, So Below." We see Chief Moose, a black man, shrouded in darkness, his hands giving a Masonic symbol (explained elsewhere in Codex Magica). They rest on a mirror surface in which the shadow image of the Chief is seen. Viewed either as is or upside down, we observe the secret sign of the diamond (two triangles abutted together), indicating the portal of hell, high sign of the conspiracy. It doesn't get much more revealing than this. Yet, it is doubtful that even a fraction of the readers of Time who saw this photo had any idea of its esoteric nature.

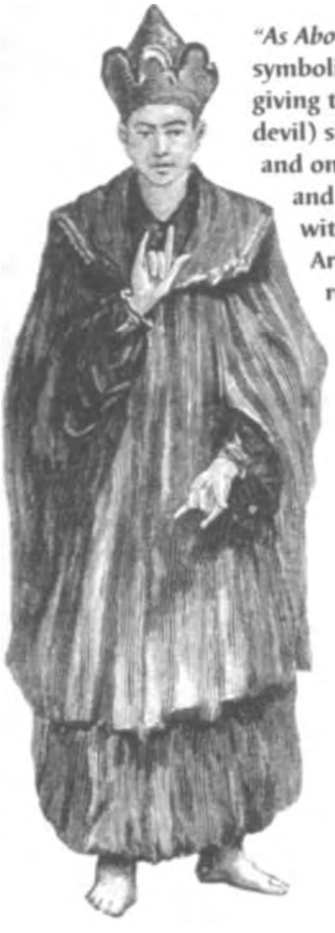
In this advertisement in Spain's Hola magazine (April 13, 2000), a coin bearing the image of King Juan Carlos was offered. Juan Carlos is heir to the Bourbon Dynasty. One of his titles is "King of Jerusalem." The emblem of the double-headed eagle is on the reverse side of the coin.



"As Above, So Below," is symbolized by this prelate's giving the "Il Cornuto" (horned devil) sign, one hand pointing up and one down. Message: Lucifer and Christ shall be reconciled, with the Masonic Great Architect of the Universe reigning in heaven, on earth, and in hell.

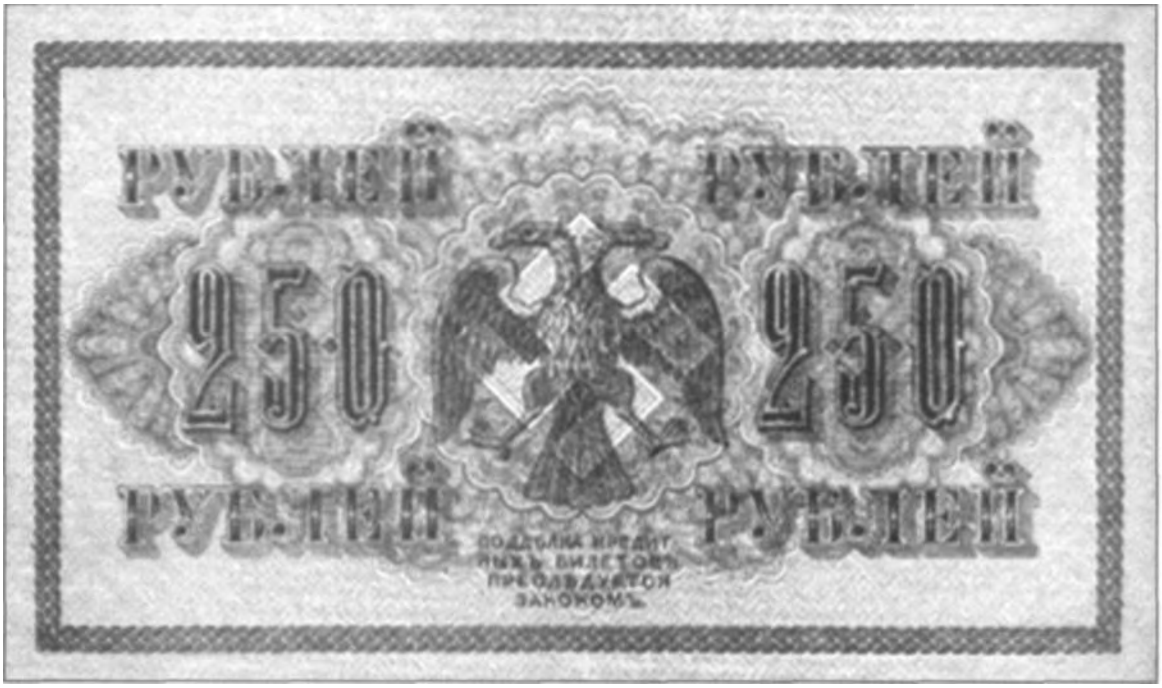
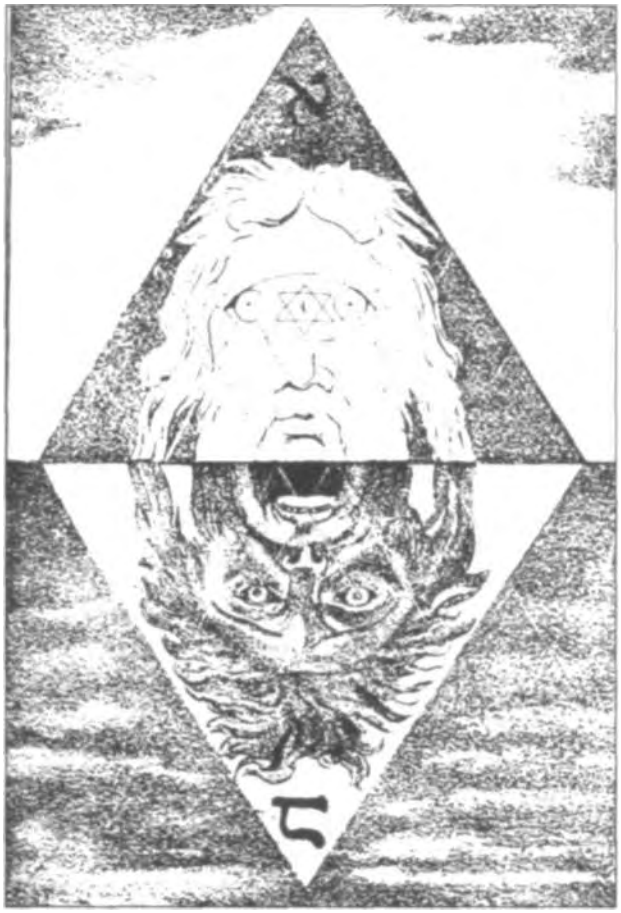
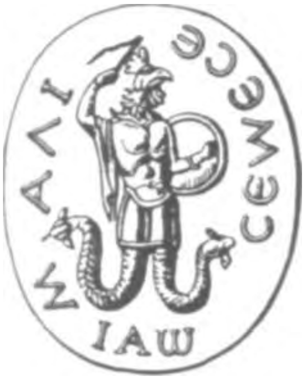
One of the clergy leaders of the Orthodox Church in Greece wears a pendent of the crowned double-headed eagle as a talisman around his neck. The cross, meanwhile, is relegated to the left side of the satanic talisman.



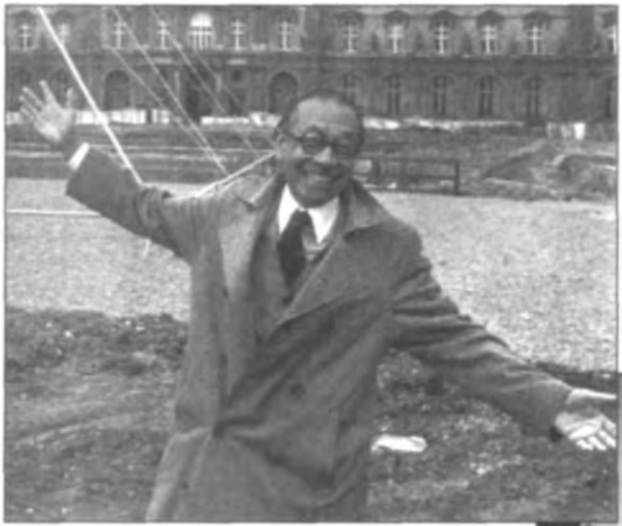
In 1917, after the dynasty of Czar Nicholas II fell, the Moscow government of Freemason Alexander Kerensky issued new currency, including this 250 ruble banknote. At its center is the double-headed eagle superimposed on the swastika (sun deity). The swastika is arranged as a diamond. Soon afterwards, the government of Kerensky gave way to the Bolshevik coup of Lenin and Trotsky. Kerensky fled to Paris, France, where he joined the Grand Orient Lodge. Lenin and Trotsky, also Masons and satanists, decided these symbols on the ruble banknotes were far too obvious and feared that the Russian people would discover the Jewish Masonic roots of the Revolution. Therefore, they ordered the removal of the symbols and created as a replacement for them the familiar hammer and sickle emblems as the U.S.S.R.'s official seal.



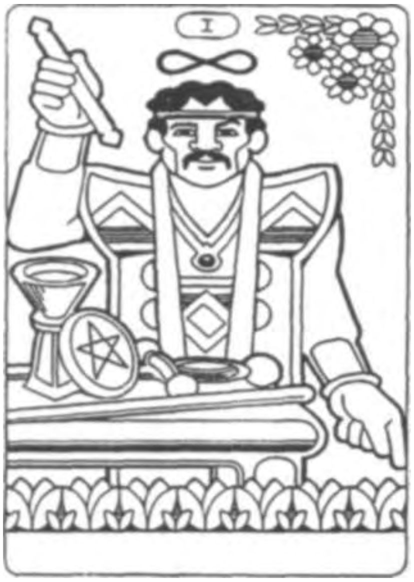
The Magical Head of Zohar is a cabalistic design illustrating the concept of opposites, the principle of "As Above, So Below." It is widely used by cabalists and Jewish rabbis as an instructional device.



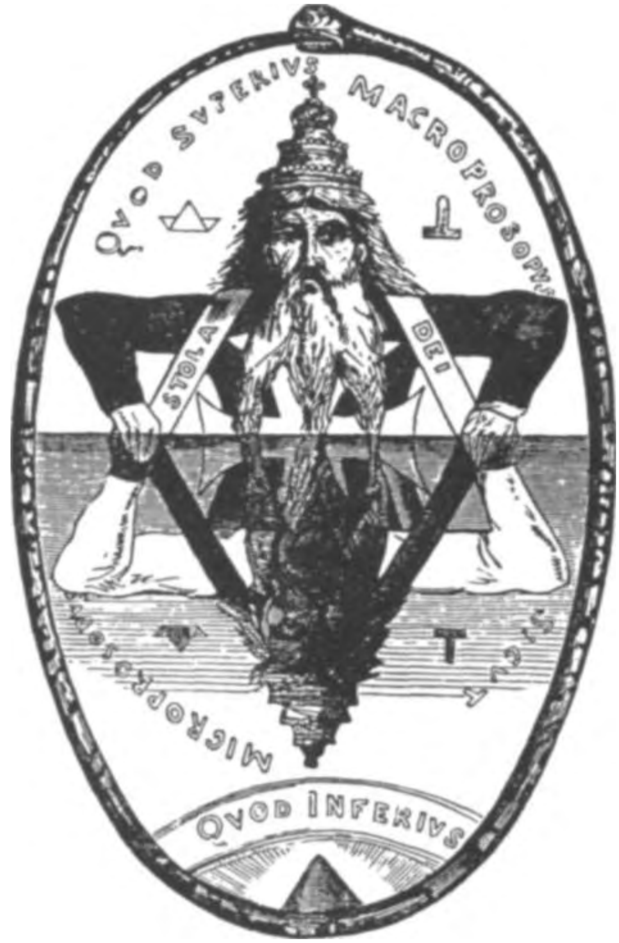
Abraxas, the gnostic rooster god, symbolic of the Sun God. Notice the two serpent legs, indicating the satanic doctrine of duality.



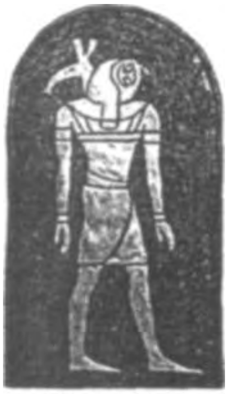
Famed architect I.M. Pei giving the "As Above, So Below" sign. Pei was commissioned by France's government, led by Masonic President Francois Mitterrand, to design an Egyptian-style pyramid structure adjacent to the Louvre, perhaps the world's best known museum. Pei's pyramid acts as the entrance to the Louvre. It is reportedly made up of exactly 666 panes of crystal glass.



In tarot card decks, one of the cards depicts "The Magician" (also called the Magus or the Juggler), a young man holding up a wand in his right hand, and pointing to the earth with his left. On a table before him are the four elemental symbols, and above his head is the sign of eternity or infinity. He is the Magus, the god-like human being integrated on all planes, the will liberated through gnosis, or knowledge. His gesture refers to the basic occult principle "That which is above is as that which is below."

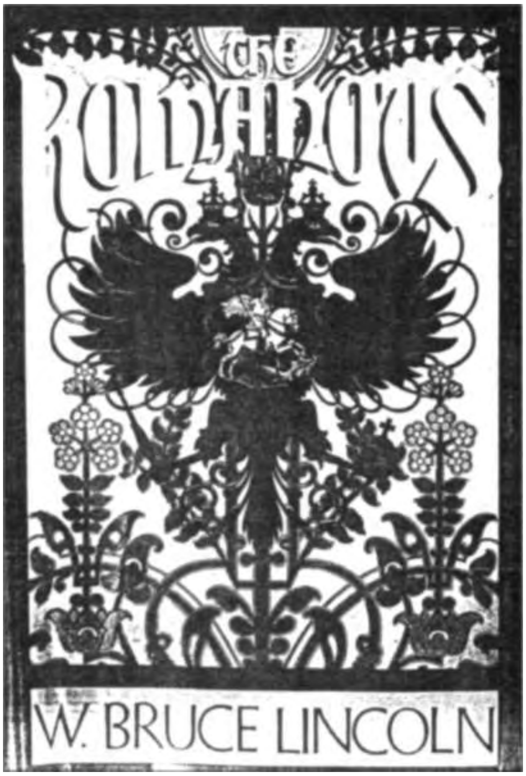


This design illustrates the ultimate blasphemy for its message is that Satan is deity of the universe, that he shall be King over all realms, above and below, and that the reign of he, the serpent, shall stand for all eternity. The Scottish Rite textbook, A Bridge to light, by Rex Hutchens, 33rd degree, outlines the knowledge and symbols used for the various degrees of Freemasonry. In this book, Hutchens restates the principles of Albert Pike's 19th century classic, Morals and Dogma. According to these principles, the oroboros serpent shown in this design (Levi's occult magic of "As Above, So Below") represents eternity and the Holy Spirit of the triune godhead. In other words, the Illuminists are declaring that the serpent, identified in the scriptures as the devil, is, in their religion, the divine Holy Spirit! A blasphemous concept, indeed.



Horus-Set

A company called Azure Green puts out a catalog offering "Egyptian Deity Wall Plaques," including this one, a depiction of the combined gods of Egypt, Horns and Set. Two entities represented by one body. Once again, we discover the principle of integration, or synthesis. Horns is the son of the Sun God and is said to be one with his Father, Osiris. The god Set is the dialectical opposite, or mirror of Horns and Osiris, but rather than the Sun and its light, he represents the darkness of the underworld. Set is god of the dead, Horus-Osiris, god of the living.



This cover of a book by W. Bruce Lincoln about Russia's czars, the Romanov Dynasty, pictures the dynasty's fascinating symbol, the double-headed phoenix serpent. Eye-opening is the crowned victorious hero figure with a cape, carrying a lance, riding a white horse found within the "heart" of the double-headed black bird. The symbolical meaning of this image is overwhelming, to say the least, in terms of Bible prophecy.

The idolatrous image of the double-headed eagle—shown here on the cover of Albert Pike's classic text, Morals and Dogma—is a much-treasured symbol of Jewish Masons. It represents the Babylonian god of money and forces, Mammon-Ra, as well as the Hegelian dialectical process practiced by the Jewish elite. This same symbol is the "Masonic Jewel" awarded high level Masons initiated into the 33rd degree.

Red Army cuts are announced by Gorbachev

NEW YORK (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev, urging a "period of peace," announced a cutback of 500,000 Red Army troops on Wednesday and called on the United States and its allies to "take certain steps" in reply. President Reagan and President-elect George Bush embraced the troop reduction gesture after a cordial luncheon summit with the Soviet leader.

In a speech at the United Nations, Gorbachev billed the cutback in troops, artillery, planes and tanks as "unilateral" — part of a reduced reliance on military might. He later said "Nyet, nyet, nyet," when asked if there was resistance at home to the move, but there was evidence to the contrary.

Reagan said in a speech in Washington a few hours later that if the Soviet reduction is carried out speedily and in full "history will regard it as important — significant."

On a day that blended superpower substance and symbolism, the Soviet president bade farewell to Reagan and answered Bush's welcoming handshake with a vigorous two-handed embrace. He declared the president-elect would find the Soviets ready "without long pauses or backtracking" to continue work toward a new arms control treaty as well as on other issues.

Bush, who played a low-key role throughout the day, said he had told Gorbachev he "needed some time" to settle in as president after his inauguration next month. He hailed the troop reduction announcement, even while saying it was not enough to produce a balance of forces in Europe.

Reagan declared he "heartily" approved of Gorbachev's overtures. "Read our smiles," he said after emerging from lunch and taking Gorbachev and Bush for a brief ride to the edge of Governors Island and a spectacular view of the Statue of Liberty across New York Harbor.

In the face of severe economic pressures at home, Gorbachev used his U.N. speech to declare that military force no longer "can or must be an instrument of foreign policy." He said 50,000 Soviet troops and 5,000 tanks would be pulled out of Eastern Europe by 1991, and pledged reductions on Western and Eastern soil within the Soviet Union, as well. Overall, the reductions were to reach half a million.

A few hours later he told reporters, "We do hope that the U.S. and the Europeans will also take certain steps."

The Soviet leader called for steps to end the war in Afghanistan under U.N. auspices within a month and urged international cooperation on issues ranging from arms control to the environment.

For Comrade Mikhail Gorbachev, there is only one deity that should be recognized-the god below, in the abyss. Here we see Gorby smiling broadly while finding his "mark" for a history photo made with Bush and Reagan overlooking the New York City harbor. Gorby seems to merely be clowning around, but his membership in the Grand Orient Lodge in Paris, France and his favorable status by the Illuminati's Inner Circle inform us otherwise. His hands tell a story understood by the wise. (Photo and article, December 8, 1988)

Vladimir Zhirinovsky, flamboyant Russian politician, holds in his hand the double-headed eagle insignia of the czarist regime, recently revived in the Gorbachev-Yeltsin-Putin era. Zhirinovsky gained worldwide notoriety in the 1990s for bashing Jews and for his extreme anti-Semitic views. However, he quieted down and muted his animosity toward the Jews after it came out that Zhirinovsky is himself a Jew! The setting up of such fake fronts by the Illuminati is a common tactic. It is all part of the Hegelian dialectical process (Thesis+antithesis=synthesis): i.e. create the problem, then come up with the pre-planned "solution" favored by the elite. ZAR BORIS

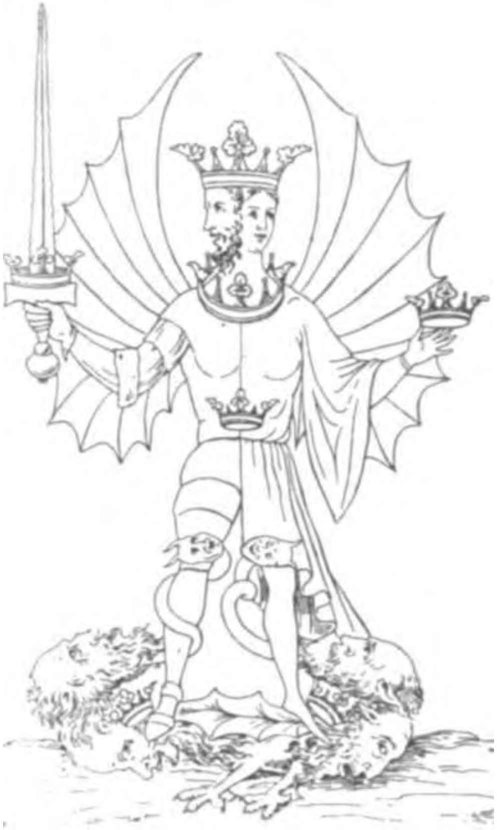
"The Czar is dead. Long live the Czar," seems to be the cry today in Russia. Czar Nicholas and his entire family were massacred by Lenin and the Communists. But, in recent times, Russia, under Gorbachev, Yeltsin, and Putin, has once again officially returned the Empire to the key symbol of the double-headed eagle. Der Spiegel, a popular German news magazine, carried this telling depiction of "Czar Boris" (President Boris Yeltsin) on its cover, with the revived official seal on his breast.

Believe it or not, in front of the Department of Justice building in Washington, D.C. is a statue of a confederate general, Albert Pike. Pike served as Sovereign Grand Commander of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, Southern Jurisdiction. Fascinating, isn't it, that black leaders like Farrahkan and Jesse Jackson aren't complaining? Usually, they go nuts complaining about Confederate monuments and statues on government land. Could their silence be attributed to the fact that Jackson and Farrakhan are themselves 3 3rd degree Masons? In any case, at the foot of Pike's Justice Department Statue is a Masonic female figure representing Lady Justice, holding a banner with the 33rd degree double-headed eagle and the triangle of Freemasonry.



The androgyne, a combination creature of male and female, symbolizes the hermaphrodite principle of the two-faced entity or two-headed eagle. In the Jewish Cabala, this strange creation of the feminine and masculine principle is known as "Adam Kadmon," both Adam and Eve, a Golem. This conjunction of opposites is part of the science of alchemy, or hermeticism, and is especially beloved by occult magicians. In witchcraft, it is known as the joining of sun and moon, and sacred sex rituals are common.

Janus, Roman two-faced "God of the Sun," was said to be the "keeper of the keys" to the invisible spirit world. Hislop (The Two Babylons) called him "the source and fountain of all the pagan gods." Is the Masonic double-headed eagle symbolic of his predecessor, Janus?

The Riddle of the Great Seal of the United States, and the All-Seeing Eye of the Illuminati's Serpent of Wisdom

And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world...

-Revelation 12:9

The Great Serpent of the Garden of Eden and the Lord God are identical.

— Helena Blavatsky
The Secret Doctrine

What is the true meaning of the curious, arcane symbols found in the Great Seal of the United States? Who designed this fantastic two-sided device, and why is it so prominently featured as art and decor on our most common item of currency—the U.S. one dollar bill?

Answering the Riddle

The symbols on the Great Seal at first glance seem to be incompatible with the history, political organization, and religious heritage of our great nation. An Egyptian pyramid? What has that to do with America? Strange Latin inscriptions? A bizarre all-seeing eye radiated by the sun's rays? Odd, indeed.

Truly weird, especially, is the fact that there are two sides to the Great Seal. The front side pictures a strong, war-ready eagle with a constellation of stars in a cloud above its head. The reverse, the mystical side, is the one with the pyramid, Latin inscriptions, all-seeing eye, etc. Why two sides? After all, a seal is like a rubber stamp. It is used to authenticate documents to prove authenticity and affirm veracity and genuineness. You don't need a reverse side on a "rubber stamp!"

In fact, both sides of the Great Seal, each with various images, have been around since the days of the Continental Congress.

In 1776, just hours after the Declaration of Independence was formally adopted, a committee composed of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and John Adams met to design the Great Seal. They invited an artist, Pierre Eugene Du Simitiere, to join them and a design was approved. But the Continental Congress failed to approve it. So, in 1782, Congress called on William Barton, an authority on symbols and heraldry, and Charles Thompson, Secretary of Congress, to help sort out the process. Finally, out came the current day, two-sided Great Seal.[1]

Enter Rothschild's Man, Haym Salomon

That, of course, is the official version of events. But some claim that a mysterious man from Europe, but living in Philadelphia, named Haym Salomon, secretly assisted the committee of Franklin, Jefferson, and Adams. Haym Salomon, a Jewish banker, just happened to be the American representative for the Rothschilds of Europe. Salomon, it is said, bribed a number of American politicians and was able to get about anything he and his mentors wanted done. In the case of the Great Seal, the Rothschilds wanted symbols to be pictured in the Great Seal of United States befitting the aims of the Illuminati.

Though Jewish and Zionist in ambition, the Rothschilds were not worshippers of the God of the Old and New Testaments of the Bible. They were Sabbatian/Frankist (Satanic) in theology. They sought (and still today seek) a Jewish Utopia or Kingdom on planet Earth. This Kingdom would be the New Age successor to ancient Babylon and Egypt. It would be a powerhouse nation that would, through magic and intellect, conquer the world. America would be its proxy. America would be its alter ego. America, then, must be fashioned into a cabalistic, Jewish state. All Hail the New Egypt, Empire of the Ages, child of the Sun God of the ancients! America, the New Jerusalem, must unite with Old Jerusalem, and the Zionist Illuminati must reign!

Rothschild agent Haym Salomon had millions of dollars of largesse to spread around in bribes. And so he did. A good portion of the money went to fund the Continental Congress and its operations. Some went into the Treasury for the Revolutionary War effort. Some went into politicians' pockets.

Rothschild eventually got the images he had demanded on the Great Seal, though not without opposition. The design was bitterly opposed by the few who recognized the Masonic and Illuminist elements.

As for Haym Salomon, few history textbooks mention him. But he is privily called by Illuminati Jews "The Financier of the American Revolution." Only recently, scattered bits of propaganda have begun to be floated about him. A few Jewish books speak of his "grand accomplishments," offering a more cheery and less honest version of his life and his activities as banker for the American Revolution. The ultimate goal of the Illuminati is to eventually bring Haym Salomon out of the closet, so to speak. Someday, his name will be in lights. He'll be immortalized in print, in movies, and on TV as a great and noble hero, akin to a George Washington or Thomas Jefferson. Statues will be built to honor him. One already has, in Philadelphia. Mark my words and mark your calendar for the future and see if what I tell you isn't so.

Now, let us examine the symbols on America's Great Seal and see if we can make sense of their true, esoteric meaning and purposes. Let us wipe away the gloss and get down to the base surface to better understand. This is vital because of the future of the United States—and the destiny of all humanity—is wrapped up, and is revealed, in this collection of Illuminist symbols and marks.

The Ashlar Stones and The Pyramid

Masonry is a peculiar Egypto-Babylonia-Jewish institution, and so the pyramid itself hearkens back to the Dynasty of the pharaohs and to the gods and goddesses of ancient Egypt. The stones which make up the pyramid are also of esoteric significance. In the Masonic philosophy it is taught that unenlightened man is in a rude, natural state. Having little or no "light" and without the spiritual illumination offered by the Mystery Religions he is likened to an imperfect or rough ashlar stone. But once enlightened and illuminated, he is crafted into a man of education, sophistication, discipline, and culture. He reaches upward toward spiritual perfection. He is then a perfect ashlar stone.

In many pagan religions this concept of the Rough vs. Perfect Ashlar was taught. In Freemasonry, it is heavily emphasized. The pyramid's structure is fitted only with perfect ashlar stones, it is said, meticulously chosen by "The Builders" who watch for flaws and reject the rough, or imperfect ashlar.

Likewise, the higher level Masons discover that the pyramid reflects, or parallels, the New World Order (Novus Ordo Seclorum) they and their Illuminized superiors are building under the watchful eye of the Great Architect of the Universe, whose secret and sacred name, the Royal Arch Mason learns, is Jahbuhlun.

The Builders (the Perfect Ashlars), then, are the Illuminati and their minions. Their building project is the renovation and reconstruction (Perestroika or Tikkun Olam) of the whole earth. Of course, in order to build the New Deal of the Ages, they must first tear down the old. Civilization as we know it today must be razed and destroyed by dialectic chaos, so that the new order may be ushered in: Ordo Ab Chao

It is when this ambitious goal is achieved that, symbolically, the capstone will be set in place atop the pyramid. Then he who lies within the living stones shall come forth to rule. The Phoenix (Satan and his "son") shall rise from the flames of destruction just as the legendary phoenix bird arose.

The Phoenix, however, is, in reality a cockatrice, a dragon-bird, a flying serpent. The word "pyramid," incidentally, literally means "amidst the fire." And now you know the true, occultic meaning of the word.

Peering Into the All-Seeing Eye

Simply put, Freemasons, under the direction of Haym Salomon, Ben Franklin, and others, designed the Great Seal with its all-seeing eye in the capstone amidst the radiant sun background. As followers of Egyptianism, it has long been assumed that the eye is that of Osiris, the Egyptian sun god, and/or of his son, Horus. This is true, but there is much more.

Osiris, of course, was worshipped as the Sun. Albert Pike, former Sovereign Grand Commander, wrote: "The sun...is the All-Seeing Eye in our Lodges."[2] Pike goes on to say that, "the Blazing Star (the pentagram deity) has been recognized as an emblem of Omniscience, or the All-Seeing Eye, which to the Ancients was the Sun."[3]

The Illuminati and their subordinates, the Masons, honor the Deity of countless names. Yes, one of those names is Osiris, with his son Horus. But the Illuminati Deity is a concealed god who hides his true identity in a multitude of disguises and subterfuges. He is called "The Sun," the "Central Sun," "Hiram Abiff," the one with the "Ineffable Name," "Ein Soph," the "Great Architect of the Universe," "Abaddon," "Mahabone," and "Jahbuhlun." Ostensibly the Illuminati worship a pantheon, a multiplicity of gods. But, not so. These are all fronts for the elite worship of Lucifer. He is their true god, the God of Light. As Albert Pike stated in Morals and Dogma, "Doubt it not."

Their God is The Serpent

Now, the Bible, in Isaiah 14 and Revelation 12:9, identifies Lucifer as "the great dragon...that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world." So, by whatever name you call him, the god of the Illuminati and Masonry is the Serpent. In fact, in A Bridge to Light, an official textbook of the Supreme Mother Council, 33°, the highest council of the Scottish Rite, Rex Hutchens, 33°, reveals that "the body of the Holy Spirit, the universal agent," is none other than "the Serpent devouring his own tail."[4] That is, the Oroboros serpent.

Remember, in all their writings, the most revered of Masonic scholars — Manly P. Hall, Albert Mackey, Albert Pike, etc.—claim that the Masonic rituals and teachings come from the "mysteries" of ancient Babylonians, Egyptians, Greeks, Persians and others. Thus, we glean understanding when we read, in Earth's Earliest Ages, this statement by G. Pember: "There is little doubt that the culmination of the mysteries was the worship of Satan himself."[5]

You'll also recall our discussion elsewhere in this book that the Illuminist and Masonic theology is solidly based on the Jewish Cabala (Kaballah or Quaballah). Indeed, almost all occult and magical belief systems are founded on the principles and teachings of the Jewish Cabala. In her most famous book, The Secret Doctrine, Helena Blavatsky praised Satan as the teacher of humanity.[6] He is to be thanked, Blavatsky says, for setting men on the path to divinity and liberty. It is, she emphasizes, the Cabala that "unveils the secret." To what secret is she referring? Listen, as Blavatsky flatly states the core doctrine of the mysteries, of occultism, of Illuminism:

> The Great Serpent of the Garden of Eden and the Lord God are identical.[7]

Ah, we have here the reality of supreme evil in this core teaching. Paul knew of this mystery teaching, he wrote of the "Mystery of Iniquity" and said of the ancient religionists, that they "knew God, but glorified Him not as God," and changed the Glory of God "into the likeness of creeping things" — that is, serpents (Romans 1:23).

The Devourer of Self

Barbara Walker, researcher of occultism and paganism, writes:

> As Lord of Death, Osiris was sometimes identified with the Great Serpent of the underworld, and sometimes was painted in the same serpentine form, bent around so his toes touched his head.[8]

The serpent, or Satan, as we know from the scriptures, is god of the dead. Indeed, God says, "all they that hate me love death" (Proverbs 8:36). He is Lord alright, but only of death, of the underworld, and of planet earth for a season (II Thessalonians 2). He is graphically pictured in the occult world as a serpent biting his own tail; how appropriate: A devourer of himself! And that is what actually happens when a person defies God and worships the Adversary. He or she is "biting his own tail" — tragically and pathetically devouring himself.

The Oroboros

The oroboros, or serpent biting its own tail, is pictured on the cover of Codex Magica. This book unmasks the Illuminati worship of this detestable creature, a worship of which virtually every person on earth is dangerously and hopelessly unaware. Since the Illuminati, Masons, and fellow cabalists have amassed such tremendous political, financial, social, and technological powers, is it not a frightening thing to realize that these men are not only religious, their religion is Satanism, and their god is the Devil?

The destructive path, therefore, is the way of the Illuminati. As I have demonstrated, these wicked agents of the Serpent are psychopaths and present a clear and present threat and danger to our lives. But the gravest danger is that which confronts the souls of billions of unsaved, ignorant human beings. If they fall for the Lie of the Serpent, they will suffer total destruction and suffer loss for eternity.

In Occult Geometry, A.S. Raleigh examines the symbol of the circle. He writes:

> One form of the circle is a serpent with a tail in its mouth...It is the return to Unity...The true circle symbolizes evolution, the Serpent Circle involution...the power brings Unity out of diversity...The Serpent Circle is, therefore, ever the symbol of the destructive.[9]

Later, in the photos and illustrations presented in this chapter, you will discover the startling artwork on a Jewish New Year's postcard by Jewish artist Alain Roth back in 1915. The design shows the Oroboros Serpent (Satan) encircling and conquering the whole earth. Happy New Year?

As I have proven over and over by a preponderance of documentation, we cannot separate the murderous goals and activities of the Illuminati from their religious belief system. Their inspiration, their fanatical zealotry, comes from their teacher, Satan, who has given them a thorough set of instructions—an Unholy Bible if you will, in the Jewish Cabala. In this Unholy Bible, the Serpent plays the key role. He is praised as the "Serpent of Wisdom." The destiny of the Illuminati and the whole world is said to be in his hands.

We thank God that all who believe in Christ Jesus have no part of this destiny. Jesus said He has chosen us out of the world. We are pilgrims, aliens on earth, spiritually residing in heavenly places. The serpent has no power or control whatsoever over us, and we solidly reject his many works, among which, regrettably, is the symbology of the Great Seal of the United States.

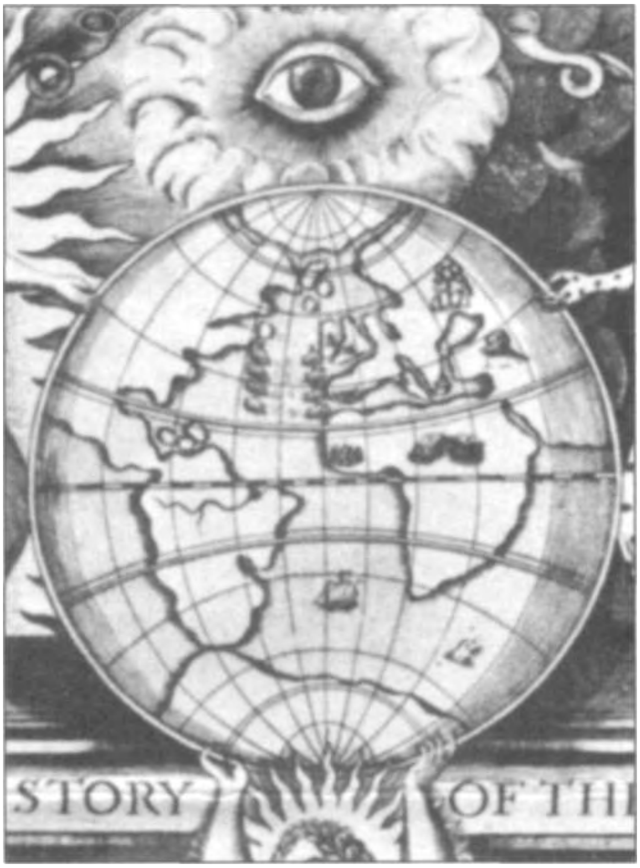
A History of the World
THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD
At London Printed for Walter Burre

Sir Walter Raleigh, the impetuous adventurer and polished courtier, was also a man of considerable literary accomplishments. Much of the poetry he wrote has been lost, but several impressive prose works survive. The most ambitious and distinguished of these is The History of the World, written between 1607 and 1614, during his years of confinement in the Tower of London under a death sentence. Although Raleigh's name did not appear on the elaborately engraved frontispiece to the first edition (above), there was no secret about the authorship. The book was immediately banned by King James I.

Raleigh set out to write a universal chronicle that would parallel the Old Testament chronology in its initial chapters but bring the story up to his own times, in which the history of England would be related to that of the rest of the world. He got only as far as the fall of Macedonia in 130 B.C.

James's displeasure was caused by Raleigh's portrayals of Assyrian Queen Semiramis, which was seen as a tribute to Elizabeth I, and of her effeminate successor, Ninus, which the king interpreted as an unflattering caricature of himself.



Sir Walter Raleigh's distinguished book, The History of The World (written between 1607 and 1614) had this illustration as its frontispiece. The book was banned by England's King James I because it revealed too much, ostensibly for its portrayals of Babylonian Queen Semiramis and her effeminate son, Ninus. More likely is that the artwork shown here revealed far too many occult secrets, including the androgynous (male/female) figure holding aloft the globe, the all-seeing eye, etc.

Black Crowes dive into reviving careers

Album review

The Black Crowes
'Three Snakes and One Charm'
(American Recordings)

By Chris Riemenschneider
American-Statesman Staff

Don't count the Black Crowes out just yet. After tripping disasterously while trying to run over new territory on last year's "amorica," then proving to be a mess of a live act on the '95 H.O.R.D.E. Festival, it seemed the group was forever entombed to classic rock status only five years after releasing its smash debut.

The Crowes readily bounce back with their fourth album, "Three Snakes and One Charm." Granted, the group's leaders Chris and Rich Robinson have returned to blatantly rehashing age-old rock bravado, but at least here they go beyond the Jagger/Richards camp to album-oriented rock's other songwriting team, Page-/Plant.

Just like Stones licks hadn't sounded as good in a long time as they did on the Crowes second album, "The Southern Harmony and Musical Companion," it's been too long since Zeppelin riffs have reverberated as strongly as they do in such sure-to-please rock-fit (at least in the studio) than to any songwriting genius it may lack. Chris Robinson's ragged, soulful vocals have never sounded as good as they do on "Three Snakes," and the guitar work of Rich and fellow riffman Marc Ford in "Nebakanezer" or "Blackberry" is pure, ecstatic bliss.

Best of all, though, is the fact that the group sounds more inspired by what it's doing here than it has since its debut album. "Good Friday," the first single from this album, olus "Under a Mountain" and "Better When You're Not Alone" again show them as a great, great band. And if they're nothing more, that's still something the rock world can always use.

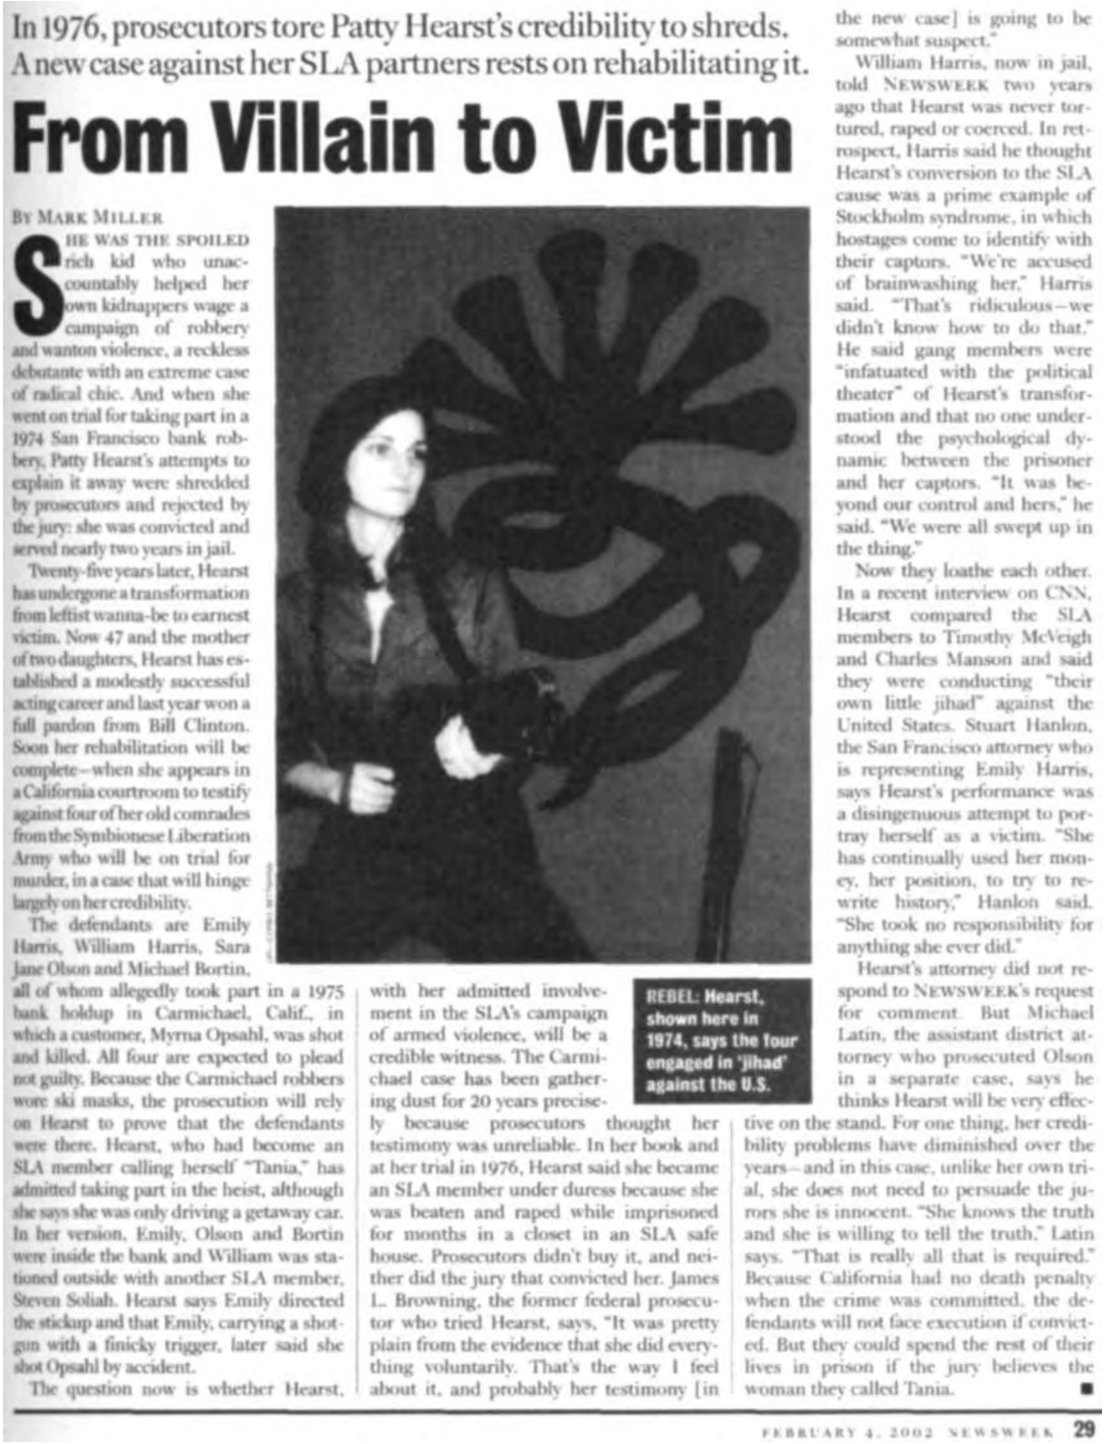
Egyptian Religion: In this ancient papyrus drawing we discover the unholy trinity of the Egyptian goddess religion. Seated is Osiris the horned father god. Behind him is the goddess Isis, and their son, Horus. The snake is the focus of this trinity; the woman (Goddess) is therefore depicted with the head of a serpent and with destroyer weapons in her hands.



In 1976, prosecutors tore Patty Hearst's credibility to shreds. A new case against her SLA partners rests on rehabilitating it.

From Villain to Victim

BY MARK MILLER

SHE WAS THE SPOILED rich kid who unaccountably helped her own kidnappers wage a campaign of robbery and wanton violence, a reckless debutante with an extreme case of radical chic. And when she went on trial for taking part in a 1974 San Francisco bank robbery, Patty Hearst's attempts to explain it away were shredded by prosecutors and rejected by the jury: she was convicted and served nearly two years in jail.

Twenty-five years later, Hearst has undergone a transformation from leftist wanna-be to earnest victim. Now 47 and the mother of two daughters, Hearst has established a modestly successful acting career and last year won a full pardon from Bill Clinton. Soon her rehabilitation will be complete—when she appears in a California courtroom to testify against four of her old comrades from the Symbionese Liberation Army who will be on trial for murder, in a case that will hinge largely on her credibility.

The defendants are Emily Harris, William Harris, Sara Jane Olson and Michael Bortin, all of whom allegedly took part in a 1975 bank holdup in Carmichael, Calif., in which a customer, Myrna Opsahl, was shot and killed. All four are expected to plead not guilty. Because the Carmichael robbers wore ski masks, the prosecution will rely on Hearst to prove that the defendants were there. Hearst, who had become an SLA member calling herself "Tania," has admitted taking part in the heist, although she says she was only driving a getaway car. In her version, Emily, Olson and Bortin were inside the bank and William was stationed outside with another SLA member, Steven Soliah. Hearst says Emily directed the stickup and that Emily, carrying a shotgun with a finicky trigger, later said she shot Opsahl by accident.

The question now is whether Hearst, with her admitted involvement in the SLA's campaign of armed violence, will be a credible witness. The Carmichael case has been gathering dust for 20 years precisely because prosecutors thought her testimony was unreliable. In her book and at her trial in 1976, Hearst said she became an SLA member under duress because she was beaten and raped while imprisoned for months in a closet in an SLA safe house. Prosecutors didn't buy it, and neither did the jury that convicted her. James L. Browning, the former federal prosecutor who tried Hearst, says, "It was pretty plain from the evidence that she did everything voluntarily. That's the way I feel about it, and probably her testimony [in the new case] is going to be somewhat suspect."

William Harris, now in jail, told NEWSWEEK two years ago that Hearst was never tortured, raped or coerced. In retrospect, Harris said he thought Hearst's conversion to the SLA cause was a prime example of Stockholm syndrome, in which hostages come to identify with their captors. "We're accused of brainwashing her," Harris said. "That's ridiculous—we didn't know how to do that." He said gang members were "infatuated with the political theater" of Hearst's transformation and that no one understood the psychological dynamic between the prisoner and her captors. "It was beyond our control and hers," he said. "We were all swept up in the thing."

Now they loathe each other. In a recent interview on CNN, Hearst compared the SLA members to Timothy McVeigh and Charles Manson and said they were conducting "their own little jihad" against the United States. Stuart Hanlon, the San Francisco attorney who is representing Emily Harris, says Hearst's performance was a disingenuous attempt to portray herself as a victim. "She has continually used her money, her position, to try to rewrite history," Hanlon said. "She took no responsibility for anything she ever did."

Hearst's attorney did not respond to NEWSWEEK's request for comment. But Michael Latin, the assistant district attorney who prosecuted Olson in a separate case, says he thinks Hearst will be very effective on the stand. For one thing, her credibility problems have diminished over the years—and in this case, unlike her own trial, she does not need to persuade the jurors she is innocent. "She knows the truth and she is willing to tell the truth," Latin says. "That is really all that is required." Because California had no death penalty when the crime was committed, the defendants will not face execution if convicted. But they could spend the rest of their lives in prison if the jury believes the woman they called Tania. ■

Blatant serpent wickedness is rampant in this advertisement for Crown Royal whiskey. We have the regal scarlet crown, the diamond cuts on the glass, the evil snake shaped in the form of "S" (Satan?), and the one word question, "Tempted?" The phrase below, "Enjoy our quality responsibly" sounds like some kind of hellish joke. Crown Royal is manufactured by Seagram & Sons, the world's largest distillery. Seagram is owned by the Bronfman bloodline dynasty of Canada, the family of ardent ADL Jewish Zionists. Its senior is currently Edgar Bronfman, who also just happens to be chairman of the World Jewish Congress.

The dragon is, of course, a mythical form of serpent. Indeed, the Holy Bible in the book of Revelation describes Satan as "that old serpent, the dragon." Well, for those who wish to pay homage to the dragon, The Pyramid Collection catalog offers such jewelry items as this pendant, ring, and arm band.

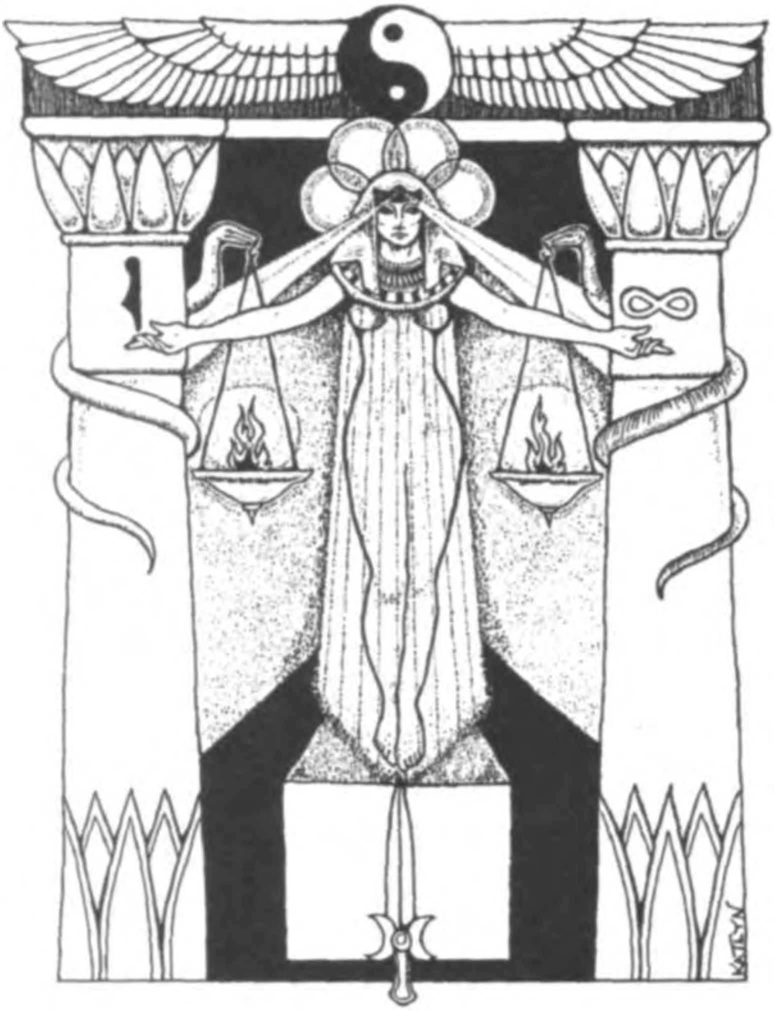
The Illuminati Serpent: In The Two Babylons, Hislop writes: "In the mythology of the primitive world, the serpent is universally the symbol of the sun... As the sun was the enlightener of the world, so the serpent was held to have been the great enlightener of the spiritual, by giving mankind knowledge of good and evil.



Revealing drawing from a New Age magical publication, New Moon Rising. The yin/yang circle at top has the backward "S" and the black is white, white is black motif; and we discover the veiled goddess, in addition to two serpents facing each other. Again, this emphasizes the occult principle of joining, or integrating of opposites. The author of Codex Magica could give about a 60-hour lecture series devoted exclusively to the meaning of all the symbols in this seductively evil—even grotesque—piece of occult art.

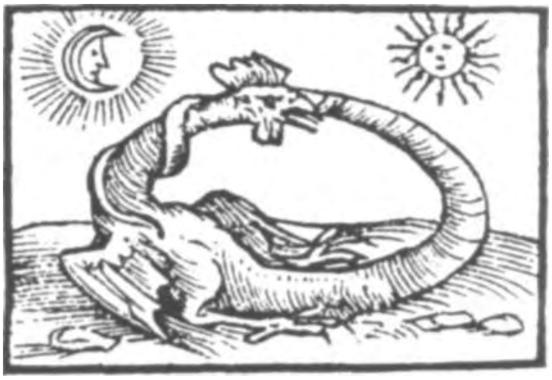
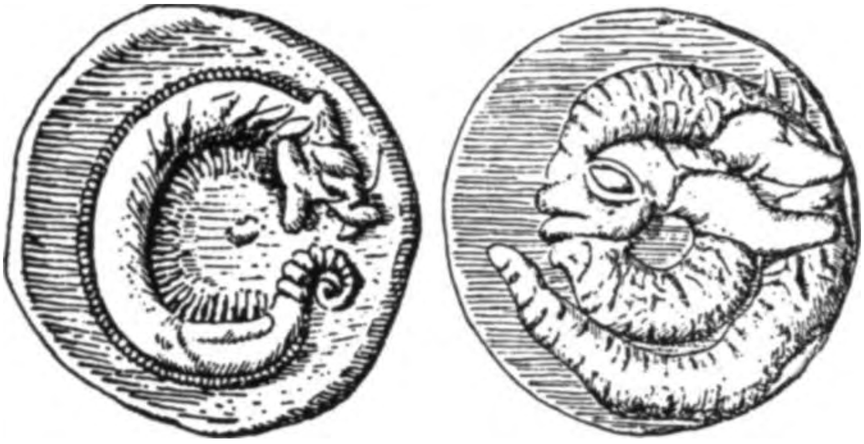
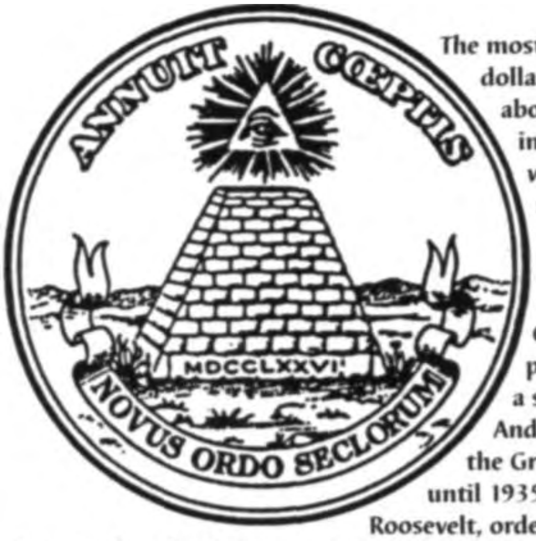
The title page of a book published in Greece exposing the global plot of the Zionist Masons of the Illuminati. The authors demonstrate their understanding by the symbolic use of the evil oroboros serpent encircling the whole world.



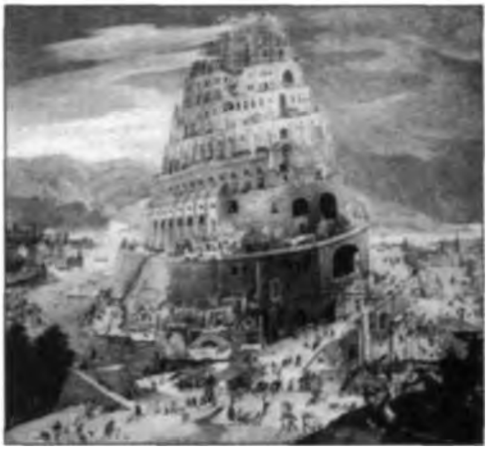
The Oroboros, the serpent coiled up in a circle biting its own tail (also Uroboros), is pictured as a gnostic rooster combination creature in this illustration from Horapollo's Selecta Hieroglyphica, 1597. The sun and moon symbolize the conjunction of opposites, which is the alchemical doctrine of Illuminism.

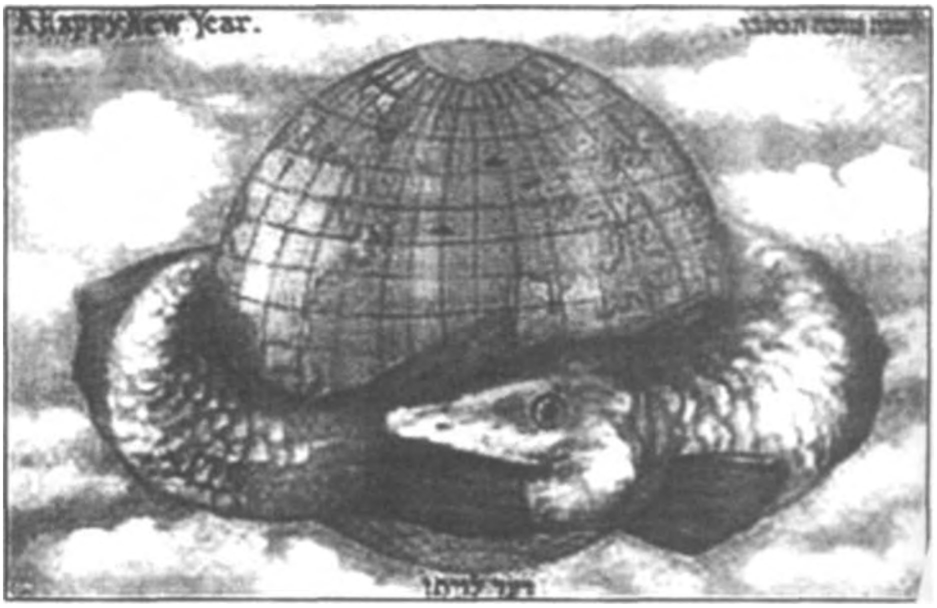


These two ancient Celtic coins from Bohemia (second and first centuries B.C.) bear the marks of the dragon, or serpent. The first coin has the image of an oroboros serpent/dragon torqued and prepared to bite its own tail. The second coin bears the image of a coiled, horned serpent with ears. The coins signify the adoration and homage paid the serpent as a religious icon of worship-status by the Mystery Religions. The revival today of the ancient Mystery Religions is accompanied also by modern-day advances in serpent worship.



The most famous of all-seeing eyes is found on every U.S.A. one dollar bill. It is the image of Osiris, the Eygptian Sun God, above the pyramid. Below the pyramid is the Latin inscription, New World Order (Novus Ordo Seclorum), with a pair of cloven tongues, one on each side of the unfinished pyramid. The worlds "Annuit Coeptis" in Latin stand for "He favors our undertaking," or "He is on our side." It is vital to know that this strange image is actually the obverse (reverse side) of the Great Seal of the United States which, oddly, is also pictured on the same side of the dollar. But, why would a seal—much like a rubber stamp—need a reverse side? And why is it that the mysterious, hidden, reverse side of the Great Seal was unknown to the American public at large until 1935? In that year, 32° Mason, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, ordered the U.S. Treasury to add the obverse side of the Great Seal to the design of the $1 bill. Imagine! For about 150 years, no one but the Illuminati insiders knew that a satanic mark—the all-seeing eye and the pyramid of the serpentine sun god—had already been prepared and was being kept for unveiling at some future, occultic appropriate date. Incidentally, the unfinished pyramid represents the illuminati's fond desire of rebuilding the Tower of Babel, whose original builders were confounded by God. Again, however, we find a metaphor and allegory. The rebuilding of the Tower of Babel actually represents something else: The unveiling of the New World Order, a tyrannical, Big Brother system of global government led by an antichrist and superintended by Satan, temporary god of this world.





A Happy New Year.

This is a Jewish New Year postcard, by artist Alain Roth in 1915. Amazingly revealing, the postcard image confirms the documentation found in the long controversial Protocols of the Learned Elders of lion. In the protocols the Jewish Zionist conspiracy is described as a symbolic serpent encircling the world! As if to emphasize that this is the correct understanding, the writing in Hebrew at the bottom of this Jewish New Year postcard is the word "Leviathan." The identity of Leviathan is revealed in Isaiah 27 as the serpent, or Satan. Have a Happy New Year, indeed!

Fritz Springmeier, one of the world's top researchers into the global conspiracy, discovered the Illuminati symbol of a snake swallowing its own tail (the Oroboros) being used by Portland, Oregon's public library system as the logo placed by the library on its books. (Newsletter Front A Christian Ministry, October 15, 1993)

The Illuminati's architectural concept of the unfinished pyramid (the capstone yet to be fused on top) is exactly captured in this intriguing, obviously staged ritual image. This photo, from the American Bar Association's (ABA) annual convention in 1999, shows attorney Philip Anderson (left), president of the ABA, Janet Reno, Attorney-General of the United States, and President Bill Clinton. Notice that each of the three stand erect, a somber and knowing look on their faces, their bodies arranged to create a mystical trinity of unity. Behind them we find the ABA logo, which is in the shape of an unfinished pyramid. (USA Today newspaper, August 10, 1999, p. 8A)

From The Herder Dictionary of Symbols (Chiron Publications, Illinois), we have two different representations of the alchemical/mystical concept of "trinity as unity." At left is a Rosicrucian seal and at right is an illustration from Valentinius's Duodecim Claves, 1678.

"Silence, Slaves, or We'll Cut Your Throat From Ear to Ear!"

...binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my throat cut across...

— Oath of Freemasonry
Entered Apprentice
Degree (1°)

But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath...

— James 5:12

In every ritual degree of Freemasonry and in all the most important ceremonial rituals and initiations of elite orders, the candidate is required to take an oath and is warned of the hideous and grotesque penalty that awaits him if he dares ever to reveal any of the group's innermost secrets.[1]

For example, in the very first degree oath of Freemasonry, the candidate declares:

> ...binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my throat cut across, > my tongue torn out by its roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea, > at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, > should I ever knowingly violate this my Entered Apprentice obligation.

Second degree Masons recite the following heinous oath:

> ...binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my breast torn open, my heart plucked out, and placed on the highest pinnacle of the temple there to be devoured by the vultures of the air, should I ever knowingly violate the Fellow Craft obligation.

The third degree oath proclaims:

> ...binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my body severed in two, my bowels taken from thence and burned to ashes, the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven, that no more remembrance might be had of so vile and wicked a wretch as I would be, should I ever, knowingly, violate this my Master Mason's obligation.

That's not all. In the 4th degree, Mark Master of the York Rite, the candidate performs a ritual which symbolizes having his "ear smitten off" if he reveals the order's secrets. And for the 5th degree, Past Master, the hapless candidate agrees as follows:

> ...binding myself under no less penalty than (in addition to all my former penalties) to have my tongue split from tip to root, that I might thereafter be unable to pronounce the word.

The sixth degree (Most Excellent Master) of the York Rite continues with the horrific penalties:

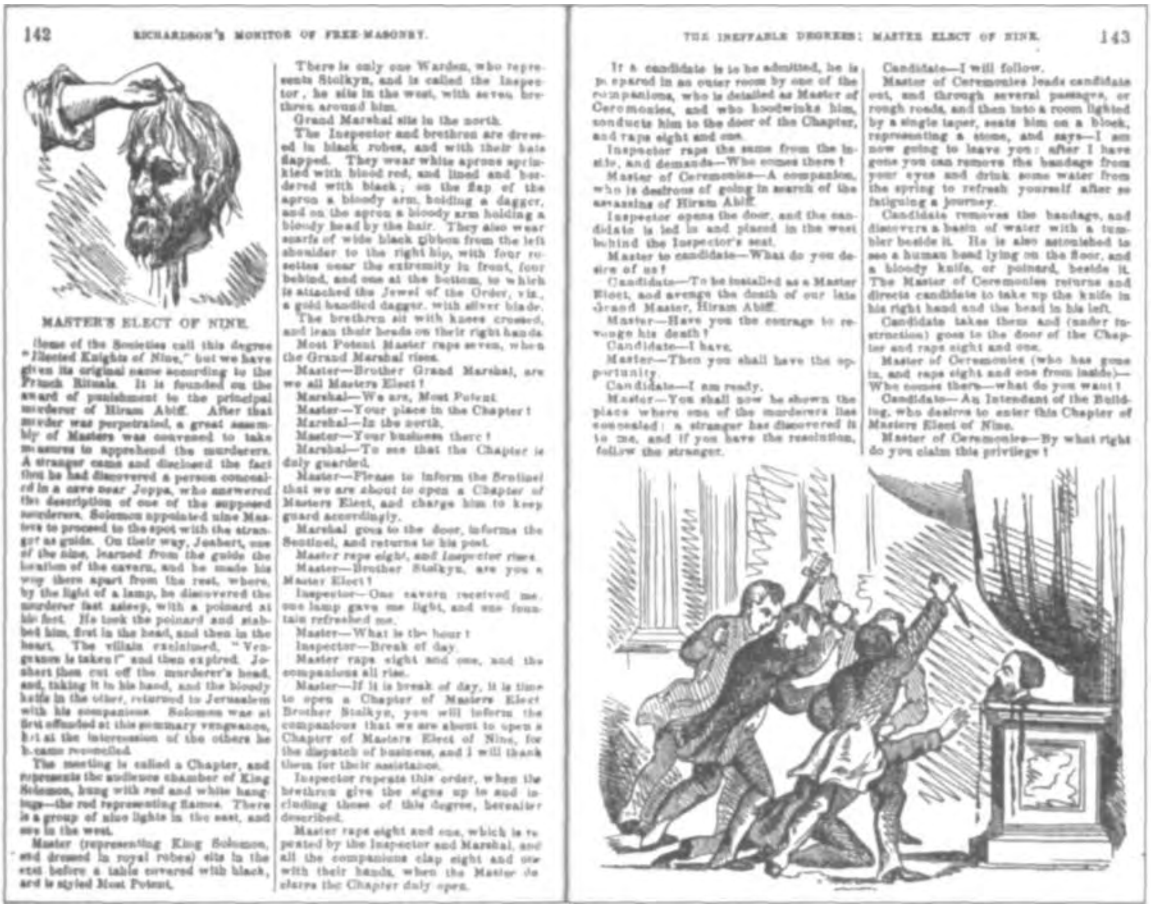
> ...binding myself under no less penalty than to have my breast torn open, and my heart and vitals taken from thence, and exposed to rot on the dunghill.

It's no wonder that our Lord Jesus Christ, as recorded in the Holy Scriptures, commanded that His followers take no oaths (Matthew 5:34-37). Christ's brother, James, put it this way: "But above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath" (James 5:12). Let Masons and other Illuminists who lie claiming to be "Christian" believers try to dance around and vainly evade this commandment.

The Sign of Silence

Illuminists have a sign to be used to remind associates when it is needful to stonewall or to shut up about a matter. In the York Rite initiation for the Royal Master's Degree, this sign, called the Due-guard, "is made by placing the forefinger of the right hand upon the lips."[2] Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry remarks that this sign "is a caution to a companion when you wish him to keep silent."[3]

In the ritual degree ceremony of the Secret Master, the candidate places two fingers to his lip and is told that the obligation he is taking "enjoins secrecy and to



142 RICHARDSON'S MONITOR OF FREE-MASONRY.

MASTER'S ELECT OF NINE.

Some of the Societies call this degree "Elected Knights of Nine," but we have given its original name according to the French Rituals. It is founded on the award of punishment to the principal murderer of Hiram Abiff. After that murder was perpetrated, a great assembly of Masters was convened to take measures to apprehend the murderers. A stranger came and disclosed the fact that he had discovered a person concealed in a cave near Joppa, who answered the description of one of the supposed murderers. Solomon appointed nine Masters to proceed to the spot with the stranger as guide. On their way, Joabert, one of the nine, learned from the guide the location of the cavern, and he made his way there apart from the rest, where, by the light of a lamp, he discovered the murderer fast asleep, with a poinard at his feet. He took the poinard and stabbed him, first in the head, and then in the heart. The villain exclaimed, "Vengeance is taken!" and then expired. Joabert then cut off the murderer's head, and, taking it in his hand, and the bloody knife in the other, returned to Jerusalem with his companions. Solomon was at first offended at this summary vengeance, but at the intercession of the others he became reconciled.

The meeting is called a Chapter, and represents the audience chamber of King Solomon, hung with red and white hangings—the red representing flames. There is a group of nine lights in the east, and one in the west.

Master (representing King Solomon, and dressed in royal robes) sits in the east before a table covered with black, and is styled Most Potent.

There is only one Warden, who represents Stolkyn, and is called the Inspector, he sits in the west, with seven brethren around him.

Grand Marshal sits in the north.

The Inspector and brethren are dressed in black robes, and with their hats flapped. They wear white aprons sprinkled with blood red, and lined and bordered with black; on the flap of the apron a bloody arm, holding a dagger, and on the apron a bloody arm holding a bloody head by the hair. They also wear scarfs of wide black ribbon from the left shoulder to the right hip, with four rosettes near the extremity in front, four behind, and one at the bottom, to which is attached the Jewel of the Order, viz., a gold handled dagger, with silver blade.

The brethren sit with knees crossed, and lean their heads on their right hands.

Most Potent Master raps seven, when the Grand Marshal rises.

Master—Brother Grand Marshal, are we all Masters Elect?

Marshal—We are, Most Potent.

Master—Your place in the Chapter?

Marshal—In the north.

Master—Your business there?

Marshal—To see that the Chapter is duly guarded.

Master—Please to inform the Sentinel that we are about to open a Chapter of Masters Elect, and charge him to keep guard accordingly.

Marshal goes to the door, informs the Sentinel, and returns to his post.

Master raps eight, and Inspector rises.

Master—Brother Stolkyn, are you a Master Elect?

Inspector—One cavern received me, one lamp gave me light, and one fountain refreshed me.

Master—What is the hour?

Inspector—Break of day.

Master raps eight and one, and the companions all rise.

Master—If it is break of day, it is time to open a Chapter of Masters Elect. Brother Stolkyn, you will inform the companions that we are about to open a Chapter of Masters Elect of Nine, for the dispatch of business, and I will thank them for their assistance.

Inspector repeats this order, when the brethren give the signs up to and including those of this degree, hereafter described.

Master raps eight and one, which is repeated by the Inspector and Marshal, and all the companions clap eight and one with their hands, when the Master declares the Chapter duly open.

THE INEFFABLE DEGREES: MASTER ELECT OF NINE. 143

If a candidate is to be admitted, he is prepared in an outer room by one of the companions, who is detailed as Master of Ceremonies, and who hoodwinks him, conducts him to the door of the Chapter, and raps eight and one.

Inspector raps the same from the inside, and demands—Who comes there?

Master of Ceremonies—A companion, who is desirous of going in search of the assassins of Hiram Abiff.

Inspector opens the door, and the candidate is led in and placed in the west behind the Inspector's seat.

Master to candidate—What do you desire of us?

Candidate—To be installed as a Master Elect, and avenge the death of our late Grand Master, Hiram Abiff.

Master—Have you the courage to revenge his death?

Candidate—I have.

Master—Then you shall have the opportunity.

Candidate—I am ready.

Master—You shall now be shown the place where one of the murderers lies concealed; a stranger has discovered it to me, and if you have the resolution, follow the stranger.

Candidate—I will follow.

Master of Ceremonies leads candidate out, and through several passages, or rough roads, and then into a room lighted by a single taper, seats him on a block, representing a stone, and says—I am now going to leave you; after I have gone you can remove the bandage from your eyes and drink some water from the spring to refresh yourself after so fatiguing a journey.

Candidate removes the bandage, and discovers a basin of water with a tumbler beside it. He is also astonished to see a human head lying on the floor, and a bloody knife, or poinard, beside it. The Master of Ceremonies returns and directs candidate to take up the knife in his right hand and the head in his left.

Candidate takes them and (under instruction) goes to the door of the Chapter and raps eight and one.

Master of Ceremonies (who has gone in, and raps eight and one from inside)—Who comes there—what do you want?

Candidate—An Intendant of the Building, who desires to enter this Chapter of Masters Elect of Nine.

Master of Ceremonies—By what right do you claim this privilege?

obey the orders and decrees of the Council of Princes of Jerusalem, under penalties of all former degrees."[4]

For the fifth degree (Past Master) the penal dueguard sign is the placement of the thumb to one's mouth, again indicating the warning to keep silent.

A Softening of Penalties?

Freemasonry and many other secret societies have been under siege in recent years as the author of Codex Magica and a number of other courageous men have boldly come forward exposing the frightening, cold and bloody oaths taken by millions of Masons around the globe. As a consequence, as I understand it, the leadership of the Lodge and other groups has more recently begun to "soften the edges," so to speak and to eliminate some of the more egregious and ghastly phrases and words used in the rituals.

In June 2001, according to The Scottish Rite Journal, C. Fred Kleinknecht, Sovereign Grand Commander, 33°, the reigning potentate of Freemasonry, presented copies of the Revised Standard Pike Ritual to his subordinate Sovereign Grand Commanders.[5] Kleinknecht explained to his lieutenants that this new guide provides "modified

The fifth degree in the York Rite requires this Due-guard be given (thumb of the right hand to mouth) and a sworn oath that the candidate will never disclose "the secrets of a brother." (Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, 3d ed., p. 189) versions" of the seventh and twenty-seventh degrees which were originally created by Albert Pike, their much revered nineteenth century "Illustrious Sovereign Grand Master."[6] One can assume that to appease its critics, further editions of the ritual will water down the most grievous of the penalties.

Other ways, however, will undoubtedly be found to motivate the membership to keep the secrets, including banishment from elite status and possibly even the periodic assassination of disciples who stray and who recklessly disregard the dictate to retain secrecy.

Still it is of interest that the Masonic elite are embarrassed over being outed for their hideous oaths. What's more, in the Mormon Church (LDS), the penalty portions of the Masonic-oriented rituals celebrated in the Temple also have recently been watered down somewhat.

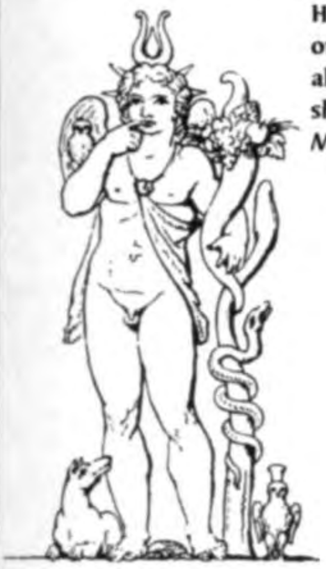
It sure seems as though the big-wigs of the secret orders are running scared, doesn't it? How they must despise Christians like Texe Marrs who are forcing these changes on a reluctant and evil Illuminati corps.

Pagan Origins of the Sign of Silence

The Masonic practice of signs warning of frightening penalties for breaking silence most definitely is of pagan origins. In Greece, Rome, Babylon, and Egypt, those who had loose lips often paid with their lives and fortunes, so sacred and guarded were the secrets of the Mystery Religions.

The Egyptians and Romans even worshipped a god of silence, Harpocrates, a form of the solar deity. Harpocrates was often pictured sitting on his mother's lap, suckling at her breast. Later, the Catholic Church adopted similar images in the veneration of Mary with child. Sometimes Harpocrates was pictured naked or with horns on his head, symbols of power. He often sat on a Lotus flower. The Lotus is a sexual symbol of the female vagina.[7]

In the active days of Benjamin Franklin and our nation's founders, their secret society counterparts in Great Britain made use of the god Harpocrates. Sir Francis Dashwood, instrumental in the British operation of the Illuminati, recruited nobility for his Hell-Fire Club, a secret group based on magic, satanism, and sex. Numerous harlots—and sometimes newly deflowered virgins—were scandalously used by Dashwood and his occultic, jolly men. On club premises, the members erected a statue of Harpocrates, depicting him solemnly holding a finger to his mouth to remind the frolicking members of the Hell-Fire Club that, "What happens here, stays here."[8]



Harpocrates, or Horus. Note the serpent and other symbols and figures around him. Notice also the finger to his mouth and the harp-shaped object on his head. The comedian Harpo Marx imitated this deity.

Harpocrates the sun god on a magical gem. (From the book, Jesus Christ, Sun of God: Ancient Cosmology and Early Christian Symbolism, by David Fiedeler, Quest Books, 1983)

Rome also had the Mystery Goddess Angerona. Her statue showed Angerona as a beautiful woman holding a finger to her mouth, "the emblem of secrecy and mystery."[9] Angerona watched over the sexual promiscuity goings-on at various orgies connected with the festivals of the solstices and the changing of the seasons.

The Mystery Religions of the Romans and other peoples especially needed the utmost secrecy because, during the higher initiations, the unspoken names of the hidden or unknown god, or gods, was often revealed. As the Christians gained in numbers and influence, they began to properly understand that these names were actually synonyms for Satan, Lucifer, the Devil. Great effort was therefore taken by pagans to obscure or prevent the unmasking of this satanic connection.[10]

An interesting sidenote: As a child watching TV in the early days (1950s), one of the most popular programs was a game show hosted by Jewish comedian Groucho Marx. Groucho had a brother, Harpo Marx, who was also a comedian and starred in numerous TV programs and in movies. Harpo always played the cherubic character of a mute young boy, with blond hair in curls. In other words, Harpo was cast in the image of Harpocrates, god of silence and secrecy, also known as Horus the child.

A chronicle of the great Web shakeout

Philip Kaplan surfs through his E-mail and bursts out laughing. "Look at that. That number means there are 1,129 of them—all in the past month. I've gotten more than that, but I've deleted a bunch." Who is Philip Kaplan, and why is he so popular? A month ago, the 24-year-old programmer was living the hermetic existence of a young entrepreneur, subsisting on fast food and working 15-hour days out of his Manhattan loft to build a consulting business. But on Memorial Day, he put up a Web site challenging visitors to pick the next dot-com flameout. He gave it a vulgar if somewhat catchy name, awarded based on how many players selected the company and the severity of the bad news. Companies that aren't widely picked to crater but do so anyway are the ones that generate the most points.

Kaplan gets all his information by encouraging his audience to tell him confidentially what's happening in their companies. Then, usually at midnight, he

Up to Their Necks in Mischief

When it's your neck up there on the chopping block, you don't want a dull blade.

— Anonymous spectator in crowd at guillotine execution, Paris, France, 1789

You've no doubt heard the old saying "up to their necks in mischief," haven't you? Well, it is definitely applicable to the Illuminist elite and their legion of secret society puppets.

Hanging over the fireplace in the famous Green Room at the White House in Washington, D.C. is an acclaimed oil portrait of Benjamin Franklin, one of our country's most celebrated "founding fathers." It depicts the famed statesman sitting studiously, poring over an ancient document which he is holding with his right hand. His left hand, meanwhile, is at his throat, set with the finger in a V-design, the thumb pushing upward to his chin. Franklin's neck is a prominent focus of the painting. Obviously, this is a sign Franklin is communicating.

I have observed this same fascinating sign being performed by many other elitists, both ancient and modern. However, Old Ben certainly is the epitome of the occult secret society patriarch. This man's feats as a Mason and Rosicrucian are legendary. Mackey's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry acknowledges Franklin as "a devoted Freemason occupying for many years places of official prominence and serving his (Masonic) Brethren with conspicuous Masonic zeal and aptitude."[1]

The same Encyclopedia spends a great amount of space listing Franklin's exploits and positions held as a Freemason, not only in the United States, but in Great Britain and in France. In 1779, he was elected Worshipful Master of the Lodge of the Nine Sisters in Paris, and in 1782 he became head of a lodge of the Grand Orient de Paris. Earlier, Benjamin Franklin had officiated at the Masonic funeral of one of his "brothers," the monstrously wicked atheist, Voltaire.[2] Voltaire, as historians will attest, was certainly up to his neck in mischief.

The Neck A Sign of Sacrifice

A number of dictionaries of symbols state that the hand placed on the neck signifies sacrifice. Now sacrifice can have at least two meanings—one, the continuing threat of same penalty on all who are guilty of disclosing the secrets of this degree.

The candidate is then instructed in the signs, words and token in this degree, as follows:

Signs—Place the point of a poinard under your chin, and draw it downward to the waist, as if in the act of ripping open the body, speaking the word ZERBUL. The brother will answer by giving the Entered Apprentice's sign as on page 7, and saying ELIHAM. Another way is to clench the fingers of the right hand, extend the thumb, place it on the abdomen, and move it upwards to the chin, as if ripping open the body with a knife. The brother answers as before.

Words—The pass-words are Eliham and Zerbal. Sacred words, Zerbal, Beniah, Benhakar, Bendaka, &c.

Candidate is now clothed as a companion of this degree, and salutes the Senior Warden as a Master Elect of Fifteen.

If there is no other business before the Chapter, it is then closed in same manner as in the preceding degree, except that the Master and other officers rap three times five, and the companions clap three times five with their hands, &c.

omon. It is hung with red and white curtains, and is lighted by twelve candles on four triangular branches.

The officers consist of Thrice Potent Master, representing King Solomon, sitting in the east: Grand Inspector in the west, and Master of Ceremonies.

The brethren wear white aprons, each with an inflamed heart embroidered or painted upon it, and lined and bordered with black. The ribbon, or Order, is similar to that in the preceding degree, except that in place of three heads, three hearts appear upon it. The jewel is the same.

In opening the Chapter, Thrice Potent Master raps ten, and Grand Inspector rises. Master makes the usual inquiries as to whether the Chapter is duly guarded, and the duties of the several officers, as in former degrees, which are answered by the Inspector.

Master raps eleven, and inquires of Grand Inspector—What is the hour?

Grand Inspector—It is twelve, Thrice Potent.

Master raps twelve, which is repeated by the officers, and the brethren clap twelve with their hands: Master says—If it is twelve it is time to labor by the greatest of lights. I pronounce this Grand Chapter open.

The brethren now give the signs of the different degrees, and then those of this degree, hereafter described.

If a candidate is to be admitted, he is prepared outside by the Master of Ceremonies, who brings him hoodwinked to the door, and gives twelve raps, which are answered by twelve by the Inspector, who demands, who comes there? &c.

Master of Ceremonies—A Master Elect of Fifteen desires to receive the degree of Sublime Knight.

Candidate gets admittance in the same manner as in the previous degree, and is led to the Grand Inspector in the west, who examines him in all former degrees.

One of the signs for ritual of the Grand Master Elect Degree is a dagger under the chin. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 146) the penalties to be applied to punish those adepts and initiates who so impertinently reveal the secrets of the Order; and two, the willingness of the individual performing the sign to sacrifice himself for the good of the Order, or for the good of the cause or Great Work of the Illuminati.

The Neck Ritual

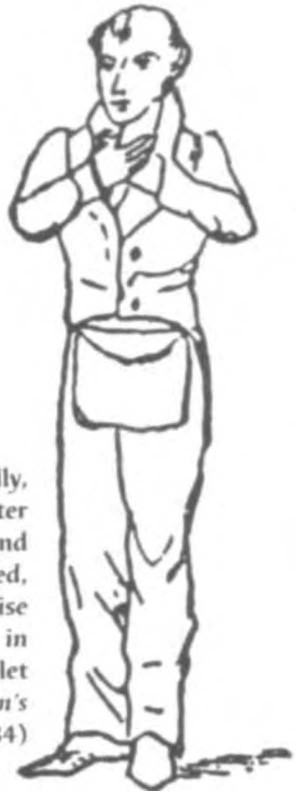
The neck, being the bridge to the head and brain (intellect) and the point at which the jugular vein can be ruptured by a knife or stone thrust, does seem to be an appropriate place to physically focus this sign. Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor summarizes the "Penal" code of Freemasonry. That reference book says the various penal signs are designed so that each "intimates that the stiff neck of the disobedient shall be cut off from the head of the living..."[3]

The ritual for the Grand Master Elect Degree, according to Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, has the candidate either placing the point of a knife under the chin, or alternatively clenching the fingers of the right hand, extending the thumb, placing it on the abdomen, and moving it upwards to the chin, as if ripping the body open with a knife.

In the York Rite, the Past Master, or Fifth Degree, the candidate places the thumb of his right hand (fingers clinched) upon his lips. This, says Duncan's, "alludes to the penalty of having his tongue split from tip to root."[4]

The "Pain in the Neck" Degree

And finally, according to Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, the candidate for the Select Master Degree makes the second sign for that degree by crossing the hands and arms just below his neck—creating sort of a scissors effect as if he is ready to chop off his own neck—and then he draws the crossed hands and arms downward. The meaning is said to indicate the willingness of the candidate to have the body quartered if he discloses any secrets. (I informally call this the "Pain in the Neck" sign since it starts with a scissors at the neck).



The sign I call the "Pain in the Neck." Actually, it is the second sign in the Select Master degree and is made by crossing the hands and arms. Then, after this scissor look is effected, with a quick motion draw the hands edge-wise across the body downwards as if you were in the act of quartering the body. Finally, let them drop by your sides. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 84)

THE RUSSIAN SPHINX

EVERY age has its riddle. Helena Petrovna Blavatsky was the enigma of the nineteenth century. The publication of her letters and also those of Mahatmas Morya and Koot Hoomi cast a new and fuller light upon her extraordinary personality. She is revealed as a woman in the memory of the living, not as a half mythical sibyl from some distant age or the Pythia of some ancient oracle. Though but a few decades have passed since Madame Blavatsky departed from this life, hers is already a name to conjure with. She is the third person of a bewildering triad—St.-Germain, Cagliostro, and Blavatsky.

As though by common consent, humanity attacks viciously and relentlessly anyone who assails the infallibility of the mediocre. Dare to preach or even presume that order reigns behind the chaos of life—that anything in the universe other than man has intelligence—and an outraged society shows its claws but partly hidden by the semblance of its culture. Oppose the knowledge of the few to the ignorance of the many, and morons are provoked to a frenzy of resentment. A large portion of mankind has been baptized in the faith of the commonplace. Stupidity is the vogue and all men dread to be out of style. The fear is not that the occultist may be wrong; the fear is that the occultist may be right. To the criminal we may give the benefit of the doubt; to the occultist, never. The criminal violates only our laws; the occultist (Que le Diable l'emporte!) violates our sacred opinions.

Like children, incapable of the emotions of maturity, we are pitifully deficient in our grasp of spiritual values. Indifferent to the light given us and the efforts made for our improvement, we permit our petty ambitions to overshadow higher issues. We tolerate every form of error, but are utterly intolerant of Truth. We are generous toward any state but that of wisdom, which, when recognized, we swear to destroy. Occultism is regarded as a synonym for imposture, and the philosopher can hardly expect a better fate than hemlock or the rood in an age

Creating a new corporation

How Peter Drucker radically changed American business

In The Capitalist Philosophers (Times Business Books, 2000, $26), Andrea Gabor looks at the people behind the ideas that shaped this dynamic age. This article is adapted from a chapter on management consultant Peter Drucker.

One of Jack Welch's first decisions after being named General Electric's new CEO in 1980 was to meet with Peter F. Drucker. The Austrian intellectual, then 71, and the working-class boy turned business executive (at age 45, the youngest CEO in GE history) seemed like unlikely soul mates. Yet, after little more than an hour, Welch was hooked.

Drucker, in his slow, measured, Viennese-accented baritone, had asked one of the "big questions" that so intrigued Welch, a question that would dominate the executive's thoughts and actions for the next several years. " 'If you weren't already in this business, would you choose to get into it now?' " Welch recalls Drucker asking. "You could write a book and not learn as much as you would from that question."

The question spurred Welch to act. He began shedding businesses in which GE could not be No. 1 or No. 2. The massive restructuring helped boost GE's market value from $12 billion in 1981 to $492 billion in 1999 and, in the bargain, made Welch one of America's most admired business executives.

Management guru Peter Drucker
● Asking the "big questions" of corporate executives

In many respects, though, Drucker was an unlikely apostle of management. Born in Hapsburgian Vienna, he worked as a journalist before moving to the United States in 1937. He believed that the failure of European capitalism to give "status and function" to the individual had paved the way for fascism. That idea fostered Drucker's romance with large corporations, which he saw as "the representative institution" for building citizenship in U.S. society. In 1943, when most Americans were preoccupied with World War II, Drucker gained entree to General Motors and conducted a sweeping analysis of its structure and management. He published his observations in Concept of the Corporation, which quickly became required reading for managers across the country.

Over the course of six decades, Drucker became the most sought-after adviser to CEOs, among them Walter Wriston of Citicorp, David Rockefeller of Chase Manhattan Corp., Henry Luce of Time Inc., and Mark Willes of Times Mirror Co. He invented the term "management by objectives" and helped develop objective measures for pay and promotion. He identified the importance of the "knowledge worker"—the elite of the white-collar work force—earlier than almost anyone else.

He also wanted to orient companies around consumers, not just technology. Functioning more like that famous Viennese psychoanalyst, Drucker probed deeply, asking questions and drawing connections. He would lecture executives on such topics as the demographic changes in Latin America, including the shift of peasant populations from the countryside to the cities, and what it meant to GE's businesses. "You're in the transportation business. Do you think the move to big cities means a new market for transportation?" he would query.

Jet power. Drucker's ability to grasp new ideas—and to inspire the confidence of GE managers—was crystallized in the role he played helping GE's jet-engine division revolutionize the commercial aircraft business. GE had to convince aircraft makers who had long catered to the military that it was worth spending enormous sums of money to design civilian aircraft. Drucker's role was to help GE's jet-engine executives, "all of whom were technically oriented, most of whom came out of the military, understand . . . the value system of potential customers."

Drucker was sometimes wrong, with stunning long-term consequences. "We designed the world's most scientific compensation system, and it damn near ruined GE," admits Drucker with calculated self-deprecating humor. He helped come up with what remains, according to Drucker, "the foundation for [most] compensation systems"—one tied to return on investment. But it stifled innovation by penalizing managers who sacrificed short-term gains for long-term growth.

In his 90s, Drucker still consults, though he rarely leaves his modest home in Claremont, Calif. He still serves on the faculty of the Drucker School of Management of Claremont Graduate University. But he is no longer convinced that corporations are the institutions for "creating citizenship" and worries that the mobility of the new knowledge society is fostering new social problems. "Corporations once built to last like pyramids are now more like tents," he says. ●

Brother Michael A. Richards
Renaissance Man, Not "Kramer"

The Scottish Rite Freemasons, on the cover of the September 2000 issue of their official journal, recognized "Brother Michael A. Richards" as a "Renaissance Man, Not Kramer." Richards, a Jew, is the well known comic actor who won raves for his role as "Kramer" in the long-running #1 hit TV show, Seinfeld. Inside the Masonic Lodge magazine, it was noted that Richards holds the 32nd degree of Freemasonry and has received the red cap. Richards says he is a keen student of Masonry and its symbolism and has over 1,000 masonic books in his home in California. Observe Michael Richards' clearly Masonic handsign, which presents the V and is the "due-guard" sign of initiation in the Order of Knights Templar which relates to the penalty of the obligation—the oath agreeing that one's head will be impaled on the highest spire in Christendom as a penalty for revealing secrets. The sign is also similar to the sign for the "due-guard" of the Past Master, 5th degree in the Scottish Rite.

Hand On Heart—Sign of Devotion to the Chiefs

Masonry's homage to the heart by the Sign of Hand on Heart can best be understood by the fact that the leaders of the Masonic Lodge themselves boast that the rituals of Freemasonry hearken back to ancient Egyptian religion. The Egyptian Book of the Dead addressed prayers to "My heart of my mother...My heart of transformations," meaning the source of rebirths.

The Mother Goddess of Egypt was worshipped by various names — Isis, Hathor, Rhea, etc. She was the one to whom the people "gave their hearts," meaning their heart-felt devotion and allegiance. As the Goddess of sacrifices, it was deemed necessary by her admirers that men should sacrifice their "energies" on her behalf. The Goddess was said to take possession of men's hearts.

Cutting Out Hearts and Eating Them!

In the pyramids of Mexico, Central and South America, the gods were also gods of sacrifice and, once again, the heart was the centerpiece of devotion. Bloodthirsty followers, egged on by high priests, cut out the hearts of victims of tribal wars.

On the stone altars of the temples, the priests cut the heart out of the breast of sacrificial victims while they were still alive! The hearts were eaten, just as they were in ancient Egypt and as they are in a number of satanic cults in existence today.

Back to Egypt

Freemasonry today freely admits its connection to the religion and rituals of ancient Egypt and proudly displays Egyptian idols (the Sphinx, etc.) in and around its lodge facilities and at its international headquarters, the House of the Temple in Washington, D.C.

Moreover, in the ritual ceremonies of the higher Masonic degrees, the Hindu pantheon of deities is honored as the true "Holy Trinity."[1] In the Hindu religion, the whole universe is said to be centered in the heart. The Yogi, in meditation, is claimed to be listening to the heartbeat of the universe, which is the great god Shiva's beating heart. This expresses the basic oriental idea that divinity lies in the heart of every person, but needs to be "realized," or awakened.

Devotion to the Secret Chiefs

Within the Illuminati structure, the initiate is taught in no uncertain terms that he must devote his whole heart to the "secret chiefs," the top elite who comprise the Inner Circle. His life must be dedicated to the goals they have set, for they, in turn, are being directed by the Hierarchy, the spirit beings (Satan and his demons) who have given them The Plan. In other words, the life of every Illuminist is a divine temple, and through ritual, magic, and loyal devotion the Great Work of alchemical transformation is to be accomplished within the individual heart and within the world at large. Ordo Ab Chao — order must come out of chaos.

A Number of Meanings

As the evidence points out in the illustrations in this section, the "hand on heart" sign has a number of meanings, depending particularly on the exact placement of the hand and the positioning of the fingers. As always, the left hand on heart indicates the sinister occultic path. The thumb extended upward leaving the hand squared in the "L" position signals fidelity, sincerity and being "on the square." The thumb upward symbolizes the child-soul, the heart in subjection to higher powers.

The sign of Hand on Heart is practiced and taught in the rituals for many degrees of Freemasonry. For example:

- In the Degree of Sublime Knights Elected, the candidate is instructed in the sign. His right hand is extended across the chest to the heart and the thumb is pointed upward. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 147)

- In the Degree of Companion Select, the sign is given with the right hand. (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 86)

- In the Degree of Select Master, the initiate is told "The most popular signs in Masonry are made in this manner: Place the palm of the right hand on the heart, and pronounce the word SECRESY." (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 80)

- In the Degree of the Knight of the Pelican and Eagle Sovereign Prince Rose Croix of Heredom, the lecturer directs the assembled members to "pass to the Black Room, 18° collars being reversed." Following this instruction, the sign of "right hand on left breast is given." (18th Degree Secret Initiation Ceremony)

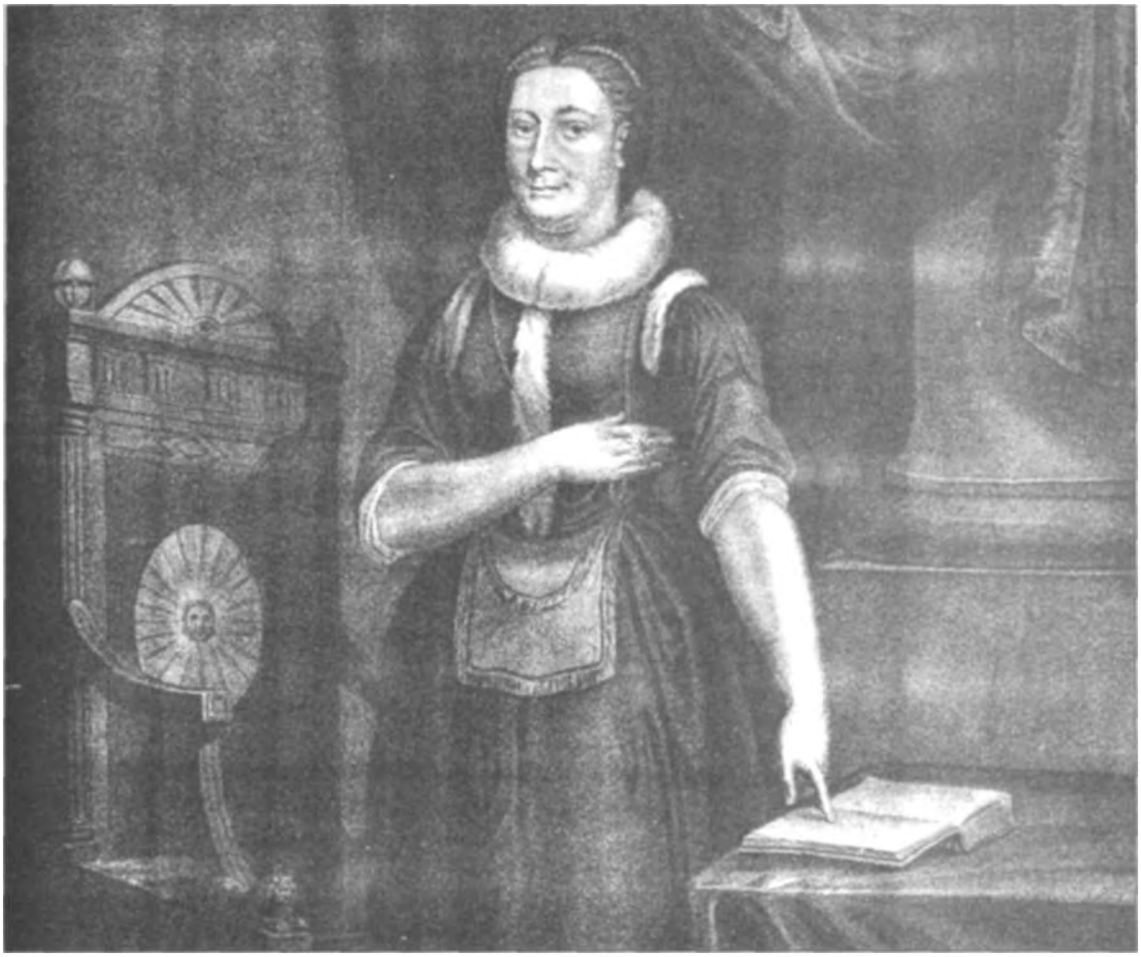
- In the Degree of Mark Master, the members form and march around the Lodge, singing a song. The words of the song include the following: "Mark Masters all appear Before the Chief Overseer... You who have passed the square, For your rewards prepare, Join heart and hand...Wages to you are due, At your command." (Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, p. 161)

Separation of Fingers as Sign is Given

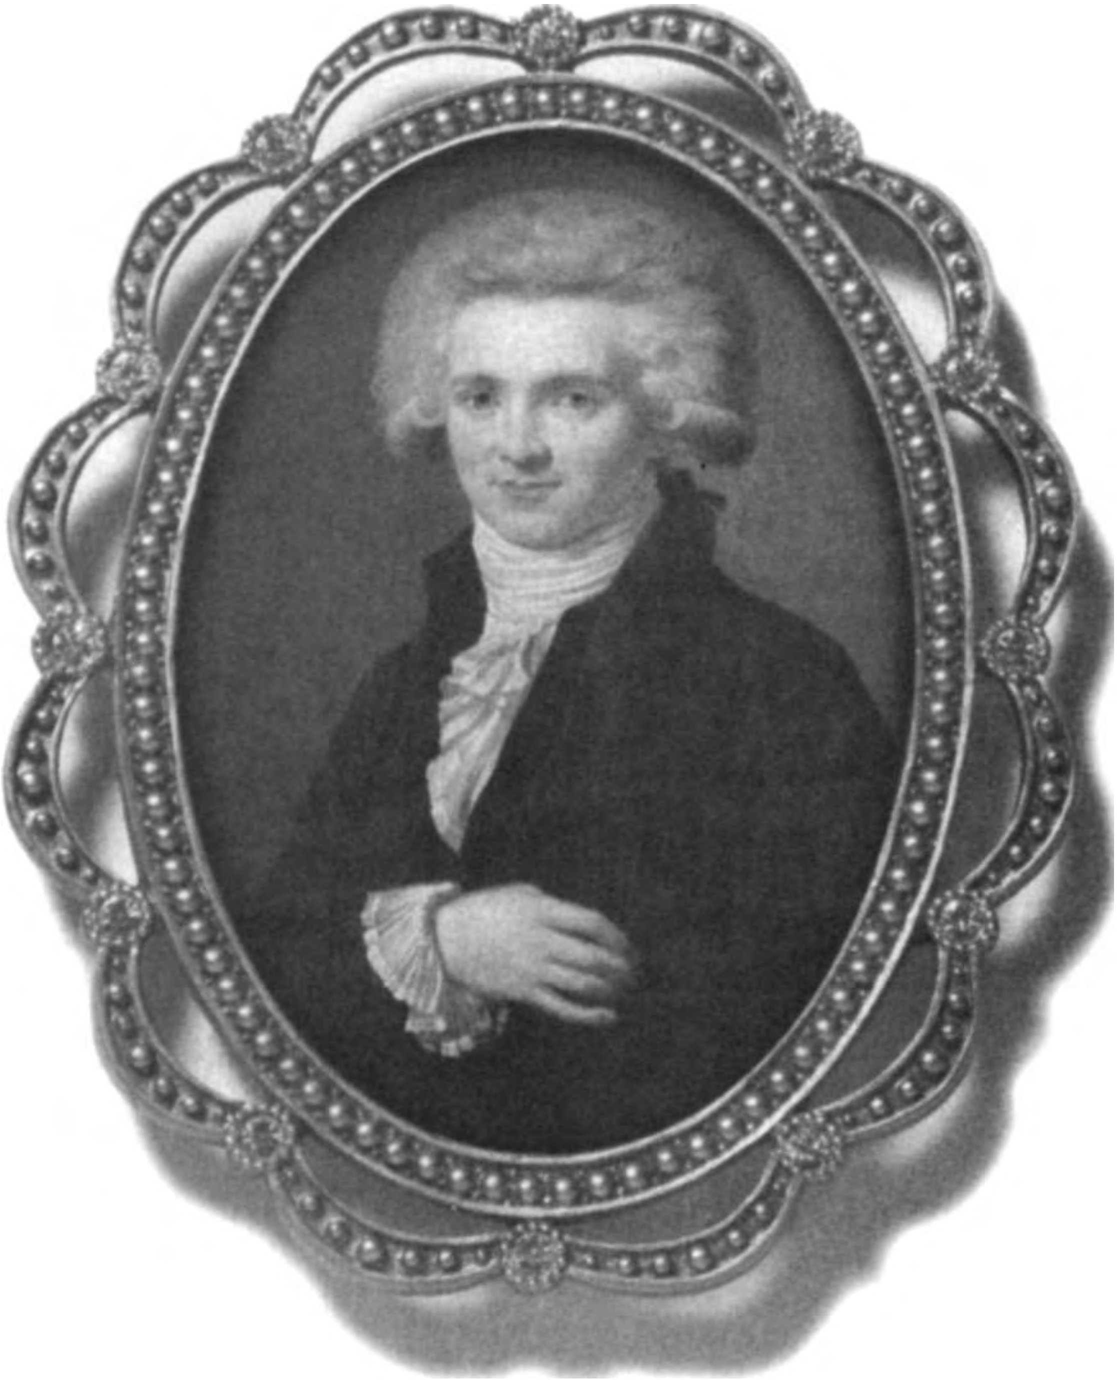
Separating the fingers has its own interpretation, often being the sign of choice for cabalists who employ the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in their hand on heart communications. The illustrations of Christopher Columbus and Ignatius Loyola in this chapter are prime examples. Both of these historical characters were members of secret cabalistic orders founded by the rabbis of the Jewish Sanhedrin.

Erasing Confusion

The Illuminist/Masonic sign should not be confused with the American custom of placing one's hand over the heart while reciting the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag (Citizens of some other nations practice this same tradition). Again, in judging the Illuminist intent, we look to such factors as time period, the history and affiliations, who's performing the sign, and other factors. As always in this book, I leave it to you, the reader, to form your own learned opinion of what you are seeing.



Freemasons strongly deny there are any women in their Order. But in Mac key's Encyclopedia of Freemasonry we find this picture captioned, "Lady Freemason Mrs. Elizabeth Aldworth." In the text (page 353), Mackey. 33°, former Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite, writes that, "there are a few instances in which the otherwise unalterable rule of female exclusion has been made to yield."



Robespierre, the heartless monster of the French Revolution. Inspirer of the Jacobins sect, Robespierre caused untold thousands to be sent to the guillotine. Rejecting Jesus, he called for a new religion based on worship of a nameless "Supreme Being." After relishing so many of his opponents being sent to their death, one day the tumbrel carriage came also for Robespierre, the Jewish plotter of terror, who himself lost his head. As his head rolled, the mob laughed and cried out "Do you feel any pain, your majesty?"

Was Christopher Columbus a clandestine member of the Knights Templar, or another 15th century secret society? Much evidence exists confirming exactly that. So, too, does the cabalistic sign he displays of the left-handed path of the initiate. (Oil painting by Sebastiano del Piombo, 1519)

Born, Ludwigshafen, Germany.
Married, Hannelore Kohl; two children. Kohl was given a remarkably ecumenical education—including, over time, studies of Jewish history, religion, and culture.

The chancellor's nickname, Der Schwarze Riese ("The Black Giant"), refers both to his size (six feet four inches and approximately 300 pounds) and to the traditional color of German conservative parties.

Superb interpersonal skills have won him the enduring support of fellow leaders. George Bush is still received with honors when in Bonn, and Kohl and Boris Yeltsin have been known to discuss politics in a sauna. "We're not discussing our good looks," says the chancellor.

Last fall, Kohl, 67, passed his mentor, Konrad Adenauer, to become the longest-serving chancellor in Germany's postwar history (since October 1982). He has fulfilled his dream of a unified Germany and currently leads the drive for a single European currency. The elder statesman among the world's leading industrialized nations, he intends to stand for election to a fifth term in 1998.

Helmut Kohl was the longest-serving Chancellor in the history of post-World War II Germany. Kohl, a servant of the Illuminati's inner circle, worked to unify Germany and empower the European Community. He is a Bilderberger, a covert Jewish Mason, and initiate of numerous secret societies and orders. Here we see the Chancellor strike an Illuminist pose, being the only person pictured who gives the necessary sign. (Photo: Vanity Fair magazine, November 1997)

Interview

Sharp Words From Iran

Iran's foreign minister talks about his government's evolving view of Saddam Hussein, Yasir Arafat and George Bush

BY LALLY WEYMOUTH

IS IRAN STILL IN THE "Axis of Evil" with North Korea and Iraq? Or could it be an ally in a future war against Saddam Hussein? In an exclusive interview, NEWSWEEK's Lally Weymouth grilled Iranian Foreign Minister Kamal Kharrazi in New York last week about his country's relations with tyrants and terrorists. Excerpts:

Would you support the United States if it goes to war against Saddam Hussein?

We are basically against a military operation against Iraq. Of course it all depends. If Americans are going to attack Iraq unilaterally, we certainly would not be supportive. In the case that Iraq does not comply [with U.N. resolutions] and the Security Council would authorize using force against Iraq, it would be a different story. But basically we cannot agree with the U.S. policy to use force in order to change the regime of another country.

I don't know how to put this delicately, but I can't imagine that you would be too sad to see Saddam Hussein go.

It is a matter of principle. We have the United Nations system. We believe that this is the right of people in each country to decide about their future, not others from the outside.

The Ayatollah Khomeini wanted to replace Saddam in the 1980s.

This is completely different. At that time Iraq had invaded Iran. We do not see Iraq invading the United States. The United States does not like the regime of Iraq. But the United States does not have any legitimate right to change it.

There have been reports that Al Qaeda members are in Iraq.

In the northern area there are some groups associated with Al Qaeda. The leader was arrested recently at the Meerabad [Iran] airport when he was trying to come to Iran illegally. He was sent to Amsterdam [where he was detained].

Do the Iraqis have weapons of mass destruction?

They have chemical weapons. They have used them against us. The inspectors will have to [determine] if there is a stockpile of weapons of mass destruction or not.

> "[The Iraqis] have chemical weapons. They have used them against us. The inspectors will have to [determine] if there is a stockpile of weapons of mass destruction or not."
> —KAMAL KHARRAZI

Surely you think that those weapons should be eliminated.

Yes, sure. That is [also] the concern we have about Israel because it has nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and we believe that the Middle East should be free from any weapons of mass destruction.

But let's face it, Israel hasn't been dropping chemical weapons on Iran.

No, not yet.

Why do you back Hizbullah, a terrorist group fighting Israel?

Hizbullah is a legitimate party in the Lebanese political system that has been resisting occupation.

Why in the world would you send a boat loaded with arms, the Karine A, to Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat?

Who says that we sent that?

The United States government.

This is an example of a United States government claim that is not substantiated. In fact we as the government of Iran have been asking everyone if there is any evidence to prove that this ship was loaded in Iran. But all the information was from Israeli sources. One has to be very simple-minded to fill up a ship with arms manufactured in Iran and send it to Palestine under the eyes of satellites.

What are your relations now with Yasir Arafat?

I know that Arafat has not been doing a good job. This is for sure.

He has not been doing a good job how?

He has not been strong enough and he has been humiliated by the Israelis. There are differences among Palestinians themselves. Not all people support him. But still he is the president of Palestine.

Do you support suicide bombings?

I don't like these sorts of questions.

It is a pretty big issue.

No, this is not the way to interview. If you have any meaningful questions I will let you ask [them].

Do you recognize the right of Israel to exist as a state?

We do not recognize Israel as a government. We believe that eventually Palestinian refugees have to return to their homeland. Under the supervision of the United Nations, there should be a referendum and the original inhabitants of that land, including Palestinians, Jews and Christians, should decide about any political entity to be established.

How would you describe your relations with the United States?

Although Iran played a very important and constructive role in Afghanistan, right after the Afghanistan crisis President Bush came up with the notion of the "Axis of Evil." He accused us of supporting Al Qaeda, which was not true. Recently, the president asked the people of Iran to rise up against the government. All of this has been intervention in the affairs of Iran, which has been totally rejected by the Iranian people. ■

THE SWORD OF ISLAM

With Pakistan isolated and near economic collapse, its leader plays the religion card

By TIM MCGIRK NEW DELHI

IT'S BECOME A HABIT IN PAKISTAN THAT whenever a ruler's popularity disintegrates, he or she begins waving the scimitar of Islam. Never mind that not once since Pakistan became a nation 51 years ago has this noisy brandishing of faith ever worked to bolster the leader's popularity. Now, with Pakistan ostracized after its nuclear tests and on the edge of economic collapse, Prime Minister Mian Mohammed Nawaz Sharif is reviving the old custom of trying to make the Islamic Republic of Pakistan even more Islamic than it already is.

Even in the best of times, the implementation of Shari'a, or Islamic law, led to quarreling among the country's 72 Muslim sects and subsects over the "pure" interpretation of the law. And this could be the worst of times for Pakistan to try to revive fundamentalist laws. Everything seems to be going wrong for Nawaz Sharif. His support of the Taliban militia in neighboring Afghanistan has drawn enmity from Iran and the Central Asian republics (see following story). India and Pakistan have intensified their cross-border artillery fire in disputed Kashmir. Nearly bankrupt, Pakistan may run out of foreign exchange by the end of the month, and the Karachi stock exchange imploded after the May 28 underground nuclear tests, wiping out half its share value.

If the nukes didn't scare off foreign investors, the mob outrage over the U.S. missile strike last month in nearby Afghanistan certainly did. Diplomats and executives from many Western companies fled Pakistan, fearing revenge attacks by supporters of Saudi extremist Osama bin Laden, the intended target of the American raid. In the port city of Karachi, ethnic gangs armed with grenades and machine guns prowl neighborhoods hunting for enemies. Sectarian rivalry among Muslims has become so fierce that some clergymen post bodyguards at their mosques to guard against bomb throwers speeding by on motorcycles. In Karachi, kidnappings of clergymen have become routine; their mosques are then seized by adversaries who try to convert the prayer-goers to a harsher vision of Islam.

Will a stronger dose of religion cure Pakistan's ills? Many of Nawaz Sharif's countrymen think it could send Pakistan into terminal decline. According to the well-respected Karachi newspaper Dawn, people "just want a little improvement in their lives from the tyranny and callousness of Pakistani officialdom." Political opponents, including, of course, ex-Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, say the new Islamic bill is likely to increase that tyranny. One interpretation holds that this amendment will anoint Nawaz Sharif as a religious dictator, a supreme arbiter of what is considered good and evil under Islam. Nawaz Sharif, though, contends that only a strict adherence to Shari'a—which relies on the Koran and on the Sunna, a record of the Prophet Muhammad's deeds and sayings—can save Pakistan from "corruption and maladministration."

At the moment though, Nawaz Sharif is hoping for a more earthly kind of intervention: he is in New York City this week at the United Nations, where he will appeal to Bill Clinton to lift economic sanctions—imposed after the nuclear tests—and push the International Monetary Fund into mounting a rescue. As part of the trade-off, Clinton wants him to sign the nuclear test-ban treaty. This may help him get the money he urgently needs, but would anger fundamentalists at home who would see this as capitulation and surrender.

If Nawaz Sharif succeeds in driving his Islamic bill through both the National Assembly and the Senate in the coming weeks, Pakistan, long a reliable U.S. ally in South Asia, will become one of the world's

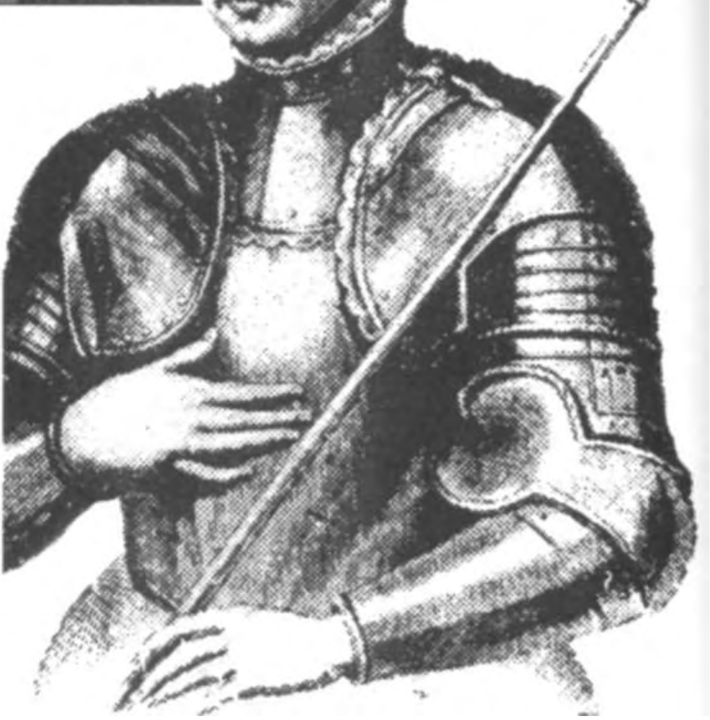
A member of the Masonic Lodge, Stiles is giving the Lodge sign in this drawing, published in The Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, D.D., L.L.D, President of Yale College, edited by Franklin Dexter, M.A. (Volume I, January 1, 1769-March 13, 1776). Above Stiles' head is the sacred sun symbol, and in his left hand he is displaying a mysterious book, which may or may not be the Holy Bible. Interesting, too, is the collar men of this era wore, which resembles the ancient, finely manicured beard of the Babylonian historical elite.



The founder of the Catholic order, the Jesuits, Ignatius Loyola. Loyola, a Spanish general, had been a member of the Alumbrados, the Order of the Illuminati. The Pope commissioned Loyola to counter the Protestant Reformation. Loyola's Jesuits used every means to do so, from deception to outright murder. To boost demonic control over the priests and soldiers of his new Jesuit Order, Loyola instituted methods of prayer and meditation taught by the Moslems and Moors. These "Spiritual Exercises of Loyola" continue to be employed by Jesuit priests and by monks, priests, and nuns of many other orders as well.

MARTIN Luther, priest who set in motion the Protestant Reformation, is shown in this picture from Christian News, a periodic Lutheran publication, giving a masonic sign. The same Lutheran newspaper carries on its masthead (pg. 1) of every edition Luther's seal, of Rosicrucian design. In fact, Luther was a Rosicrucian. Masonic signs and grips closely parallel those of Rosicrucians (Christian News, February 18, 2003, p. 1).

In an article on the internet entitled "Calvinism," John Paul Jones quoted Masonic scholar Manly P. Hall, 33°, as affirming that Protestant reformer Martin Luther was a Rosicrucian initiate. At far left is Luther's seal with author Jones showing how if the petals of the flower are connected, an occult pentacle results.

Eating Raoul
.. .and Others

"How would you like to bite into a part-human bacon cheeseburger?" asks Michael Colgan, Ph.D., in the journal Nutrition A fitness (sic) (vol. 10. no. 1 & 2). In five years they'll be at a burger stand near you, predicts the author. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's research center in Beltsville, Md., has been inserting human genes into fertilized swine eggs, and a herd of "hupigs" now resides at the center. One goal of such research is to manufacture "spare parts for humans," that is, genetically engineered organs to replace diseased human organs; another goal is to "design" animals for more efficient meat production.

The USDA creatures reportedly suffer from coordination so poor that they can barely walk. They also are subject to arthritis and lung and gut diseases. State and federal laws severely restrict access by journalists and the public, and photographs of the "hunimals" are forbidden.

In Michael Hoffman's excellent book exposing the psychological and alchemical bases of the elite, Secret Societies and Psychological Warfare, the author included this news clipping about the horrors of inserting human genes into swine and other animals. The phrase "Eating Raoul." comes from a cult-classic film about people who enjoy eating human flesh.

Triangles Up, Triangles Down, Triangles, Triangles All Around

Everywhere one turns today the triangle is seen. On TV, and in art, architecture, product design, advertising, commercial packaging, and in religion it is ubiquitous. I am convinced that this simple, yet profound device, the triangle, somehow has a mystical, mesmerizing effect on men's minds. The never-ending blizzard of triangle designs we encounter daily is intended to induce a trance state in those who are bombarded day and night by it.

Back to Babylon

For an answer why the triangle may be the ultimate satanic symbol for Illuminists we go back in time to uncover its origins. A book on mathematics history called Early Computations tells us that "A Babylonian tablet dated around 1900 BC to 1600 BC and called 'Plimpton 322' deals with Pythagorean triplets." This ancient document detailed an elementary knowledge of triangles and proportions.

The Triangle as Woman's "Holy Door"

Barbara Walker, in her The Woman's Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets, outlines how the ancient Mystery Religions greatly honored the triangle as the sign of deity. She notes that the Hindus, too, borrowed this emblem as their tantric (sexual) female Triangle of Life. It was known as the Kali Yantra, sign of the female vulva. In Egypt, the triangle was a hieroglyphic sign for "woman." In ancient Greece, the sexual intent is clear in that the triangle represented the Holy Door, genitalia of the All-Mother Demeter, known as "Mother Delta."[1]

"The triangle was everywhere connected with the female trinity, and a frequent component of monograms of goddesses," writes Walker.[2]

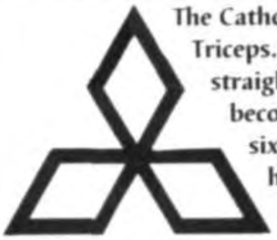
It is easily understood, therefore, why the gay homosexual movement adopted the sign of the pink triangle as its emblem. For male homosexuals particularly, the goddess image and feminine archetype were powerful motivators dictating adaptation of the triangle as symbol of "gay liberation."

To occultists, the triangle pointing upward represents fire and that pointing downward water. To combine, balance, and unite the two brings dualism, or equilibrium, which is a goal of Freemasonry and a cardinal tenet of all Illuminist religious systems.

The Pope's Triceps

The Vatican also got into the triangle act. In some Roman Catholic churches today, behind the altar we find displayed the all-seeing eye inside a triangle. Meanwhile, the Pope can often be seen wearing the symbol of the triceps on his vestments or on his Dagon Fish God hat, which has its own unique triangular design.

The triceps is a Nordic design of three earth diamonds thought to invoke earth energy powers and spiritual magic. By adding straight lines on its three sides to fill in the open spaces, we discover that the Triceps unexpectedly becomes a larger triangle with a concealed Jewish Star of David (six-pointed star) within.

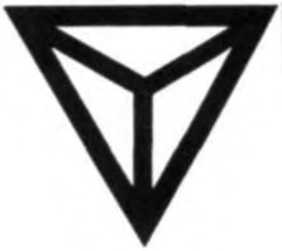


The Catholic Pope often wears this symbol, the Triceps. If the broken sides are filled in by straight lines from the tip to tip, the Triceps becomes a single, larger triangle bearing a six-pointed star in its center. Here we have the concealed Jewish Star of David being worn by the Pope.

The Triangle and Freemasonry

Many erroneously believe that Freemasonry is a Christian religion and may be misled into thinking that the prominent use of the triangle in its rituals and its display of icons has a Christian purpose. But in his book, A Bridge to Light, an official Scottish Rite publication of the Supreme Mother Council, 33°, Rex Hutchins, 33° explains that the triangle of the Masonic Lodge represents pagan religions as well and he especially cites the Hindu trinity of gods, Brahma, Vishnu, and Shiva.[3]

I have mentioned elsewhere that a triangle symbol containing a letter "Y" inside which divides it internally into three triangles is called the Eye of the Dragon, or Dragon's Eye. Since Freemasonry has its all-seeing eye which represents Satan, the Dragon, again we have a connection.



Dragon's Eye

The Triangle and Astrology

In astrology we find the concept of the grand trine, which is considered very, very lucky. Joan Quigley, astrologer to movie stars and to President Ronald Reagan and First Lady Nancy Reagan, says that, "the grand trine is formed by three planets approximately 120 degrees apart. When you see this sign in the planets when forecasting their horoscope, you know they are about to hit (figuratively) a "grand slam home run."[4]

Quigley illustrates the grand trine in her book, What Does Joan Say?-My Seven

Years As White House Astrologer to Nancy and Ronald Reagan.[5] As it turns out, the astrological symbol for a grand trine is a triangle inside a circle.

This is the same symbol configuration adapted by Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) founder Bill Wilson to be the official logo of AA. My extensive research of Bill Wilson's life documents he was an occultist. He despised Christianity and adopted AA's concept of worship of an unnamed "Higher Power" to substitute for Jesus. Wilson came up with the logo for AA from a dream he had in which he saw the image of the triangle within a circle and knew it was to become the logo for AA.[6]

Grand Trine of Astrology

Do the Illuminati Secretly Worship the Great Goddess?

It is interesting that in the Jewish Cabala, we again find use of the triangle as a feminine vulva sign. Of the ten Sephiroth, the third Sephira, or Triad, is deemed of feminine potency. Formed as a triangle, it represents the "great productive Mother, who copulates and is united sexually with the Father." In effect, to cabalists she is the feminine form of "God."[7]

Just as Masons decry the equality of ordinary women, even denying women the opportunity to become a Mason in most orders, so do Orthodox Jews who practice cabalism openly proscribe and limit women's rights. Yet, we see that deeply hidden and imbedded in their secret doctrine, both Masonry and Cabalistic Judaism revere and honor the Great Goddess, just as does Roman Catholicism in the form of Mother Mary.

It may surprise male chauvinists, but the Goddess, the consort of Lucifer, the woman figure whose sign is the downward pointing triangle, reigns side-by-side with Jahbuhlun (Satan) over the Illuminati and its minions.

Call to Action and the American Catholic Rebellion
The Church In China, Still Under Siege

So many priests are now outed as homosexuals and pedophiles, this noted Catholic publication, The Catholic World Report devoted a special edition to the topic. The editors of this cover of the January, 1997, edition, call the problem a "Rebellion." The smiling Catholic prelate has a pink triangle on the cross, symbol of his cap (itself triangle-shaped upward) and the Bishop's hands are fixed in the triangle downward (feminine, delta position).

Homosexual activists have latched onto the pink-colored triangle as the chosen motif for their protests and demonstrations. On this page we find demonstrators holding up placards with the pink triangle and, at a university, the pink triangle against a black circle background on the hands of gay students. Then there is the "Subscribe!" to Frontiers magazine ad card, featuring a gay man with a rainbow-colored triangle on his chest. The newspaper clipping, "Colored Triangle Has Become Badge of Honor For Gays," comes from the Montreal, Canada, Gazette newspaper, June 28, 1992.

Colored triangle has become badge of honor for gays

CINDY RODRIGUEZ
HARTFORD COURANT

HARTFORD, Conn. —Gay men wore pink, and lesbians wore black.

Nazi Germany forced gay men and women to wear colored triangles as an announcement of their homosexuality — symbols of oppression and discrimination.

Over time the gay community has reclaimed the triangles and revised the meaning: they now symbolize gay pride.

"Never again will we let ourselves be oppressed," said Baruch Gould, 48, of New London, Conn., who wears a pink triangle as a "badge of honor."

Pink and black triangles have been highly visible at parades and other gay festivities in June, which is designated Gay Pride Month.

The triangles are not the only signs that have special meaning to those who wear them.

Rainbow flags, freedom rings, the labyris (a double-bladed axe), interlinked woman's symbols, the Greek letter lambda and the color lavender also are worn by those wishing to visually express pride for their homosexuality.

Rainbows symbolize hope for better days, Gould said. The colors represent a diverse world, while the arch gives a feeling of shelter.

Freedom rings are the most recent items to carry the rainbow. Introduced a year ago, they are a set of six aluminum rings — each a different color of the rainbow.

Designed by New York artist David Spada, the rainbows also appear in earrings, necklaces, bracelets, key rings and on caps and suspenders.

"For me, it's a visible piece of being lesbian and being proud of who I am," said Shawn Lang, 36, who wears freedom rings.

The labyris represents the double-bladed axe used by an ancient Amazonian goddess.

The Woman's Encyclopedia of Myths and Secrets by Barbara Walker says the labyris "has been adopted by lesbians as a symbol of reminiscence of the all-female community of Lesbos and its founding mothers, who worshiped only the goddess in nature and in each other."

The Greek letter lambda is used by men and women and are found on T-shirts, posters and jewelry. The the arms on the letter resemble the arms of justice and represent gay and lesbian rights.

Lavender's mixture of red and blue — colors associated with women and men — is a symbol of androgyny, Gould said. ☐

Inside the triangle (the triangle with concentric circles surrounding it) is the astrological and generative symbols of male and female combined, the Hermaphrodite. This is indicative of the Illuminati's principle of integration, or synthesis, of the dialectical process.

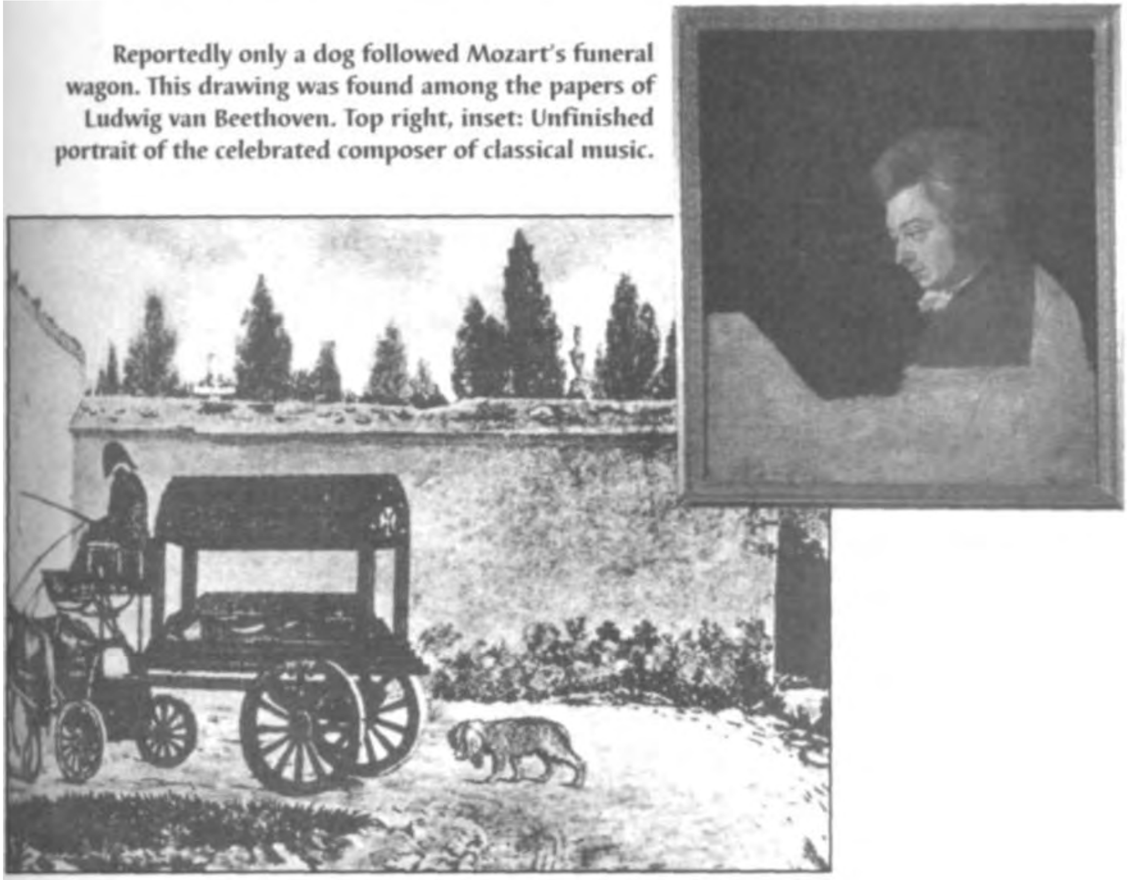
This is the back cover of the book, Mozart and freemasonry, published by Dorset Press, a firm that publishes many masonic-related volumes. The triangle symbol is prominent. Also, a smaller symbol, subtle and tiny, near the head of the serpent, is an image of some type of creature with a lightning bolt out of its head. Mozart, considered today a great composer and famous even during his lifetime, was murdered by the Masons in 1791 as penalty for his revealing of the secrets of Freemasonic ritual in his work entitled, The Magic Flute. Not only was the composer murdered (by poisoning), but the Masons blackballed his funeral. It is said that even Mozart's closest friends and family members did not so much as attend his funeral.



Reportedly only a dog followed Mozart's funeral wagon. This drawing was found among the papers of Ludwig van Beethoven. Top right, inset: Unfinished portrait of the celebrated composer of classical music.

This is the symbol of the Lucis Trust, New York City. Led by high-level Masons, co-Masons (women), theosophists, and other occultists, the Lucis Trust has on its rolls many top United Nations officials. Its logo, the triangle, contains the "X" sign and also the three-pronged Trident, symbol of the triple phallus. In India, the trident-bearer is the god Shiva, bridegroom of the triple goddess, Kali. In Greek and Roman mythologies, the trident symbolized, among others, Hades, Pluto, Neptune, and Poseidon. And, of course, the Devil is often pictured with his three-pronged pitchfork.

BY STEVEN LEVY

JUST ABOUT THE ONLY place you could get something to eat at 4 in the morning in Champaign, Ill., in early 1993 was a convenience store called the White Hen Pantry. "It's kind of a Midwest 7-Eleven," says Marc Andreessen, who would often stumble out of his workspace at the National Center for Supercomputing Applications at ungodly hours in search of sustenance. Andreessen, 21 years old at the time, and fellow NCSA worker Eric Bina were working on a program they called Mosaic. One night at the White Hen, Andreessen scanned the newsstand and saw the first issue of a magazine called Wired. "I thought, 'Wow, this is pretty interesting stuff'," he recalls of the magazine that promised to treat technology as a cultural breakthrough. "But you know what? The magazine didn't mention the Internet once."

The project that Andreessen and Bina were hatching would change that. Posted on the Internet in beta form—free of charge—in March 1993 and in an official release the following month, Mosaic just may have been the most important computer application ever. It was the first major Web browser, a strange concept at the time because almost no one had ever heard of the Web. The Internet had been around for 20 years, of course, but was known mostly to technically competent students, researchers and government workers. In 1990 Tim Berners-Lee, a British researcher at the CERN physics lab in Geneva, Switzerland, had created a set of technical rules for what he hoped would become a universal Internet document center called the World Wide Web; it was getting some buzz in the research community as a way to digitally distribute papers, but the first browsers were text-based only and hard to use. Andreessen and Bina's program handled graphics and was easy to use.

Mosaic was an instant success online. Within six months more than a million people had downloaded it. A cycle of motion had begun. Before Mosaic, there were only a few hundred Web sites. But when huge numbers of people were able to access

THE NEW FACE AT FOGGY BOTTOM

Condoleezza Rice has Bush's ear, but can she sell his ideas abroad?

BY KEVIN WHITELAW AND THOMAS OMESTAD

In nearly four years as President Bush's national security adviser, Condoleezza Rice was much more than just one of his top aides. She became a close confidant who regularly accompanied the first family to their Texas ranch, where she dined with them and joined them for walks through the bluebonnet fields and cedar groves. She became almost a family member.

In nominating Rice to be his next secretary of state, Bush is signaling the world (and all those doubtful State Department diplomats) that he has no intention of pulling back from his assertive post-9/11 foreign-policy agenda. Rice, the consummate insider who has the ear of the president, will be a sharp contrast to the departing Colin Powell, an American icon who was always a distinct outsider in the clubby Bush administration. Bush aides hope that Rice will be able to avoid the kind of infighting that roiled Bush's first term and to sell Bush's policies abroad. That won't be easy. Laments an anxious European envoy: "Now we have to worry whether the ideologues will somehow exert even more influence."

This revealing photo of three-star U.S. Air Force General Claudia Kennedy was run both on the cover of mass circulation Parade magazine and Newsweek (June 26, 2000, p. 23). Evidently, the elite wanted the message out to their servants that this photo conveys. Note particularly the General's clearly staged hand sign, her back against a wall, a purposeful shadow etched behind, her two feet squarely in place, her standing in the midst of two evergreen shrubbery bushes, and the seemingly bizarre fact she has her eyes closed! All in all a very unflattering picture, but one that conveys much information. At the time (2000), General Kennedy, an intelligence operative who was retiring from the military service, was being touted as a potential presidential candidate. Did the Illuminati choose other career options for the lady?

The company settles its antitrust case

By William J. Cook

Round II in the federal government's antitrust assault on the dynamic duo known as "Wintel" (as in Microsoft Windows and Intel microprocessors) has been called off. One day before a Federal Trade Commission trial of Intel Corp. was to begin last week, the two sides agreed to settle the case. Specific terms will not be announced until FTC commissioners vote on the agreement, but clearly Intel has promised to change its business practices enough to satisfy the government's antitrust prosecutors.

Intel had been charged with using its near monopoly power to bully customers. The chip maker had demanded that some of them hand over, free of charge, certain proprietary data. In one case, according to the FTC, Intel wanted technology held

In 1944, Alice Ginott Cohn joined thousands of women who openly discussed a subject most others only whispered about: sex. The result of those private interviews was Alfred Kinsey's landmark book Sexual Behavior in the Human Female, which shocked the world in 1953 with its explicit revelations. Indiana University, which fostered the research, marks the book's 50th anniversary in 2003 with a year-long series of art exhibitions, film festivals and lectures exploring women's health and sexuality, the arts, science and history. Mostly, though, the school

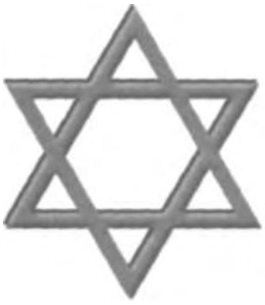
Black Magic, Masonic Witchcraft, and Triangle Powers

Ever wonder why the Masons installed the statue of a woman in stone atop the U.S. Capitol building in Washington, D.C., and the statue of a woman called "Liberty" in New York City's harbor? Well, now you know. America, meet your satanic mistress, Isis.

—Texe Marrs

The triangle is of primary importance in all Illuminati realms, whether in the ritual ceremonies of the Rosicrucians and Masons or the witchcraft, astrological and black magic practices of other Illuminist followers. Always the triangle is used.



Among satanists and witches, the double triangle, the Seal of Solomon, also called the hexagram, is of great interest. This seal, known as the Magen David of the Jews, is actually composed of two triangles, superimposed on each other. One triangle pointed upward represents the flesh or material matter and the male generative act; the other, pointed downward, signifies female sexuality and the spiritual plane.

Therefore we have a masculine and a feminine triangle integrated. This indicates sexual union, the sex act, and the reconciliation of opposites, yin and yang, or God and Satan. The blasphemous suggestion in the symbol becomes clear.

Remember: Everywhere in the world of Illuminism, we discover sexual connotations. Theirs is a sex cult; indeed it is the world's greatest sex cult; yet, the Illuminati use symbols and signs to mask their sexually perverted messages.

The Star of David and the Beast's Number, 666

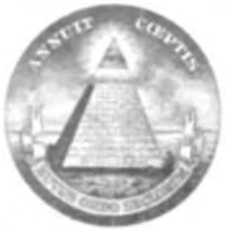
The supremely evil nature of the double triangle, the hexagram, Solomon's Seal, the Magen David (Shield of David), is proven by the fact that the symbol contains the hidden number 666, the number of the beast (Revelation 13). Notice that there are six triangles incorporated on the outside of the hexagram; that it has six out points, and that six lines are used in constructing the symbol's two triangles. Thus, 6-6-6.

Also, the symbol incorporates six triangles of three sides each. Six times three equals eighteen (6 X 3 = 18 and 6 + 6 + 6 = 18).

An outstanding study of the six-pointed star was accomplished by Dr. O.J. Graham in the book, THE Six-Pointed Star.[1] Dr. Graham proves that this symbol was never used by King David of Israel and so the name Star of David is a misnomer. The symbol was chosen in 1947 for the flag of the fledgling nation of Israel at the insistence of the Rothschilds. Its usage stems from the medieval period when corrupt rabbis into cabalistic magic began to use the six-pointed star in their rituals.

Dr. Graham does not mince words in declaring this emblem a tool of Satan, unworthy of use by the holy people of God.

The Occult Triangle and the Masonic Lodge



Returning back to the single triangle as a common symbol of occult usage, we note that the Freemasons were able, through the influence of Grand Master Benjamin Franklin, to have the triangle became the sun-lit capstone above the pyramid on the obverse (reverse) side of the Great Seal of the United States.

The design of the 33rd degree jewel worn by the elite Mason is made up of interlocking triangles.

The Real Grip of a Master Mason, which the Order claims can "resurrect" the candidate and cause him, in essence, to be "born again" (a counterfeit of the Christian experience) is formed with fingers separated to form a triangle. In the photos and illustrations in this section, you will find several real-life examples of this grip.

In Coil's Masonic Encyclopedia we are told of the triangular chain, the legend taught by Freemasonry that Jewish Freemasons were carried as captives from Jerusalem to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, being bound by triangular chains. The Babylonian King is said to have been gravely insulting the Jews by doing this because, to the Jews, the triangle, or delta symbol, was a symbol of their Deity.[2]

King Solomon and the Triple Triangle

In the 6° of Freemasonry, the Degree of Intimate Secretary, the concept of a triple triangle is introduced, said to be emblematic of the three Masons who were present at the opening of the first Lodge of Intimate Secretaries. It is further claimed that King Solomon was one of those three present.

It is significant that in the first Book of Kings in the Holy Bible, King Solomon rebelled against God and His commandments and began to worship the god and goddess of the heathen in his temple. He also required of the High Priests of Solomon's Temple that they annually render to him, as tribute, the sum of 666 talents of gold. Undoubtedly the number 666 is symbolically the triple triangle, because the holy number of the Goddess was 666.

In Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, the author, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite, Albert Mackey, emphasized the key importance of the triangle in the rituals of Freemasonry.[5] The late Jim Keith, an exposer of conspiracies and cults, also discussed the importance of this symbol to Masonry. He writes, "There is in fact a triad of three governing officers to be found in almost every degree."[4]

In a number of books written by Masons, the downward pointing triangle is related to Set, the god of Egypt, and to Bacchus. Both of the deities are Satan in other guises.

Jim Tresner, 33°, whose academic writings are often published in Masonic journals and publications, notes the use of triangles in the ritual for the fifteenth degree of the Scottish Rite, Knight of the East, of the Sword, or of the Eagle. Tresner says that the apron worn for this degree's ritual in the Lodge is of red velvet, and "on the apron are three triangles, one inside the other, formed of chains with triangular links." These three triangles, he explains, "represent the three great limitations on, or enemies of, the human intellect — tyranny, privilege, superstition."[5]

The late Albert Mackey, Sovereign Grand Commander of International Freemasonry.

In reality, Tresner is subtly alluding to the Masonic Order's long-standing doctrine of fierce opposition to existing political sovereigns not yet corrupted or conquered by Illuminism and its hatred of the true Christian Church, which the Masons teach is "superstition" and is a sectarian belief that cannot be tolerated. Tresner may object to my characterization, but the evidence of my allegations is insurmountable, as the rituals themselves prove.

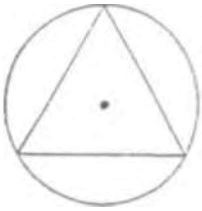
Rosicrucians, Theosophists, and The Triangle

The Rosicrucian Order, too, relies on the triangle as a vehicle to impart and convey its teachings to rising candidates. For example, Arkon Daraul, in A History of Secret Societies, describes a ritualistic scene of initiation in a German branch of Rosicrucianism:

> The room of initiation was carpeted in green and on it were a number of objects... Three candelabra were placed to form a triangle, and nine glasses indicated the male and female properties...[6]

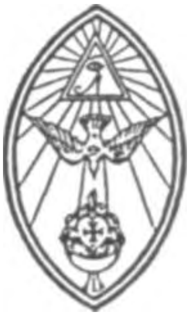
Helena Blavatsky's worldwide cult Theosophy and its offspring, The Lucis Trust, led for many years by prolific occult writer, Alice Bailey, likewise adopted the triangle as symbolic of their teachings. In 1937 the Lucis Trust founded a subsidiary group named Triangles which today encourages people across the globe to network by forming local three person triangle groups to come together often and meditate. In this way, said the parent organization in a letter, occult adepts can "help to illumine world thought...through which the new incoming Aquarian energies can function, the new ideas spread, and the New World Order emerge."[7]

According to Bailey, the coming New World Order of the New Age is best symbolized by a triangle within a circle, with a single dot, or point, within the triangle. This symbol is said to represent three Centres (in U.S.A., Centers), the point standing for the ruler of the spirit world, Sanat (an anagram for "Satan" apparently), the entity who at the appointed time will emerge to rule the Earth and humanity. The second Centre is Sanat's "Hierarchy," the many unseen spirits (i.e. devils), and the third Centre is the human masses.[8]



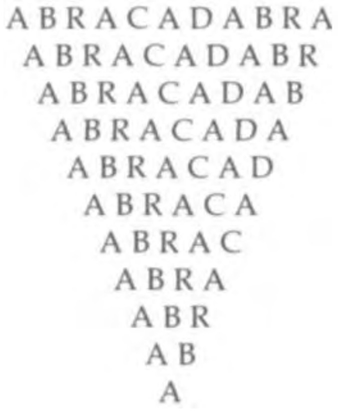
At the close of the Age, Bailey assures us, "the three major Centres will be in complete unified and synchronized activity," controlling all manifestations of life.[9]

Aleister Crowley, the late British satanist and Freemason, was also a devotee of the triangle as symbol. As a high-level officer of the occult group, Order of the Golden Dawn, Crowley used for one of his emblems the Eye of Horus in the Pyramid of Fire, radiated by the sun's rays. It was Horus, in the form of a spirit guide named Aiwass, that allegedly gave Crowley The Book of the Law, a book of prophecy Crowley claimed he received by automatic writing.[10]



ABRACADABRA Not Just Childish Fun

Witches and deep occult magicians join Bailey in use of the triangle. Take the word ABRACADABRA that is repeatedly used in kids TV cartoons and programs by supposedly mythical creatures like wizards and witches and fairies. Actually, this word is of ancient origins. In a poem on occult medicine written by a pagan doctor in ancient Rome about 250 AD, to ward off fevers and sickness, the physician recommended the word abracadabra be written down in an inverted triangle like this:



ABRACADABRA
ABRACADABR
ABRACADAB
ABRACADA
ABRACAD
ABRACA
ABRAC

Next, the paper on which the word was written was to be tied round the patient's neck for nine days and then thrown backwards over the shoulder into a stream running eastwards. The fever then would shrink to nothing, the patient was told.

The magical word ABRACADABRA comes from worship of the gnostic god, Abraxas. It literally means: The dead body, or corpse, of Abraxas.

Witches often use the triangle as a protective symbol. They foolishly believe it can be used as a talisman, especially if the Tetragrammaton, the Hebrew letters for God, are inserted inside the triangle. The Masons do the same thing essentially in the Masters Jewel of the 4th degree. The triangle is inscribed on the ring given holders of the 14th degree also.

The Geometrical God Is a Woman

A closely kept secret of higher level Masons and other Illuminists is that, in addition to their worship of the Devil by other names, they also worship a female deity, the Great Goddess. This is made plain by John Yarker, a renowned British Freemason. Yarker's translation of the French manuscript, Lectures of a Chapter, Senate, and Council, informs us that the triangle's origins can be found in Egyptian religion, being the symbol of Isis, the Egyptian goddess:

> The triangle, which they called the geometrical God, was the emblem of Isis.[11]

You'll recall that the symbol "G" is found at the center of the most common of Freemasonry's symbols, the Masonic square and compass, and that the Mason is told this letter G represents "God" and "Geometry." This, then, is the "geometrical god" that, Yarker observes, "was the emblem of Isis."

Ever wonder why the Masons installed the statue of a woman in stone atop the U.S. Capitol building in Washington, D.C., and the statue of a woman called "Liberty" in New York City's harbor? Well, now you know. America, meet your satanic mistress: Isis.

The Unpublished Facts of Life

THERE are some things that can not be generally told—things you ought to know. Great truths are dangerous to some—but factors for personal power and accomplishment in the hands of those who understand them. Behind the tales of the miracles and mysteries of the ancients, lie centuries of their secret probing into nature's laws—their amazing discoveries of the hidden processes of man's mind, and the mastery of life's problems. Once shrouded in mystery to avoid their destruction by mass fear and ignorance, these facts remain a useful heritage for the thousands of men and women who privately use them in their homes today.

To interest like-minded people to inquire about the Rosicrucians, this or a similar ad is placed in some magazines. Under the heading, "Secrets Entrusted to A Few," we find an ancient and worn book with a triangle and cross imprinted on the cover. The Rosicrucians are actually several different Orders. This ad is for AMORC, an American-based Order that is less influential among the elite than European branches. Perhaps the most famous initiate of the Rosicrucians was Benjamin Franklin. Catholic Pope John XXIII was reputed to be a Rosicrucian as was Martin Luther, the Protestant Reformer. U.S. Senator Ted Kennedy (DMA) is today a high-level Rosicrucian.

Dear friends and members of ESP,

This letter is to announce the 1988 General Membership Meeting in or nearby Ottawa, Canada's national capitol, on October 14th and 15th. The past two years has witnessed change in the membership of ESP, accelerated change in the personal lives of ESP members and, as a result, a change in the group energies of ESP. It is suggested we use the meeting this fall to examine the meaning of these changes, to share the excitement of our changes, and to consider the future of ESP in light of these changes.

The New Age group, Energy System Parameters (ESP), has this as the logo on its letterhead. In this letter announcing its general membership's annual meeting, the co-Presidents emphasized ESP's focus on "group energies," "cosmic reorganization," and the importance of achieving the "crystalized form of new patterns." The signature line had the phrase, "In the Service of the One."

32° Brothers

Your Jewel

As based on The Supreme Council, S.J., Statutes, a 32° Jewel is now available. See Current Interest in this issue.

The jewel* of the 32nd degree, Scottish Rite, contains four, interlocking Tau elements and four squares. Symbology-wise, this arrangement conceives of the Freemasons and their coming Prince to be rulers of all four corners of the globe. (From the back cover of Scottish Rite Journal, October 1998)

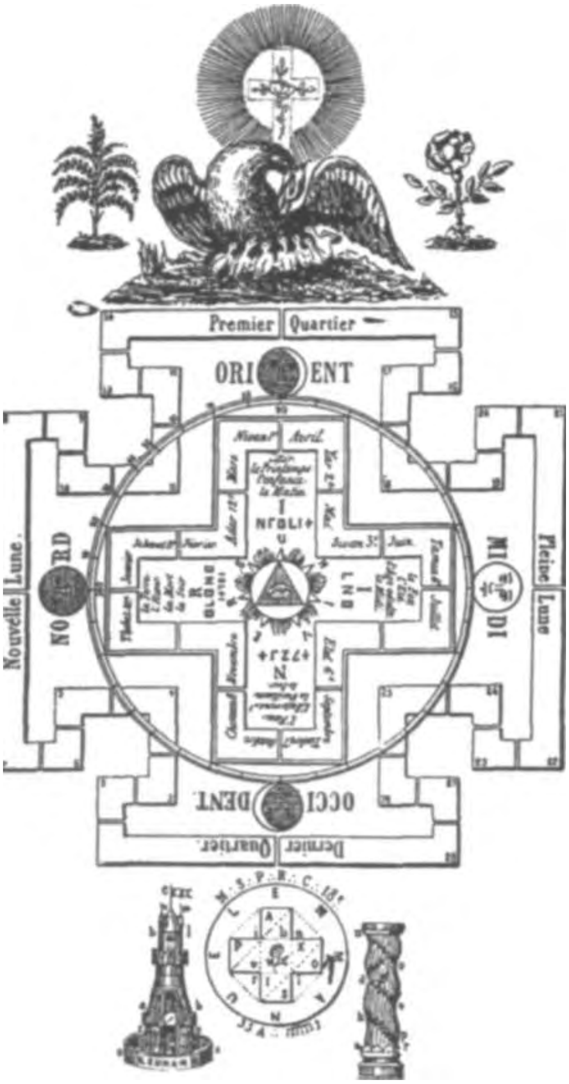
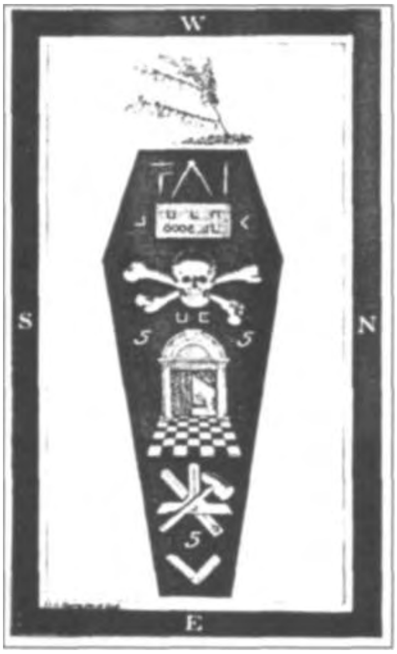
Eastern religions believe that the use of the Sri Yantra produces unparalleled spiritual power by evoking (inviting) help from the unseen spirit world. Commonly employed in sexual tantra rituals, the design of the Sri Yantra meditation device begins with the four "T"s, (Tau) which, interestingly, is the same as the design of the Mason's 32nd degree jewel. From this base, the Sri Yantra is drawn from nine (666=6+6+6=18=1+8=9) triangles, four pointed downward and five pointed upward, forming 42 (6x7) triangular fragments around a central triangle. Occultists teach there is no other set of triangles which interlock with such integrational perfection. The diagram of the Sri Yantra is said to contain, or synthesize, within all the activities and energies in the universe. Made up of black and white triangle elements, the design bears also the yin/yang, black is white and white is black principle underlying the Masters Carpet (checkerboard) floor of Masonry and also parallels the "two heads" doctrine implicit in the great symbol of 33rd degree Freemasonry, the double-headed eagle. (Drawing from book, Sacred Geometry, by Robert Lawlor, Thames and Hudson, New York and London, 1989)

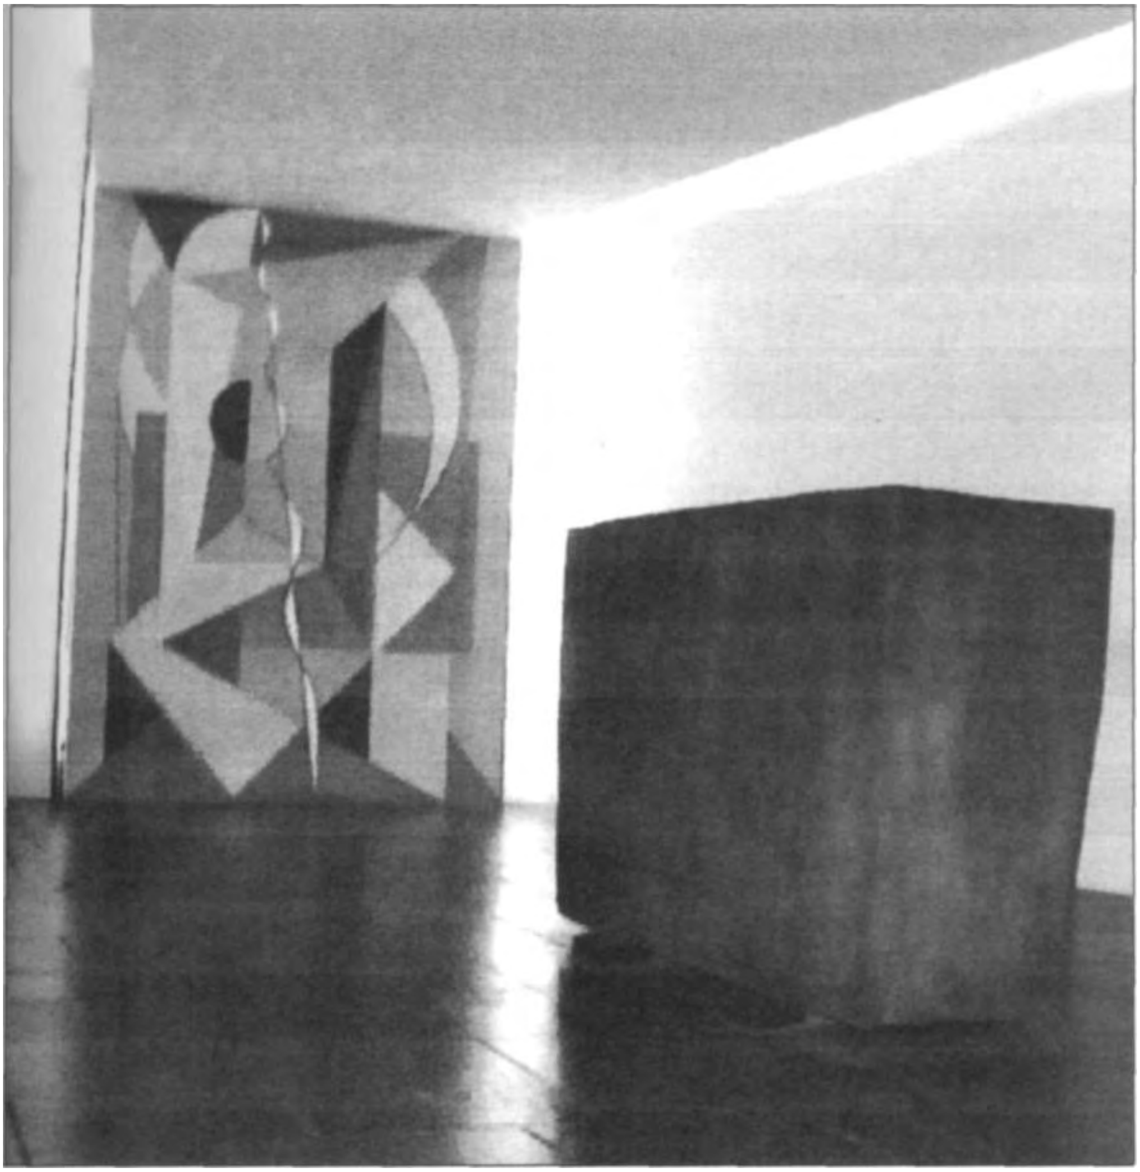
Two more versions of the Sri Yantra. Left: A Sri Yantra found inside the cover of a rock album. Right: Sri Yantra from the book, The Tantric Way, showing the multiple-triangle design, representing the generative (sex) act. In this design the interior, triangular (male) elements are "buried" within the Lotus blossom (female).



The Sri Yantra pictured as a mystical diagram of Solomon's Temple, as planned in the building scheme of the Knights Templar. The cross and sun rays on top do not represent Jesus Christ, but point to the Cosmic Christ, who came in many names in the past and shall come again with a new name. (From the book, The Sword and The Grail, by Andrew Sinclair, New York: Crown Publishers, 1992)

A masonic tracing board with an image of a coffin, decorated with the "tools" of the Craft. The V or square at the bottom of the coffin is pointed downward to hell and the Lord of the Underworld. The skull and bones, or death's head, is thought to guard the doorway to the Mysteries of initiation. There are three number fives arranged in a triangle pattern, thus 555, the triple nickel, symbolizing death and resurrection. Not coincidentally, the Washington Monument, in our nation's capital, is exactly SSS feet high. It was designed by Masonic overlords and architecturally is an obelisk, worshipped in Egypt as Osiris' penis (Baal's shaft).





The occult spiritual nature of the mission of the United Nations (UN) is seen in the UN's Meditation Room, inside the UN headquarters in New York City. The austere Meditation Room has a rough, black granite ashlar altar (masonic origins) and a mural with various occult symbols, including the serpent, triangle, crescent moon, and square. The Room itself is designed as a pyramid without a capstone lying down on its side. The UN even has a chaplain of sorts; Sri Chinmoy, a Hindu guru who leads chants and meditations inside the Meditation Room. Evidently, the Illuminati were not keen on separating church and state when they founded their world body, the United Nations.

Jackson and son, Jesse Jr., watch Goodman's T-shirt signal to shipmates: 'Send me home'

Appointment in Damascus

Sirens echoing in the ancient streets, a motorcade of black limos sped through downtown Damascus last weekend bearing a distinguished visitor. It was the Rev. Jesse Jackson, erroneously identified in the local press as "Senator Jackson" and actually only an untested candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination. But Jackson, in Damascus to extend what he termed a "moral appeal" for the release of a captive the plane, and said U.S. officials should not be suspicious of his good treatment in Syrian hands. Asked repeatedly what he thought of the various efforts to bring about his release, he replied, "I'm not a politician, I'm a naval officer." Said Jackson: "A wise lieutenant."

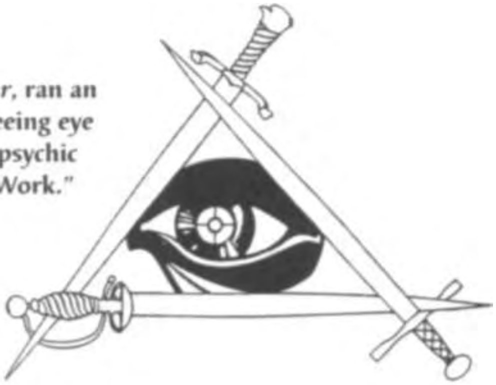
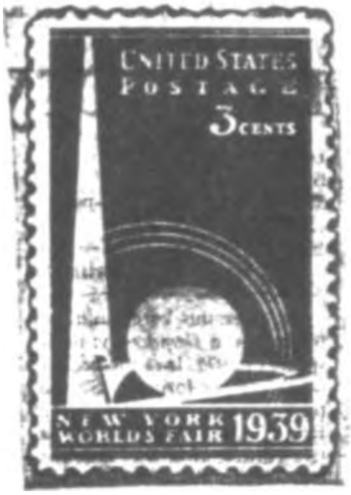
In fact, neither Jackson nor anyone else knew whether Syrian President Hafez Assad would set Goodman free—but Jackson, at least, had nothing

When captured American aviator, Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman, Jr., 27, was released by Syrian authorities into the hands of self-appointed diplomat Jesse Jackson, the aviator was given this souvenir T-shirt from his hometown of Akron, Ohio. The T-shirt had triangular designs and demonic eyes. Perhaps Syria's President, Hafez Assad, agreed to deal with Jesse Jackson because both he and Jackson are 33rd degree Masons. Later, Jesse Jackson traveled to Communist Cuba, where side-by-side with another Lodge brother, dictator Fidel Castro, the black religious and civil rights leader hollered out to the Cuban crowd, "Viva Fidel. Long Live Fidel Castro!" (Photo and article from Newsweek, January 9, 1984)

An Oregon state occult newspaper, Excalibur, ran an ad using this triangle symbol with the all-seeing eye within. The ad advertised the services of a "psychic healer" who claimed to do "Omega Energy Work."





Cancelled postage stamp commemorating the 1939 New York World's Fair. The year '39 was chosen for its masonic numerological significance. A classic movie, The Thirty-Nine Steps, also embodied this body of hidden masonic numerological teachings.

Foreign dignitaries lining up with Bush

You might have noticed the would-be president of Russia, Alexander Lebed, in a firm handshake last week with the would-be president of the United States, George W. Bush, at the Governor's Mansion after Alex stopped by for breakfast. You may recall that Bush met with José Angel Gurría Treviño, Mexico's foreign secretary and maybe someday president, on Gurría's September visit to Austin. Not to mention that Argentina's U.S. ambassador and its chief of cabinet ministers will be knocking on the mansion door March 30. If the governor announces for the millennium presidency, you could be watching his foreign policy being shaped here.

New York's Governor Mario Cuomo (left), a Democrat, is politically endorsed by Rudy Giuliani, the Republican Mayor of New York City. The Illuminati elite know no political party boundaries and their servants only pretend to be conservative or liberal. In the case of Giuliani, it may also be significant that he is reportedly a gay bisexual. According to the New York Times, Mayor Giuliani once performed as "Rudia," transvestite nightclub performer. Giuliani also lived with a gay couple for a time, and dressed as a woman transvestite in a Gay Pride Parade. Meanwhile, billionaire industrialist J. Peter Grace, head of W.R. Grace Chemicals, once denigrated Governor Cuomo by referring to him as "Cuomo the Homo." Even though Grace later apologized, his off-the-cuff comment seems to have caused knowing snickers among those in-the-know.

DOWN TO EARTH BUZZ ALDRIN

Aldrin inside Apollo 11 (top), and training in 1969 (right). His footprint in the lunar soil (bottom).

After the nation's most famous astronaut, Buzz Aldrin, flew to the moon in 1969, he returned to Earth an American icon. But his training as a moonwalker hardly prepared him for fame. Scrutiny on a global scale led to depression, alcoholism and divorce. Over time, he summoned the courage to seek help and work through his difficulties.

Many factors led to his recovery, among them therapy, Alcoholics Anonymous and his marriage to Lois Driggs Cannon. Lois, his third wife, has helped him build a new life. They share a comfortable home in Southern California and drive cars with license plates reading MARS GUY and MOON GRL. Today, he even jokes about his alter ego, Buzz Lightyear.

Above: In its May/June 2001 issue, Psychology Today carried this feature article and interview with Astronaut Buzz Aldrin. Aldrin and fellow astronaut, Neil Armstrong, were the first to walk on the Moon, in 1969. Aldrin, a Freemason, was said to have conducted a bizarre Masonic ritual on the moon. In the article in Psychology Today, triangles are everywhere, including being imbedded in the type of the heading. Also, see the picture of Aldrin—exactly three fingers of his left hand are reaching into his pocket, with the arm displaying a triangle pattern. According to the book Axis of Death, by D.C. Yermak, this is similar to a secret Rosicrucian sign indicating the initate has removed himself from God's control and given his life over to the devil. Aldrin is confirmed to be a Mason, but his Rosicrucian involvement is unknown.

Astronaut Buzz Aldrin, supposedly walking on the moon in 1969. Many believe the Apollo 11 mission was a hoax, filmed right here on earth. In this classic, staged photo, notice Aldrin's left arm in its triangle position. Did the taxpayers pay billions just so Aldrin and his masonic brothers could claim the moon for the Illuminati in a staged esoteric ritual?

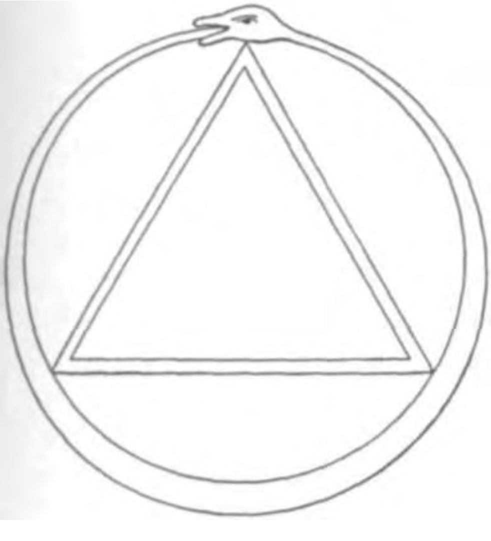
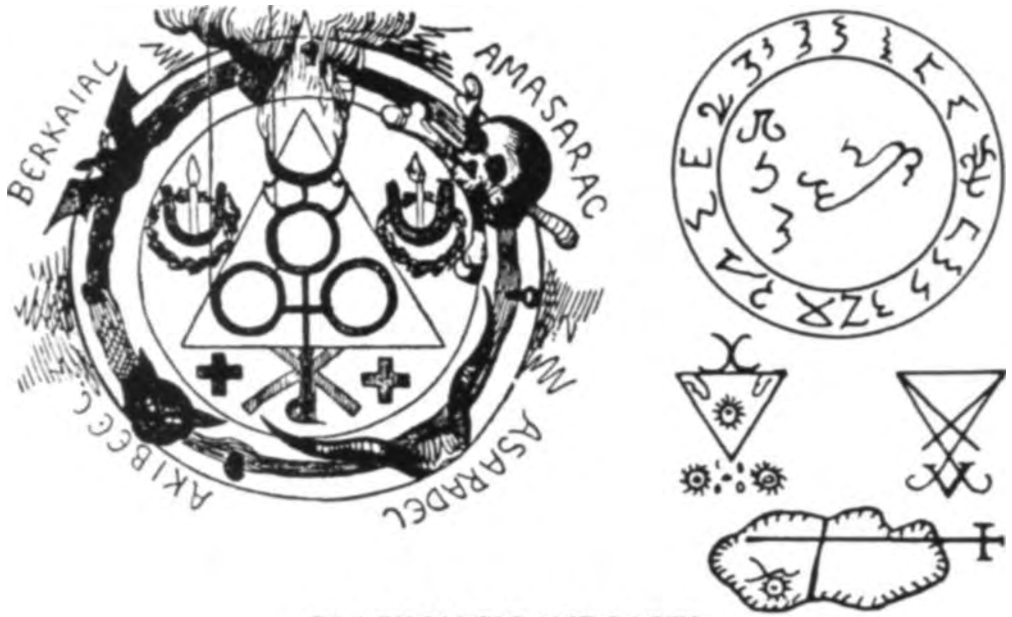
THE HUNT BROTHERS
Battling a Billion-Dollar Debt
BY JOHN A. JENKINS

The three super-rich Hunt brothers in a downward triangle arrangement on the cover of The New York Times magazine, September 18, 1997.

Fritz Springmeier, author of the bestselling Bloodlines of the Illuminati (available by phone order, toll free 1-800-234-9673), made this drawing based on an actual ritual conducted by a Satanic sect known as Ordo Saturnus (Order of Saturn). The planet Saturn is the sixth planet from the sun in our solar system. Saturn was worshipped in ancient civilizations as a form of Satan, or Lucifer. The triangle within a circle (symbol also of today's Alcoholics Anonymous) group is on the wall while the satanic "X" within the circle is on the front of the altar cloth.



Rosicrucians also commend the triangle within the circle, the very logo of Alcoholics Anonymous. From a page right out of a Rosicrucian manual, the figure at left is the "Symbol of Creation," Nehushstan the serpent, also called Oroboros, the serpent swallowing its own tail. This symbolizes perpetual movement (Hegelian dialectic) and the occult conception of the "Circle of Life," the slogan that Disney's movie, The Lion King, made famous. The book of Revelation in the Holy Bible calls Satan "that old serpent" and for good reason! The triangle inside the serpentine circle represents the unholy trinity, which the occult teaches is the spiritual element soon to manifest, already operating at the very center of the material universe.



BLACK MAGIC AND PACTS

Symbols play a vital role in infernal conjuration. LEFT: the Goetic Circle of Pacts, drawn by Eliphas Levi in the nintheenth century, is supposed to be used when the sorcerer is to make a pact with the Descending Hierarchy. The three circles in the center are the standing positions of the sorcerer and his apprentices. The skull must be from a parricide, the horns from a goat, the bat must have been drowned in blood, and the black cat, whose head is placed opposite the skull, must have been fed on human flesh. RIGHT: The seal and characters of Lucifer, from the Grimorium Verum, sixtheenth-century book of demonic magic. The characters are supposed to be written on parchment with the blood of the sorcerer, and worn by him at all times during the conjuration.

(From the book, Satan Wants You, by Arthur Lyons, The Mysterious Press, New York, 10019)

In this 17th century alchemical drawing, the Antichrist King and his unholy trinity (three crowns over Earth) worship the transforming fire from their sun deity, symbolized by the triangle within a circle.

Meaning Behind Our Corporate Seal

Howard M. Duff FAFA

I was asked to design an official seal when we incorporated in 1938 as the American Federation of Astrologers. The four fixed signs were chosen to indicate stability and practicality. The words around the circle showed our purpose and ideals. The hand and torch backed by the star of truth indicated our purpose to lead in teaching true Astrology; the little dots, the starry firmament; the large ones, the seven planets with the Sun and the Moon dominant; these were significant of our "alphabet" for doing this on a national scale.

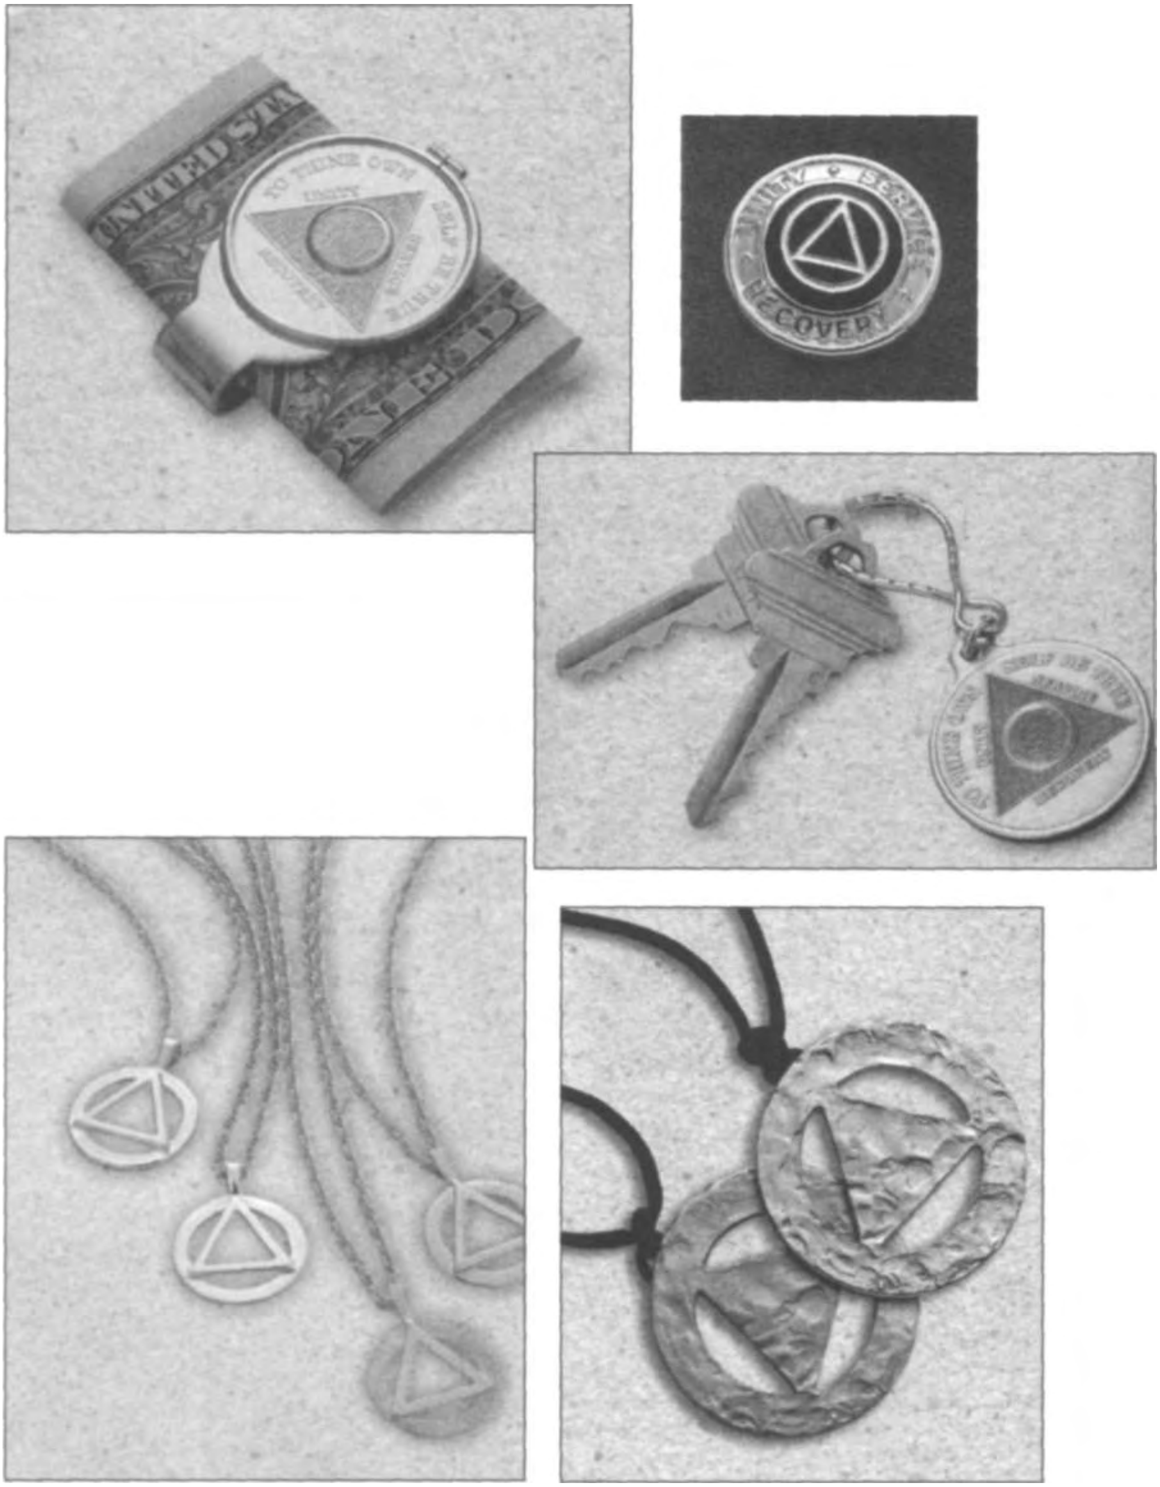
In this page right out of the Bulletin of the American Federation of Astrologers (AFA), we find the corporate seal and its explanation. However, the explanation given is weak at best and seems geared to please the majority of astrologers who are active in the organization without giving away any real secrets. Almost any knowledgeable student of the occult can see hidden meanings in these symbols far beyond the official explanation. Symbols that beg for more esoteric (and accurate) explanation include the triangle inside the circle, the pentagram star, the torch and hand, the point within the circle and the stars.



Hazelden, a company specializing in products related to Alcoholics Anonymous, offers such items as tie tacs and lapel pins, money clips, necklaces, and key chains. You can even get the "God's Eye Pendant." The Hazelden catalog glowingly tells potential buyers: "In times of trouble or joy, this precious pendant keeps our Higher Power's eye on our recovery and spiritual growth." The same catalog ad says, "This five-thousand-year-old symbol of continual movement and spirituality... has become a popular icon in the recovery community."

A friend sent the author this photograph she took of one of the student art exhibits on display at a local high school. Many of the exhibits were on occult subjects. The meaning of the triangle within the circle superimposed over the body of the person, lying in a fetal position on a surface of red, most likely symbolizes man's servitude and enslavement to the Solar Deity, whom Masons call the Great Architect of the Universe.

ACCOUNTING FOR MAYHEM

The Israelis say they found in Arafat's Ramallah HQ a Sept. 16, 2001, financial report from al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades to Fuad Shubaki, finance chief for Arafat's military. The Palestinians claim it's a fabrication.

"Costs for printing posters of al-Aqsa Brigade martyrs . . . —$417"

"Costs for printed announcements, invitations, mourners' tents—$260"

"Costs for mounting martyrs' portraits on wooden boards . . . —$208"

"Costs for martyrs' memorial ceremonies . . . —$1,250"

"Costs for various electrical components and chemical supplies (for the production of charges and bombs). This has been our largest expense (the cost of prepared bomb being at least $146). We need about 5 to 9 bombs a week for our cells in various areas—$1,042 x 4 weeks = $4,167"

"$4,687 for Kalashnikov rounds and $12,500 for M-16 rounds"

■ ANOTHER DOCUMENT The Israelis say they also found a fax, which they released, forwarded by Marwan Barghouti, the central figure in al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades, to Arafat. It requests "urgent financial aid" of $1,000 each for 12 activists Barghouti calls "fighter brethren." Israel claims the 12 have been involved in deadly attacks on Israelis. Part Devil, Part Angel

Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

—I Corinthians 10:21

Always front and center.. .stood Lyndon Johnson, almost handsome then, in his 40s, leaner than history remembers, narrow-eyed, his hair sleek...alert in a vaguely dangerous way - an impresario, a genius of nuances, a wolf in his prime.

— Lance Morrow
"Part Devil, Part Angel"
Newsweek magazine

Illuminists can sometimes be engaging, likeable people. The kind of person you wouldn't mind going to dinner with or hosting at a barbecue. That is, unless you knew that beneath that happy, party-like veneer and surface there was a deep interior of consummate evil.

Take Will Rogers, for example, the loveable Oklahoman storyteller. He was admired by the nation for his rangy, down to earth humor and wit. Who would know that, along with his fellow Masons, Rogers bowed before satanic altars and drank wine from human skulls!

There's astronaut Buzz Aldrin who, it is claimed by NASA, once went to the moon. How many knew that Aldrin carried with him to outer space a Scottish Rite flag emblazoned with the diabolical image of the double-headed eagle?

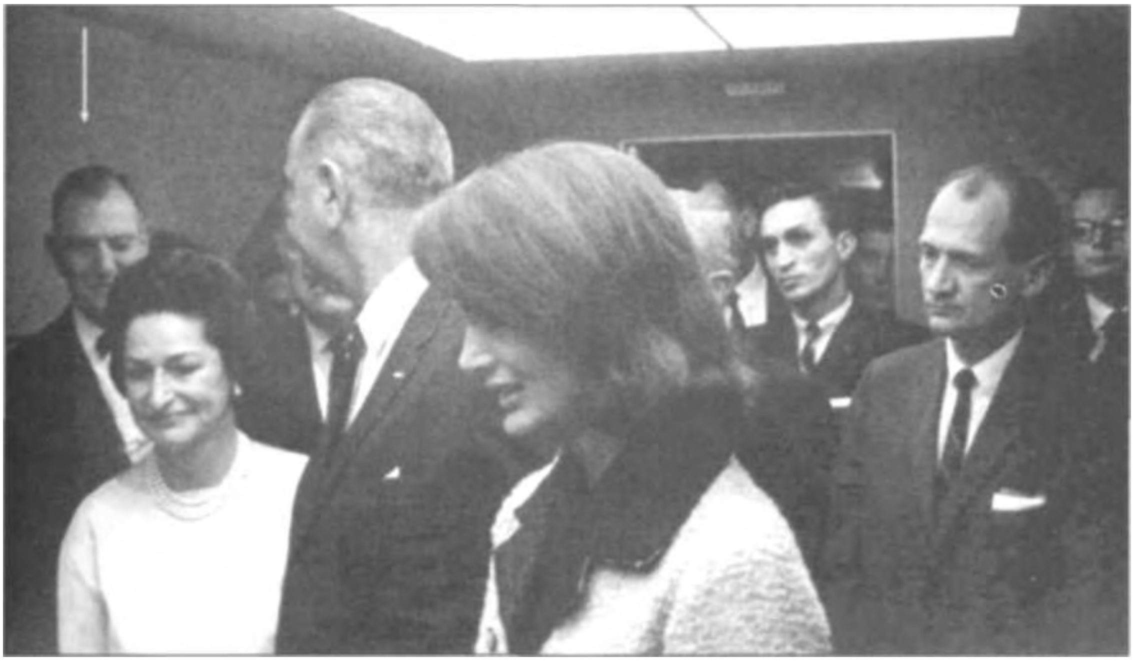
And we have the late Pamela Harriman, so popular and likeable her biography was entitled "Life of the Party." Harriman's husband was Averell Harriman, Patriarch of the Order of Skull and Bones. What tales Ms. Harriman could have told us! After all, she was mistress to a Rothschild and also once used a young, up and coming, Georgetown University student as her sexual boy toy. His name: William Jefferson Clinton.

President Lyndon B. Johnson certainly fits into that category—if there is such a category—of "Part Devil, Part Angel." A Master Mason raised to the third degree in a Lodge in central Texas, Johnson was the primary mover for the black civil rights movement. His aggressive endorsement of various civil rights bills helped create a more equal society. But, why do his biographers call LBJ "cunning" and a "wolf?"

Several books have been published maintaining that then Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson was one of the plotters and conspirators behind the 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Few people believe it. Most have been snookered into believing the absurd theory that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone. But in 2003 a book by a former Texas lawyer, Barr McClellan, again broached the subject of LBJ's culpability.[1]

Then, also in 2003, Jeff Rense, in his outstanding internet web site, Rense.com, published two photos of what is being called "The Most Revealing Wink of the Twentieth Century." As a public service, the author of Codex Magica is reproducing the same photos here.

This heart-rending scene aboard Air Force One of Lyndon B. Johnson being sworn in as President of the United States following the assassination of John F. Kennedy, was published everywhere, in newspapers, magazines, and books. Look closely at the somber looks on the faces of the persons in the photograph.



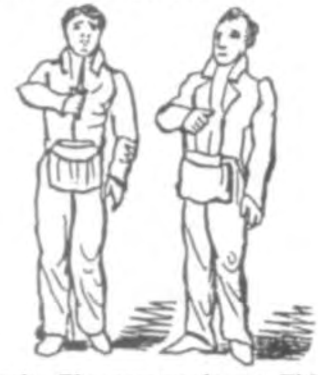
Here's the photo that was left unpublished and was kept hidden from public view until now. Congressman Albert Thomas winks back at a quickly-smiling LBJ as he is being sworn in to be the next President of the United States on Air Force One. The grief-stricken Jackie Kennedy stands next to him. Meanwhile, a sly smile also creases the face of Ladybird Johnson, LBJ's wife.

LBJ—was he "part devil, part angel?" I don't think so. He was 100% something, and I'll let you decide just what. Johnson and the others are shown in the following pages giving what appears to be the Illuminist hand sign of the arm in triangular position with hand to side of body. The photos here give evidence that this gesture is not accidental as one might suppose. Several illustrations from authoritative Masonic reference books provide further documentation that the sign is intentional and communicates a message.

crets of this degree.

The candidate is then instructed in the signs, words and token in this degree, as follows:

Signs—Place the point of a poinard under your chin, and draw it downward to the waist, as if in the act of ripping open the body, speaking the word ZERBUL. The brother will answer by giving the Entered Apprentice's sign as on page 7, and saying ELIHAM. Another way is to clench the fingers of the right hand, extend the thumb, place it on the abdomen, and move it upwards to the chin, as if ripping open the body with a knife. The brother answers as before.



Words—The pass-words are Eliham and Zerbal. Sacred words, Zerbal, Beniah, Benhakar, Bendaka, &c.

Candidate is now clothed as a companion of this degree, and salutes the Senior Warden as a Master Elect of Fifteen.

If there is no other business before the Chapter, it is then closed in same manner as in the preceding degree, except that the Master and other officers rap three times five, and the companions clap three times five with their hands curtains, and is lighted by twelve candles on four triangular branches.

The officers consist of Thrice Potent Master, representing King Solomon, sitting in the east: Grand Inspector in the west, and Master of Ceremonies.

The brethren wear white aprons, each with an inflamed heart embroidered or painted upon it, and lined and bordered with black. The ribbon, or Order, is similar to that in the preceding degree, except that in place of three heads, three hearts appear upon it. The jewel is the same.

In opening the Chapter, Thrice Potent Master raps ten, and Grand Inspector rises. Master makes the usual inquiries as to whether the Chapter is duly guarded, and the duties of the several officers, as in former degrees, which are answered by the Inspector.

Master raps eleven, and inquires of Grand Inspector—What is the hour?

Grand Inspector—It is twelve, Thrice Potent.

Master raps twelve, which is repeated by the officers, and the brethren clap twelve with their hands: Master says—If it is twelve it is time to labor by the greatest of lights. I pronounce this Grand Chapter open.

The brethren now give the signs of the different degrees, and then those of this degree, hereafter described.

If a candidate is to be admitted, he is prepared outside by the Master of Ceremonies, who brings him hoodwinked to the door, and gives twelve raps, which are answered by twelve by the Inspector, who demands, who comes there? &c.

Master of Ceremonies—A Master Elect of Fifteen desires to receive the degree of Sublime Knight.

Candidate gets admittance in the same manner as in the previous degree, and is led to the Grand In

In the Grand Masters Elect Degree of Freemasonry, the candidate pledges he will accept severe penalties if he divulges the secrets. His hand and arm are positioned on the abdomen and then moved upward "as if ripping the body open with a knife." (Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 146)

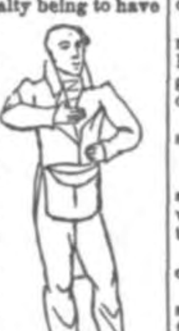
The obligation in the degree is then administered. It is similar to those of former degrees, the penalty being to have the hands nailed to the breast, &c.

The candidate is now instructed in the sign, token, and words, &c., viz.: Cross the arms on the stomach, the fingers clenched, and thumbs elevated, and raise the eyes upward. It alludes to the penalty of having the hands nailed, &c.



The token is exactly the same as that in Intimate Secretary. The pass-words are Stolkyn, Emerh, Emeth, and Amuriah. The sacred word is Adonia.

This ends the initiation.

The closing ceremonies are similar to those in previous degrees. Master raps ten and inquires about the duties of the officers: he then raps eleven and inquires of the Inspector—What is the hour?

Inspector—Low six.

Master raps twelve, and brethren rise, the signs are given, &c.

Master again raps twelve, the officers twelve, and the brethren all clap twelve with their hands, when the Master declares the Chapter to be duly closed.

the south.

The brethren, or companions, wear stone colored aprons and scarfs; the apron has a star upon it, and in some cases a square and rule: the jewel is a gold medal, with the five orders of architecture, a star, and a case of mathematical instruments delineated on each side.

In the opening, Most Potent Master raps one, and Grand Marshal rises. Master inquires if the Chapter is duly guarded, &c., the same as in the former degrees.

Master raps two, when the Grand Inspector rises.

Master—What is the hour?

Inspector—A star indicates the first instant, the first hour, and the first day in which the Grand Architect commenced the creation of the Universe.

Master raps one and two, when the companions all rise.

Master—Companions, it is the first instant, the first hour, the first day, the first year, when Solomon commenced the Temple; the first day, the first hour, the first instant for opening this Chapter. It is time to commence our labors.

Master raps one and two, the other officers do the same, and the companions clap one and two with their hands, when the Master declares the Chapter duly opened for the dispatch of business.

When a companion is to receive this degree he is prepared outside by the Master of Ceremonies, who conducts him to the door of the Chapter and raps one and two, which is answered by the same from within. He is admitted through the door by the same ceremonies as in the former degrees, and conducted to the east, where

Robert Caro's massive and magisterial Master of the Senate charts Lyndon Johnson's cunning rise

By LANCE MORROW

WHEN I WAS A SENATE PAGE boy long ago in the 1950s, my boss was Lyndon Johnson's young pet lizard, Bobby Baker. Senator Johnson would snap his fingers softly, and I would hustle to the cooler in the Democratic cloakroom to bring him a glass of White Rock sparkling water or dash down the marble back stairs to the Senate restaurant to fetch a dish of vanilla ice cream, which he ate at his desk on the Senate floor as he played his mighty legislative Wurlitzer.

In those days, a distinctive cast of characters populated the Senate. The spectacle seemed like continuous American Shakespeare, with a more interesting regional variety than homogenized America offers today.

The Southerners, flamboyant or saturnine, came from another age. Hoey of North Carolina wore wing collars. Freshman John Kennedy of Massachusetts, thin and glamorous, the millionaire's dreamboat boy, hobbled at the rear of the chamber, on crutches from his back operation. Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin, remembered now as a dark cloud shadowing America, could show, in private, an unexpected sweetness and charm. Always, front and center (first desk, middle aisle, the Democratic leader's spot) stood Lyndon Johnson, almost handsome then, in his 40s, leaner than history remembers him, narrow-eyed, his hair sleek with Stacomb, alert in a vaguely dangerous way—an impresario, a genius of nuances, a wolf in his prime.

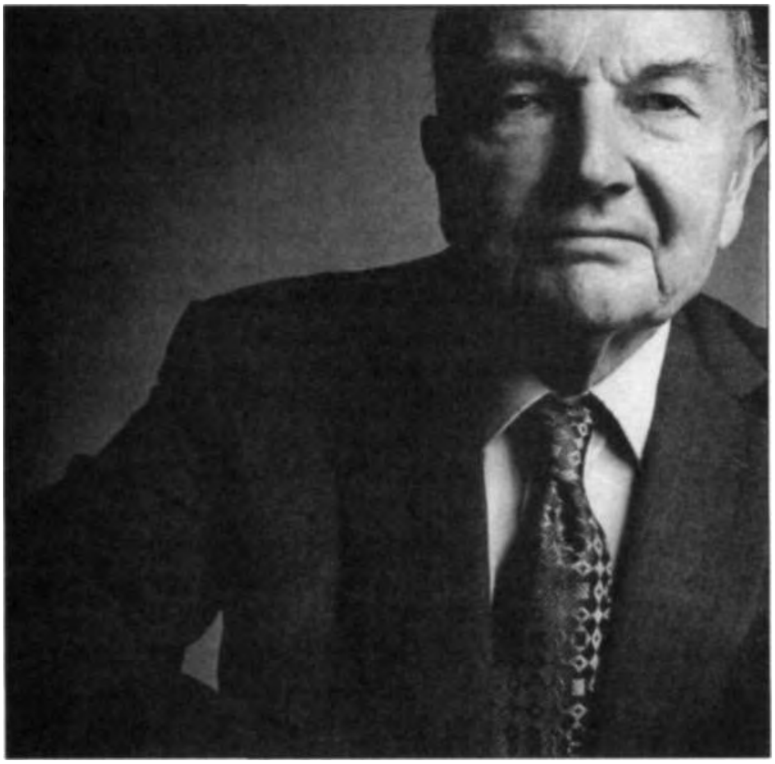
in four short years. Caro, whose great gifts are indefatigable legwork and a sense of historical drama and character, has a fine protagonist for his life's work. His Johnson, a man of Manichaean contraries, is now familiar—by turns Caligula and Lincoln, a narcissistic monster capable of immense personal cruelty and breathtaking political cynicism who now and then metamorphoses into an angel of compassion and statesmanship.

Part of the key, Caro writes, lay in Johnson's astonishing ability to talk himself into anything, including, sometimes, the right thing. (Bill Clinton also possessed the trait.) "[Johnson] had a remarkable capacity," Caro observes, "to convince himself that he held the principles he should hold at any given time, and there

PAUL SCHUTZER

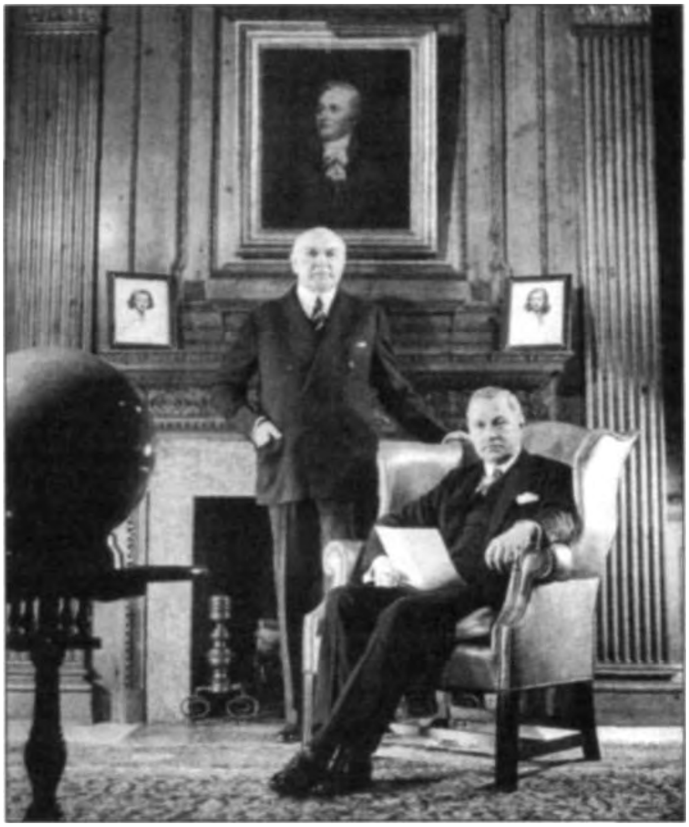
THE WOLF IN HIS PRIME: Johnson, the natty Senate majority leader and legislative magician, in 1959

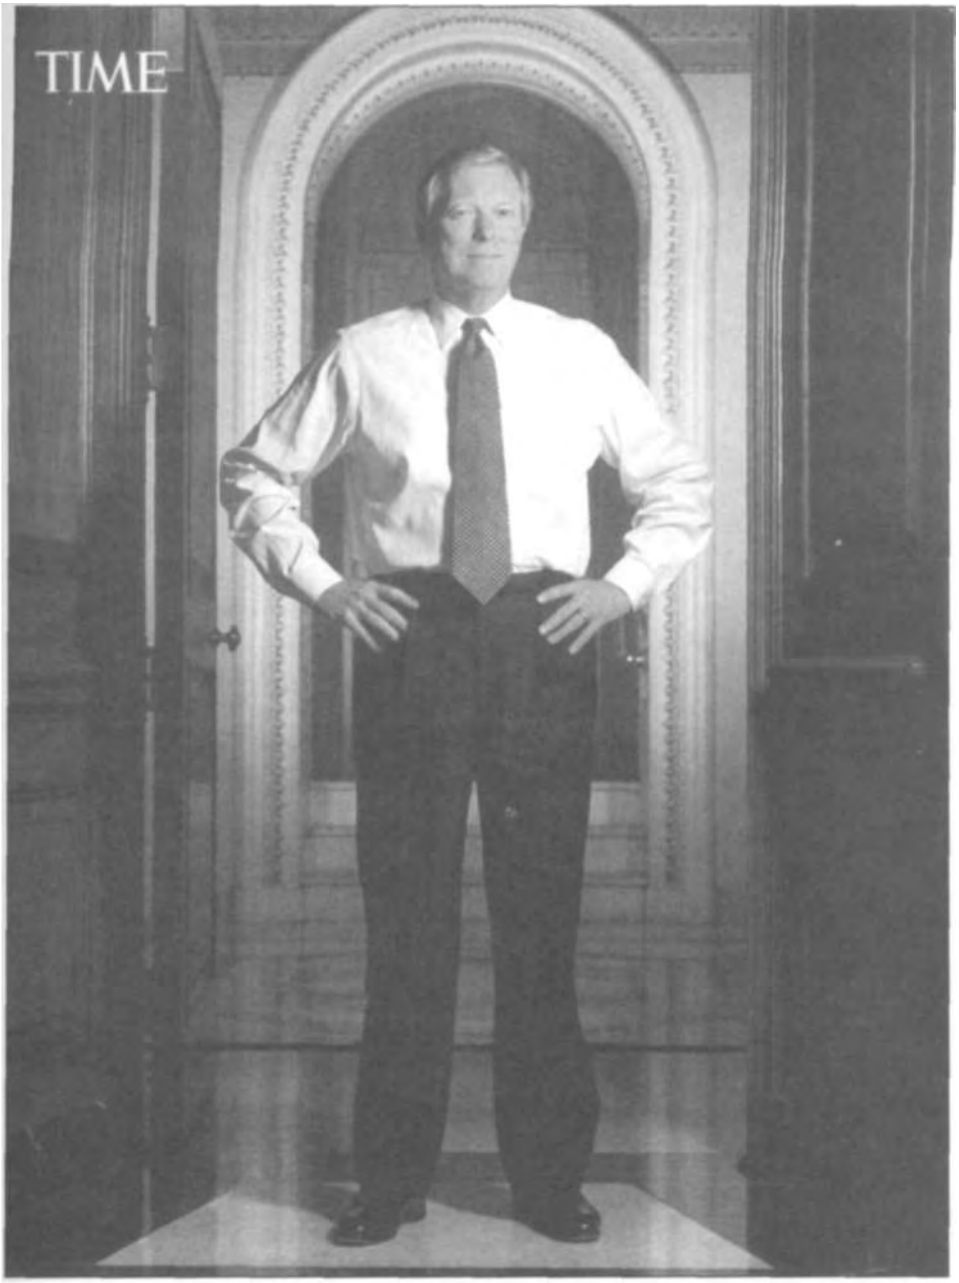
An interesting article showcasing a book about rascally President Lyndon B. Johnson. The headline says the touted, biographical book "charts Lyndon Johnson s cunning rise." The caption under the photo of LBJ describes the late President as "The Wolf In His Prime" and lauds him as a "legislative magician." Above, we are especially interested in the clearly Illuminist pose struck by Johnson: His left arm in the triangle position with the clenched fist of socialist power. No wonder this article in Newsweek magazine is entitled, "Part Devil, Part Angel." Incidentally, the Librarian of the House of the Temple, Scottish Rite, Washington, D.C., reports that Lyndon B. Johnson never got past the Master Mason (3°) degree. This author believes, however, that Johnson was initiated into other secret societies and Orders than Freemasonry and, of course, he was a key political mover and shaker acting on behalf of both Zionist interests and the nation's oil elite.



David Rockefeller, Sr., Illuminati insider, multibillionaire, and founder of the Trilateral Commission. This photo, in the upscale Town & Country magazine, was without caption or explanation. It is obviously staged as it shows the exaggerated masonic arm sign. Note that the image of Rockefeller's torso is not even centered, even though a highly professional photographer took the photo, and Town and Country magazine's editors are thorough and detailed in photo art selection and placement.

Standing: Winthrop Aldrich, Chairman, Chase-Manhattan Bank. _Sitting:_ Chase's president.





Just an innocent photo shoot? Don't believe it! This is Congressman Richard Gephardt (D-MO), House Minority Leader. He's standing on a square, in Masonry signifying rulership of the four corners of the earth. Both his arms are in the triangular position. His necktie is black and white checked, as on the floor tile of the Lodge. He is wearing the colors black and white, signifying the occult equilibrium of good and evil, light and darkness. ("Equilibrium" is the secretive "Lost Word" of Freemasonry—explained in the 33^rd^ degree as the alchemical synthesis that propels the energies of the universe.) Behind Gephardt are three steps (there are three degrees in the Blue Lodge.) He is standing in an open doorway. Behind him in mosaic on the marble floor is the emblem of the all-seeing eye. The portal beyond, looming above and virtually framing the Congressman, is the arch. The arch plays a significant role in Freemasonry, and one of the major schools of the Lodge is Royal Arch Masonry. All in all, a thoroughly Masonic—and meticulously staged and crafted scene. Gephardt was shown in this photo to be a major player in political affairs and a prime contender on the national and world scenes. This photo took up the entire page in Time magazine, but there was no caption or explanation about it. (Photo: Time magazine, September 30, 1996)

2003: Year of the woman among the 'Fortune' 500?

Small number of CEOs deliver outsized results

By Del Jones
USA TODAY

Cover story

The smart money was on the women in 2003.

Eight Fortune 500 companies have female CEOs, and as a group they outperformed the broader market by a substantial margin. An $8,000 investment Jan. 1 in the S&P 500 index would be worth $10,130 as of the close of stock trading Monday. The same $8,000 invested equally in the eight companies with women at the helm would be worth $12,130, including a loss in energy company Mirant, which has been under bankruptcy protection since July. That's a 52% gain for the women vs. a 27% gain for the index of all large companies.

One explanation is that 2003 was a fluke. When the women's performance is examined for the entire tenure they've been CEOs – which ranges from six months to 40 years – results are more mixed.

Nevertheless, 7-for-8 in 2003 is impressive enough to give rise to a Darwinian theory: The glass ceiling has been so difficult to crack that women who reach the top are, on average,

The Merovingian Dynasty, The Priory of Sion, and the Spear of Longinus

The Priory of Sion (also the Prieure de Sion) is said to be the "secret society of societies."[1] Baigent, Leigh, and Lincoln, authors of one acclaimed book, Holy Blood, Holy Grail, write that the brotherhood of the Priory of Sion has been preserved for two millennia. France's royal Merovingian Dynasty's bloodline is said to be the protector of the sect, which boasts that it is the actual bloodline of Jesus. The astonishing claim is that Jesus and Mary Magdalene were married and had children and from this bloodline shall someday arise a man who shall become the ruler of planet earth.

The Holy Grail

Tied in with this unscriptural — even blasphemous—legend are the tales of the Holy Grail and the Spear of Longinus. Some teach that as the blood of Jesus oozed from his body on the cross, it was collected in the Holy Grail cup. Esoterically that would make the Holy Grail, if it exists, magical and capable of great miracles.

A variation of this story is that the Holy Grail was the drinking vessel of Jesus at the Last Supper, which again would translate into the cup being a magical talisman.

The Spear of longinus

The Spear of Longinus is yet another legend connected to the Priory of Sion. It holds that a Roman Centurion named Longinus was the one who thrust his spear into Jesus' side at the crucifixion. Some of Jesus' blood is alleged to have fallen on him and miracles ensued. Thus, again, a magical talisman was created — the Spear of Longinus.

Throughout history wicked tyrants, including Napoleon and Hitler, have sought possession of the Spear, believing that it is the Spear of Destiny and that whoever possesses it shall have the power to rule the world.

William Cooper, whose book, Behold a Pale Horse, and his revelations on his national radio program so angered the elite they put out a contract on his life, sometimes mentioned the Spear of Destiny.[2] Cooper was murdered by a combined federal-local police team that ambushed him as he peacefully stopped his pickup at a stop sign on his way home from a grocery store. In his book, he spoke of how vital the Spear of Destiny is in the Illuminati scheme of things:

> According to members of the intelligence community, when the New World Order is solidified the relics will be taken out, will be united with the Spear of Destiny, and will, according to legend, give the world's ruler absolute power... Again, I remind you that it makes not one iota of difference what you believe. If they (the Illuminati) believe, you will be affected.[3]

The Spear As Pentagram and Lightning Bolt

The Spear is a symbol of long-standing repute in the pagan and ancient Mystery Religions. In the Egyptian religion, it was called the Arrow of Re, or Ra, the Sun God, who was also called Horus, son of Osiris and his reincarnation, who had the all-seeing eye. Anton LaVey, in his book Satan Speaks, notes that the Sign of the Spear is actually the inverted pentagram.[4] In turn, the pentagram (the satanic five-pointed star), according to LaVey represents "Excalibur, the Spear of Destiny, Wotan's spear point, the lightning bolt that created the protoplasm of life."[5]

The Rosicrucians and the Sign of An Arrow

Moreover, the Rosicrucian Order seems to be somehow connected with both the legend of the Spear and the Priory of Sion. D. C. Yermak, writing in The Axis of Death - Vatican, Masonry, Zionism, Enemies of God, explains that, "The Rosicrucians, by making their secret sign with the first three fingers of the right hand united, make the Sign of an Arrow."[6]

The Rosicrucian's Sign of an Arrow is dark and evil because it is used by the individual to remove himself from God's Blessing and leave himself purposely exposed to the arrows of the devil. (In this case, the form, or shape, relates the arrow to the spear).

Dean Grace, authoritative researcher in symbology and Masonic secrets, believes that at least some modern-day disciples of this international black lodge, Priory of Sion, communicate their involvement to other hidden members by giving the Sign of the Spear Point.[7] In this sign, the point of the spear can either be sharply angular or it can be modified. Often, the fingers are positioned so that the horns and face of Baphomet are indistinctly seen, as in the inverted pentagram star.

Grace's research also indicates the Priory of Sion is either linked or had something to do in the development of other, related occult groups such as the Order of Knights Templar. "The spear point symbol," he says, "is the building block of the four-spoked, eight-pointed Maltese Cross of the Order of the Knights of Malta."[8]

How the Sign is Given

A variation of the sharp, angular spear point sign is that displayed in this chapter of Codex Magica in the photos of ABC News reporter Sam Donaldson and U.S.A. Vice President Dick Cheney. However, their modified hand and finger positioning is likely simply a personal eccentricity. As in all cases of secret hand signs, human variation and personality intervene, so that not all the signs are rendered expertly and in a crisp, uniform, standardized fashion.

When placed in or near the female vulva area or the male genital area, the spear point becomes a phallic symbol. In all cases, the sign of the spear point is given so that the Y, the spear or arrow, is pointing downward, toward the nether regions where, presumably, Satan and his legions reside. That is, toward the pit of hell.

Why did Clinton, who last gave a one-on-one television interview to PBS' Jim Lehrer on Jan. 21, 1998, agree to talk to Rather, who last interviewed Clinton after the 1996 Democratic National Convention?

"The war is on, and he's concerned about having the public understand very clearly why he's doing this, and what he hopes to accomplish," Rather said after spending just over an hour at the White House.

Rather said he had no concerns about being used by Clinton to push his agenda on Yugoslavia. "There are times when one has that thought, but when you're talking about war, you can never get too much information."

Clinton said the NATO campaign "will take some time." On other subjects, he said he "never" considered resigning, his family is doing "quite well, considering what we've been through" and "I'd be happy to

Lucky Timing Is Good (Big Time)

Vice President Dick Cheney bailed out of his chief executive's job at Halliburton before an acquisition hit the fan and its stock plummeted

SOMETIMES IT'S BETTER TO BE LUCKY THAN SMART. Consider Vice President Dick Cheney. He's got to be one of the luckiest former corporate chieftains on the planet. No, I'm not talking about managing to pull out the election in Florida. Rather, I'm talking about how he came out about $20 million ahead because, at least partly because of public criticism, he cashed in stock options that would currently be underwater if he'd kept them. And how, luckily for him, he had left the executive suite before the roof fell in at Halliburton, the big oil-services company that he used to run.

This same "better lucky than smart" principle applies to the Bushies who had to liquidate their Enron holdings to take big jobs in the administration. Some of them complained about the supposed injustice of having to make such a financial sacrifice. Poor babies. Of course, they've totally lucked out, because Enron, $70 a share when Bush was sworn in, now goes for 24 cents.

Cheney's worth a closer look because he's the luckiest of the group. And because a deal he made as Halliburton's CEO has come back to haunt the company—big time, as he would say.

RIGHT PLACE, RIGHT TIME: Cheney in 1996, when the energy company he ran was on the way up

Let me give you some history, and take you through Lucky Cheney's math. In August 2000, you may recall, George W. Bush picked Cheney to be his vice presidential candidate. Cheney, a longtime politician who had been at Halliburton all of five years, promptly stepped down. He said he would sell his stock before taking office if the Republicans won—but he wouldn't commit to unloading his Halliburton options. That caused an uproar because owning Halliburton options would have given Cheney exactly the same ethical problem as owning Halliburton stock: he would have a substantial personal interest in Halliburton's stock price. The company traditionally has good years when oil prices are rising and not-so-good years when they're falling. The conflict is obvious.

Cheney cashed in all the options he could, clearing $19 million by my math. Since I can't read Cheney's mind and I couldn't get any comment from him or his associates, I don't know if he sold because of the public pressure, or because he wanted to sell. Regardless, it sure worked out well for him. He got around $10 million more from selling the Halliburton shares he owned outright. Total: around $30 million. I'm a bit vague on the numbers because no one in Cheneyland would discuss them with me. So I'm relying on public documents, work by Thomson Wealth Management and my own analysis.

Flash-forward to the present. At Halliburton's current price of around $17, Cheney's options would be out of the money, because their exercise prices ranged from $21 to $54.50. Someday, of course, Halliburton's stock price may soar. But for now, Cheney is $19 million ahead because he cashed them in. (His $10 million of stock would currently fetch $3 million.)

I don't think for a minute that Cheney bailed out of Halliburton knowing that trouble lay ahead. I think he just got lucky. If he were still Halliburton's CEO, shareholders would probably be screaming for his head. That's because his biggest deal—Halliburton's $8 billion purchase of Dresser Industries in 1998—infected Halliburton with an asbestos liability. Think of it as financial plague, and you get a sense of how nasty the problem is. To give you the short version, Dresser once had a subsidiary, Harbison-Walker, that used asbestos in some products. Dresser made Harbison-Walker a separate company in 1992, and H-W agreed to take over the entire asbestos liability. But the claims became so enormous that H-W and a European company that subsequently bought it both ended up in bankruptcy. So the asbestos lawsuits, searching for deeper pockets, have migrated to Dresser and its new owner, Halliburton.

A Halliburton spokesman said the firm didn't know it was taking on a potential asbestos problem when it bought Dresser in 1998: "We believed they were indemnified," she said. Indeed, in the past year or so, asbestos liability has exploded, becoming a threat to companies that barely know how to spell asbestos. Halliburton, which lost some big asbestos verdicts that it's now appealing, has taken an active role in H-W's bankruptcy, trying to pull off a fancy maneuver to keep the asbestos problem confined to H-W. We won't know for years how the game ends.

Meanwhile, Cheney isn't giving any of his stock and options profits back to Halliburton or its shareholders. He gets the blame for this fiasco, because he was in charge. That's the way the world works. Big time.

Actor Danny Glover, notorious for his Marxist liberal political activism, sends a cabalistic message through the medium of AARP magazine, also known for its Marxist and Jewish agenda. Glover is signaling deep occultic spirits to empower his quest.

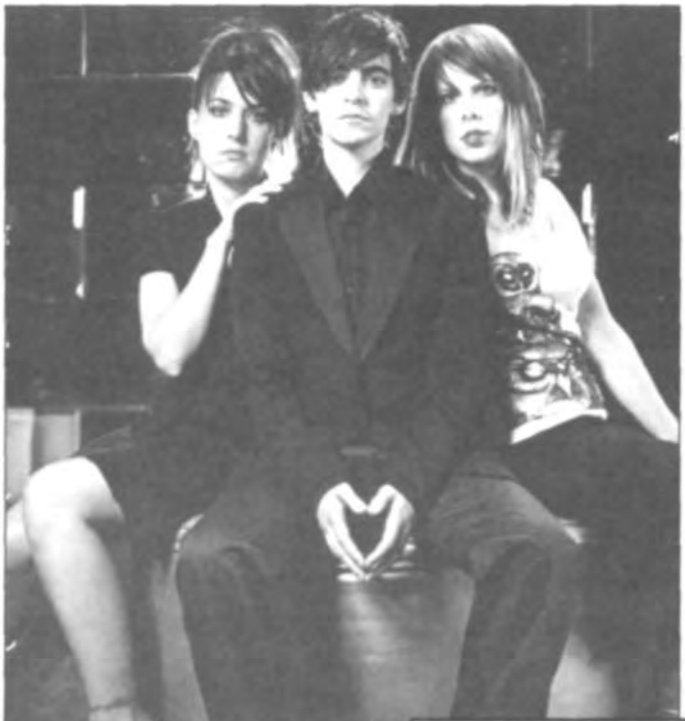
Impresario Donald Trump demonstrates his knowledge of the Illuminati's cabalistic Baphomet/Priory of Sion hand sign in the ad (left, above) for his successful TV series, The Apprentice. Then, in the glossy mag Private Clubs, June 2004, read mostly by wealthy members of elite country clubs. Trump is shown three times, once on the cover and twice inside, in cabalistic poses. Analysis: At center, above, Trump's necktie and hands create a sexual "diamond in the lotus" position, with three triangles. The magazine cover photo at left includes the mirror factor, the message being that there are two Trumps, the esoteric, private "Illuminati Trump," and the outgoing and extroverted "Public Trump." Finally, at top, right, we also are shown a serious Donald sitting and giving the required cabalistic triangle sign with both the fingers and thumbs of both hands touching. This is a common sign of recognition among Illuminati.



Mexican actor Diego Luna played a bisexual in the raunchy movie, Y Tu Mama Tambien (And Your Mother, Too). In this photo from Interview magazine (2004), Luna gives the Baphomet and Priory of Sion hand sign giving it cabalistic sexual impact by placement of his hands in the genital area. He shows his indifference and ambivalence toward the beautiful girls on either side, conduct befitting a homosexual.

Magical Signs of the Jewish Cabala—The Six-Pointed Star, Babylonian Witchcraft, and the Hollywood Perdition of Jerry Seinfeld and Associates

He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committeth here...

Ezekiel 8:6

Kabbalism is a system of Jewish mysticism and magic and is the foundational element in modern witchcraft. Virtually all of the great witches and sorcerers of this century were Kabbalists.

— William J. Schnoebelen, in The Dark Side of Freemasonry

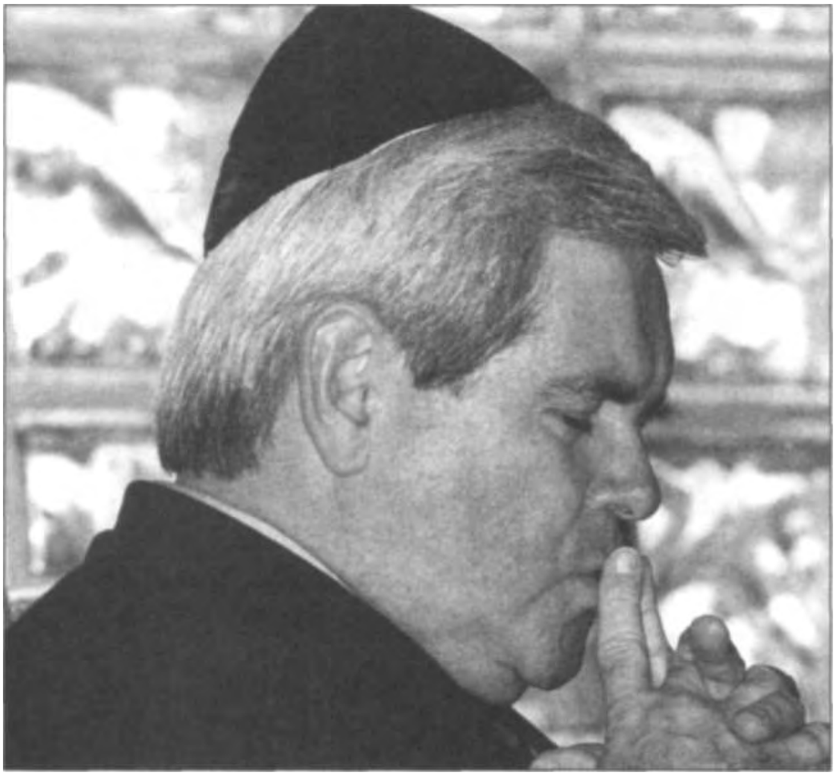
In the decades of the 70s, 80s, and 90s, the hottest spiritual trend was the New Age movement. As we move forward through the first decade of the 21st century, the latest cure-all spiritual phenomenon seems to be the Jewish Cabala (or Kabbalah). The Cabala is not new, of course. It's been around for centuries. The Cabala is actually ancient magic. It is an exotic blend of devilish, sometimes fanciful, New Age mystical practices topped by a philosophical bent of Jewish supremacism. Orthodox Judaism, or phariseeism, is rife with cabalism, and Jewish rabbis are the Cabala's greatest promoters.

Celebrities and Cabala

The recent explosion in mainstream interest in cabalism is boosted by the many big-name celebrities who have recently been hawking cabalism as the miraculous answer to all of man's problems. An undercover BBC reporter who infiltrated a London cabala group witnessed singer Madonna and Guy Ritchie chanting mystic spells to "cleanse" Chernobyl, the site in Ukraine of a nuclear plant disaster in 1986.[1] Other news accounts link entertainers Paris Hilton, Britney Spears, Roseanne Barr, Demi Moore, Shirley MacLaine, Ashton Kutcher, Sandra Bernhard, Barbra Streisand, Dianne Keaton, Gwyneth Paltrow, Goldie Hawn, Elizabeth Taylor, Michael Jackson, Mick Jagger, Uri Gellar, Diane Ladd, Laura Dern and a legion of other "stars" with practice of cabala.[2]

Look closely when you see any of these people on TV or pictured in magazines and you'll often see the characteristic red string wristband they wear. Lately, former President Bill Clinton's been spotted wearing it—he's a cabalist—and so has Florida's politician Katherine Harris, who became a famous household icon as Florida's Republican Secretary of State during the bizarre 2000 election snafu. Republican bigwig and former House Speaker, Newt Gingrich is reported to be a cabala advocate, and some say conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh and his rabbi are also into the cabala.

Among the most notorious of cabalists are the TV comedy stars of the once #1-rated "The Jerry Seinfeld Show." The producer of the Seinfeld show was Larry David, a Jew, all four of the cast were Jews, and cabalistic hand signs, occult language, and magic rituals were covertly planted in many episodes.



Republican Party spokesman and former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich, shown here wearing his Judaism skull cap, is into New Age cabalistic magic and is a paid spokesman for Zionist interests.

Jason Alexander, who played the loveable loser "George Costanza" on the show, posed for TV Guide magazine in a blatantly cabalistic body pose. Plus, his left and right hands gave the "El Diablo" horned devil sign in an "As Above, So Below" gesture.

Michael Richards, who portrayed the klutzy "Kramer" in Seinfeld, also seems to relish giving cabalistic and Masonic hand signs and gestures. Richards was pictured on the front cover of the Scottish Rite Journal, and inside the publication, he told of how pleased he is to be a Freemason.[3]

Star Trek's Leonard Nimoy ("Mr. Spock") is constantly sighted in cabalistic poses. His famous Vulcan hand sign on the TV series was actually the Hebrew letter, Shin.[4] Its display is part and parcel of Jewish religion. So every time viewers observed Mr. Spock (Nimoy) giving the sign, they were unknowingly being made a participant in a cabalistic occult ritual.

Sodom, Egypt, and 21st Century Judaism

In one of the most controversial of all the many video documentaries I have produced, Cauldron of Abbadon, I stated, "From Jerusalem and Israel flow a torrent of satanic evil and mischief endangering the whole world. "[5] Zionist Jews and their cohorts in the Christian Zionist community were angered over what I said, but they had no response to the mountain of facts presented in the video proving my point.

It is undeniable that God Himself, in Revelation 11:8, declares that in the last days just prior to Christ's return, one of the most wicked places on earth will be Jerusalem and Israel. In Revelation God calls Jerusalem "Sodom and Egypt."

The question is, why? Why is Jerusalem and the nation of Israel spiritually "Sodom and Egypt?" I believe it is because of the Jewish religion, a religion diametrically opposed to the Old Testament faith of Moses, Isaac, Jacob, and the prophets.

From the days of the Jews' captivity in Babylon, to today, the religion of the Jews has increasingly grown more dark and more wicked. Jesus openly castigated the Jewish religionists; He called them "blind guides," "fools, hypocrites." He said, "ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer...ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves" (Matthew 23:14-15).

Children of hell, that's what Jesus called the Jewish religious teachers. That was almost 2,000 years ago. Well, guess what? The Jewish religionists are even worse now, in the 21st century. They've had almost 2,000 years more to practice and perfect their evil religion. Today, those who practice satanic cabalism and believe in the Talmud are the children of hell a hundred times over.

In Codex Magica we do not have the space to fully report on the almost unbelievably wicked Talmudic and Cabalistic religion of the Jews. But it is important to understand that the horrific nature of the Jews' religion lie in its man-made traditions. In reality, these traditions are satanic in origin. I refer especially to the Jewish Talmud, the legalistic law traditions of the rabbis, and to the Jewish Cabala (also Kabbalah or Quaballah), which are the mystical teachings and traditions of the rabbis and sages.

If the Jews had stuck to the teachings of the Old Testament, Satan would not have had such terrible inroads. Indeed, if Moses and the prophets had been heeded, or if their writings were honored today, the Jews would believe in Jesus Christ as Messiah and be saved by faith in His promises. Instead, the Jews departed from the prophets, and over the centuries the rabbis steadily developed a body of man-made literature (the Talmud and the Cabala) that is supremely wicked and corrupt. Their traditions, moreover, are antithetical to the Faith and teachings of Moses and the prophets. (I do not refer, of course, to the Faith of Jews who are Christian believers.)

Worse, it can be remarkably demonstrated that the philosophy and doctrines of the Jewish Cabala are the very fount and wellspring of virtually every wicked, occult sect, satanic secret society, and witchcraft cult that has arisen in the past one thousand years!

The Cabala brings together in one neat package the core of all the Mystery teachings of the ancients. Indeed, the Holy Bible gives evidence that the Jewish elders had brought the Mysteries into the Temple and had conducted secret ceremonies in hidden chambers as far back as the days of the prophet Ezekiel (see Ezekiel 8). God called these teachings and rituals "abominations."

Regrettably, the abominations are multiplied in the 21st century Jewish religion in which the Cabala plays a central role.

The Masonic Lodge and The Cabala

Freemasonry has long praised the Cabala, and its top officials have admitted that the Lodge's rituals and teachings are but the offspring of the Jewish tradition. Albert Pike, former Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite wrote: "One is filled with admiration, on penetrating into the Sanctuary of the Cabala."[6]

Just how much Masonry owes to the Cabala is illustrated by study of the Knights of Kadosh degree (30°). Ed Decker, director of Free the Masons Ministries, reports that the trappings of this degree ritual are "overtly sinister" and incorporate a "High level of Kabbalistic symbolism."

> When one is surrounded by black curtains, skulls, and a coffin with a shrouded knight speaking forth from within, it doesn't take a spiritual giant to discern that this is not a godly organization![7]

Confirming Decker's findings, medical doctor James L. Holly, a Christian who has done great works in exposing Freemasonry, in his outstanding volume, The Southern Baptist Convention and Freemasonry, shows how the 30° Masonic initiate is led unawares into a direct spiritual relationship with Satan. In the ritual, Satan is personified as a mysterious cabalistic mystic.[8]

Interestingly, Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry says that, "the Knights of Kadosh Degree is intimately connected with the ancient Order of Knights Templar, as it commemorates their old ceremonies of initiation."[9] Allegedly, the members of the Order of Knights Templar worshipped Baphomet, the hideous male/female Luciferian goat god and conducted blasphemous ceremonies, which included urinating on a cross and homosexual sodomy.

Freemasonry is Jewish

In 1855, the renowned Rabbi Isaac Wise wrote: "Freemasonry is a Jewish establishment, whose history, grades, official appointments, passwords, and explanations are Jewish from beginning to end."[10]

The Jewish Tribune newspaper, in 1927, in an editorial, stated: "Freemasonry is based on Judaism. Eliminate the teachings of Judaism from the Masonic ritual and what is left?"[11]

Ray Novosel, writing from Australia in 2004, states:

> Zionist world leaders, men in influential positions with the various Masonic organizations everywhere, have worked "hand in glove" for a universal world revolution, which will bring in the One World Church and a One World Government. Many Masonic Lodges are exclusively Jewish, as are the controlling

The Master steps to the feet of the candidate, bending over, takes him by the real grip of a Master Mason, places his right foot against the candidate's right foot, and his hand to his back, and, with the assistance of the brethren, raises him up perpendicularly in a standing position, and, when fairly on his feet, gives him the grand Masonic word on the five points of fellowship. (See Fig. 18.)

REAL GRIP OF A MASTER MASON

In the mean time, the canvas is slipped out of the Lodge, and as the Master commences to give or whisper the word in the candidate's ear, some one of the brethren slips off the hoodwink, and this is the first time he has seen light, probably, in an hour. The following is the representation of the Master giving candidate the grand Masonic word, or at least this is a substitute, for, according to Masonic tradition, the right one was lost at the death of Hiram Abiff.[1] This word cannot be given in any other way, and by Masons is considered a test of all book Masons.

The Master having given the word, which is MAH-HAH-BONE, in low breath, requests the candidate to repeat it with him, which is in this wise:

Master whispers in candidate's ear—Mah.

Candidate—Hah.

Master—Bone.

[1] Respecting the lost word and its substitute, some say that King Solomon advised the change, while others affirm that the three Fellow Crafts adopted the substituted word without consulting him. And Dalcho observes that the interpolated word "is not to be found in any language that ever was used. It is, in fact, not a word, but merely a jumble of letters, forming a sound without meaning."—The Freemason's Treasury, p. 301.

Freemasonry's The Real Grip of a Master Mason (3°) is a magical handshake based on ancient Jewish Cabala and the letter "Shin" from the 22-letter Hebrew alphabet. (Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor, p. 120)

Masonry's Jewish Roots

A popular pro-Freemasonry web site, in an article entitled "Judaism and Freemasonry," comments:

> Jews were actively involved in the beginnings of Freemasonry in America. There is evidence they were among those who established Masonry in seven of the original thirteen states...A Jewish Mason, Moses M. Hays, helped introduce the Scottish Rite in America...Jews, including Rabbis, continued to be involved in the Masonic movement in the United States throughout our history. There have been 51 Jewish American Grand Masters...

> There are many common themes and ideals in Masonic and Jewish rituals, symbols, and words.[13]

The late Pope John Paul II was a believer in Jewish Cabala. On March 22, 1984, the Pope received members of the infamous B'nai B'rith Freemasonry Lodge of New York City, made up exclusively of influential Jews, at the Vatican.

"I am proud to be a Mason" writes Rabbi Seymour Adas, 32°, in this issue of The New Age Magazine (April 1987). Note: The name of this magazine has since been changed to The Scottish Rite Journal, to hide the connection of Masons with the occultic New Age movment. In fact, the Masonic order is predominantly led by Jews. As its former Sovereign Grand Commander, Albert Pike, has revealed, the symbols and rituals of Freemasonry are all based on the Cabala of the Jews.

The most honored Masonic leader in the history of Freemasonry was Albert Pike. Pike maintained that, "every Masonic Lodge is a temple of religion; and its teachings are instruction in religion."[14] Now, Pike also asserted that the true meanings of the symbols of Freemasonry are found in the occult philosophy of the Jewish Cabala, that Freemasonry owes all its secrets to the Cabala, and that Freemasonry is a religion based on the Cabala.[15]

Demons, Magic, and Mysticism in the Cabala

Here are the eye-opening comments of a number of knowledgeable authorities on the Jewish Cabala:

> The Cabala contains such power and demonic teaching, it is more than enough to give the ideology and driving force needed to lead the world astray and to keep such an evil conspiracy alive through the centuries...The Cabala is a teaching source of the Freemasons as well as for other groups.

Sorcery is commonplace in the depraved religious rituals of cabalistic Judaism. Here a rabbi is seen carrying a chicken off to be sacrificed in a voodoo/ Santeria-type ritual during the Jewish festival of Yom Kippur. (Israel, A Photobiography, by Micha Bar-Am, New York: Simon & Schuster, 1998)

Twisted Satanic Rituals and lies

The rabbinical doctrines and teachings of Cabalism are based on a curious blending and mosaic of astrology, numerology, graphology, color magic, symbology, alchemy, pagan religion, and pure Luciferianism.

There are hand signs and body gestures, talismanic jewelry and clothing, hidden codes, and on and on. The end result is a confusing jumble of "man is God" theology (but only Jewish man—Gentiles are inferior) and magical formulae, words of power, incantations and spells. Heads of chickens are cropped off and blood sprinkled around; "magic cords" of specific color are worn on the wrist as miracle-working bracelets; magic water is used to heal; magic symbols are objects of trance-like mediation; and mantra-like chants are repeated over and over.

The 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet are touted as religious idols of great magical powers. Even their shapes are studied and accorded supernatural powers. Angels, Archangels, grimoires, devas, and elementals are worshipped and feared. There are "gods" and more "gods" but only a mysterious, hazy supreme deity behind everything. This supreme deity is a pantheistic god who fills up the whole universe. In fact, he is the macrocosm, the Universe.

Of course, as in all Illuminist magic, there's the double-minded theology of "As Above, So Below," the insidious lie that black is white and vice versa; that good and evil are one, that the shadow and the substance are unitary.

Sex magic holds an important place in Cabalism, and sex ritual is a popular vocation of students of Cabala.

Margie Martin, in her informed, unpublished manuscript for her upcoming book, The Molten Image, explains that the Tarot cards of witches and occultists are of Jewish origin and correspond with the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet.

Finally, Cabalism is pure Illuminism because it teaches the secret doctrine that, ultimately, the higher level adept learns: That the Holy Serpent is the true God; that all the evil that a person does, through alchemy, is magically transformed into righteousness; and that, yes, Lucifer is Lord. Satan is the true and only god. That is the essential doctrine of Cabalism.

The Star of David and The Jewish Utopia

The symbol of the Jewish six-pointed star, known as the Seal of Solomon and as the Magen David, is the preeminent symbol of Cabalism, but other symbols, signs, and marks also hold the interest of cabalists, including the pentagram or pentacle, the triangle, the circle, the sun, the obelisk, the yoni, and the diamond. It is believed by cabalistic rabbis that there are hidden codes and messages in the numbering of scriptural letters. It is also believed that by working the Cabala, the earth may someday be renovated, rebuilt, perfected. This, say the rabbis, will result in a perfect Jewish Kingdom, or Utopia on earth, ruled by a Cabalist Master, a Jewish leader, naturally.

This belief system of the coming of a Jewish Utopia fits in well with the teachings of the Illuminati. Lady Queensborough, quoting the Jewish authority Bernard Lazare, in the classic Occult Theocracy, reported that, "There were Jews behind Weishaupt, founder of the Order of the Illuminati...Jewish financiers such as Daniel Itzig, Friedlander, Ceerfbeer, Benjamin and Abraham Goldsmid, Moses Mocatta, Veitesl Heine Ephram...also Moses Mendelsohn, Naphtali Wessely, Moses Hersheim..."[16]

Notice how the poster is twisted to make it look like Sharon has horns! Indeed, Sharon has been called the "Butcher of Lebanon" and is accused of the massacre of Lebanese civilians while he served as Israel's defense minister. Oddly perhaps, the horned shape of the twisted poster resembles the image of the official symbol of the U.S./U.S.S.R. Summit (see inset, above left). Also, notice the striking similarity with the Masonic Grand Sign (below inset).

The magic of the Cabala calls for many uses of the occultic star. Both the five pointed star and six-pointed star are used by Jewish magicians who work the Cabala formulas and rituals. An enduring cabalistic tale is that of the Golem. In medieval times, it was taught that by use of the magic word and by other means, an inanimate man made of clay or dust could be made to come alive. A huge and powerful monster, or beast, the Golem would then do the magician's bidding. In 1920, the classic film Der Golem created a stir. Directed by Paul Wegener, Der Golem depicted the monster variously wearing either the five-pointed star with one point up (white magic) or two points up (satanic). Also the six pointed Star of David played a part in the film's plot as a Jewish Rabbi, Rabbi Low, using the secret word "AemAct" brought life and breath into the artificial man.

In Der Golem, Rabbi Low employs the magic word and the pentagram star to bring life to the creature.

Der Golem's* film crew used this drawing as a model.

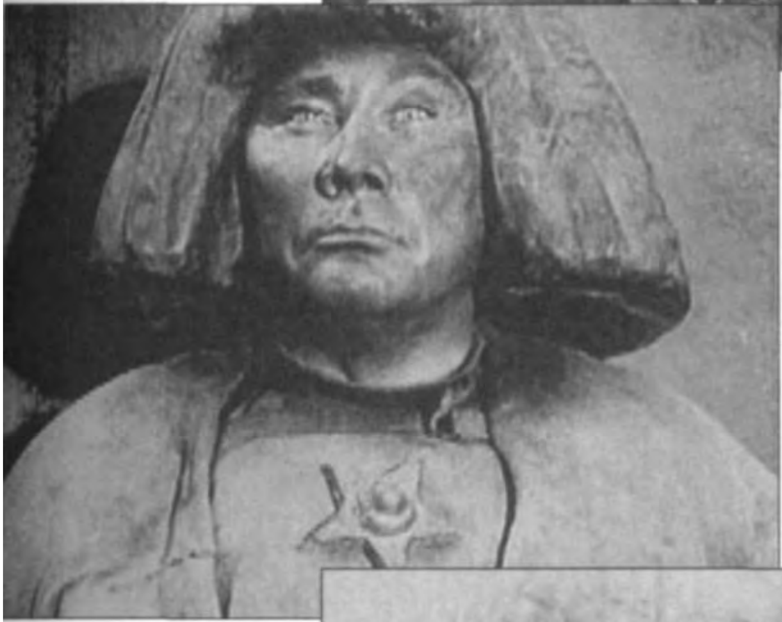
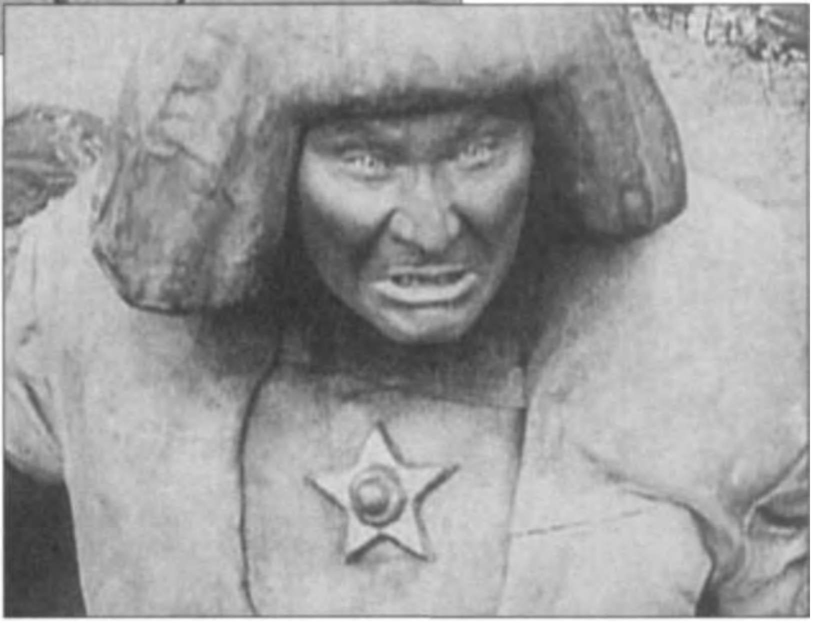
In the film, the Golem is clearly identified with Judaism by use of the Star of David.



Der Golem was shown during the movie with the pentagram star. Here we see two points ascendant (negative; horns of evil).



The relative position of the star points varies through the movie. It is seen here with one point ascendant, indicating positive, good magic.

This album was advertised in Christian Retailing magazine in February 2002, but me handsign of the person seems to be cabalistic.

Clinton: Mideast peace talks revitalized

OSLO, Norway — President Clinton won pledges of intense peace negotiations from Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat on Tuesday. "We have revitalized the peace process," an upbeat Clinton declared. Barak promised to "finish the journey" initiated by Yitzhak Rabin, the Israeli leader gunned down by an Israeli opponent of the peace process in 1995. Barak and Arafat said they will speak regularly during the 100-day sprint for peace, which may include a U.S.-sponsored summit meeting.

Placing one hand, resembling horns, in the other symbolizes the idea that the person is entrusting his soul in care to the superior deity (Satan). Thus, he is submissive, playing down his own power and acknowledging a superior power which controls him. In effect, Senator Charles Schumer (D-NY), ADL fanatic and avid Jewish Talmudist, greets "in-the-know" readers of Newsweek (December 28, 1998) with a cabalistic sign. The knowing look on Schumer's face is telling, isn't it?

Needless to say, Ehud Barak won!

WORLD REPORT

Getting into the ring

Wealthy Americans and other foreigners played a quiet role in Israel's election

BY DAVID MAKOVSKY

JERUSALEM—In the United States, he is the Slim-Fast king. But in Israel, the affable Danny Abraham last week was playing kingmaker.

At a private dinner of Mediterranean mixed grill in the seaside town of Netanya, the wealthy American Jewish businessman tried to persuade Yitzhak ("Itzik") Mordechai, a fading third-party candidate in Israel's presidential election, to drop out of the race and throw his support to Labor Party candidate Ehud Barak. This, the American argued, could push Barak's share of the vote over 50 percent and give him a clean, first-round knockout of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu—avoiding a run-off election on June 1.

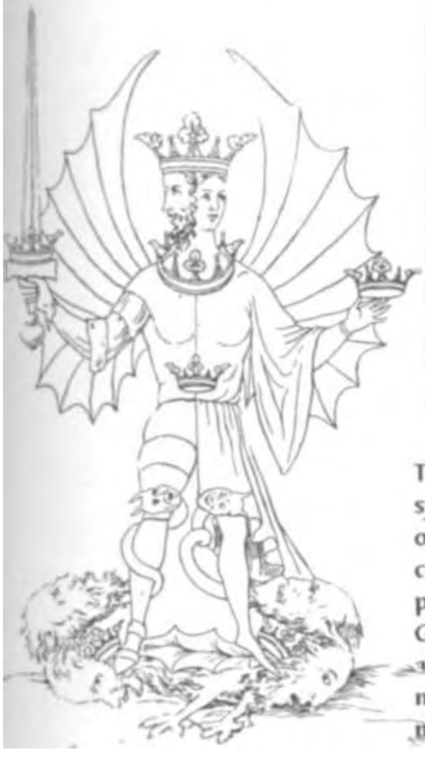
Mordechai demurred, but he had to listen. "Danny [Abraham] is a contributor to Itzik, and he wanted him to join up with Labor," says a source close to Mordechai, who reportedly made three trips abroad to raise funds from American Jews like Abraham, who built a fortune on the Slim-Fast brand of diet supplements.

Israel's 1994 election law prohibits foreign contributions to candidates. And yet, the only thing unusual about Mordechai's campaign is its candor. Both of Israel's major parties, Labor and Likud, also are suspected of receiving indirect assistance from wealthy foreigners. Campaign insiders say that $4 million in foreign money flowed into the 1992 elections, and that the taps opened even wider in 1996 and this year.

Atmospherics. Rather than going directly into party coffers, the money pays for "atmospheric" advertising that does not promote a candidate by name, but pushes an agenda; for transportation of voters to the polls, including chartered planes that bring Israeli citizens home from abroad shortly before election day; and possibly for campaign advice, although this is disputed.

Both of the big Israeli parties have expensive American consultants. Arthur Finkelstein, the Republican strategist, advises Netanyahu. Finkelstein said in an interview that he is paid just $4,000 per month by Netanyahu's Likud Party—considerably less than he charges some American clients. Meanwhile, Ron Lauder, heir to the Estee Lauder cosmetics company, admits hiring Finkelstein, but not on behalf of Netanyahu. It is unclear how Democratic consultant James Carville has been paid for his work on behalf of Barak. But Likud filed two complaints last week against Barak's campaign, charging use of nonprofit groups to circumvent funding laws. Says Menachem Hofnung, a Hebrew University political scientist: "The politicians go abroad and raise the money for so-called nonprofit associations, even though everyone knows it benefits their campaigns." ■

Barak strikes a Sinatra-esque pose on the campaign trail.



The androgyne, a combination creature of male and female, symbolizes the hermaphrodite principle of the two-faced entity, or two-headed eagle. In the Jewish Cabala, this strange creation, a conjunction of the feminine and masculine principles, is known as "Adam Kadmon," both Adam and Eve, a Golem. This conjunction of opposites is part of the science of alchemy, or hermeticism and is especially beloved by occult magicians. In witchcraft, it is known as the joining of sun and moon, and sacred sex rituals are common.

Worldly fortunes

What is the value of a sensitive, boyish face, a wry and irreverent sense of humor or a knack for a clever phrase accompanied by a hypnotic rhythm? Pretty darn high, according to Forbes' list of the 40 highest-paid entertainers. Heartthrob Leonardo DiCaprio, comedian Jerry Seinfeld and rapper Master P, all of whom are on the list, would concur.

The 1998 estimated incomes of many of the super-rich entertainers cited by the business magazine come close to the most recently reported gross national products of several developing nations. That should raise a few eyebrows at the World Bank, which monitors international financial policy. The gross national product (GNP) is a nation's total goods and services valued at market prices.

DiCaprio's $37 million is chump change compared to Seinfeld's $225 million, which makes him No. 1 on the Forbes list. (DiCaprio is 34th.) But $37 million is big bucks in Africa's Tanzania, whose 1994 GNP was only $2 billion. Seinfeld's projected income could boost the economy of Kenya, which had a 1994 GNP of $7 billion.

Master P, who taught MTV viewers the meaning of "'UH! Na Na Na NAH,'" is expected to earn $56.5 million this year. Closely following the rapper on the Forbes' list is Austin's own Mike Judge, co-creator of Fox TV's "King of the Hill." Judge is expected to earn $53 million this year. The men's combined incomes would be one-sixth of the gross national product of the central African nation of Zaire, which was $6 billion in 1994.

Others on Forbes' list include the Rolling Stones ($57 million) and the Spice Girls ($49 million) and television talk show queen Oprah Winfrey ($125 million), who has appeared on the list several years in a row.

Any of the entertainers on the Forbes' list could influence the economies of several of the world's nations. "Not that there's anything wrong with that," as Seinfeld and crew would say defensively. But the list sure does put the world's financial troubles in context.

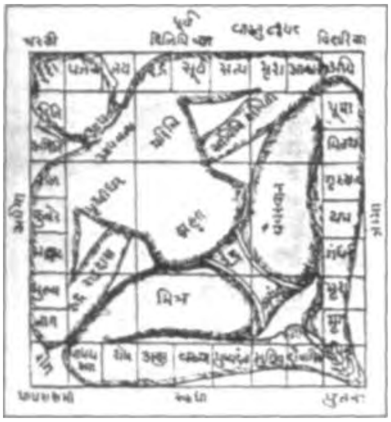
Cabalists and members of many secret societies use "sacred geometry" to create designs and symbols of magical and occultic power. This is the cover of one book on this subject. Hundreds of books and texts on sacred geometry have been published over the centuries, from the days of Pythagoras.



The Hindu religion also is big on sacred geometry and cabalistic oriented measurements and architecture. This is a "plan" for a Hindu temple based on the diagram of the Perusha, or *"Cosmic Man."*The ancient Hindu architectural sutra (rule) proclaims that, "The whole universe is present in the Temple in the form of geometric proportion." In the Hindu practice of Yoga, the participant bends and twists his or her body parts and limbs into specific forms symbolic of universal energies (Drawing from book, Sacred Geometry, by Robert Lawlor, Thames and Hudsen, London, 1989, p. 92)

(including this one) who found it hard to forgive that sour bunch of Seinfeld misanthropes after last season's bad-taste finale, in which the death of George's fiancée, Susan, was callously shrugged off by all, tonight's brilliant episode offers a glimpse at what life might be like if these creeps were actually nice guys.

You don't want to go there.

It starts when Elaine breaks up with Kevin (Tim DeKay), her nice-guy boyfriend of last week, and suggests they just be friends. Kevin likes the idea. Kevin, you see, likes friends.

Whereas Jerry, when he hears about this, sneers, "Why would anybody want a friend?" (Take that, Friends clones.)

When Elaine meets Kevin's other buddies, they turn out to be funhouse-mirror inverses of that gang of hers: a bald schmo named Gene (Kyle T. Hefner) and a gangly guy named Feldman (Pat Kilbane). They're normal. They sit around and read. Kooky they're not.

Actor Jason Alexander ("George" in Seinfeld TV series) performs a cabala ritual in plain sight of a vast audience. To the uninitiated and ignorant millions of people who read TV Guide and see this cover, Jason Alexander appears to be merely hamming it up. Little do they know of the deeper occult meaning. For example, we find Jason's left and right hands giving the "El Diablo" satanic hand sign. His arms—one pointing up, the other down—indicate the dualistic (marriage of opposites, or reconciliation), cabalistic magical philosophy "As Above, So Below" (The devil goat Baphomet performs the same sign). We also note the three triangles presented by Jason's legs and arms.

Shlenker wants city and county to pay his debts

Both sides consider appeals of court ruling

Promoter Sidney Shlenker said Tuesday he would "walk away" from The Pyramid if the city and county would pay his creditors millions of dollars.

Shlenker also said he is willing to forgo repayment of $2 million which he says he sank into the project. But the attorney representing the local governments said agreeing to pay Shlenker's creditors would be "paying for his mistakes."

Shlenker's comments followed a ruling Monday in which U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Bernice Donald said local governments did not give adequate notice before ending a contract with Shlenker's Pyramid Management Authority (PMA) to run The Pyramid. She also ruled that PMA did not fulfill its contract with local governments on the skybox rentals and the arena equipment.

Both sides have until the end of next week to appeal to the U.S. District Court in Memphis. Neither side has decided whether to appeal.

The late Milton Berle, a Jew, was widely lauded as a comedian, but again, his antics were not always spontaneous. This bit of fluff demonstrates cabalistic insights and Masonic knowledge.

The late Arthur Murray was called "America's Dancing Master," and so he was. A talented genius on the dance floor, Murray's real name was Arthur Teichman, Jewish of course. From the era of the roaring 20s to today, a number of the fad dances were based on masonic and Jewish cabalistic rituals.

Mr. Spock, a Star Trek character played by actor Leonard Nimoy, became famous for giving the Vulcan greeting with his right hand. Nimoy, a Jew, says that the sign is the same gesture given in Jewish Synagogues when the Rabbi and Elders bring out the Holy of Holies. It is based on the Hebrew letter "shin." In essence, on the popular TV show, every time Spock gave the "shin" Vulcan greeting hand sign, he was invoking cabalistic magic.

In the mythology of the primitive world, the serpent is universally the symbol of the sun...The serpent was universally represented by the sun symbol, the circle or disk.

— Bishop Alexander Hislop
The Two Babylons

The sun has ever been at the center of false religion. The Ancient Mystery Religions venerated the sun, the solar disk, as deity. The Greeks honored Apollo as the child of the sun. The Romans paid homage to Mithra the sun god. These pagan philosophies form the basis for the worship of the Sun worship in Peru exemplifies the universal worship of the sun god, or solar diety.

Illuminati and indicate the importance of the sun as symbol of satanic deity.

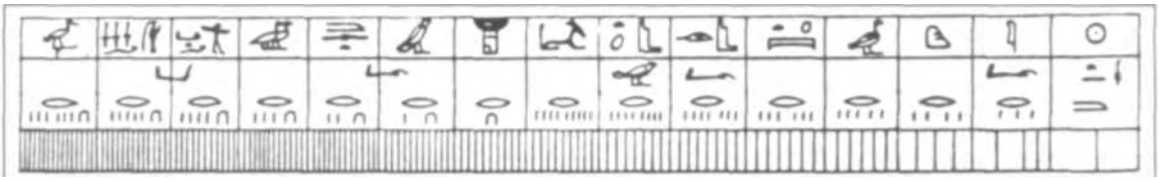
Englishman John Yarker, a well-known nineteenth century Masonic magician and occultist, in his Notes on the Scientific and Religious Mysteries of Antiquity, makes mention of the fact that the High Priests of the ancient Jews also worshipped the sun god. He writes:

> The Mysteries we know were practiced in a secret subterranean chamber under the Temple of Solomon, at Jerusalem, where four and twenty elders adored the sun, with their faces toward the east.'

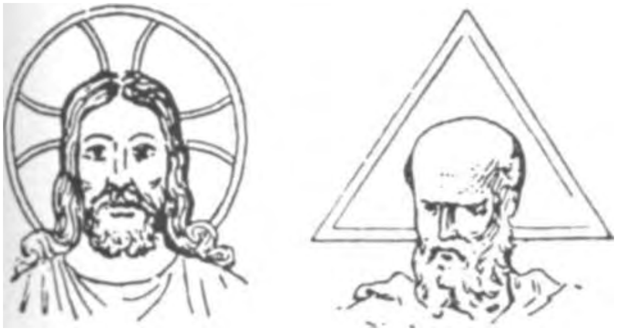
What Yarker says is true, but as the Scriptures give evidence, this unholy worship by the Jewish leaders in secret was an abomination to God. Ezekiel 8 makes this crystal clear. It is understandable why God would so detest worship of the sun god by the Mystery Religions and by the apostate Jewish elders. In reality, in worshipping the sun, the ancients were worshipping Satan. G.H. Pember, in a scholarly work on the Mysteries, Earth's Earliest Ages, affirms this fact when he states, "There is little doubt that the culmination of the Mysteries was the worship of Satan himself."[2]

Now today, the Masons, as did the apostate Jewish elders and priests in the days of Ezekiel, continue to worship Satan the sun god, also called Lucifer or Baal, by other names. The name of their great god, Jahbuhlun, which is revealed to Masons in the higher degrees, is a synonym for the solar deity; two of the three syllables in the name, buh and lun, mean "Baal" and "On," both of which represent sun and fire gods. That is why, in the authoritative guide Gods of the Lodge, Reginald Haupt reports that in the Lodge:

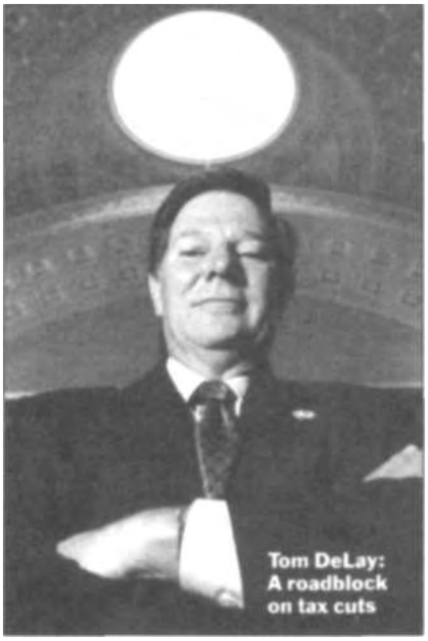
> All the movements by the Consecrating Officers of the Masonic Lodge or Chapter follow the course of the Sun. The Master and the Wardens enter and leave their chairs as the Sun returns to the East and goes forth therefrom. Most processional occasions are governed by these principles of what is known as "circumambulation." This ritual came from the ancient pagan rites of the Egyptians and from the worship of their Sun God and of the sun itself.[3]



The first 15 divisions of the Egyptian Royal Cubit. Each division of the cubit was dedicated to a divinity, and the first division, on the right, shows the hieroglyph of the sun god Ra, symbol of divine unity. (From the book, Jesus Christ, Sun of God: Ancient Cosmology and Early Christian Symbolism, by David Fideler, Quest Books, Wheaton, Illinois)



Halos, also known as nimbuses, present the individual as a saint, a deity, or other holy person. (From the Herder Dictionary of Symbols, Chiron Publications, Wilmette, Illinois)



At right: Congressman Tom Delay (R-TX), House Majority Leader, pictured in Time magazine. Politicians are sometimes framed with a sun-like halo, called a "nimbus," over their heads. This gives them the subtle majestic appearance of being some type of god-man.

In honoring and worshipping the sun in their rituals, Freemasonry and Illuminism defy God. The Bible's Job displayed great wisdom by uttering these words concerning God's thoughts concerning worship of the sun and the heavens:

> If I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness; and my heart hath been secretly enticed... this also was an iniquity to be punished by the judge; for I should have denied the God who is above. (Job 31:26-28)

The Swastika Represents the Sun

The Nazi swastika is a representation of the sun. But the Nazis simply borrowed this symbol from the ancient religions, including the Hindus of India, the Shintoists of Japan, and a number of Native American Indian tribes. Even today, in temples and shrines throughout Asia, you will find the swastika painted on walls, on totem poles, and over altars. Until Hitler and the Nazis gave the sign a bad reputation, the Masons also universally used the sun sign. And today the symbol of the circle, particularly that of the point within the circle, is a prominent feature of Masonic theology.

The Point Within the Circle

According to Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia the hidden, true meaning of this symbol, the point inside the circle, is far different than what the everyday Masonic brother is told. In reality, its meaning is yet another proof that Masonry is a sex cult. Mackey says the esoteric explanation is that the point within the circle is the male phallus, or penis, and the circle is the female yoni, or vagina. Here, says Mackey, is a "symbol of fecundity, expressed by the male generative principle."[4]

But, Mackey emphasizes, the sun is still not forgotten in Masonry, for while the phallus (point) and the vagina (circle) symbolize the sex act (the generative principle), they also represent the sun as deity. The point with the circle is the sun god.

"At times," Mackey observes, "this circle is represented by the ananta (Sanscrit for eternity), a serpent with its tail in its mouth."[5]

Since the symbol of the point within a circle is of such overriding importance to the Illuminati Masons and yet is so little recognized as significant by the dumbed-down masses, many Illuminists enjoy a bit of mockery of the masses by blatantly displaying this symbol. Some believe the Target department store chain logo—the red circle and point—is one example.

Pat Robertson's Hidden Message

Pat Robertson, Religious Right leader of TVs The 700 Club and founder of the Christian Coalition, gives us another graphic example. Some years ago, Robertson had two books ghostwritten for him, one called The New World Order and another titled The New Millennium. As happens often in elitist circles, the opinions and material for both books seemed to be decidedly anti-elitist; they even exposed the global conspiracy and the Illuminati. So, was Pat Robertson really joining the fight against the evil Illuminati? Not on your life!

The books were for the "stupids," the masses. While reading The New Millennium the reader ignorant of the uses of symbolism probably ignored the fact that at the top of every page, a point within a circle could be found. This was Robertson's "hidden code" to his elite pals that he was still on their side and was just taking the ignorant masses for a ride.

The Sign of the Mafia, the Illuminati and of Druids

According to Dr. Cathy Burns, in Hidden Secrets of the Eastern Star, the point within the circle is, "The sign of the infamous Mafia or Cosa Nostra," rather than the "black hand" as many believe.[6]

But the real shocker is the importance given this sign by Adam Weishaupt and the Order of the Illuminati. Burns explains that because Illuminism was so determined to keep the true nature of the Order under wraps, its founder, Weishaupt, ordered that the actual words "Illuminati" and "Illuminism" never be used in correspondence. Instead they were to be replaced by the astrological symbol for the sun; that is, the circle with a dot in the middle.[7]

Burns also gives evidence that the point within the circle was used by the Druids of Britain, whose stone temples were circular with a single stone erected in the center. They believed this design conferred magical powers.

An Arch-Druid from pagan Great Britain in his ceremonial robes. (From Wellcome's Ancient Cymric Medicine)

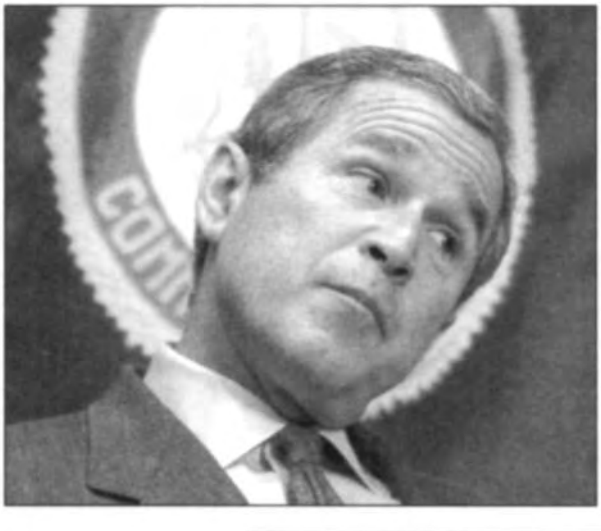
Flower Power and Magic Circles

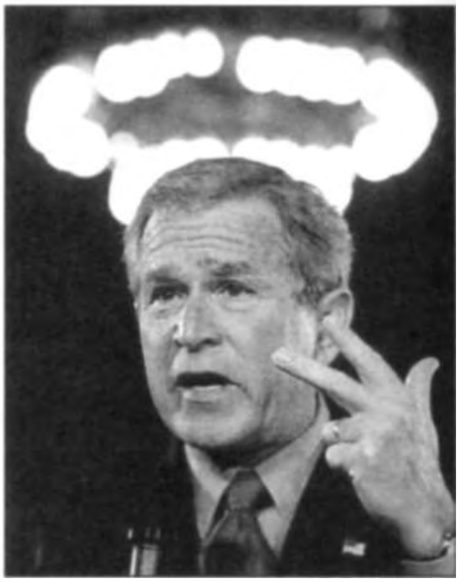
The daisy flower, the marigold, and the sunflower also are indicative of the sun as deity and so, traditionally, adherents of the Mystery Religions, as well as Hindus, Zoroastrians, and others, utilize these symbols. Adam Weishaupt, founder in 1776 of the Order of the Illuminari, encouraged "Flower Power" as a symbol, and it was taken up by New Age hippies in the '60s.

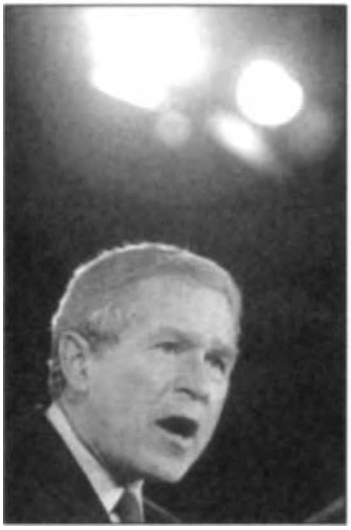
The symbol of the circle is, for the Illuminari, sort of a pared down, basic sun sign. That is why the circle is used so frequently and in a score of configurations within Masonic and other secret society networks. It is also a staple of witchcraft and Satan worship. Bill Schnoebelen, author of many books unmasking Freemasonry, witchcraft, and the occult, was himself formerly a Mason as well as a male witch. He has described the witch's "temple" as follows:

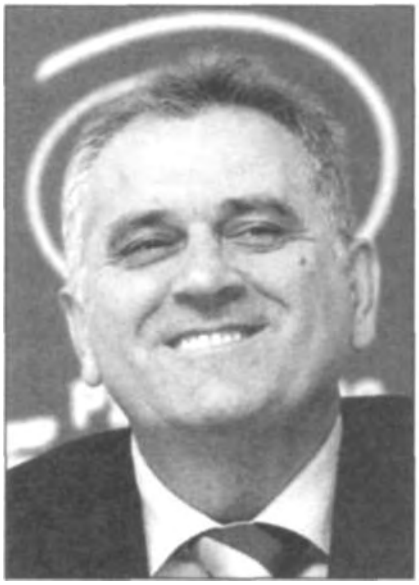
> In witchcraft, the "temple" is frequently not a building but rather a sacred "Magic Circle" laid down on the floor of a room with great ceremony. It is the sacred space of the Wicca and serves the same function as a temple does to the Mason.[8]

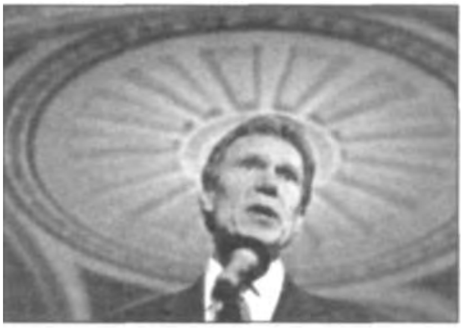
LORD











Gods or Men?—Is there a concerted plot to flood our consciousness with images that build world leaders into Mount Olympian man-gods, mythological giants on earth? Internet sites www.freepressinternational.com and www.Rense.com caught on to this recent trend and published a number of photographs that seem to confirm this bizarre plot. Free Press International, an alternative news website, wrote, "These are just a few of the many photographs mainstream media has been deliberately releasing to the public showing our world leaders with halos. I'd say with the shape our world is in right now, they should have horns instead of halos. Most of these pictures are coming from Associated Press, and Reuters." Surely, the scriptures were right on when they warned that the Devil himself often comes disguised as an "angel of light." (Note: Codex Magica has seen these pictures published in an increasing number of media forums, from Time and Newsweek to daily papers.)

Upon his death, Time magazine published this telling photo of Beatle superstar George Harrison (1943-2001) on the cover of its December 10, 2001 issue. Harrison, wearing black, in a black and white photo, holds a sunflower, symbol of the Illuminati Sun God. The solar deity is also prominently worshipped in the Hindu religion, and the Beatles were devoted followers of the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi and other Indian Hindu gurus. Time's feature story, in fact, reports that George Harrison never gave up on his gurus, to his dying breath. All the Beatles were drenched in illegal drugs, such as cocaine, hashish, and heroin. Their album, Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, even had a cameo photo of British "666" beast satanist priest, Aleister Crowley, on its cover. The latest information is that the Beatles were an experimental music group sponsored behind the scenes by British and U.S. intelligence. Their role was intended to use various psyops mechanisms and anti-Christian messages to arouse turmoil and psychological trauma in society. One of the Beatles most memorable albums was tided, Magical Mystery Tour. Beatle John Lennon was murdered by a man many believe to have been a CIA trained "Manchurian Candidate," and George Harrison was once assaulted and stabbed by a would-be assassin.

Hindus want to 'reclaim' swastika

Hindus in the UK are starting a campaign to reclaim the swastika from its Nazi associations.

German MEPs called for a Europe-wide ban of the symbol after Prince Harry wore it on a fancy dress costume.

But Hindu Forum spokesman Ramesh Kallidai said the swastika had been a Hindu good luck charm for centuries.

The swastika is the second-most sacred Hindu symbol

The group will stage public awareness workshops across the UK and lobby politicians in an attempt to educate the public and prevent a ban, he said.

"It's the second most sacred symbol in the Hindu tradition which has been used for 5,000 years to ward off evil," Mr Kallidai said.

Coca-Cola promotes drink with 'swastika' robots

A Coca-Cola promotion in Hong Kong featuring a robot adorned with 'swastikas' has been condemned.

Rabbi Yakkov Kermaier, of Ohel Leah Synagogue, says it is probably an honest mistake, but he's called toy sets featuring the "Robocon" characters unacceptable.

One character, the robot-like "Robowaru," has two swastikas on its chest and can be bought in the UK for around £2.60 with any purchase of six bottles of Coke.

In 2003, when the Coca-Cola Company in Hong Kong ran an ad promotion featuring a robot adorned with swastikas, Jewish spokesmen balked. A Jewish rabbi, however, admitted, "The Nazi swastika can easily be confused with Buddhist swastikas that are common in Asia." (Ananova.com news, May 1, 2003)

Symbols of the sun as a deity are commonplace in the publications and artifacts of Masonic, Rosicrucian, and other occultic groups. The point within the circle is especially significant and has profound implications.

The yin/yang is often seen at martial arts studios, yet few understand its esoteric meaning. The symbol represents the combining of male and female, the forces of darkness and light; the integration of God and the Devil.

St. Patrick's Day Celebrated in Dublin

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of people braved a wet late-winter day Sunday to watch Dublin's annual St. Patrick's Day parade, the climax of a three-day festival in honor of Ireland's patron saint.

Organizers estimated that 500,000 people lined the parade route from St. Patrick's Cathedral on the city's south side to Parnell Square in the north.

Thousands more participated in the parade, including 19 marching bands from Britain, the United States, Norway and Germany.

On Saturday, up to 1 million people thronged the city's streets and squares for free music, comedians and special entertainment geared to children. Thousands lined the banks of the River Liffey for a 3,000-ton fireworks display Saturday night.

A 19-year-old man drowned while trying to swim across the river Saturday night. His body was recovered several hours later.

Backers of the festival hope it will ensure that Ireland's normally thriving tourism industry gets off to a good start this year.

Last year's festival had to be postponed for two months because of fears that foot-and-mouth disease, then rampant in British cattle and sheep, would spread to Ireland. The island ultimately suffered only a handful of confirmed cases, but tourist numbers slumped.

The fallout from the Sept. 11 terror attacks also has meant far fewer Americans in the crowds and parade this year. The Irish Hotels Federation said U.S. visitor numbers were down by between 30 and 50 percent compared to the last normal St. Patrick's Festival weekend in 2000.

In London, thousands of people sported sprigs of shamrock and took to the streets for the British capital's first official St. Patrick's Day festival.

Police estimated that 5,000 people marched in a parade from the city's Roman Catholic Westminster Cathedral to Trafalgar Square, where a crowd of 14,000 gathered to watch performances by Irish dancers and musicians.

Organizers said 50,000 people attended the event.

London mayor Ken Livingstone, said the celebration recognized the contribution Irish people had made to the city.

The Irish, he said, "have helped to build it, to nurse the sick in it, to educate the children in it."

London is home to some 400,000 Irish people.

Irish Prime Minister Bertie Ahern said the London event showed that Britain and the Republic of Ireland had moved beyond their long-acrimonious relationship.

"That is a real step forward and does show we have moved on from some of the terrible periods of the past," Ahern said.

Dedicated to Preserving the Written Word

When we saw the original printing of Love and the Golden Rule, we were so moved by the insight and wisdom it presented, that we bought the entire first printing. Every copy was sold in less than three months...

We are now pleased to announce the second printing of Love and the Golden Rule, which is currently available at Book People and other fine, independent Austin bookstores.

This book is the first volume in a series focusing on Universal Truths being published by the Golden Rule Foundation. Love and the Golden Rule is a little book which you'll read in 30 minutes and think about the rest of your life. The Golden Rule has appeared as a part of every major spiritual practice and its history can be traced back to the prehistoric Mahabharrata of the Vedas:

SENECA, ca 5-65 AD:
"Treat your inferiors as you would be treated by your superiors." - Epistle XLVII, 11

SOCRATES, ca 470-399 BC:
"Do not do to others that which would anger you if others did it to you."

CONFUCIAN, ca 500 BC:
"Surely it is the maxim of loving kindness, do not unto others that which you would not have them do unto you." - Analects, Lun-yu, 23

BUDDHIST, ca 525 BC:
"Hurt not others in ways that you find hurtful." - Tripitaka, Udana-varga 5,18

ZOROASTRIAN, ca 600 BC:
"That nature alone is good which refrains from doing unto another whatsoever is not good for itself." - Savesta, Adistan-idinik 94:5

JUDAIC, ca 1300 BC:
"What is hateful to you, do not to your fellow man.
That is the entire Law, all the rest is commentary."
- Talmud, Shabbat 31a

HINDU, prehistoric
"This is the sum of duty. Do not unto others that which would cause you pain if done to you."
- Mahabharrata 5:1517

The Illuminati seem to have an unusually passionate, if bizarre, attachment to jewelry, tie tacks, ties, and items of clothing. The Masons wear aprons, high hats, black clothing. They wear ties and rings emblazoned with symbols. And as the individual Mason progresses upwards to the 33rd degree, he is awarded "Jewels" befitting his various earned degrees.

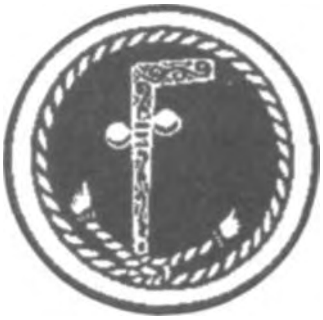
Their ardent attachments to rings—some would call it idolatry—was exemplified in an article in a recent issue of The Louisiana Freemason.[1] The author, Mason David Roach, entitled his article, "If You Only Knew What This Ring Means to Me." He called the symbols engraved on his ring "precious," compared them to holy things from Scripture, and said the Masonic ring was akin to a "Crown of Purity." His ring was simply a typical, gold band made with the Masonic square and compass and letter "G."[2]

Sexual Idols

Former Mason Bill Schnoebelen, now a Christian, reveals the awful truth about most of the Masonic rings, tie tacks, and other symbolic items when he writes:

> Let's face it, the Masonic tie tacks and rings that so many Masons wear proudly to their churches on Sunday are sexual idols...The gods, like Baal, of all pagan nations around Israel were all sexual idols. This is precisely what God does not want in His Church, and yet all these Masons are flaunting both their idols and their (church) membership.[3]

Schnoebelen also mentions a little pin many Masons wear on the lapel of their jacket or coat shaped like a hockey stick with two balls attached. It is named "Tubal Cain." In reality, it represents a man's phallus and testicles; yet, the pin is worn publicly and proudly by many perverted Masons.



"Tubal Cain," the phallus pin worn by many Masons. Tubal Cain is the password of a Master Mason (3°). (From the book, Masonic and Occult Symbols Illustrated, pg. 233, by Dr. Cathy Burns)

A Bond Between Chieftains and Warriors

Barbara Walker, editor of The Woman's Dictionary of Symbols and Sacred Objects, discusses the significance of the ring in her book. She says that, "Rings were traditional symbols of the bond between chieftains and their warriors in Anglo-Saxon England." Moreover...

> Among the Celts, a ring given by a woman to a man represented her sexual availability; putting the finger through the ring was a sign of sexual intercourse.[4]

The ring, then is a symbol of authority, of bonding, and is a sign of the covenant made between the inferior and superior members of the Illuminati group.

In ancient religions and cultures, rings were also magical in nature. According to cabalistic rabbis, King Solomon used a magic ring with a hexagram symbol on it to enslave the demon Asmodeus into helping him build his famous Temple.

Some members of the Illuminati in France in the late 18th century, about 1780, founded a new secret order, the Academy of Sublime Masters of the Luminous Ring. The tenets of the group were Pythagorean, and the fields of geometry and science were emphasized.[5] continues from such traditions. The ring is configured as a circle, implying the supposed eternal reign of their god, Lucifer. He shall, they declare, wear a crown of gold. Thus, the metal of gold is favored.

In today's Illuminati, the philosophy underlying the use of rings, neckties, etc.

The Mystic Tie of the Masons

The Masonic fraternity teaches the illusory goal that all who are inititated into its ranks are bonded by the "Mystic Tie" of fellowship. Of course, this is allegory, and yet the necktie does seem to have a special place in Masonic lore and symbology.

It is believed that both the bowtie and the traditional necktie are of Masonic symbolic design. The necktie has two triangles descending, a larger and a smaller. It is tied into a "knot" at the neck, signifying solidarity and unity. The neck itself, as a part of the human anatomy, represents the virtue of sacrifice. In terms of the secret order or secret society, it symbolizes sacrifice of the individual to the common good of the organization. The necktie is also seen as a bridge to two other triangles — those of the shirt collar. All of the triangles, on the tie and on the shirt collar, have their point, or spear, downward, toward the realm that is the controlling force of Masonry.

TRAVIS COUNTY

Congressman Lloyd Poggett (D-TX), at center, is sworn in as a voter registrar for the State of Texas. The elite of the Democrat Party in Doggett's Austin, Texas district are heavily Freemason. Doggett's necktie has the Masonic "X" symbol, connected to worship of Osiris the Egyptian sun god. At Doggett's left is the late Congressman Jake Pickle (D-TX), a Mason who for years was Chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Pickle refused to allow the U.S. Treasury, which he oversaw, to remove the Illuminati's pyramid and all-seeing eye symbols from the U.S. dollar bill.

President Bill Clinton seems to specialize in wearing neckties bearing cabalistic and occult symbols. Here, triangles. (Photo: U.S. News & World Report, January 29, 1996, p. 32)

JEWISH WORLD

Into the Lion's Den

The nomination of Madeleine Albright as secretary of state has sent shivers through the Arab world. But some U.S. Jewish officials fear she may turn her fearsome tongue on Netanyahu.

JONATHAN BRODER Washington

IF THERE IS ONE MOMENT THAT defines Madeleine Albright's persona as a diplomat, it could very well be the time last February when she stood before the United Clinton to nominate her to be his new secretary of state.

Yet as she awaits Senate confirmation, many in the foreign-policy establishments in Washington, Israel and the Arab world are wondering anxiously whether the 59-year-old Albright will bring her combative president of the Middle East Institute, an Arabist research center, told The Jerusalem Report. After outgoing Secretary of State Warren Christopher's failure to nail down a peace agreement between Israel and Syria in 22 visits to the region, "she will probably treat the Middle East like Triangles and more triangles on yet another of President Bill Clinton's ties.

According to news reports, Monica Lewinsky, President Bill Clinton's White House intern lover, gave him a special necktie. When he wore it, she could watch him on TV and know he was thinking about her.

The Nature Conservancy, a radical environmental group, boasted in its March/April 1998 magazine that CNN founder Ted Turner, Presidents Bush and Clinton, and Vice President Gore often wore oak-leaf ties to denote their support for environmental causes. The oak tree and its leaves are a staple of druid witchcraft and are popular as symbols among nature followers of the forest horned god Pan.

TYING THE KNOT

Conservancy Tie More Than a Fashion Statement

Some schools of thought hold that red is the color of the ultimate power tie—that slip-knot of silky fabric that greets you with its bold pronouncement, "I mean business."

But this is the '90s, and the power tie appears to have transformed to one navy blue flecked with green oak leaves. It's The Nature Conservancy's own, and this

In the past few years, Presidents Bush and Clinton and Vice President Gore also have been spotted—even once during a presidential debate—brandishing oak-leaf ties, a low-key expression of conservation support, as well as good taste. "For us, it's been the power tie for years," says Mike Coda, vice president and director of marketing for the Conservancy.

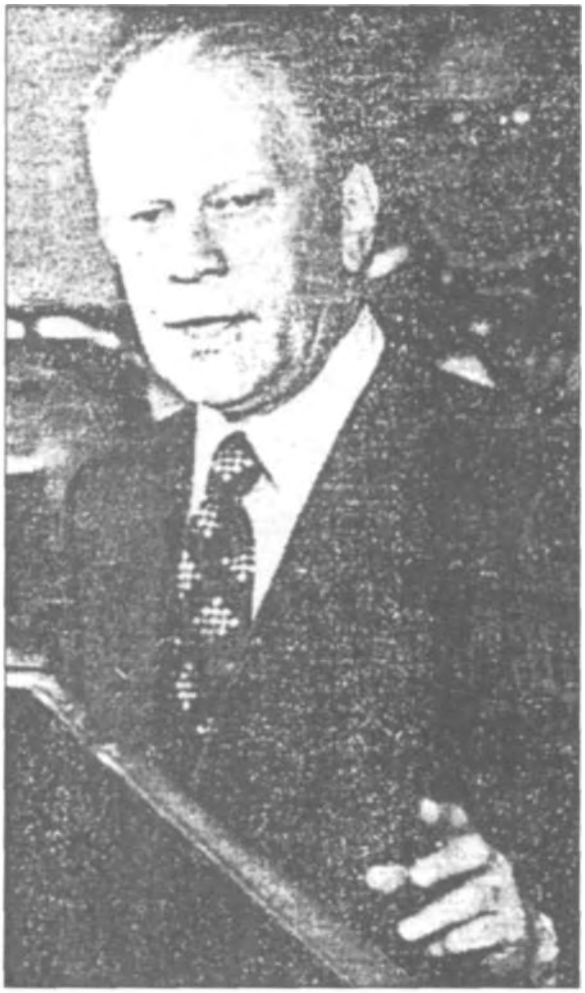
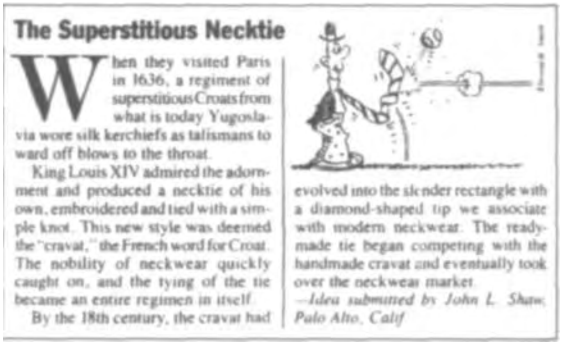
President Harry Truman (left) and Secretary of State Dean Acheson, both Illuminati initiates, each wear neckties imprinted with "sun god" symbols.



President Gerald Ford, a 33rd degree Mason, wears a necktie with the "cross of Baphomet" emblem of the occultic OTO and British satanist Aleister Crowley. The symbol is also worn by the Sovereign Grand Commander of Scottish Rite Freemasonry. Ford was a member of the Warren Commission that came up with the preposterous conclusion that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. Chief Justice Earl Warren, like Ford and all the other members of the commission, was a 33rd degree Mason.



The Superstitious Necktie

When they visited Paris in 1636, a regiment of superstitious Croats from what is today Yugoslavia wore silk kerchiefs as talismans to ward off blows to the throat.

King Louis XIV admired the adornment and produced a necktie of his own, embroidered and tied with a simple knot. This new style was deemed the "cravat," the French word for Croat. The nobility of neckwear quickly caught on, and the tying of the tie became an entire regimen in itself.

By the 18th century, the cravat had evolved into the slender rectangle with a diamond-shaped tip we associate with modern neckwear. The ready-made tie began competing with the handmade cravat and eventually took over the neckwear market.

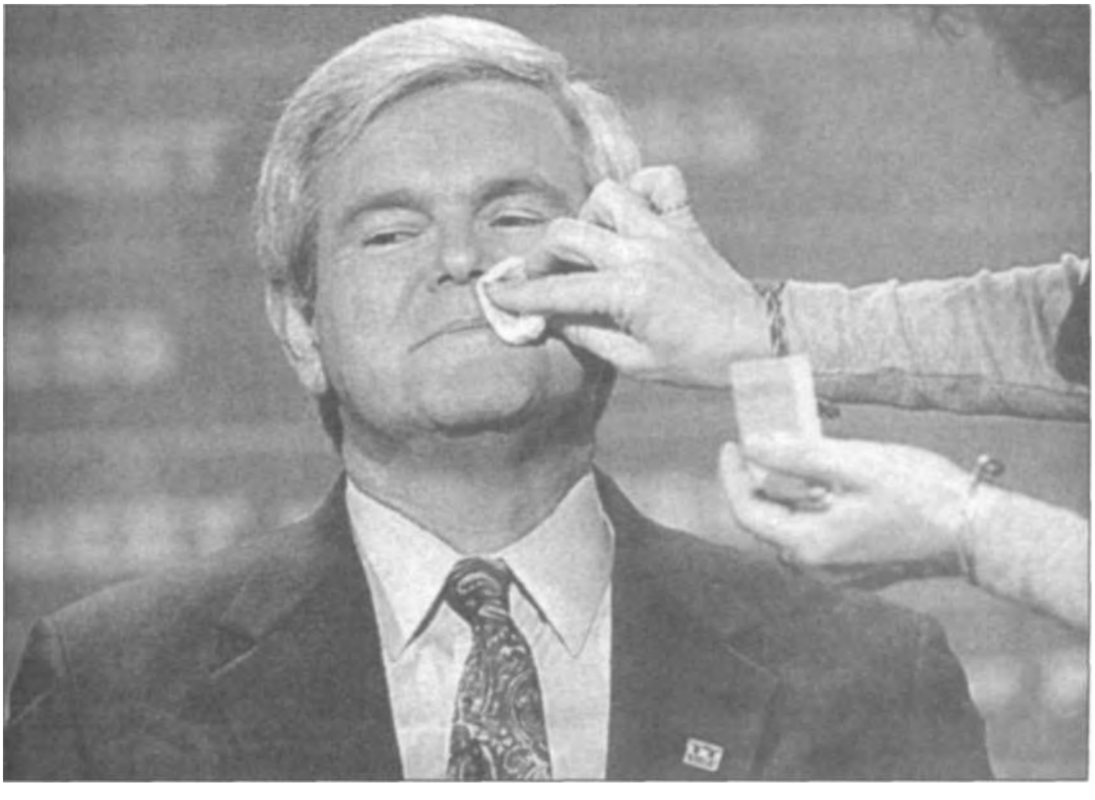
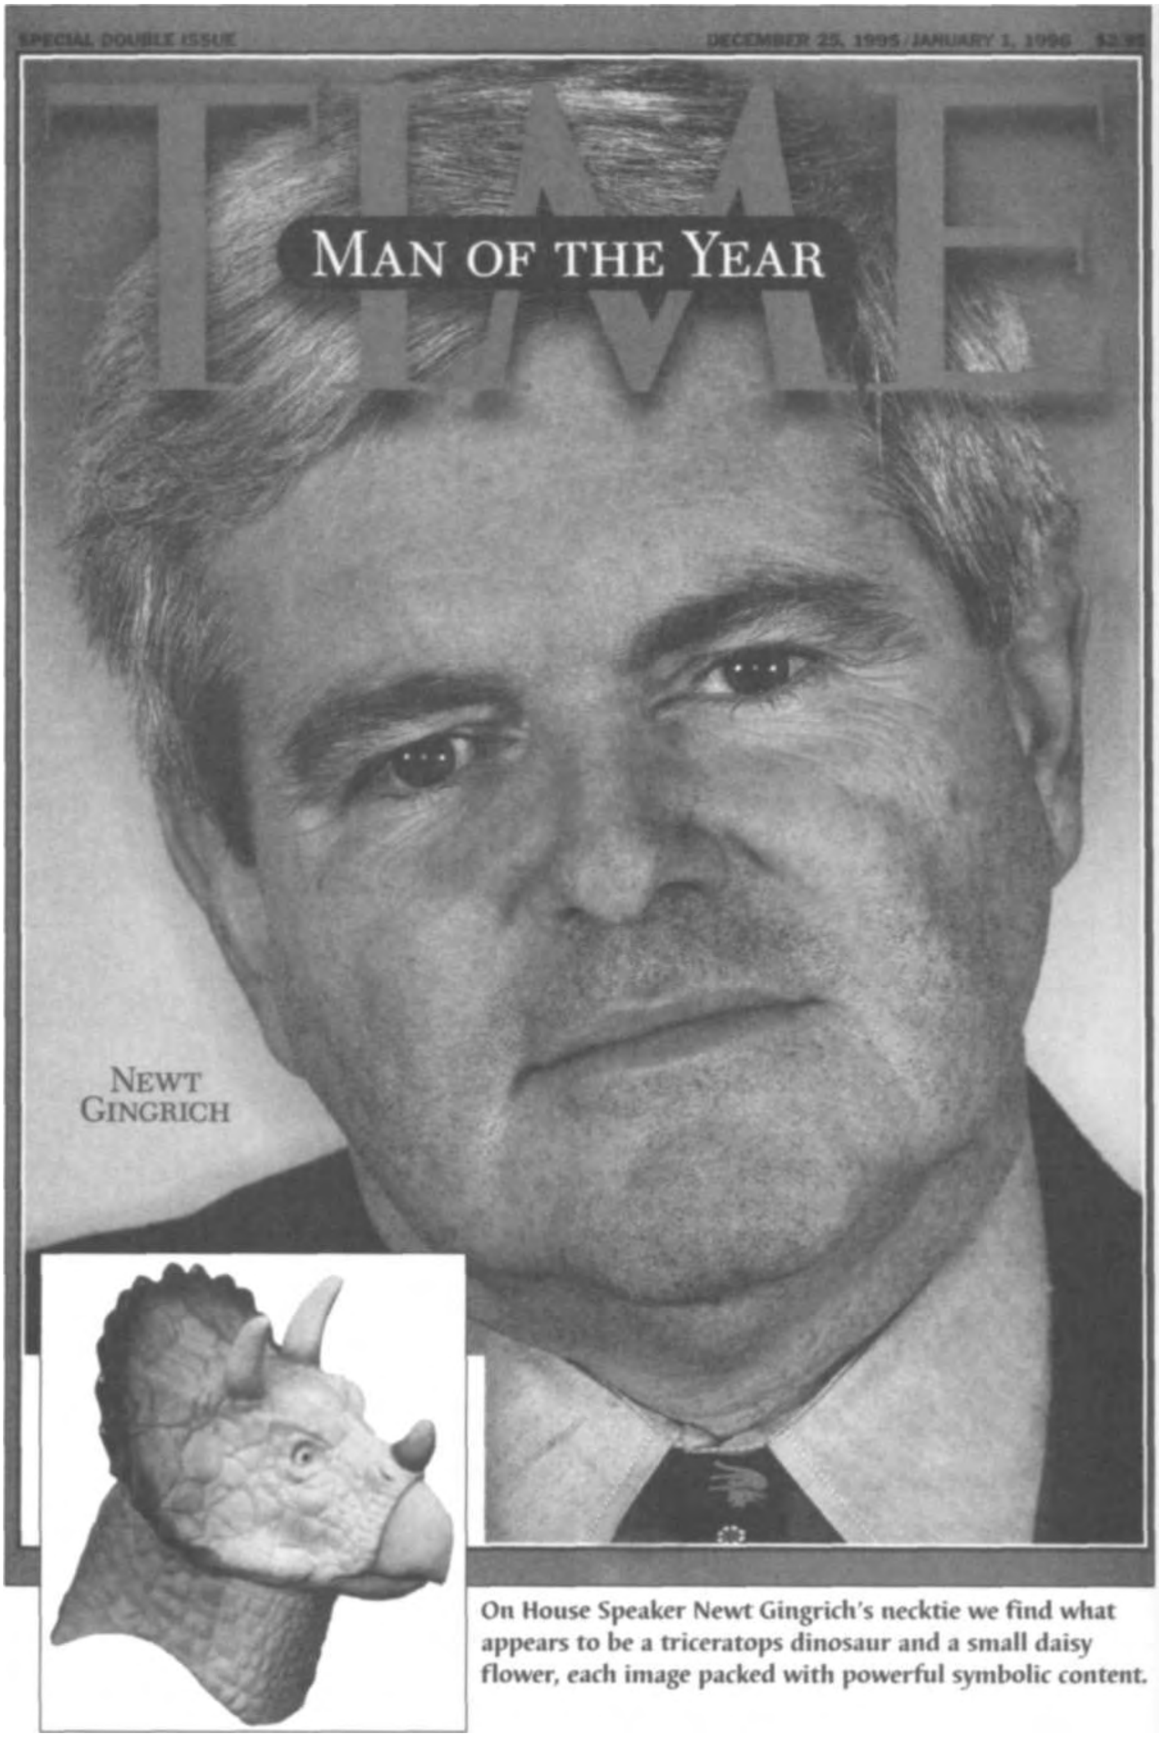
House Speaker Newt Gingrich wears a necktie designed by satan worshipping rock music star, Jim Morrison of The Doors.

Illuminist signals: Insiders say speaker Newt Gingrich is a vain man who does not like being photographed without make-up. Here he is below pictured in USA Today newspaper (December 5, 1994, p. SA) primping for a taping of NBC's "Meet the Press." This provides greater curiosity about Time's running as its front cover (see following page of Codex Magica) a staged picture of Gingrich in which the speaker is looking haggard and sweaty, his face red-flushed, and needing a shave!





SPECIAL DOUBLE ISSUE
DECEMBER 25, 1995/JANUARY 1, 1996 $2.95
TIME
MAN OF THE YEAR
NEWT GINGRICH

On House Speaker Newt Gingrich's necktie we find what appears to be a triceratops dinosaur and a small daisy flower, each image packed with powerful symbolic content.

At left: This cover of Time announcing the selection of House Speaker New Gingrich as Time's "Man of the Year" reveals many mysteries. First, the issue is dated December 25, 1995/January 1, 1996. December 25th, Christmas Day, is also the day the ancient Romans and Greeks worshipped the Sun God. In his photo, Newt Gingrich appears tired and dismayed. He is sweaty. No make-up is used, and he has a day old growth of stubble on his face and neck. There is also a red coloration or flush on Newt s face. His head is strategically placed behind the Time logo, communicating the subtle message that his time in the political limelight is about up. In fact, Gingrich did abruptly resign and leave his high level post shortly after this issue; some believe his departure was caused by his unseemly romantic liaison with a female staffer, an affair which prompted the Congressman to divorce his wife. However, the most significant images you'll find on this cover are hidden on Newt Gingrich's necktie! Look closely at the inset and what do you see? A dinosaur. The cave age monster is facing downward toward a flower. The Illuminati's founder Adam Weishaupt, in the late 18th century, introduced the concepts of "flower power" and nature worship (shades of the hippy era of the 60s!). So that might explain the flower. But what about the dinosaur? It seems that Newt (get the name, Newt ? - isn't a Newt a form of lizard?) is a dinosaur fan. Gingrich once borrowed a Tyrannosaurus Rex dinosaur bones exhibit from Washington, D.C.'s Smithsonian Museum and kept it on display for a long time in his House Speaker's office. Newsmagazines often commented that Newt Gingrich was wry proud of the T-Rex display and constantly asked friends and associates, "Would you like to see my T4tx!" Now, Webster's dictionary informs us that the root word for "tyrannosaurus" is rvranr, or tyranny, defined as "A government in which absolute power is vested in a single ruler"—a ruler unfettered by a constitution! What's more, the short version of the dinosaur's name, T-Rex, would have a very special meaning for occult illuminati. "T" stands for Tammuz, the Christ figure to come, whose symbol is the T, or Tau cross. The word "Rex," meanwhile, stands for Man as King. In Weishaupt's Illuminati system, the highest degree initiate earned the "Rex" degree. Thus, the symbols on Newt Gingrich's necktie, displayed for all the world to see, but for only Newt and his Illuminati henchmen to understand, trumpet this message, that: Our Illuminati goal is a tyranny, ruled by a single ruler—the fearful antichrist, beast of prophecy!

The caption reads: "Speaker Newt Gingrich shows off tyrannosaurus rex Osborn in his Capitol office. It's on loan from the Smithsonian." Observe Gingrich's Masonic handsign also, which is similar to the sign of a Master Mason. (Photo: Roll Call, May 22, 1995, p. 14)

The Church of Satan

by

Michael A. Aquino

Founded in San Francisco by Anton Szandor LaVey in 1966 CE (I ÆS), the Church of Satan went on to become the preeminent institution of Satanism in contemporary society. For nine years, until the next Working Year of 1975 CE (X ÆS), it openly acknowledged and pridefully exercised the Mandate of the Prince of Darkness on Earth. This book tells the story of those nine great years in 34 chapters, 143 appendices, 10 pages of plates, extensive annotation & indexing, for a total of over 900 8-1/2x11" pages, one million words in length and six pounds in weight.

Unlike popular, commercial treatments, The Church of Satan is designed neither to sell, excuse, criticize, sensationalize, nor otherwise distort the institution and the individuals whose history it documents. It does not simplify concepts, censor ritual texts, nor in any way doctor the truth. It is the author's conviction that the legacy of the Church of Satan, and of the many worthy Satanists who built and sustained it, stands quite adequately on its own. The book names names and describes events simply as they took place, and includes an abundance of letters, papers, and ceremonial texts which are now available nowhere else - to include analyses of the Satanic Bible, Satanic Rituals, and Compleat Witch and various original texts from which they were assembled and abridged.

When I sent Dr. Cathy Burns, a foremost authority on occult symbols and their meaning, a copy of speaker Newt Gingrich's Time magazine photo with the T-Rex dinosaur image on Newt's necktie, she sent me back this flyer advertising a book, The Church of Satan, written by Luciferian High Priest Michael A. Aquino. As you can see, the flyer has images of two dragon serpents atop satanic pentagrams facing each other (the occult sign of duality, or "as above, so below"). In fact, the two serpentine dragons do resemble the T-Rex dinosaur image.

It seems that California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger ("The Terminator") is well-schooled in the propaganda value of well-placed props in photographs, such as the U.S. flag, the State seal, and even a broom! What is most fascinating, however, is the big, blue sapphire masonic ring the Governor wears and so readily shows off. Apparently, the media know what's what and the photographer always seems to be glad to picture Arnold's ring up close. Oh, about the broom: That's not the same one that Arnold's wife, Kennedy heiress Maria Shriver, flies around on, is it?

Schwarzenegger off to 'good start,' but he still faces his toughest test

Due Jan. 10, his budget plan must deal with $14B deficit

By Martin Kasindorf
USA TODAY

Learning to improvise: After just five weeks in office, California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, a Republican, has already learned how to cut budget deals with Democratic legislators he once called "addicts to spending."

LOS ANGELES — Arnold Schwarzenegger has ended his first five weeks as California's governor with more praise from politicians than he ever got from film critics.

"A good start," says Gray Davis, the Democrat who lost his job in the historic recall election Oct. 7 and was replaced by the Republican actor.

"I have to give him high grades," says Robert Beverly, who retired in 1996 after 30 years as a Republican leader in the state Legislature. "I'm a little surprised."

Since his inauguration Nov. 17, Schwarzenegger has done a lot more than learn his lines on a new stage. He has demonstrated — with well-timed coaching from his wife, Maria Shriver — that he can abandon a script that isn't working.

Schwarzenegger, at age 56, is learning improvisation. He is using his executive power in unprecedented ways, and he is cutting budget deals with Democratic legislators he once called "addicts to spending."

Much of the praise Schwarzenegger is hearing is for a compromise he brokered with the Legislature's Democratic majority earlier this month that ended a deadlock and could provide at least a short-term solution for the state's budget crisis.

Mayors and police chiefs also are praising him for using obscure emergency powers last week to give strapped cities and counties $2.7 billion to avert layoffs of public-safety workers. It was a problem he had largely created. He kept his campaign pledge to cancel Davis' unpopular 300% increase in vehicle license fees — the "car tax" that helps pay for cops and firefighters. But the tax cut created budget shortfalls for local governments.

On this issue, Schwarzenegger remains at odds

An advertisement on the back cover of Scottish Rite Journal.

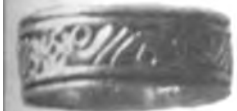
. . . . In 1962, the year my birth father died, was when my life was turned upside down. But there were clues before this time. I had asked my grandmother why I did not resemble anyone in four generations from what I thought was my family, and why I was so different from everyone else in the family. She was evasive. However, she gave me a photograph (circa 1919) of some men who I did not know and two rings.



Bernard Baruch's Ring

. . . . She then stated, "Your father wants you to have his ring, and Bernard Baruch wants you to have this gold ring, which is engraved with the date April 13, 1913."

. . . . I would learn later that this ring commemorated the founding of the Federal Reserve; each of its founders received a gold ring at the founding ceremony. She pointed to the photograph and then specifically to a tough-looking man in the photograph. She then said, "This man is important to you." In addition, I received a French Legion of Honor Medal dated 1928 from my adoptive father, who pointed to the man on the medal and said, "This man is important to you. He is Andre LeBon."

Bernard Baruch

. . . . These were the only clues I had to my real identity, but when I received these gifts I had no idea about their significance. In fact, I would have to relive my childhood over and over again through the mists of memory to solve the mystery. I finally recalled that in 1955 I was taken in the middle of the night to the

In his excellent publication, Criminal Politics, this author's good friend, Lawrence Patterson, published a fascinating story (excerpt at left) about this ring. It is the 13th ring of the Illuminati founders of the Federal Reserve Board. It was owned by Bernard Baruch, wealthy benefactor, advisor, and controller behind the scenes of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Baruch gave this gold ring to Dr. Nancy L. Nicholson, heiress of a disputed financial empire. Dr. Nicholson is not a conspirator of the Illuminati although she was raised among the Rothschilds and other dynasty members. Her father, she says, was Lucky Luciano, the infamous Mafia leader. A close look at the engraving on Bernard Baruch's ring reveals what seems to be the number 6 repeated in a combination circular and spiral design. Vol. 4 #9 • September 1996
"Angel of Death" and Election '96

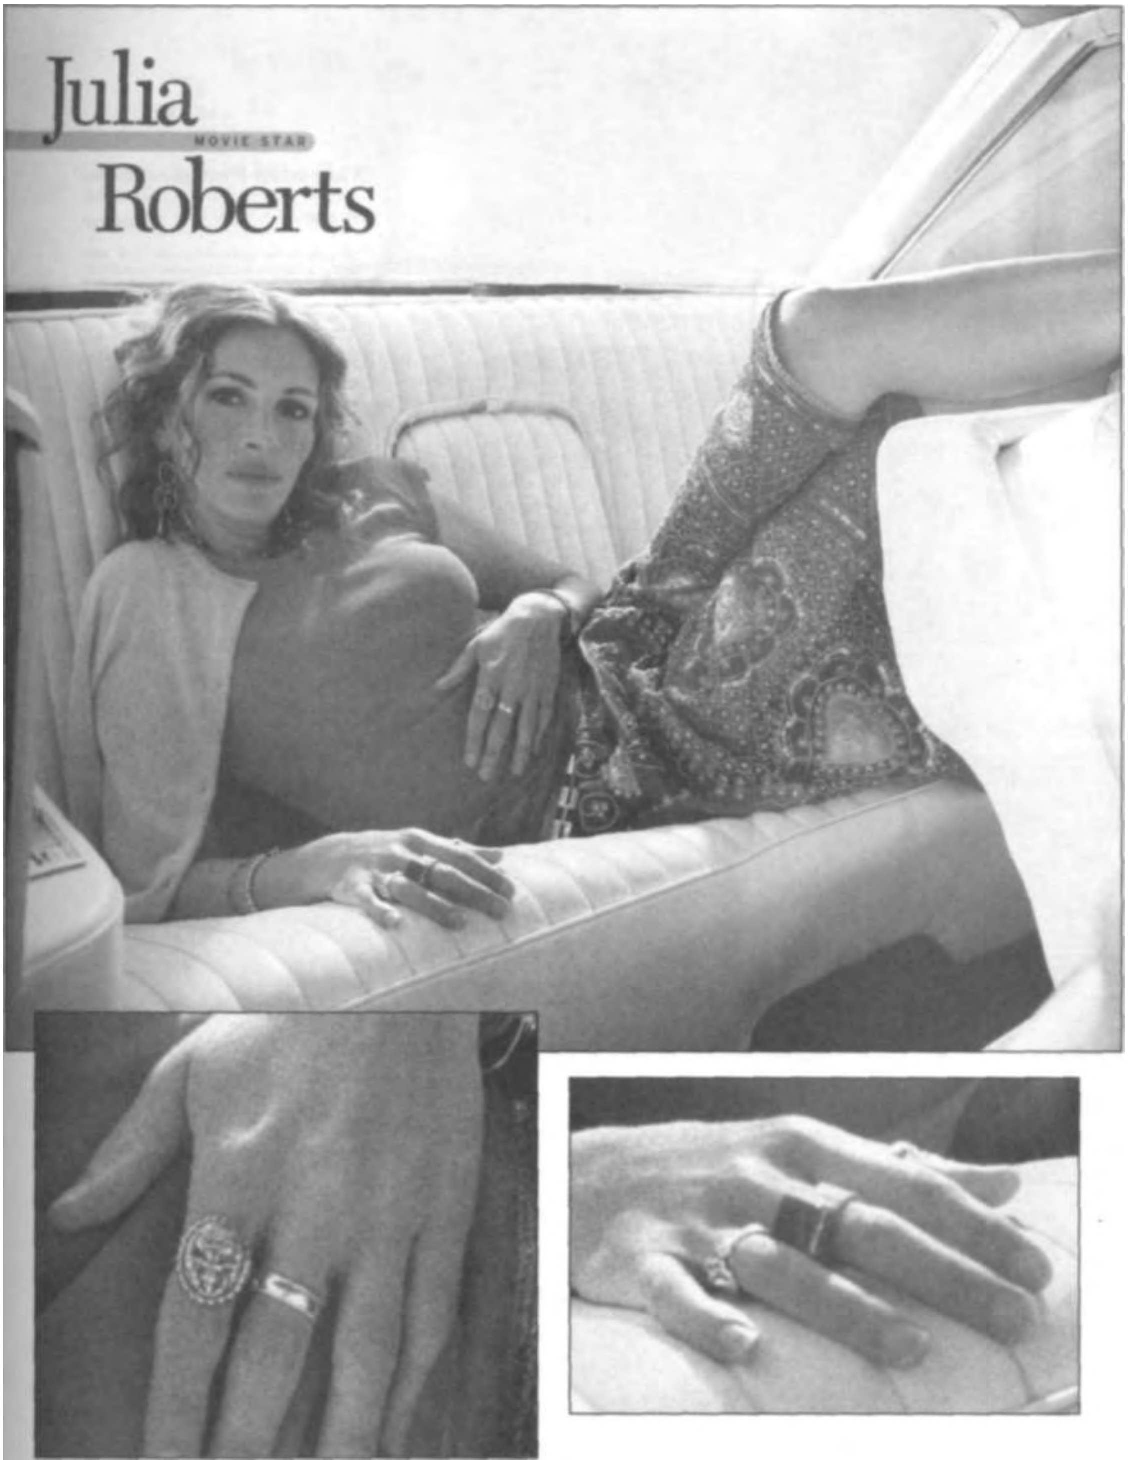
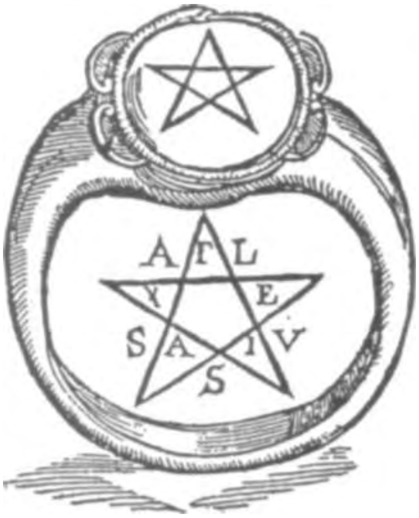
This issue of Media Bypass magazine (September, 1996) featured the activities of Charles Hayes, who was said to be a retired operative of the CIA. According to the magazine, Hayes had been busy in retirement as a vigilante exposing the financial skullduggery and crookedness of various high-level politicians and world leaders. On the cover of the magazine we find Mr. Hayes in front of law library publications and a Great Seal of the U.S. plaque, puffing placidly on a pipe. But what stands out is the mysterious ring with the devilish face, composed of some type of blackish material, inside a circle. A few months after this issue was published, Charles Hayes was indicted by a federal grand jury and arrested. News reports allege that Hayes was guilty of solicitation of murder. Did the revelations contained in the article in Media Bypass cause the elite to take action to shut him up? Or was something else up? What is the riddle of the mysterious ring with its curious image?



This mysterious photo of Oscar-winning actress Julia Roberts in Time magazine gives us an intriguing view of two rings she wears. On her right hand is the blue-stoned rectangular ring, and on her left hand is a ring with a strange image, indeed one could even say the ring has a creepy and eerie image. In the accompanying article, the writer acclaims Roberts as "the reigning queen of Hollywood."

Without caption, Brill's Content magazine published this photo of Russian President Vladimir Putin. The black border is unusual and obviously connotes a dark and evil significance to Putin's character. The necktie Putin wears has Illuminist meaning. The X of Osiris is prominent in the design as is the two triangles—one pointing up, the other down—inside a diamond.



Manly P. Hall, 33°, informs us of the occult meaning of the Pythagorean Signet Ring in his classic textbook, The Secret Teachings of All Ages. Albert Pike, former Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite Masons, wrote in Morals and Dogma that the pentagram (pentacle, cabalistic star) on this ring "carries with it the power of commanding the spirits." Use it, he instructed, to "bind the demons of the air, the spirits of fire, the spectres of water, and the ghosts of the earth." Note that the star atop the ring is encircled by the Oroboros serpent.

TWENTY-FOUR

OK—Sign of the Divine King

"Annuit Coeptus" - He approves our undertaking.

— Latin inscription atop the all-seeing eye on the U.S.A. one dollar bill

Westerners know it as the "okay" (or "OK") sign. It's done with the fingers and thumb of right or left hands (usually the right). Simply touch the index finger to the thumb, creating a circle. The other three fingers then spiral off and there you have it—the well-known symbol for OK. Universally, this sign means alright, acceptable, good, right-on, you bet!, A-OK, satisfactory...

But to occultists, the OK sign takes on darker significance. First, we have the circle, indicating the sun deity and the Mason's never-ending quest for more light. To Freemasonry, the circle also represents the female genitalia, or yoni. In the Hindu religion, the OK sign is a revered mudra (sacred gesture) meaning "infinity" or perfection. It is associated with the female genitalia — thumb and forefinger pressed together at the tips with the other three fingers extended.

In the practice of tantric yoga (sex rituals), the OK sign is a token of ecstasy, spiritual and physical. In ancient Sumeria and Persia, charms and amulets have been discovered of fingers and hands in the modern OK position, joined along with horns implying fertility. The three fingers extended outward are symbolic of ecstatic union with the Goddess, the third member of the pagan trinity.

In Satanism, when making this sign the three fingers not used to make the circle are considered symbolic of the unholy trinity — horned god, goddess, and offspring (antichrist). Some go so far as to adopt the view that the bent three fingers are shaped as three number six's, or 666. Thus, we have 666, the sun deity (Lucifer), the goddess (Mystery, Babylon the Great, Mother of Harlots), and the beast (antichrist, 666), all in one unitary hand sign. Oh what a web of evil wicked men can weave around something seemingly so ordinary and mundane.

In the Illuminist philosophy, the OK sign becomes a sign indicating approval of the Divine King, their coming Lord of Light, whom we as Christians know as Antichrist. To them it means, "He approves our undertaking." This meaning is roughly equivalent to the words in Latin atop the all-seeing eye of Osiris on our U.S. one dollar bill—Annuit Coeptus.

A Gesture to Avoid?

As we've noted, the gesture made by touching the tips of the thumb and index finger to form a circle, with the remaining three fingers of the hand fanned out and pointing out may signify "A-Okay" in the U.S.A., but in other cultures the same gesture will certainly not meet with approval.

In Brazil, Germany, and Russia, the signal is a supreme insult and vulgar, indicating a very private body orifice.

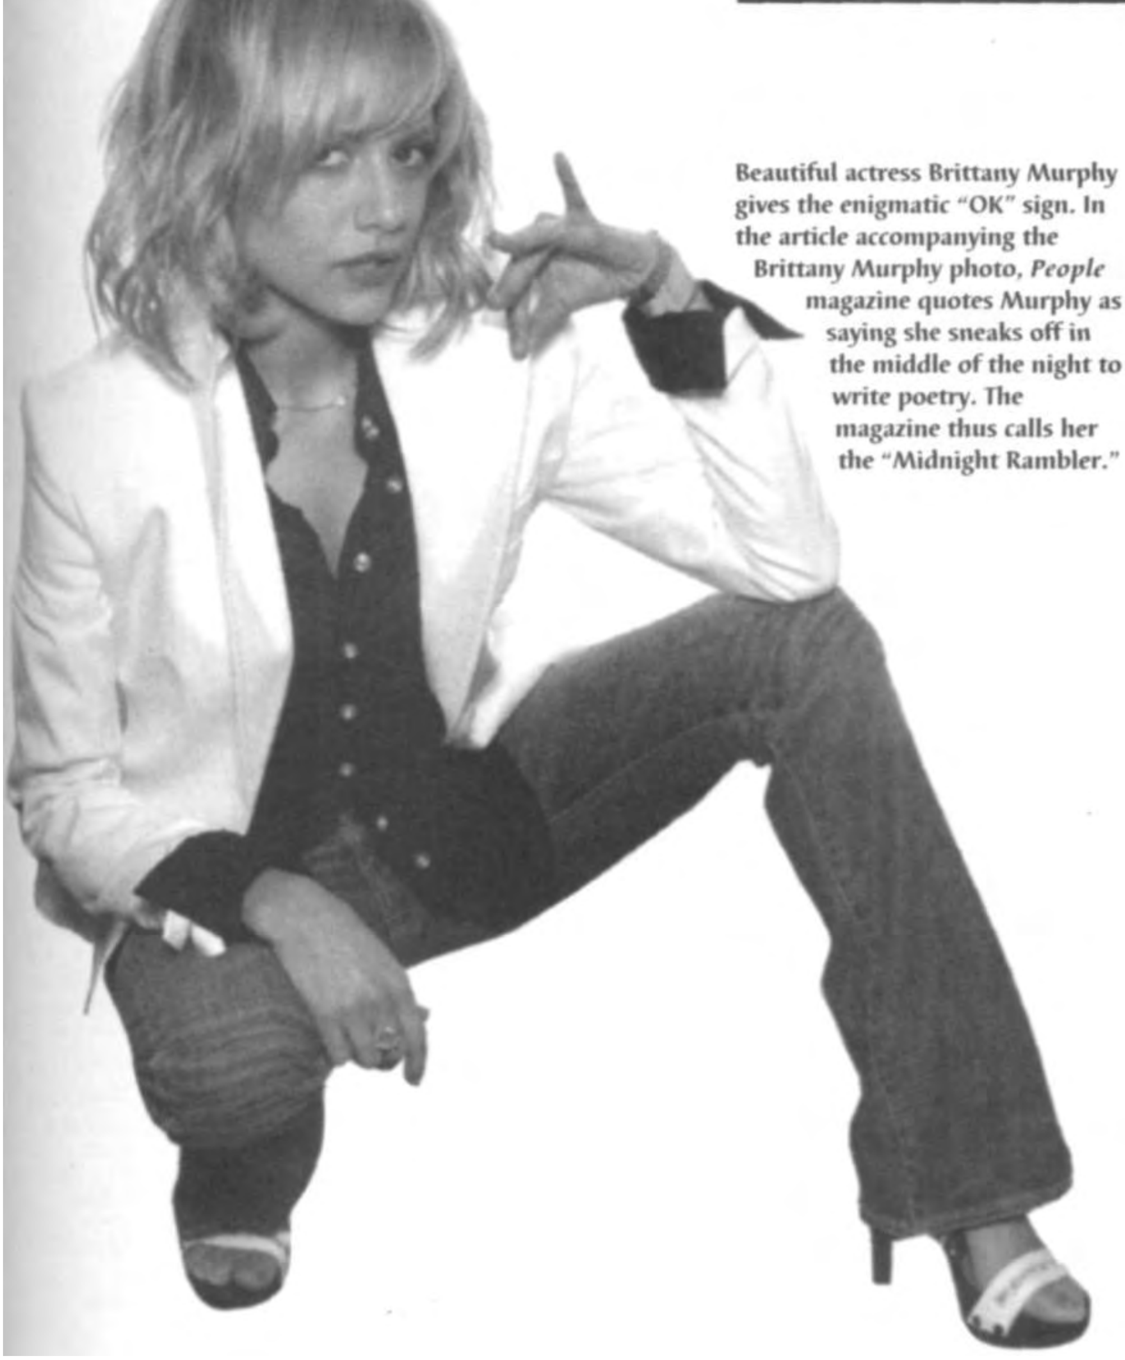
In France, the sign portrays the person it is aimed at as being a flunky or a "zero" — basically a worthless person. When it's placed over the nose it means he or she is drunk.

In Japan, the same sign is used in commercial transactions to indicate you want the cashier to give you your change in coins rather than in currency.

In Spain, in Eastern Europe, and in some parts of Latin America, the OK hand gesture is considered very rude. When then Vice President Nixon visited Brazil in the 50s, a crowd of onlookers became a rampaging mob after Nixon flashed them what he thought was the A-Okay sign. To them, Nixon was making an obscene gesture. Nixon's "goodwill" trip suddenly became a "badwill" trip.

And there's more confusion abroad: In Arab countries, making this sign while shaking the hand symbolizes the giving of the "evil eye," perceived by Arabs as an event of great dread. It may be interpreted that you are putting a curse on the individual. Could it be that the Arab interpretation of this sign is exactly what the Illuminati intend in their performing it?

Donald Rumsfeld, Secretary of Defense in the Bush Administration, signals with his hand as he renders a sour look with his face.



Beautiful actress Brittany Murphy gives the enigmatic "OK" sign. In the article accompanying the Brittany Murphy photo, People magazine quotes Murphy as saying she sneaks off in the middle of the night to write poetry. The magazine thus calls her the "Midnight Rambler."

Lotz shares famous father's fire

L. MUELLER/Staff

Anne Graham Lotz, Billy Graham's daughter, speaks to a crowd of 1,900 during the YMCA's annual community prayer breakfast at the Charlotte Convention Center on Thursday.

Billy Graham's daughter shows she's more than that

By KEN GARFIELD
Religion Editor

An altar call was about all that was missing from Thursday's YMCA prayer breakfast, not that evangelist Anne Graham Lotz wasn't aching to call the sellout crowd of 1,900 down front to commit to Christ.

But since an altar call isn't part of the nation's second-biggest prayer breakfast — and since the Charlotte Convention Center ballroom wasn't equipped for such a stampede — she did what any daughter of Billy Graham would have done. She implored people to live for Christ, then asked those who want to know more to write their name and address on the program and she'd send them a Bible study guide.

Add a choir singing "Just As I Am" and it could have been one of her father's famous crusades.

The debate over whether America has interests in the Balkans is now somewhat irrelevant. Our commitments have created interests, even though in foreign policy it should usually be the other way around. We have two sets of concerns relating to Kosovo, humanitarian and strategic. Sadly, in both our goals will end up being to undo the consequences of the war.

The Clinton administration's overriding objective is to stop the exodus of refugees and have them return to Kosovo in safety. This does not figure in any of the original statements on the war, and for a simple reason. There was no refugee exodus until the bombings began. Aryeh Deri called the elections a referendum on his trial – and in this referendum he did supremely well, but not well enough to save him politically. Herb Keinon reports

'He is innocent," Benny Elbaz sang in one of the more memorable Shas television campaign ads.

"He is innocent," a crowd of thousands thundered back, with tears dripping down their cheeks, overturning – at least in their hearts and minds – the Jerusalem District Court's verdict in the Aryeh Deri case.

"Is anybody really buying this?" countless people undoubtedly asked themselves. The unequivocal answer came back last Tuesday morning.

10 seats were worth to Netanyahu.

"Even if they join a coalition, it will not be with the same bargaining strength they enjoyed before."

Prime Minister-elect Barak, said Cohen, has a wide range of coalition options, so the power of any one party – even a party with 17 seats – is limited.

And, according to Cohen, Shas bears a large part of the responsibility for Netanyahu's defeat and the collapse of the right. In other words, the party is "to blame" for the fact that Barak has so many coalition options.

"Shas contributed a great deal to the fall of the Likud and the right-wing camp, for one reason: it let the secular genie out of the bottle.

"Shas did not win 17 seats," said. "It won 23 – its 17

Netanyahu's embrace of Shas also led a number of Likud voters into the political center, because they were fed up with Shas's lack of respect for the rule of law.

"When the Likud writes its report on why it lost the elections," Cohen said, "a chapter entitled 'We lost because of Shas' will form a major part of that report."

vacating the political stage, being replaced by the religious right."

This is a long-term process that helps explain the steady growth of Shas, which has gone from four seats in 1984 to 17 last week. But there are also more immediate causes.

"The first is Netanyahu's social and economic policies. Although the state's institutions.

"When something like the Deri trial takes place, it only enhances this feeling, because they feel that the country is oppressing the person they view as their leader."

America's outlook changing

BALTIMORE — Remember when meditation was something only hippies did? Remember when it was something only New Age crystal-carriers did?

No more.

East increasingly meets mainstream West these days as meditation and other relaxation techniques — often with roots deep in Eastern philosophies — gain acceptance and credence among Americans ranging from true spiritual seekers to Yuppie Type A's just trying to relax.

Consider: On Thursday evenings at the Golden Temple, a woman in a white turban, pants and T-shirt begins a yoga class with a deep-breathing exercise. The class ends with her students — retirees, social workers, students — meditating together.

In Washington, D.C., on Fridays, the Pentagon Meditation Club meets in the Pentagon chapel to meditate for peace. Members of the group call it SDI — the Spiritual Defense Initiative.

Victory for the Devil—Fabulous Exploits of Sir Winston Churchill and Other Druid Priests and Illuminati Servants

A remarkable thing occurred with the hand so lifted, is that its shadow resembles the head and horns of the Goat of Baphomet..the symbol of black magic.

— The Complete Book of Witchcraft

Britain's legendary World War II Prime Minister, Sir Winston Churchill, made the "V" sign famous. It was standard for the cigar-smoking, paunchy politician; he flashed the "V" sign every chance he got, and news photographers captured hundreds of photographs of Churchill giving the sign. It was generally thought that in doing so, the pugnacious Churchill was signaling confidence in eventual victory over the Nazi foe across the channel. So, the sign of two fingers pointed upward in a "V'shape became universally accepted as a sign for victory.

Sign of the Horned God, Pan

But what the majority of people believe to be conventional wisdom is often wrong. Such is the case here, too, for this sign, in reality, is of ancient origins. It is, in fact, a sign of Satan, of malediction, of the horned god, Pan, and worse.

Paranoia magazine, an interesting publication which bills itself as "the conspiracy reader" had a picture some years back of Churchill displaying the "V." An astute reader knowledgeable of dark things wrote a letter to the editor in the next issue commenting on Churchill and his sign. Nigel A. Cornwall of Britain wrote, "The sign I believe has its origins as a symbol for a pagan horned god."[1]

Cornwall also suggested that when the sign is given with the palm inside, it is recognized as a horribly vulgar and offensive gesture—signifying penetration of both body orifices.

Done in the typical fashion, this sign literally means intercourse by the devil—to be violated sexually by the horned god. The thumb holding down the fingers creates the "vulva," while the two largest fingers pointed up are the horns of the god (Satan).

THE Law of Opposites

In her highly regarded encyclopedia of symbols entitled Masonic and Occult Symbols Illustrated, Dr. Cathy Burns explores the meaning of the "V" sign. She explains that the two fingers upward relate to the Masonic and Gnostic Law of Opposites, exactly as the case for the Masonic Lodge's black and white checkerboard floors. This is the doctrine of bringing order out of chaos, of reconciling the two opposites, evil and good, with Satan reigning over both heaven and hell.[2] The "V" sign is also a sign of the Horned God of witchcraft, often called Pan; or Baphomet, the androgynous (male and female) goat god (again illustrating the Law of Opposites).

The Face in the Shadow

The Complete Book of Witchcraft[3] explains further the occult meaning. When the sign is given to produce a shadow behind, a diabolical image appears that seems to be the face of the devil. Witches and Magicians—and some Catholic Popes—used this image to effect emotional responses:

> There was a deeply seated belief in the fascination or enchantment of shadows; so that the witch, or magician, could use them to either produce sickness and death or to inspire love...The shadow of the (Satanic) priest's fingers raised in blessing was considered to have evil significance...
> A remarkable thing occurred with the hand so lifted, is that its shadow resembles the head and horns of the Goat of Baphomet...the symbol of black magic.
> The use of the 'shadow of blessing' was regarded as the legitimate prerogative of the Pope, and was most terribly exercised during the Dark Ages and at the time of the Inquisition.[4]

Interestingly, other authoritative sources say that the "V" sign (the sign of the horny goat, or horned god) is practiced even today in satanic covens as a symbol of Satanic benediction. In times past, it was just the opposite, being a sign of evil, of malediction, but today the twisted minds of satanic worshippers view evil as something good and desirable. What is malediction to the holy and righteous, to the Satanist is a wonderful thing!

A Symbol of Wrath and Destruction

The "V" sign as displayed by the hand is also used by Illuminists in the form of the letter V with two straight lines angled to meet at a point facing downward. It becomes a V device, or chevron, and has been adopted for the uniforms of military troops of some countries. Resembling a downward pointing triangle with the top line open or omitted symbolizes fiery destruction and wrath on the object at which it is pointed.

About 12 years ago, a few Satan worshippers arrived secretly in the darkness at my ministry building and evidently carried out a ritual. For many months we had received anonymous telephone threats, so were not surprised. On the concrete porch near our front door, the vandals had scratched a "V" pointing to the entrance, and there were signs of candle use and the burning of objects. Here we see the fantastic beliefs by occultists that their rituals create reality. However, in vainly attempting to harm a true Christian ministry, I am persuaded that the "magic" backfired. When God is your protector, those who cast Satan's spells end up in deep, deep, trouble.

Triple 6 or 666

As we have previously seen, the Jewish cabala is at the root of most wicked systems of magic. The cabala (or Kabbalah) is the fount of doctrine for Freemasonry and for many other secret societies. We can expect, therefore, that the "V" sign is also emphasized by the rabbinical priests of cabalism. And in fact, we find that the rabbis teach that the meaning of the Hebrew letter for V (Vau) is "Nail," and nail is a secret title for Satan. (Its corrupt meaning comes from the nails driven into the hands of Jesus crucified.) Vau, or V, is the sixth letter in the Hebrew alphabet, and, of course, the Book of Revelation reveals that the name of the beast, or Antichrist, is coded with the number of triple 6, or 666.

Churchill A Druid Priest

Where did Winston Churchill learn of the satanic powers of the "V" sign? Few people are aware that Churchill was a Freemason. Stephen Knight wrote an explosive expose, The Brotherhood, that rocked the British Isles when it was published some 15 years ago.[5] In it, he unmasked many British nobles, police, judges, and politicians who were Masons. Among them: Winston Churchill, who, Knight documented, was initiated in 1903 at Lodge No. 3000 of the United Lodge of Great Britain.

However, even fewer people are aware that Churchill was not only a Mason but a witch druid! Dr. Stanley Monteith, occult and secret society researcher and host of Radio Liberty out of California, states: "Churchill was an adept of the occult, having been inducted into the Druids in 1908, and having pledged the occult oaths required of those who have entered into the world of Freemasonry."[6]

Monteith's sobering statements are backed up by Miranda J. Green's The World of the Druids and by John Daniel's Scarlet and the Beast, two excellent resource books.[7]

Rites of the Druid Witchcraft Sea

The rites and ceremonies of the Druid witchcraft sect—which has chapters both in Great Britain and in the United States—are remarkably similar to those of Freemasonry. They hearken back to the Ancient Mystery Religions.

The Burning Man in the Wicker Cage

Some scholars are convinced that human sacrifice was practiced by the Druids. Julius Caesar, Roman General who conquered Britain for Imperial Rome, wrote of how brutal and furiously savage were the people under the influence of the Druid priesthood. He also described the horror of the rite in which the Druid priests and people would periodically choose a victim to be confined inside a huge wicker effigy. The wicker was set ablaze and the human victim consumed by the flames as the people celebrated and paraded in a circle carrying candles.

Even today, at the ruins of Stonehenge in England, modern-day Druids meet on festival occasions, wearing the appropriate white garb and carrying out rites and worship of the ancient gods.

Meanwhile, in Nevada each year, hundreds of thousands attend the incredible "Burning Man" festival at which the sacrificial ritual of the burning wicker man is recreated.[8]

Archbishop of England Also A Druid

Amazingly, the British press recently carried news reports, including pictures, of the Druid initiation of a man, Rowan Williams, who just happens to be Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Church of England. Williams told reporters that he saw no incompatibility in his duties as a pagan Druid priest and those he has assumed as Archbishop of the—presumably Christian—Anglican Church of England.

This is yet more evidence of how apostate and corrupt the global "Christian" establishment is today. While it is true that the true Christian Church, though tiny in numbers, lives on and is undefeated, the majority of modern-day pastors, ministers, and churchmen have departed from the Faith and have no concept at all of genuine Christian doctrine. The spectacle of the top, so-called "Christian" clergyman of the entire British Commonwealth, Archbishop Williams, being initiated as a wizard in the Druid witchcraft sect and publicly boasting of it is proof positive that the Devil and his Illuminati have become the unacknowledged "Masters" who run the Christian establishment behind-the-scenes. The big name clergy and evangelists today merely follow the script laid down for them by their elite controllers.

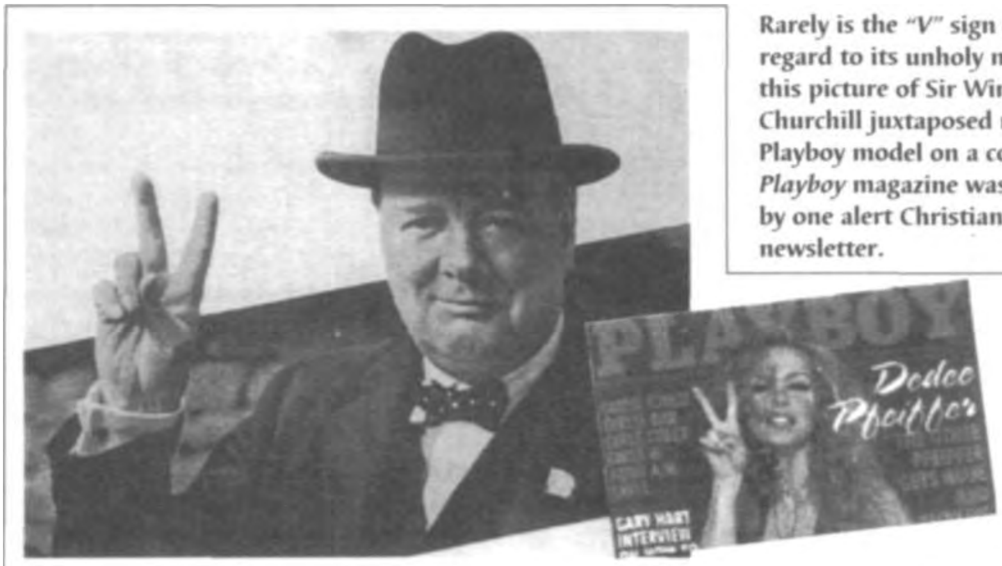
Sir Winston Churchill, a crypto Jew, a Mason, a Druid witch, and war-time Prime Minister of Great Britain, flashes his famous "V" sign. Long used to represent a number of occultic tasks, including Divine Man, sexual license, and fire, Churchill's frequent use spurred the use of the device by an uninformed populace as a sign of victory.

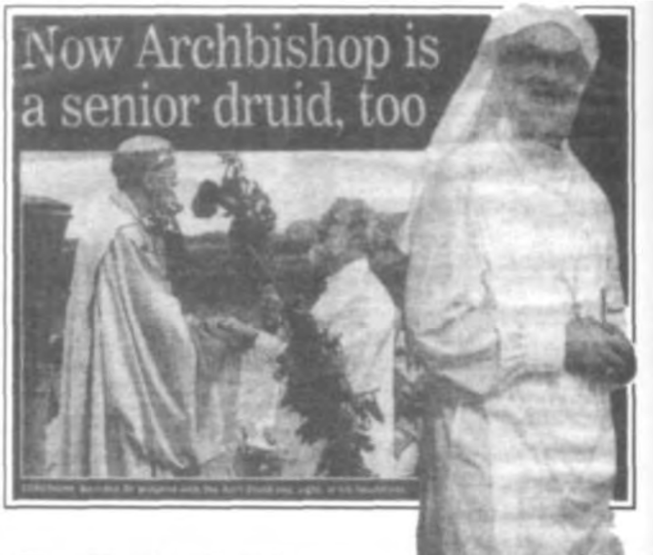


Rarely is the "V" sign discussed in regard to its unholy meaning. But this picture of Sir Winston Churchill juxtaposed next to the Playboy model on a copy of Playboy magazine was published by one alert Christian in his newsletter.

The Hebrew language has no actual numbers. Numbers are represented by letters. The Hebrew "V" or "VAU" represents the number 6. The number 6 represents unrest or evil. Multiplied as in 666 symbolises multiplied evil. Winston Churchill, devoted to the Cabbalists (Jewish occult teaching) introduced the Cabbalist 6 to the Goyim world as the "V" for "Victory" sign. The naïve Goyim, have taken over this evil symbol, not realising that by showing it, they are promoting the Cabbalistic aim to subjugate the world. Churchill's sign meant, not only that he was under secret Jewish occult control, but that he was furthering their goal to take over the world.

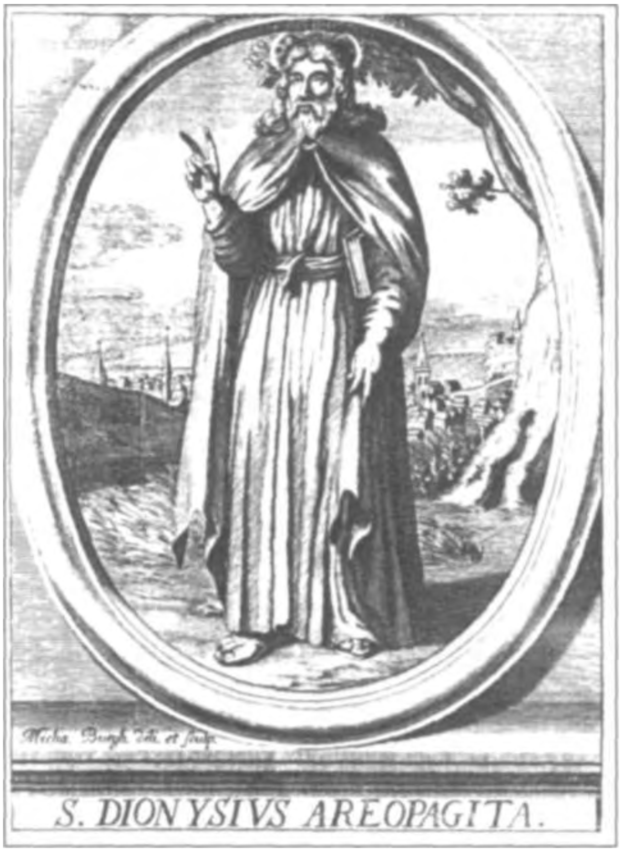
Young Winston Churchill arrives for his Druid initiation ceremony. Was Churchill taught the true, occult meaning of the fiery and destructive "V" hand sign that he later made so famous it became used around the world? (Photo: from the book, The Druids, by Peter Berresford Ellis)

The present Archbishop of Canterbury, formal head of the Church of England (Anglican) is also a senior druid priest. Dr. Rowan Williams received the dubious honor in west Wales, at an open air celebration. According to news reports, Williams bowed down before the Arch Druid, his pagan superior, amidst mistletoe and oak leave branches. Williams wore a white headdress for the occasion and joined his hands in the druid style. During the ritual, attendants sheathed and unsheathed a splendid silver sword, exactly 6 feet, 6 inches in length, and six inches across the metal that fits snug onto the scabbard, thus 666.



Now Archbishop is a senior druid, too

Dr. Rowan Williams, Archbishop of Canterbury, head of the Church of England, and Senior Druid Priest share a secret handshake at a church ceremony.

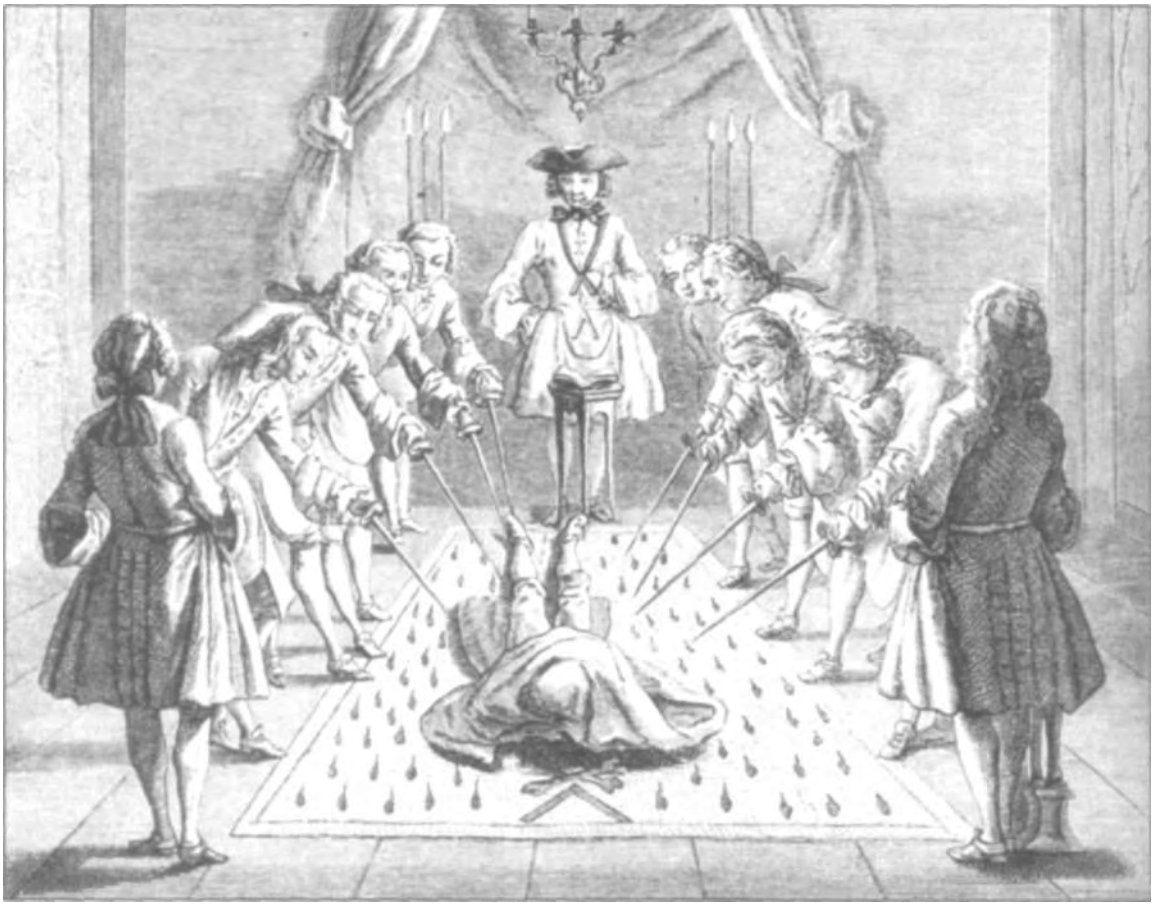


S. DIONYSIVS AREOPAGITA.

In this ancient engraving, Dionysius the Areopagite, an Athenian "convert" to Christianity, gives the double "V" sign-"as above, so below" with left hand toward hell. Dionysius was a mystical Christian, a gnostic heretic who is thought to have been the author of an occultic treatise entitled The Mystical Divinity. (From the book, Mystics and Mysteries of Alexandria, by Manly P. Hall, 33°)

The Green Man, sign of the druids, is found carved on wood and in concrete in the architectural details of buildings, altars, and structures throughout the British isles. An insightful movie, The Green Man, starring Peter Finch, touched on the connection of the Green Man, sexual perversity, and the Devil's demon powers.

This brass plate is decorated with a circle and, inside, the universal sign of the Masonic Lodge, which is the square and compass. Within the combined symbol of square and compass is the "G," representing "God," which is, in masonry, also the generative process (sexual). In this, advanced Masonic view, we have a man on top of a woman in the act of coitus, or sexual relations. Both the compass and the square are "V" in configuration, and when this brass plate is turned upside down, we find the same, that one symbol, V-shaped, still surmounts the other "V" symbol.



This ancient black and white drawing depicts an initiate undergoing trials in order to advance in the Order. Pointing to his head, on the floor, is the square, shaped as a 90 degree "V."

When General George Washington visited Boston in 1789, this banner was carried by a group during a procession in honor of his visit. The "V" is the focal point of the emblem, but the three goat heads contained within the egg-shaped device and the bearded goat head atop it are also significant in occult teaching.

Detail of an anonymous oil painting depicting the famous Viennese composer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart at a meeting of his Vienna Masonic lodge. Mozart is at right. Notice the "V" device worn around the men's necks, symbolic of the square of the Masonic Order.

Albert Pike, the much honored homosexual Lucifer-worshipper who served after the Civil War as Sovereign Grand Commander of Scottish Rite Masonry, rewrote and introduced a new version of the Order's 33 rituals. Here, Pike wears the V-shaped sash of the Sovereign Grand Commander. Hanging around his neck is a jewel of the double-headed eagle.

The occultist who drew the design at right well understood the esoteric meaning behind the symbols. First, we see the "V" sign which, in shadow, becomes the gnarled and ugly, dark image of Satan. What appears at first to be good (Benediction), when seen from the hidden perspective of the unseen becomes Malediction. The diamond and circle at top indicate the same principle, that black equals, or shadows, white, and white mirrors black. This is the Hegelian principle of the synthesis of opposites (Pictured in the book, Pictorial History of Magic and the Supernatural, by Maurice Besey)

631. The gesture of benediction is changed into malediction when one looks at the 'double' or shadow. This is the opposition of black and white which is here demonstrated. The artist responsible for this drawing also reveals the esoteric connection of the so-called V, or "victory" sign, with the yin/yang.

"Every Man and Woman is a Star"

But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves.

— Amos 5:26

Every man and woman is a star.

— Aleister Crowley
The Book of the Law

Few who are knowledgeable dispute the fact that for satanists, occultists and other Illuminists, the symbol of the star has vast significance. Whether five-pointed in shape, six-pointed, or in some other configuration, the star is a premier symbol of the Devil.

Illuminists and witches claim that the pentagram, a five-pointed star with one point upward (ascendant) is useful for "White Magic" rituals and spells. The inverted pentagram (five-pointed star) is widely used by hard-core Satan worshippers. When the two points are aimed upward (ascendant), it is said to indicate "Black Magic" and to be the two horns of Satan. No wonder that Aleister Crowley, the infamous, self-proclaimed "Beast 666" from Great Britain, once stated, "Every man and woman is a star," which, loosely interpreted, meant, "Every man and woman is a god."[1]

The Star of Initiation

In the Hindu religion, the pentagram is the "Star of Initiation." It is the caste-mark of the Priests of Siva, who dedicate it to the sun god by marking a black round dot inside the symbol of the star.[2]

THE Blazing Star

Freemasons, because they venerate the sun and its rays, know the star emblem as the "Blazing Star." Steve Worrall-Clare, a former Mason, in Freemasonry - The Secret Language, writes that in the Lodge:

> The blazing star points out the glory of the sun. It is central to all Masonic undertaking, for it enlightens the earth, and by its benign influence dispenses its blessings to mankind...It is found in the 28th degree and is the symbol of truth. It is found in the 4th degree as a symbol of light and in the 9th degree it is a symbol of divine providence. It is sometimes symbolically installed as the letter "G"...It is a door, an entrance to knowledge...[3]

Satan, The Goat of the Sabbath

High-sounding words, but deceptive. To gain a more direct perspective, we turn to Frenchman Eliphas Levi, a nineteenth-century satanist whose works inspired the writings of Albert Pike, the Sovereign Grand Commander of international Freemasonry. Levi enthusiastically reports:

> The pentagram with two horns in the ascendant represents Satan, or the goat of the Sabbath. (The horn) downward naturally represents the demon, that is, intellectual subversion, disorder and folly.[4]

In Hidden Secrets of the Eastern Star, one of the best guides ever published on the subject of the satanic star and other symbols of Masonry, Dr. Cathy Burns explains that the Blazing Star, or pentagram, has many meanings germane to the doctrines of Illuminism and the occult.[5]

Esoterically, the star symbolizes man as deity, as the universe embodied. It also stands for Sirius, the "Dog Star" or planet where Satan dwells. It stands for "Thor," the ancient Nordic god, and it stands for Baal, or Bel, the demonic god so often mentioned in derisive terms in the Old Testament.

This same star god was worshipped in Egypt, and the children of Israel, while wandering in the desert, fell under his hypnotic powers. They called him Moloch, Chiun, and Remphan. The prophet Amos castigated the Jewish idolaters for this unholy sacrilege:

> But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun your images, the star of your god, which ye made to yourselves. (Amos 5:20)

A Magical Charm and Talisman

To Illuminists everywhere, the pantacle star, or pentagram, is considered a powerful charm, a talisman, and an emblem of favor with the Deity of the Underworld. Oh, how the Communists, founded by Karl Marx, a high priest of Satan, cherished their red stars!

In degree rituals of Freemasonry, an appropriate "Jewel" is awarded the rising initiate. It is believed that this Jewel holds magical powers. It can be used to invoke, or invite, spirits and to work spells. Albert Pike thus advised:

> Another Jewel is necessary for you, and in certain undertakings cannot be dispensed with. It is what is termed the Kabalistic pantacle (pentagram)...This carries with it the power of commanding the spirits of the elements. It is necessary for you to know how to use it. [6]

In other words, Pike is recommending the star be the vehicle to invoke demon powers and cause them to do magical work.

Now, before you dismiss Pike's suggestion and imagine he was just some silly, insane occult nut, let me remind you that so respected is this man by the Illuminati of today, that a statue of Albert Pike stands in front of the Department of Justice building, the offices of the U.S. Attorney-General, in Washington, D.C. Displayed on public land, that statue is carefully tended to by the National Park Service. Moreover, the body of the much-revered former Sovereign Grand Commander Albert Pike, who died in 1891, is entombed in the Scottish Rite's House of the Temple, exactly 13 blocks from the White House.

Technically, there are several different types of occultic stars, each having its own set of doctrinal characteristics. The enneagram, for example, a nine-pointed star, is popular as a spiritual talisman in the Bahai faith and Theosophy and in other New Age occult sects.

The pentagram, from the Greek "pente," meaning five, and "gramma," a letter (thus the "letter five") is a five-pointed star. A pentalpha is more blatantly satanic. It is the form of a triple triangle. The pentagram star can also be called the pentacle, pentalpha, the Star of Isis, the Star of Venus and by other names. Its usage can be traced back to Babylon and it has often been employed in magical rites and activities.

It is sometimes said that the inverted pentagram, when it has two points ascendant, connotes evil and two points descendant, or down, indicates good, but this is not so. Either direction can be evil.

Israel's Six-Pointed Star

The six-pointed star, known as the Seal of Solomon, as the Magen David of the Jews, or as the hexagram, is considered by witches and occultists of all stripes as a powerful tool of witchcraft and magic. With this image, one can cast spells, curse victims, and otherwise wreak havoc. Or so it is said.

The six-pointed star was especially beloved by the cabalistic rabbis of the medieval era. The Rothschild Dynasty later adopted this star as a magical device and was instrumental in persuading (money talks!) the fledgling Zionist entity, Israel, to adopt the six-pointed star as the national emblem. It is the symbol of the Israel national flag, even though a more appropriate device undoubtedly would be the Torah, the Menorah, or some other historic or religious symbol.[7]

Geometrically and numerically (points, lines, triangles) the six-pointed star translates into the number 666. Thus, it is very possible that the six-pointed star could become the Mark of the Beast, the Antichrist, as prophesied in Revelation 13.

The Illuminists, cabalists, and Masons cunningly have also chosen the six-pointed star as symbol because of its hidden sexual meanings. It is made up of two triangles, integrated together, one superimposed on the other. The triangle pointing downward (Delta) represents the female vagina; the triangle pointed upward the male phallus. Joined, or yoked, the two triangles represent the generative sex act.[8]

Illuminati Stars Around the World

The Illuminati have cleverly designed architecture and art over the face of the whole earth to integrate their star talismans into global culture. For example, Texas is called the "Lone Star State," a choice of the Masons—Sam Houston, James Bowie, David Crockett, Stephen F. Austin, and others—who wrested political control of the state in an internecine struggle with Mexican Masonry (Mexican President, General Santa Anna, was also a Mason). Today, the five-pointed Texas star, actually an Illuminati icon, is displayed across the state.

The stars on the U.S. flag are of Masonic origination. The music later used for our national anthem, the Star-Spangled Banner, was composed by a Mason, John Stafford Smith, a member of Royal Somerset House and Inverness Lodge No. 4, London. Another Mason, Francis Scott Key, set the words to the music, and it became recognized as America's national anthem.[9]

Stars have, since World War II, been prominently painted on U.S.A. military equipment—on tanks, jeeps, aircraft—and as badges and emblems on the uniforms of American servicemen.

The Communists in Russia, China, and elsewhere—Illuminists all—adopted the Red Star as a dominant icon of totalitarian dictatorship and emblazoned it on everything, from their flags and monuments to works of art and items of clothing.

None of this is by accident. Always remember, the whole planet is a ritual stage for these mad-men. They have planted evil seeds everywhere one turns. In the scriptures, Paul and John warn that until Jesus our Lord finally puts a stop to this insanity, Satan is god of this world (2 Corinthians 4:4). But Christians are not subject to the demonic powers of this world. Christians are unaffected by spells, rituals and magic cast by the servants of Satan. Only Christians—true, Bible-believing, blood-bought Christians—are immune from Satan's wiles and schemes. The star is one of those wiles. Its prevalence reminds us of how interlaced and permeated this world is with satanic artifices.

> For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?
> I John 5:4, 5

The Egyptian supreme goddess wears on her head the diabolical, inverted pentagram star. Notice that rays of light emanate from the two "horn" points, creating a "V" effect. See Chapter 25 of Codex Magica for discussion of the satanic "V." (Illustration "Isis Recording Her Mysteries." From Histoire de la Magie, by Paul Christian, Paris, France.)

The pentagram is an ancient and modern magical, occult symbol of prime importance to Illuminists, satanists, and members of secret societies. In its upright form (left), the five-pointed star is said to be an indicator of white magic. In its inverted form (center) the same star becomes the sign of consummate evil and hellish intentions. In other words, black magic. Above, the pentagram at far right is simply the same as the star at center turned upside down. In each star, evil is found in the form of the goat-headed god of darkness, Baphomet. However, in the star in the center, the Baphomet goat has what appears to be his beard pointed downward, and in the star at right (reversed image), the supposed beard becomes the torch of fire emanating from the top of the beast's head.

Jasper proceedings focus on suspect's tattoos, activities

This display of John William 'Bill' King's tattoos was admitted into evidence in Jasper on Wednesday. Included: an upside-down pentagram on his underarm and head, and a picture of the baby Jesus with horns. King's attorney said the tattoos prove nothing.

The media gleefully devoted maximum attention to the killing of a black man in Jasper, Texas by three white men. The three chained the mutilated victim to the bumper of their pickup truck and drug him behind until he was dead. The media reported the grotesque murder as a racial crime, a horrible incident of racial prejudice and hate. In fact, the motive for the murder was satanic, not racial. John William King, one of the accused white men, had tattoos of a baby Jesus with horns, of the satanic pentagram, the goat's head, and more. Even King's hair was cut into symbols of evil. (Austin American-Statesman, February 18, 1999, p. A12)

This 5-pointed star is the seal, or logo of the Fraternal Order of The Police, an association much like a union of police and law enforcement personnel. The Masonic symbols gives convincing proof of the origins of this group. Many other police organizations have similar logos and, indeed, the "star" itself, in its numerous variations, is in widespread, almost universal use by law enforcement. Is this the elite's way of telling the whole world, "We are the law!"?

Parents in Pearland, Texas, objected after a police officer handed out calendars to students that featured this image of a Baphomet goat's head with a star. The calendar also had explicit details on satanic and sexual rituals for every day of the month. The police officer was presenting a talk about teen gang activity. Dear Ms. Marrs:

Thank you for your letter of Marzo venticinque MCMXCIIX, I'm sorry for the tardy reply but, I had to do two radio shows between then and now. I also had to get the United Fascist Union listed in two more directories of political associations & send out the usual batch of mailers to various radio & T.V. shows U.F.U. agents have been on in the past. We try as best we can to keep up with mail, it's not always easy but, being that we're trying to revive Pagan Rome we've become quite good at record keeping, so you will always get some sort of a reply even if it's only a standard form letter.

I have no desire to waste your time with idle chit-chat so I'll get straight to the point. We're asking the various talk shows, magazines & broadcast companies we sent courtesy copies of our propaganda short "THE DAWN OF THE NEW MILLENNIUM"to, to let us know what they think of the moving picture. Please, tell us what you like or didn't like about the film so we can improve it the next time we make a movie.

I am also enclosing an outline of the book "A New World Order for the New Millennium" that I co-authored with Sally Parker, because I read in one of your newsletters that you publish books for authors at times. I don't think you would agree with the fascist's about reviving Pagan Rome being that your Christians but, I do think you'd atleast agree with part of the United Fascist Union's doctrines concerning the present government. At what points Ms. Parker & I saw fit to quote Rev. Marrs in the text, we quoted him verbatim from the text of "Project L.U.C.I.D." without any embellishment of any sort.

When the wife of the author of Codex Magica sent a letter to the United Fascist Union requesting information for our files about the group's purpose and activites, we received this letter in return. Notice that two pentagram symbols are prominently displayed as symbolic artwork on the letterhead of the United Fascist Union, a U.S.A. based group headquartered in Wilmington, Delaware. Also observable is the fasces (ax and wheat bundled by X insignia). In the signature block of the letter, the "Director and CEO" of the United Fascist Union has typed the phrases "Viva Nova Roma" (Long live the New Rome) and "Holy is Babylon!"

While attending the Set X Conclave in New Orleans last summer, an initiate posed a question to me which went something like this: "If we, as Black Magicians, are consciously existing outside of the natural order, and affect magical change soley by the Will within ourselves, why, then, do we go through all the trouble of employing all these rituals and symbols in our magical Work?"

Arrgh.

Just kidding. My answer at the time was that he was correct in theory, but that at the

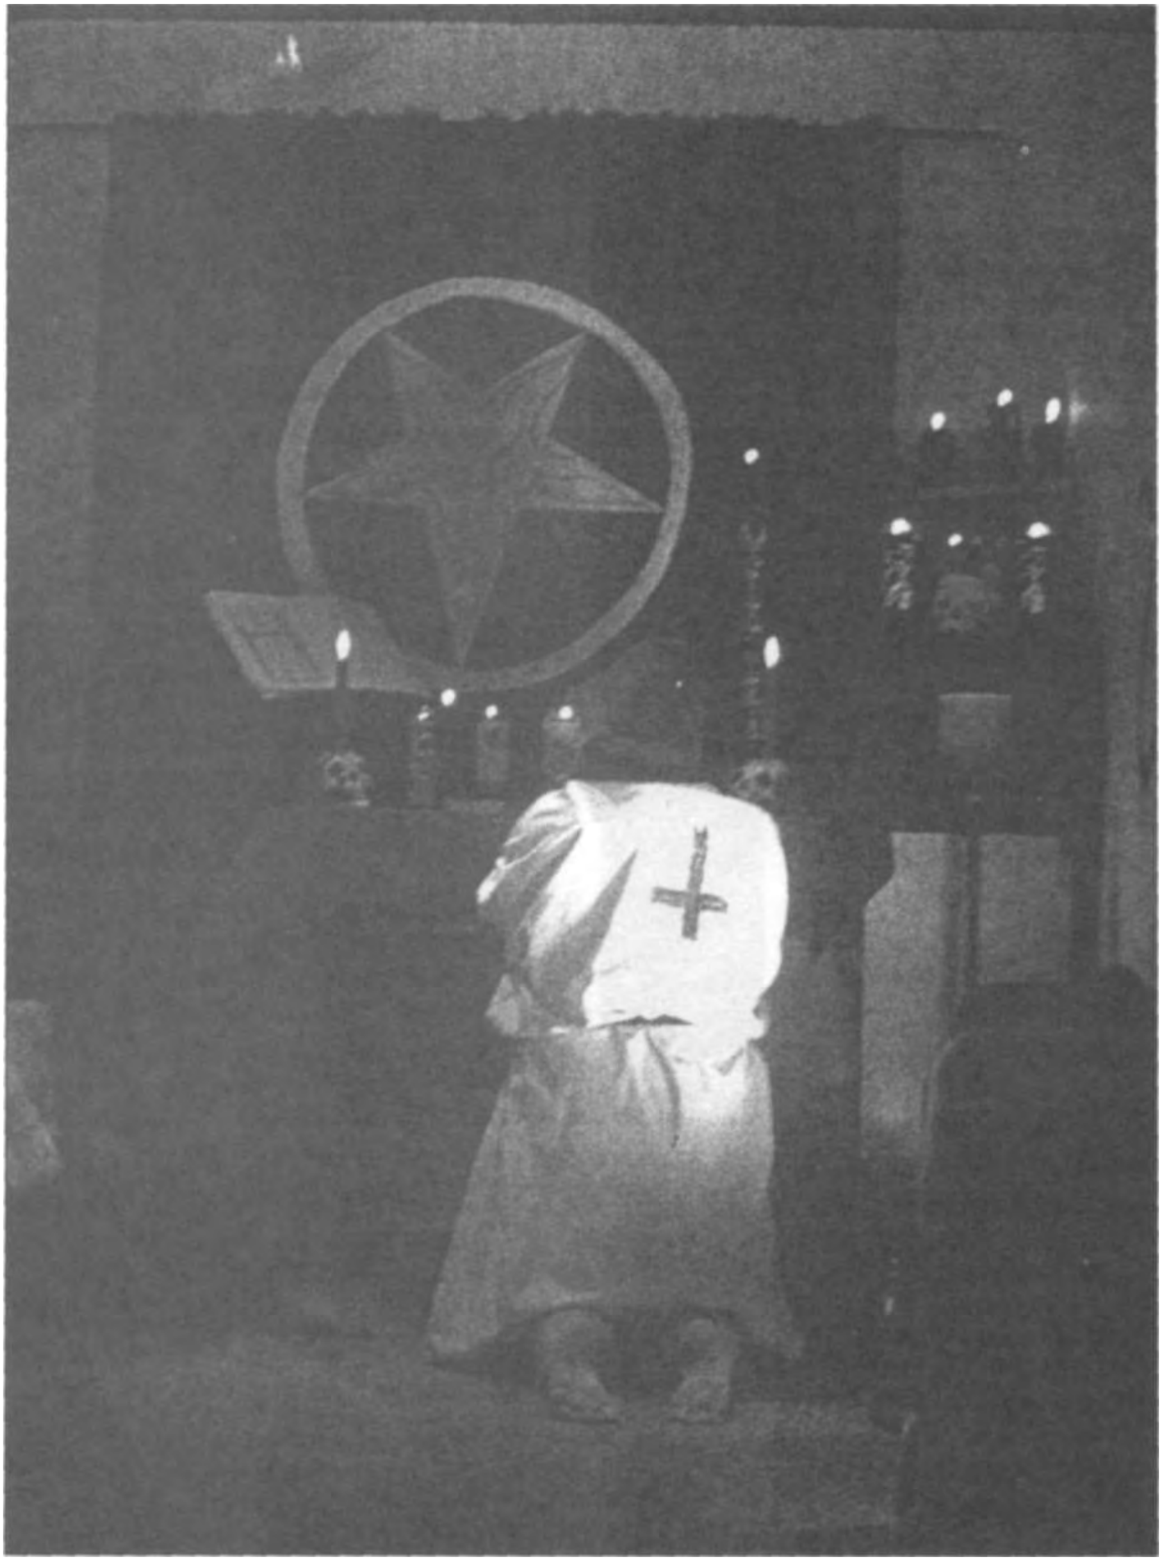
In the 1990s, President George Bush's National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) gave photographer Robert Mapplethorpe a $15.000 grant from the tax trough (that's my money and yours!) to produce photographs. Regrettably classified as "art," some of Mapplethorpe's photographs depicted homosexuals "enjoying" violent, degrading sex acts. Mapplethorpe also produced vulgar and unseemly pictures of little boys and girls displaying their sexual genitals.

Extremely satisfied with Robert Mapplethorpe's pornographic art, the NEA's artist community promptly arranged for his lewd photographs to be put on exhibit in some of America's finest art museums. All this, of course, was funded by the taxpayers through that gracious government cultural agency, the NEA.

Well, tragically, Robert Mapplethorpe is no longer with us. He has died of the AIDS virus, a result of his homosexual lifestyle. But he left behind a very revealing photograph that he had taken of himself. The photograph, entitled "Self-Portrait," shows Mapplethorpe in a terrorist/ gangster leather overcoat, machine gun in hands. On the wall behind the posed artist is a satanic pentagram, the five pointed star so revered by occultists.

Frankly, my heart goes out to the late Robert Mapplethorpe. He was a deceived, sick man. But I have little sympathy for the politicians who year after year fund the wicked tastes of the NEA's art crowd. Neither do I have a soft spot in my heart for the liberal clergy who insanely support and applaud the homosexual lifestyle.

Yes, Robert Mapplethorpe was personally responsible for his actions. He must now answer to an almighty God. But he had many accomplices to his immoral crimes. And the blood of Robert Mapplethorpe and thousands of other desperate and confused young men is on their hands!



Jack Roper, a friend of Texe Marrs who is a law enforcement consultant and an expert on satanic rituals and crimes, sent Texe this photo of a satanic altar and worshipper.

PROJECT: SYNTHETIC STAR

The designers of the magnificent Tribute in Light memorial for the World Trade Center turned their attention to urban night blindness: the blankness of the city skies. Urban Lodestar is a light-emitting five-pointed star designed to float serenely above a city center and pulse gently at the same rate as a resting heart to calm the city folk below. Lodestar hovers with the aid of helium-filled polymer balloons; propellant tanks and directional boosters attached to a GPS-equipped positioning system keep it from going AWOL. During the day, photovoltaic film panels harness energy from the Sun and store it in batteries; at night, electroluminescent strips in the shape of a star glow with that stored energy. Graphite composite struts provide stability, and a battery-powered xenon strobe creates the pulsing effect. Intermittent green flashes differentiate the Urban Lodestar from natural celestial bodies.

Popular Science magazine (July 2004) published this artist's conception of a proposed Synthetic Star, pentagram star of light to be beamed over the city of New York as a memorial to World Trade Center 9/11 victims. The designers believe the five-pointed star, designed to float serenely above a city center and pulse quietly at the same rate as a beating human heart—will calm the city folk below. Would you like to look up into the sky each evening and see a huge satanic pentagram like this hovering over your community?

This incredibly revealing official poster was unveiled and distributed by the Council of Europe, sub-organization of the European Community. It depicts the Tower of Babylon being rebuilt with the announcement, "Europe: Many Tongues, One Voice." Above the Tower is a circular constellation of satanic pentagram stars. The Masons have long given themselves the nickname, "The Builders." In the book of Genesis in the Bible, we are told that the original building of the Tower of Babylon came to naught after God confounded the wicked inhabitants by causing them to speak many different languages. As this poster demonstrates, however, it's déjà vu all over again.

Lightning Fall From Heaven

And he said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

-Jesus (Luke 10:18-19)

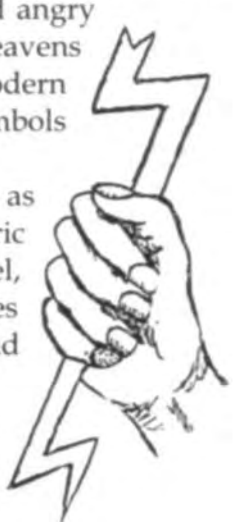
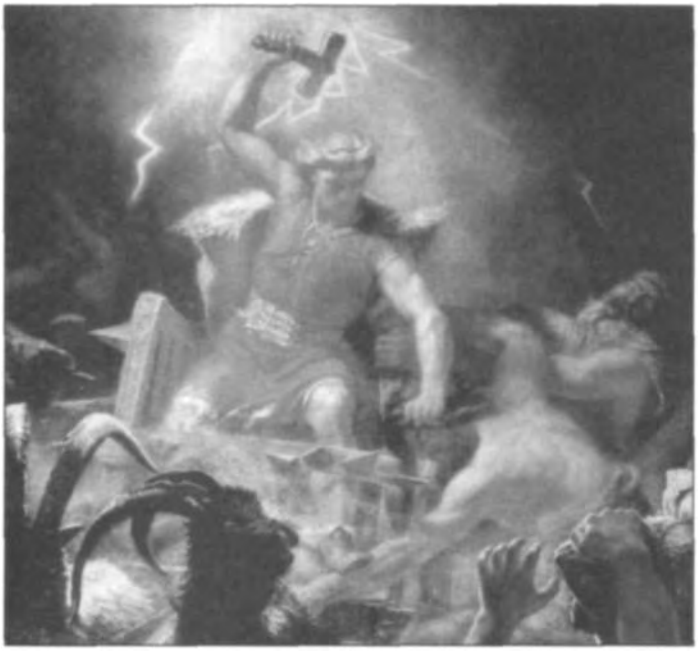
Lightning has long been a supreme symbol of Lucifer, whom the Illuminati deem to be their "enlightener." In the Bible, Jesus states, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke 10:18). We also discover in the scriptures that Lucifer is called the "Prince of the Power of the Air" (Ephesians 2:2).

The pagan Mystery Religions—from which the modern Illuminati have borrowed—pictured their supreme god as a fiery, flying serpent, bringing lightning and thunder in his wake. The Greeks and the Romans worshipped angry deities, Zeus and Jupiter, sitting on a throne at the hub of the heavens throwing lightning bolts and booming thunder at enemies. The modern revival of the use of the lightning symbol is seen by the Nazis, the symbols of rock music groups, and in the Harry Potter books and movies.

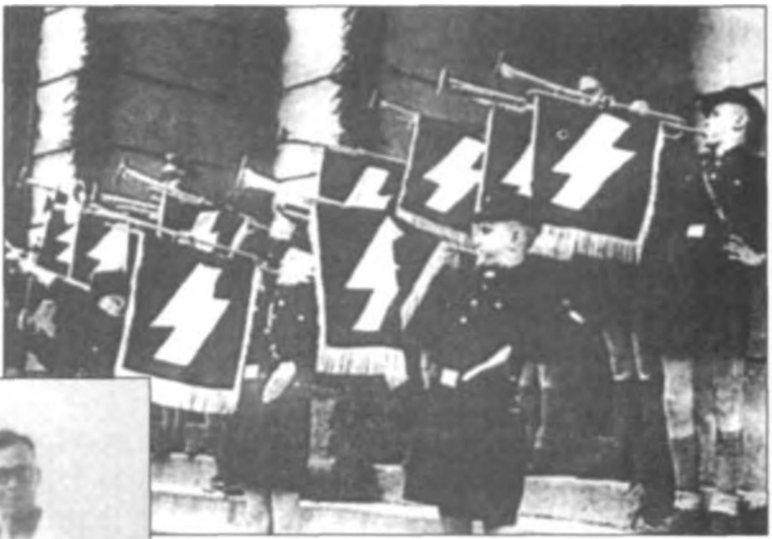
Once again we also see the phallic symbol recognized—this time as lightning—in the Illuminist religion. This originated from the tantric tradition, in which it is taught that lightning is a phallic scepter, jewel, lingam, or magical wand of the gods. Lightning especially symbolizes the Hindu fire god, Agni, whose mark is given by his High Priests and Priestess in the Third Eye region of the forehead between the eyes.



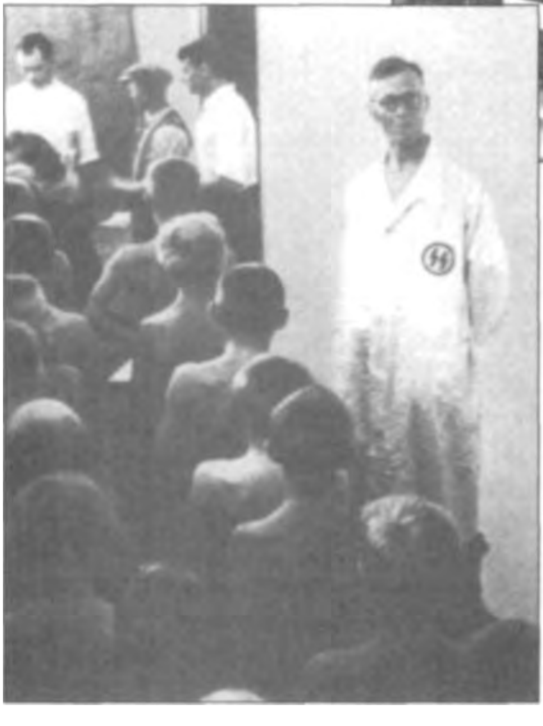
The lightning bolt is the Sign of Zeus, the Father of the mythological deities of Greece. The Nordic peoples worshipped him as Odin.



In this classic oil painting we see mighty Thor, the Nordic god, with his hammer and lightning strikes. At bottom, the black color of the horned goats and the hand's grasping on the rock ledge have much occult significance. In Masonry, the use of a gavel, or hammer, is said to be a sign of authority. The Communists in the U.S.S.R. adopted the hammer and sickle as official state logos.

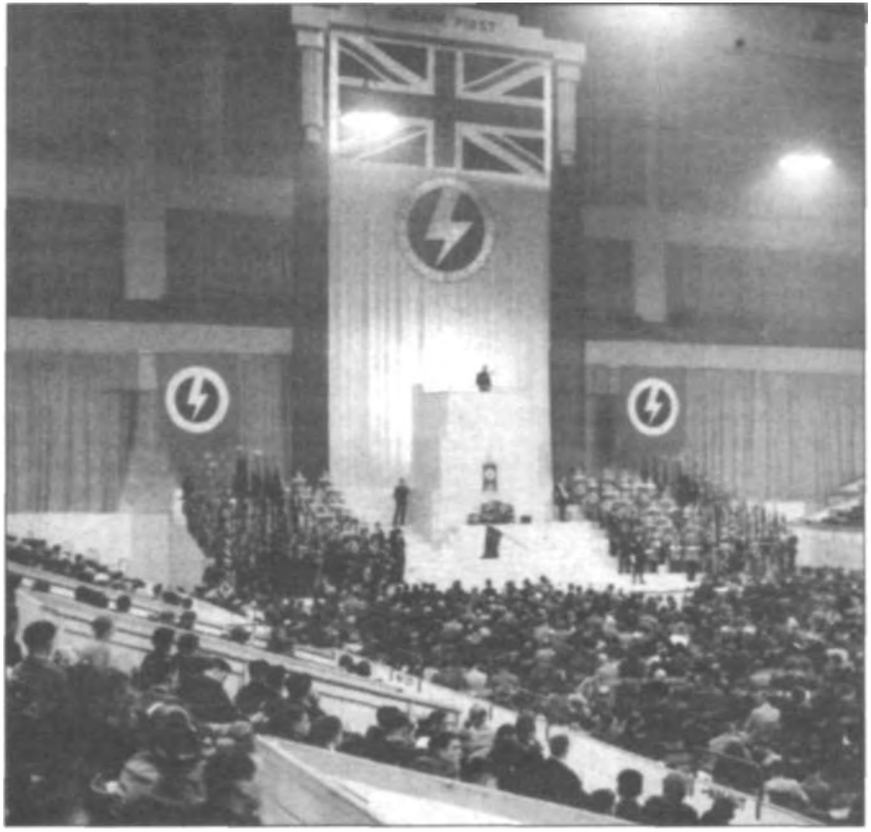


The bugle corps of the Hitler Youth fly the banner of the lightning bolt, an occultic symbol of the ancient Mystery Religions. The lightning bolt is designed as a rigid "S", meaning the secret adoration of Satan.



A German Nazi concentration camp doctor helps in the processing of new arrivals. He's wearing a white doctor's smock with the runes symbol (two satanic "S" lightning bolts) inside a circle. (From the book, Kinsey: Crimes & Consequences, by Dr. Judith Reisman)

Sir Oswald Moslev, founder of Britain's splinter New Party, leading a march in London in 1939. The New Party said it's lightning flash stood for Action and the circle (wreath) around it for Unity, or Union. Fascists rallied around this banner, and many of the goals of the Party were Socialist.



Over 30,000 people attended this rally in Britain under Mosley's New Party and its banner of the lightning bolt and circle. The British flag also is interesting in its masonic design of the Osiris X intersecting a horizontally elongated cross.

Shoppers and tattooed fans for the new Harry

The lightning bolt has long been a satanic symbol. Its use stems from Jesus' statement in the Holy Scriptures: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven" (Luke 10:18). The Harry Potter books were cleverly packaged to introduce tens of millions of kids to satanic symbols, rituals, and concepts. Here we see Harry Potter, on the cover of Time (September 20, 1999) with the lightning bolt on his forehead. Inside, in the feature article, is a picture of two tattooed young fans also with thunderbolts on foreheads.

Charles Colson, of Prison Fellowship, received the million dollar, "Progress in Religion" prize at the Parliament of the World's Religions in Chicago. Now he's helping to promote the Harry Potter witchcraft books. Still, official Christendom holds Colson up as the very epitome of Christian example, and his books are sold in almost every Christian bookstore.

Most Christian parents are not hesitating to buy Harry Potter sorcery witchcraft books for their kids. Witchcraft has now virtually conquered the whole of the Christian establishment.

Blood Red—Red Stars, Clenched Fists, Hammers and Sickles, and Other Signs and Symbols of Communist Murderers and Thugs

How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations!...This is the work of the Lord God of hosts...

— Jeremiah 50:23, 25

Communism was solely the invention of the Jews.

— Sir Winston Churchill
London Illustrated Herald
(February 8, 1920)

The most brutal, murderous, and monstrous gang of all time was the Communist regime in Soviet Russia, the U.S.S.R. According to noted historian Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, sixty-six million people perished in the Soviet gulag concentration camps and in the liquidation of the farmers and small businessmen.[1] In contrast, the notorious Adolf Hitler and his Nazis were pikers. The real holocaust happened in the Soviet Union, and many of those deaths and torments occurred before the Nazis had built a single camp. Hitler and Himmler must have been green with envy.

What is most surprising—at least to the uninformed general public—is that few today are even aware of the Soviet Holocaust. Because of the Jewish ownership of the Western media, all the emphasis is put on the crimes of the Nazis. The horrors of the Red Terror are neglected. Maybe more remarkable, in many media and academic circles, the monsters who committed the atrocities in Soviet Russia—led by Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin, Kaganovich, Beria and others—are often adored, being cast in a favorable light. This is especially true of Lenin and, to a lesser extent, the theoretical, so-called "founder" of Communist ideology, the German Karl Marx.

Communist Leaders of Jewish Bloodline

The reason why the Western media, owned and run as it is by Jewish interests, fails to expose the Communist butchery is easy to discern. The instigators and leaders of Communism were virtually all of the Jewish race and bloodline! The Lenin Museum in Russia today admits that Vladimir Lenin was a crypto-Jew (a "crypto Jew is a Jew who keeps his race hidden from public knowledge). Trotsky, his deputy in crime and mass murder, was a Jew who had lived in the Bronx, New York under his real name, Lev Bronstein. Stalin, the third leg of the Soviet troika, was half-Jew, and Yiddish was the only language spoken in his boyhood home in Georgia. Stalin's real surname was Dzhugashvilli—Jewish.[2]

Karl Marx was a German Jew whose grandfather was a rabbi, and the entire Communist Bolshevik revolution was financed by the Jewish Rothschilds and Jewish Warburgs in Germany, in partnership with the Jewish Warburgs and Jewish Schiffs in the United States.

Communism was Jewish from the ground up. Marx's view and his classic texts, The Capitalists and The Communist Manifesto, were ideological expressions of the Jewish Cabala, which is also the basis for Marx's theory of dialectical materialism and economic class evolution, specific throwbacks to Hegelian dialectics and Weishaupt's Illuminism. Albert Pike's writings in Morals and Dogma are also right out of the Jewish Cabala aquarium. It seems that the piranhas, the killer "fish" of humanity, all swam in the same polluted pond: Jewish Cabalism and rabbinical magic and despotism.

From Lenin to Putin, we have a straight-line succession of Jewish Cabalism under the guise of Communism and now, "Democratic Capitalism" under Gorbachev, Yeltsin and Putin.[3]

Writing in his provocative, fact-filled expose, Bloodlines of the Illuminati, researcher Fritz Springmeier reveals how incestuously Jewish the rulers of Russia have been, including their spouses. First, he notes that Stalin married the daughter of his number 2 man, the Jew Kaganovich. Also:

> The wife of Boris Yeltsin is the daughter of Joseph Stalin from Stalin's marriage with Rosa Kaganovich. Rosa's father was Illuminati...Boris Yeltsin and Rosa are secretly Jewish.
> Lenin was married to a Jewish wife, Krupsakaya. Molotov married a Jewess, too. And Stalin was married to Jewess Kaganovich. Kaganovich's powerful brother

> Lazar is in the Politburo, and Lazar's son, Mikhail Kaganovich, married Stalin's daughter, Svetlana. Boris Yeltsin's original (Jewish name) was Baruch Ellia. He in turn is a good friend of David Rockefeller.[4]

Communism the Invention of Jews

So dominant was the Jewish influence in the Communist regime and its bloody Red Terror that Sir Winston Churchill, in the London Illustrated Herald newspaper, stated that, "Communism was solely the invention of the Jews."[5] And, he added, it is not a new thing, for the Jews are historically the people who have fomented bloody revolutions and horrors. Churchill said the Jewish global revolutionary plot can be traced back to the days of Adam Weishaupt and his Bavarian Order of the Illuminati (1776).

Churchill went on to emphasize that this "worldwide conspiracy for the overthrow of civilization, and the reconstruction of society...has been steadily growing." Now, he warns, this band of thugs and murders "have become the undisputed masters of the enormous Russian empire."[6]

Solzhenitsyn records that over 60 percent of the Commissars who headed Gulag camps in the U.S.S.R. were Jewish. Other historians estimate the number at 80 percent. Every leader of the dreaded Checka, KGB and secret police was Jewish, including the butcher Beria.

May Day—Illuminism and Communism

It is interesting to note that that Adam Weishaupt, infamous founder of the Illuminati, founded his group on May 1. It was exactly that day that the Communists under Lenin celebrated. Annually on May 1, the huge May Day parade is held in Moscow.

Is it a mere accident that the most holy day of paganism and witchcraft, Beltane, is also celebrated on May 1? On that day, in pagan Europe, children and adults celebrated around the phallus symbol known as the May Pole, even as witches howled at the moon.[7]

Of Wolves and Freemasons

In his expose of Communism, Under the Sign of the Scorpion, Swedish writer and researcher Jiiri Lina, writes how in his last months, a mad Vladimir Lenin, his body and brain racked with the sexually transmitted disease syphilis, demanded each night to be taken out on his balcony in his wheelchair. There, for hours, the angry Lenin would howl and bay at the moon like a wounded wolf.[8]

Lenin, Stalin, Marx and all the other top Communist leaders were all Freemasons. Gorbachev, too, and Yeltsin were Masons, members of the Grand Orient Lodge of France as well as the Soviet Consistory.

Albert Mackey, 33°, former Sovereign Grand Commander, in his authoritative Encyclopedia of Freemasonry, states that Alexander Kerensky (Lenin's immediate predecessor) and the other plotters of the 1917 revolution against the Czar were

Masons: "The first Revolution in March 1917 is said to have been operated from these (Masonic) Lodges and all the members of Kerensky's government belonged to them."[9]

All Masonic organizations throughout the world are secretly run by Jewish masters operating behind-the-scenes.[10]

I also have documentation to prove that Marx, Lenin, and most other Communist leaders were homosexual perverts. Most, like Beria, were pedophiles as well, and they all enjoyed brutalizing and degrading women. The wives of these homosexual deviants led miserable lives. One of Stalin's wives committed suicide.[11]

Signs and Symbols of Communism

Seeing as how the Communist founders and leaders have all been apostate Jews into Cabalism, Freemasonry, and blatant satanism (Marx was an official High Priest in a satanic church), we can be sure the signs and symbols of Communism are also of cabalistic/Masonic/satanic origins, as is the color red so fanatically adored by the Communist wackos. Let us now examine these signs and symbols of the Red Murderers, e.g. the Communists.

The Clenched Fist

In all nations where Communist politicians and insurgents operate, these evil men and women invariably identify themselves by making the sign of the clenched fist. Some biblical authorities say that, "The clenched fist represents the (rebellious) attitude of the people of Babylon toward God."[12]

The closed, or clenched fist is, in the Illuminist Philosophy, the symbol of secrecy, dissimulation, and hermeticism. It veils and conceals secrets from the "profane" and the "vulgar" (the non-Illuminists). Interestingly, the meaning is the same in the canons of Buddhism.[13]

Dr. Peter Ruckman, in his fascinating study of things occulticly black and evil, mockingly titled Black is Beautiful, comments about the raised, clenched fist:

> You will find this 'salute' being given by all members of the Communist Party in New York, in the 1920s and by the (Stalinist) Abraham Lincoln Brigade, during the civil war in Spain in the 1930s.
> By some quirk of 'fate,' this salute was adopted by the Black Panthers in America during the 1960s...the followers of Martin Luther King called it the 'BLACK POWER'salute.[14]

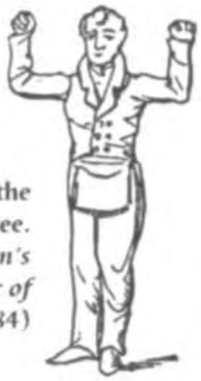
Liberal Afro-American leaders continue to employ this salute to this day. Jesse Jackson does it almost as an automatic response.

The clenched fist salute, or hand sign, is well-known in Freemasonry. The First Sign, or Due-guard, in the ritual of the Select Master Degree is the holding up, or raising, of both arms in an "L" (square) position with the fists of both hands clenched. The lecture for this degree in Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry states:

> The signs of a Select Master are then given as follows: The first is similar to the sign of a Master Mason. The fists are both clenched, in allusion to one of the penalties of the obligation, which is to have both hands chopped off to the stumps.[15]

How interesting. Ironically, according to the Masons, the symbol of the clenched fist relates to having the hand chopped off at the stump. Communists out there: Maybe you should listen to what your cronies in Freemasonry are teaching you.

In the initiation for the Secret Monitor Degree of the Lodge, the sign of the clenched fist is given in remarkably similar fashion to the Communist salute, with one hand and arm.



The First Sign in the Select Master's Degree. (From Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry, p. 84)

This illustration comes from Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry (p. 93) and demonstrates the clenched-fist sign which is learned by the initiate of the Secret Monitor Degree.

Hammer and Sickle

The sickle is a universal symbol of the Grim Reaper; that is, a symbol of death. However, the Communists would maintain that the hammer and sickle represent workers, or laborers, the proletariat, or common people whom the Communist leadership represents.

Perhaps the hammer has other relevant meanings, however, which are concealed by the satanic Illuminists who sponsored — and continue to sponsor Communism. The Herder Dictionary of Symbols says the hammer "symbolizes power and strength" and notes, "In some cultures magical protective powers against evil are ascribed to ritually forged hammers."

Every Masonic Lodge has a gavel, or hammer, wielded by the "Worshipful Master" or other potentate in charge. In her celebrated dark work, The Secret Doctrine, Theosophy founder Helena Blavatsky reveals that the god of forces (Lucifer) renders the "divine hammer" and it is the "mallet or gavel of the Grand Masters of Masonic Lodges."[16]

Sarah Terry, a member of the Masonic-aligned group, the Eastern Star, traces the gavel, or hammer, back to the hammer of the Nordic sun god, Thor, and says it is an emblem of power.[17]

If we realize that the Illuminati's chief goal is the rebuilding of Babylon in a desperate bid to undo what God did as recorded in the Book of Genesis, the significance of this Bible verse relating to the prophesied destruction of Babylon by God's might becomes clear:

> A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken. How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations...The Lord hath opened his armory, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation; for this is the work of the Lord God of Hosts. (Jeremiah 50:22-25)

Red Star

The Red Star is perhaps Communism's best-known symbol. I have examined the occultic meaning of the five-pointed star in previous chapters, so I simply reiterate here that the star is a sign of false gods and specifically of the god of Illuminism, Lucifer, the solar deity who comes disguised and is worshipped by the deceived Illuminati as "Angel of Light" and as the "Blazing Star."

Incidentally, so popular is the Red Star in Russia that in late 2000, under pressure from military brass and segments of public opinion, Vladimir Putin, Russia's President, brought back the Soviet red banner as the military's flag and agreed to reinstate the Soviet-era red star as the Russian military's official emblem.

"The star is sacred to all servicemen," said Defense Minister Sergei Ivanov, who spoke at a meeting of Putin's top generals attended by Putin.[18]

Oddly enough—or understandably enough for those in the know—the red star is often seen on U.S.A. military vehicles and uniforms. It became a staple during World War II, under the direction of the Pentagon's "red brass" leadership put in place by Zionist fanatic President Franklin D. Roosevelt and his ever watchful guardian, Jewish financier Bernard Baruch. (No wonder General Eisenhower's West Point yearbook called Ike the "Swedish Jew.")

The Color Red

But why the color red? Could it have a relationship with the Bible's identification of the whore of Babylon as the woman in scarlet?

Also in the Bible, we find that Esau was born red (Genesis 25:25), and God says, "I have hated Esau."

The color red has a long and non-illustrious history of whoredom and violence. In pre-Vedic India the people worshipped a primitive form of Shiva as the "red god" and as "the howler." The god and planet Mars was known by the ancients as the red god.

In Scandinavia, the major god, Odin, had clothing, shield symbols and runes of red color. A hero Viking's death became celebrated on the calendar as a "red-letter day," and thus we have this phrase in common use today.

Robin was the god of witches in the forest and when human sacrifices were made, they were dedicated to Robin redbreast, or the slain Cock Robin.

Updated to more recent times, we find that in her occult book, A Treatise On The Seven Rays, Lucis Trust director Alice Bailey taught the occult importance of colors. "The three major rays," she said, "are red, blue, and yellow." The color red, Bailey explained, has to do with "Will, or Power."[19]

In The Symbolism of Color, Faber Birren points out the primacy of the color red. He notes:[20]

- In ancient Egyptian religion, the god Shu was red, and red animals symbolized Seth.

- The red poppy was sacred to Ceres, the goddess of the harvest.

- The face of the wine-god Dionysus was sometimes painted red.

In my researches of occult traditions, the color red is always the color of fire and blood, of evil and destruction, and of immorality. Even the Devil is sometimes conceived of as a red beast.

And isn't that what Communism has proven to be—A red beast? Even a Red Dragon?

Mandela was released after serving 27 years for sabotage and treason

South Africa

The incredible background to the betrayal of South Africa (from 1652 to the present) was concisely summarized by Warren L. McFerran in THE NEW AMERICAN for October 22, 1990. During this past year the key step in that ongoing betrayal was Nelson Mandela's release from prison and his subsequent glorification by the major media and political figu of a life sentence (he was convicted of sabotage and treason in 1964). Mandela was released on February 11th. On February 2nd, President F.W. De Klerk had lifted his government's 30-year ban on the communist-dominated African National Congress (ANC), of which Mandela is a top leader, and had also legalized the South African Communist Party (SACP)

At one point he refused to criticize Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasir Arafat, Cuban dictator Fidel Castro, or Libyan strongman Muammer Qaddafi, all of whom he said "support our struggle to the hilt." Later in the day, he attended a rally in Manhattan's Harlem section. Among those specially invited were three Puerto Rican nationalists who had shot and wounded five congressmen in 1954. Asked about their presence, Mandela defiantly asserted: "We support the cause of anyone who is fighting for self-determination, and our attitude is the same no matter who it is. I would be honored to sit on the platform with the ... comrades you refer to."

On June 22nd, he addressed the Special Committee Against Apartheid at UN headquarters. He received a number of standing ovations from Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar and the others in attendance.

For a long time, Osheroff concedes, he avoided the dark side of Spain, the compromises, the deceptions. "If you're driven by the blinding force of passion, you're not going to criticize it," he explains. "It's a religion, a crusade." Shortly after the war, Osheroff read Homage to have been a sham. The republic had shipped gold reserves to Moscow for safekeeping. Stalin simply impounded the treasure, deeming it payment for arms and supplies, for which he charged exorbitant prices. In other words, had Stalin prevailed, Spain would have become a dictatorship depressingly similar to the one Franco ultimately installed. It is an appalling irony.

But it isn't news to Osheroff. Long years of hard thought have led him to the same conclusion. He recalls a seminar he taught some years back at the University of Washington. The students "asked me a tough question: 'Would it have been better if your side had won?' I had to go home and think about that one. Now I think it

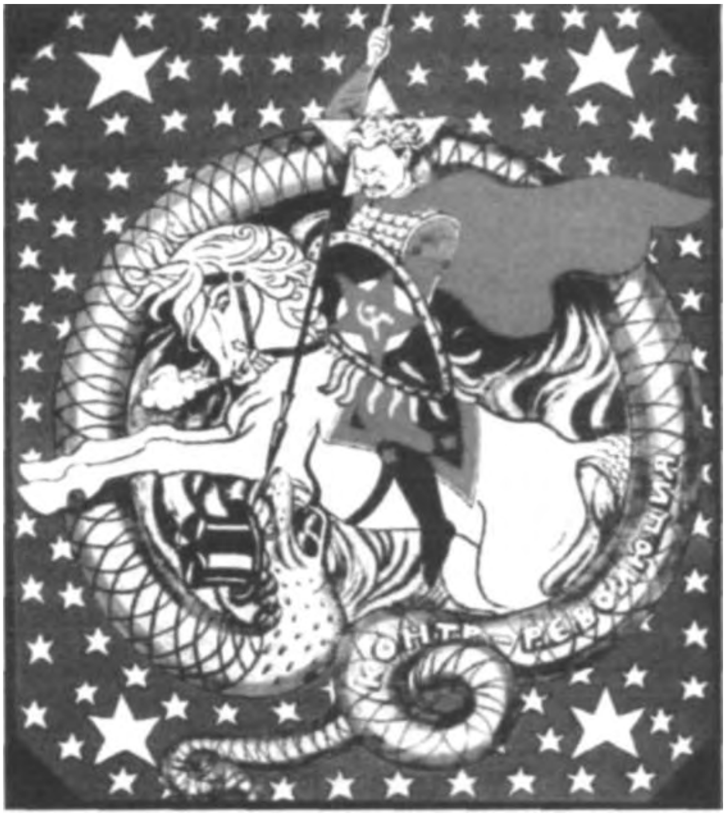
The resemblance of the monstrous Communist butcher Leon Trotsky (right) to the shadow devil creature created by the hand of British satanic high priest Aleister Crowley (left) is remarkable. The drawing of Trotsky is from a Greek publication while the photo of Crowley is found in an unrelated British-published book. In fact, Trotsky, whose real name was Bronstein (Jewish) was a satanist, which is why he was so thrilled to see countless thousands of Russian and other Christians arrested, tortured, killed, or sent to gulag concentration camps. Trotsky was himself murdered in Mexico City by an assassin wielding an axe.



Star god of Communism? This 1920 propaganda poster by a Communist artist depicts Trotsky as Saint George slaying the dragon of capitalism. In reality, Jewish capitalists, the Warburgs and Rothschilds, were the ones who put Trotsky, Lenin, and Stalin and their Red Terror in power in Moscow in 1917. Trotsky and his cohorts were servants of the dragon!

Textbooks, library archives, press accounts all had to be changed, much like Orwell's 1984 black hole procedures. The Communists adopted both the hammer and sickle and the red star for their official logos, or symbols. The ancient god Saturn, depicted here in a 15th century drawing, was said to carry the sickle as the symbol of death. Note also the radiant star in Saturn's genital area, the horns of the goat (Satan) and the water bearer (Satan's astrological Age of Aquarius). Occultists view the planet Saturn as representing Satan, because it is the sixth planet from the son and because of Saturn's role as taught in the mythologies.

In his thoughtful, eye-opening book, Scarlet and the Beast, knowledgeable Christian author and conspiracy researcher John Daniel illustrates the communist connection with Freemasonry. The most prominent emblem of universal Freemasonry is the square and compass with the letter "G" inside the internal triangle. Daniel notes that this represents the tools used by the Lodge's Great Architect (false God) to create the heavens and the earth. In reality, the letter "G" represents Gnosticism, the core doctrine of Masonry, and the Generative process (sex act). Masonry is, as Daniel notes, a sex cult.

However, English Freemasonry (the United Lodge of Britain) substitutes a human arm wielding a hammer in place of the "G." This arm and hammer represents the Mason as the Builder, as "man at work" creating the heavens and the earth. Thus, man becomes God. The arm and hammer is of socialist/communist origins. The same symbol is found on a bestselling brand of baking soda. Noted communist financier and oil corporation CEO Armand Hammer was given his name in honor of the communist movement. Note, too, that the arm and hammer symbol inside the square and compass is configured as a "G."

Finally, we come to the modified square and compass of French Freemasonry and its Grand Orient Lodge. This Lodge and its membership are decidedly anti-Christian and are markedly pro-communist. In 1877, the Grand Orient Lodge declared, "There is no god but humanity." Embracing Reason as their God, they replaced the "G" with the now-familiar communist symbol of the hammer and sickle. This represents collective common man, the proletariat. John Daniel points out that the French Lodge's substituted symbol inside the typical square and compass forms the letter "G" backward, "which is symbolic of the negation of God." It was Albert Pike who wrote, in Morals and Dogma, that there is no real person or entity named "Satan." Pike claimed that Satan is simply a Force, the negation of God. In a vain and failing effort to lionize and deify their bloodthirsty founder, the communist Jew Vladimir Lenin, the U.S.S.R. planned to build this gigantic memorial to the dead Soviet dictator. Josef Stalin, Lenin's successor, in 1931, commissioned architect Boris Iofan to do the design work. It was to be the largest building in the world and was to be called the Palace of the Soviets. The design favors that of Mayan pyramids and the ziggurats of Babylon. The site chosen for the Lenin monument was a piece of land on which a closed-down Christian church building sat, the 19th century Cathedral of Christ the Savior. Stalin ordered the church blown up and the debris removed, and it was. However, World War II intervened and the gargantuan, monstrous structure was never completed. At the top of the planned monument, a statue of Lenin was to tower above the people and landscape, his right hand and finger vertically pointed upward toward the heavens. Possibly this was a fulfillment of scripture. In Isaiah 14, Lucifer vainly boasts that his kingdom will ascend to the stars and that he will be like the Most High. But Lucifer's true destiny is the pit of hell!

Black magic holds sway over a paranoid Kremlin

A fanatic of the occult is now dictating Russian policy, writes Miranda Anichkina

Three wise men (from left, at front): Boris Yeltsin, Defence Minister Pavel Grachev and Alexander Korzhakov

WORLD leaders gathering in Moscow this month will be treated to gala concerts, receptions and dinners in the Kremlin Palace. They will be hosted by a beaming, if stressed, President Boris Yeltsin, eager to boost his electoral chances by putting some grand guests on display. But behind the carefully orchestrated parade of Russian pomp, an almost Stalinesque paranoia and hysteria is gripping the country's top officials.

The president's men are now reduced to communicating via slips of paper which they burn in ashtrays, while the entire staff lives in terror of the man known as the Black Magician – a KGB general who apparently studies the occult in order to determine national policy.

He is General Georgy Georgievich Rogozin, who is said to prepare daily horoscopes for top Kremlin officials, as well as scanning space to determine budget issues, using spinning saucers in his Kremlin office and punctuating his working day with repeated mantras. He also goes to great lengths to create favourable magnetic fields around the president, even to the extent of determining an exact north-south position for Yeltsin's bed. The general is reported to decide appointments to high office by consulting black magic tables.

He is loathed by Kremlin staff and is thoroughly feared. Ludmila Pikhoya, an experienced presidential aide and speech writer who is known for her iron strength of character and calm temperament, turned on Rogozin during a recent stormy Kremlin meeting, dragging him outside a conference room and screaming: "Don't you try to control my subconscious ever again".

The unreal atmosphere is compounded by the widespread belief among staff that they are now subject to a level of surveillance undreamt of even during the worst days of the KGB. Well-connected Kremlin correspondents tell of sources pointing to air-conditioning systems and light bulbs, while conducting conversations about the weather.

Meanwhile, they are feverishly scribbling notes on scraps of paper. One top-ranking official stuffed pencils inside the keyholes of his safe while talking to Sevodnya newspaper correspondent Sergei Parkhomenko, suspecting video cameras to be installed inside. Others insist on meeting journalists in the same parks that were the scene of many a clandestine Cold War encounter.

Even Yeltsin's own chief of staff Sergei Filatov has publicly admitted that he and his colleagues are afraid to talk freely.

"You can't even breathe without being watched," confirms a member of the president's analytical centre. "The 'neighbours' are always with us," he adds darkly, employing a euphemism that once stood for the intelligence service. "But I'm not talking about the Lubyanka. I mean the Rogozin people."

The mysterious and alarming Rogozin officially heads an analytical team whose intelligence is so jealously guarded that it is delivered by a courier whose arrival is heralded by a coded telephone call. Rogozin reports to General Alexander Korzhakov, a shadowy figure in charge of the presidential bodyguard who is widely reported to control the president.

Rogozin is one of only three generals in the presidential team along with Korzhakov and Admiral Zakharov, the man who masterminded the 1993 storming of the White House. Born in 1942 in Vladivostok, the Black Magician joined the KGB at 21 and enjoyed a meteoric rise. From 1989 to 1991 he was the chief scientist in the first division of the institute dealing with security problems.

It was at this point that his obsession with the occult became more than just a hobby. He persuaded his colleagues that they should be looking for a scientific breakthrough in the field of the paranormal. Then the general pursued a programme which included mind-reading from a distance, control of the subconscious by telepathy and information-gathering from the deceased by scanning brain waves from the skull.

A colleague from this period is certain that Rogozin is continuing to develop his bizarre techniques. "Georgy is a complete fanatic of the occult and I am sure that he has got the necessary equipment for his experiments.

"In any organisation you are bound to get a few people who get paranoid," said Sergei Parkhomenko, the Russian journalist who has put together a dossier of the strange goings-on, "but everybody I talk to at the Kremlin confirms the nightmare. Sane people are all drained by the atmosphere of petty and humiliating surveillance and people reporting on each other."

Both Rogozin and his boss Korzhakov are accountable to the secretive GUO, the security service for all state buildings. In one year the number of staff at the GUO has risen to 44,000. Now, some members of the Duma have begun to demand that the GUO should be subjected to the legal constraints of the constitution.

Members of the Russian Parliament question what kind of influence is being wielded by this former KGB officer with his projects and what proportion of state funds are being squandered on black magic.

The mere fact that these rumours are circulating so wildly reveals the paranoid state of mind into which Russia's democratic government has slipped; and it calls into question its ability to responsibly run a nuclear armed, former superpower.

A highly placed officer of the electronic surveillance service FAPSI warned: "It cannot be permitted that parquet [deskbound] generals from the Kremlin guard are allowed to usurp power in this country. If no one stops them, anything could happen."

The occult magic of the Czar is also back! Or did it ever leave? In The European (May 5-M, 1995, p. 4) was found this story reporting on "Black Magicians" among the highest ranks of Russian military and political circles. Among the magic techniques common in the Kremlin: Mantras, meditation, astrology and horoscopes, mind powers, telekinesis, spinning saucers, coded messages, remote viewing, tarot cards, and energy fields.

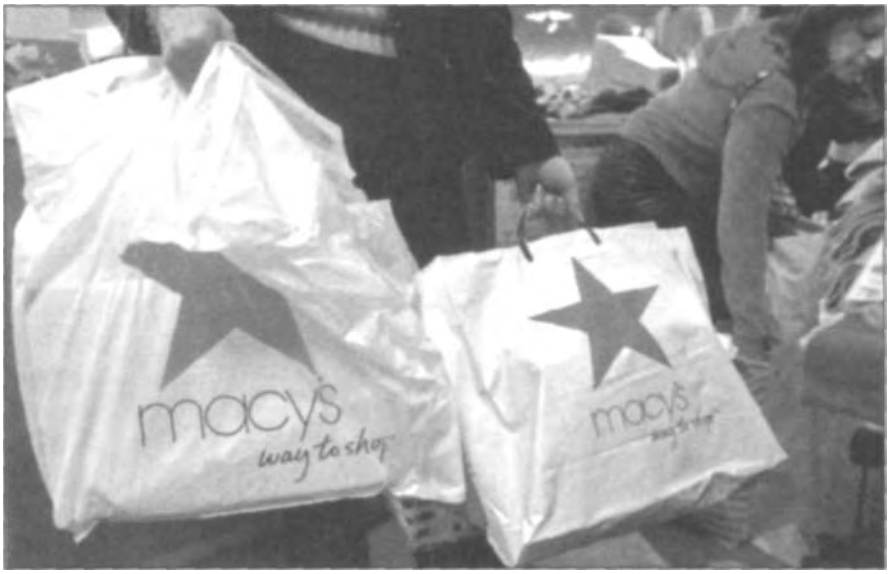
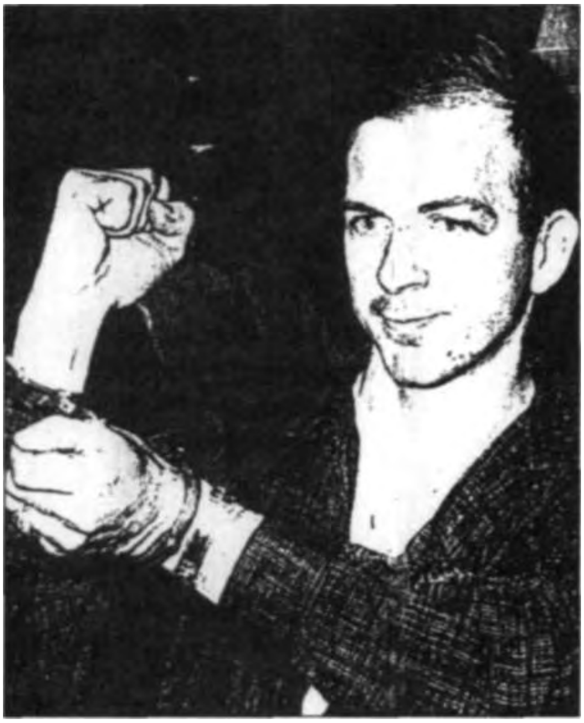
Gorbachev Red Star" trumpeted this cover of Vanity Fair magazine (February 1990). Ink type, appropriately, was colored red.



The red star is universally recognized as a sign of hard-core Communism. So, why has Macy's department stores adopted it also as its logo, as shown on these Macy's plastic shopping bags?

In what is clearly a staged photo in Newsweek magazine (January 4, 1999), then U.S. Senator and later Attorney-General, John Ashcroft is called "The True Believer." In the photograph, Ashcroft sits in a red chair with golden stars emblazed on the fabric. On the wall behind him are a series of framed United States flags. Each has the same gold star prominent inside the blue field of 50 white stars of the states. The star and the colors red and gold have special significance for Illuminists.



Was Lee Harvey Oswald playing the part of a Communist secret agent when he displayed the clenched fist shortly after his arrest for the alleged assassination of President Kennedy?

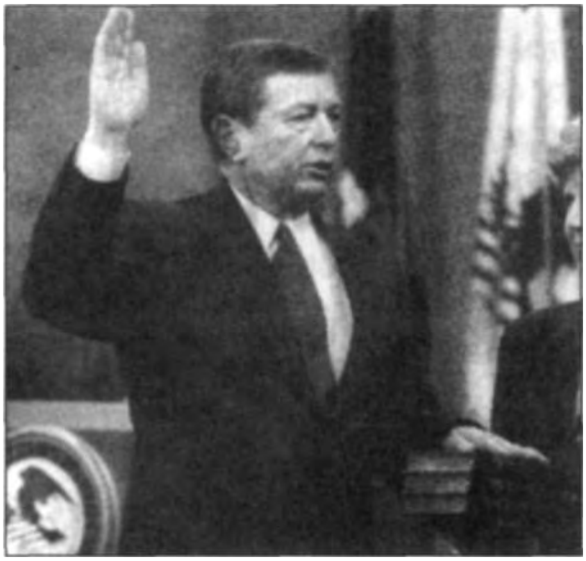
Sen. John Kerry returns to Capitol Hill today, 'changed forever' by his White House run ■ 5A

By Amy Sancetta, AP



When Bush nominee John Ashcroft, a Freemason, was sworn in as Attorney-General of the United States, he did not swear on the Holy Bible. In this revealing photo published in Criminal Politics magazine, Lawrence Patterson, foremost authority on the global conspiracy and on secret societies, points out that Ashcroft—whom the White House and the press promoted as an "evangelical Christian"—placed his hands and swore on a mysterious stack of books. Were they law books or books of the Jewish Talmud or...?

The story of a skull...

We've gone with using a skull on the front cover not to shock, but to convey what appears to be a gruesome truth. One people all over the world need to come to grips with.

On an investigative swing down the East Coast a couple years ago, I was in Columbia, South Carolina the week a partial human skull was discovered out in some backwoods in the small town of Lexington, just southeast of Columbia.

No one seemed to know where the skull had come from.

In the early '80s, a partial human skull was found in some woods near Fitchburg, Massachussetts. Initially, this discovery was a mystery too. But with some good investigative work, it was discovered this was a victim of a satanic cult sacrifice. The cult's high priest was convicted.

What you have to wonder is: How many more partial skulls are out there if we looked? Really looked.

It's my bet there are a lot.

DEDICATION

This book is dedicated to all those working to expose this insidious evil in our midst.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

To God.

To my wife Liz, for your courage, support, research help, coordinating efforts. Oh yeah, and for the late night prayers on the way to another town.

To Janice and Dick Lord (& family) for all the help and support on the project.

To Dave and Shelley McClow for your friendship, beleif in the project, support and advocacy for survivors.

To Connie and her friend for the editorial support.

To ritual crime investigators: Randy Cerny, Andrew Kasarda, John Hunt, Jerry Simandl, Dale Griffis... and all the others out there risking their lives trying to expose all this. (The same goes for Alan Scheflin, John DeCamp, Skip Clements...)

To investigative journalists like Maury Terry, Roy Blake, Michael Newton... who are the modern-day "Woodwards and Bernsteins" of this issue, as they continue to dig to get at the truth.

To therapists like Catherine Gould, Collin Ross, Randy Noblitt, Holly Hector, Pam Monday, Pam Hudson, and the countless others going way beyond the "standard hour," way beyond, to help ritual abuse survivors. (The same goes for Doug Riggs, Len Anspach...)

To ritual abuse survivor advocates like Faith Donaldson, Maureen Brugh, Caryn StarDancer, Pam Perskin, Bart Larson, Beth Vargo, Jo Getzinger, Cheryl Knight, Eileen Aveni, Pam DeVries, S.A.V.E. and all the others "...out in the trenches."

To the ritual abuse survivors themselves like Dominique, Gina, Cindy, Kathleen, Dan, Rose, Vanessa... who have not only broken away, but are working with all they have to expose this, at great risk to themselves.

And if I've missed anyone — to you, too.

FOREWORD

The following lyrics are from a lead song about sadistic/satanic ritual abuse on Joan Baez's 1992 release: Play Me Backwards.

You don't have to play me backwards
To get the meaning of my verse
You don't have to die and go to Hell
To feel the devil's curse...

Ritual abuse victims have felt the devil's curse firsthand. Some with the cold steel of ceremonial knives to their throats, have been forced to chant incessant praise to satan amidst flickering candles during late-night ceremonies. A defenseless seven-year-old girl felt the devil's curse when she was repeatedly sodomized by black robed figures in an abandoned backwoods house as part of a cult orgy. Young initiates felt the devil's curse when they were exposed to the cult's sophisticated and systematic electro-shock torture, brainwashing and programming.

And, of course, the devil's curse is felt when observing and/or being forced to participate in the ultimate cult homage — a human sacrifice.

Ms. Baez's song goes on:

Let the night begin there's a pop of skin
And the sudden rush of scarlet
There's a little boy riding on a goat's head
And a little girl playing the harlot

There's a sacrifice in an empty church
Of sweet li'l baby Rose...

The "baby Rose's," these sacrifice victims, well, they're starting to surface: the partial skull of a satanic cult sacrifice victim is unearthed in some woods in Massachusetts; the bodies of four satanic cult member defectors are found brutally slashed in a small town in Salida, California. (Uncanny, the murders take place on, of all streets, Elm Street.) Meanwhile, in another small town in northern Brazil, the dismembered body of seven-year-old Evandro Caetano is found in a shallow grave. Satanic cult ritual instruments are found buried close by. The cult ring involved with the killing is eventually tied to a 2,000-member linked cult network. Back in the States, three eight-year-old boys are brutally killed during what appeared to be a ritualized incident in Arkansas. Oddly, a short way into the investigation of this case, the satanic ritual aspects are downplayed. The same way it seems they have been downplayed in cases across the country, around the world. In Prescott, Canada, an extremely creative team of police and social workers uncover an extensive, multi-generational ring of sexual and ritual abuse perpetrators. And the list goes on.

So does Ms. Baez's song:

So I'm paying for protection
Smoking out the truth
Chasing recollections
Nailing down the proof

What Ms. Baez refers to here is the increasing number of "walking wounded" who are deeply scarred by the devastating effects of ritual cult abuse, and who are trying desperately to recover.

For instance, a group of children exposed to sexual and satanic abuse at Fran's Day-Care Center in Austin, Texas carry all kinds of scars: night terrors, night sweats, uncontrolled vomiting, extreme separation anxiety, acting out sexual and/or sadistic impulses such as using knives to slash at eyes in magazine pictures, trying to have sex with another sibling, etc... In this Texas case, day-care center operators were convicted, each sentenced to 48 years in prison. What's more, my investigation has turned up similar day-care and school satanic ritual/sexual abuse cases in Oregon, Massachusetts, Florida, California, New Zealand... In each, the children report very similar atrocities: extreme sexual abuse, praying to satan, drinking blood, watching animal and baby sacrifices, being threatened with death if they tell.

Besides the children's stories, there are all kinds of adult survivors coming forward with recovered memories of some of the most heinous cult ritual abuse imaginable. These are people who have often been inexplicably saddled with such strong afflictions as extreme chronic depression, extreme paranoia, extreme codependency characteristics, strong suicidal tendencies...

However, as the core cult memories are surfaced and worked through in dissociative disorder clinics, private therapy, 12 Step Ritual Abuse groups, and so on... significant, marked healing, often for the first time, starts to take place.

Also, as some of these cult survivors come forward, they are bringing more than just stories of heinous abuse. This book, for instance, includes a series of interviews with an east coast, satanic high priest's daughter who reports accompanying her father on trips across the country for the purpose of training regional satanic high priests in drug running, prostitution, money laundering, torture, brainwashing and programming techniques.

What's more, we are starting to see there are startling overlaps between the satanic cult brainwashing and programming, and the same highly sophisticated mind-control technology developed clandestinely by the United States government, and other governments around the world.

And finally, not only is it becoming apparent the satanic cults and other sadistic hate groups are networking, but also, part of their agenda may include a "full-tilt," movement intent on world domination. This movement, apparently orchestrated by a very proficient occult hierarchy, appears to be pulling the strings of the sadistic hate groups and covertly and systematically positioning their people in key political, business and social positions.

My original intent was to travel the country attempting to merely investigate and chronicle a few cases of SRA (satanic ritual abuse). However, the investigation seemed to providentially take on a life of its own and led to more, much more, than I ever intended.

As part of my research, I've interviewed: a former senator who has extensively researched an apparent high-level satanic cover-up; a Santa Clara author/law professor who has written extensively on clandestine government mind-control experiments; one of the directors of the California Ritual Crime Investigators Association, who tracked one of the most extensive and sadistic satanic cults that has, as yet, been exposed in the United States; the consulting archeologist for Lucas Films' Indiana Jones series, who made a startling discovery in the ground below the now-famous southern California McMartin Pre-School, and many more. I also cite Harvard psychiatric researchers who have done extensive work with the phenomenon of repressed memory.

You know, a first glance at this field, I've learned (such as a cursory listen to a survivor's story, or a first sweep over an evidence site) often doesn't seem to yield much in the way of substantive cult-related evidence. Yet the evidence comes into view when one knows how to line it up properly. The process of seeing the evidence can be compared to working with a computer. At first all you see on a computer screen is a basic template that just displays the labels for various software program functions. However, if you pick a function, then "double-click" on it, a whole array of data materializes that had, in essence, been hidden below the surface level.

And so it has been with some of the phenomena of sadistic/satanic ritual abuse. Click: Viewers hear gruesome ritual abuse stories on Geraldo one afternoon, then, turn the channel. Click: Police officers scan a homicide scene for clues, ignoring a Satanic Bible and ritual chalice on a nearby shelf. Click: A sheriff's department investigator listens to the four-hour deposition of an adult satanic cult survivor describing sexual abuse, torture, and murder he experienced as a child. "We can't do much because of the time lapse... but, we'll keep the information on file," the officer perfunctorily assures. Click: A postcard with the face of a missing four-year-old girl from New Hampshire arrives at the house, anyone's house. It's thrown away without a second thought.

What I decided to do in writing this book was to, in effect, take the time to "double click" on some of these things. I also interview other experts who have been double clicking as well. And the second click has produced quite an array of data on the next screen down. Bodies, cult member diaries, abduction techniques, mind-control programming techniques... all lend more credence to survivor stories in general. What's more, as SRA investigative experts are starting to compare what they are finding on the next screen down, much of the data matches; lending credence to the idea that the groups are also networked — and could quite well have a broader agenda.

The following pages are an in-depth look at a good cross-section of what's been found when you "double click."

Click.Click.

Chapter 1

AS WAY OF BACKGROUND

Consistent reports of satanic ritual abuse started to surface during the 1980s. (Just as consistent reports of childhood sexual abuse/incest started to surface for the first time during the late 1960s and '70s.) While it is becoming apparent these types of cult abuses have been around for ages, the horrible stories/repressed memories are only now surfacing with steady frequency, primarily because, only recently has an environment been created to support survivors getting in touch with these types of issues.

This environment is partially, if not largely, attributed to improved counseling techniques, better understanding of the psychological effects of extreme trauma, and the evolution of the 12 Step recovery movement into areas of codependency, sexual abuse and ritual abuse.

Note: For those not very familiar with the therapeutic world, it has advanced on a par with, say, how the medical world has advanced. Just as the medical profession has gotten more and more sophisticated in understanding and treating heart conditions, for instance, so it has been with the therapeutic world in understanding and treating the psychological effects of emotional and physical trauma.

Trans-generational cults involved in ritual abuse are those perpetuated through family generations. They are not exclusive to satanism, but may be based on other forms of religious tradition. Children brought up in such environments often view cult activities as the norm. Power, heritage and programming seem to keep trans-generational cults flourishing. Some of these cults engage in prayer ritual, mind control, sexual orgies, child sexual abuse, kidnapping, torture, murder/sacrifice.

And while proliferation of cult ritual abuse activity is hard to quantify at this point, many therapists, researchers, law enforcement officials and others I've interviewed over the years, believe the phenomenon is much more prevalent than most of us would imagine.

According to national lecturer/advocate Caryn StarDancer: Ritual abuse is any repeated, systematic mistreatment perpetrated in the name of an ideology. This abuse may be mental, physical, emotional, spiritual or sexual, and frequently combines all these types of abuse in an attempt to condition every aspect of the victim's humanity toward the ideology. This happens in satanic cults, Neo-Nazi groups, Afro-Caribbean cults, the Ku Klux Klan, gangs... In other words, it is systematically, and often clandestinely, currently going on in all of these types of groups all over the world. This basically means, there are apparently large numbers of people being conditioned with hate/"dark-side" ideology, and being programmed to unquestioningly do their various group's/cult's bidding.

Note: The next chapter is a graphic look at one of these extensive, quite dangerous cults.

However, as a way of preface, according to some pretty high-profile people in our society, what you are about to read really doesn't exist:

April 1994 — Texas Monthly Magazine. Writer Gary Cartwright reports FBI agent Ken Lanning states: "Not a single body or body part has been produced. If the [satanic] cults are real," Lanning observed, "they constitute the greatest crime conspiracy in the history of the world."

(Bear in mind, this was the same agency that, for the first half of the 20th century, adamantly said there was no evidence of another organized crime conspiracy — the Mafia.)

May 10, 1994 — Nationally syndicated columnist Molly Ivins writes: "...social workers who deal with child abuse have nightmares about the people who come up with patently false 'recovered memories' of satanic ritual abuse."

January 1993 — Mother Jones Magazine free-lance writer Ethan Watters: "Critics note ...many patients from fundamentalist Christian backgrounds, for instance, have memories of abuse at the hands of satanic cults, despite no evidence that such cults even exist."

After reading about some of the following cases, you make the decision about whether these cults exist. And, you make the decision whether those just cited are genuinely knowledgeable, simply misinformed, or, well, quite skilled "spin doctors."

Chapter 2

WHERE'S THE PROOF?

Here's some...

Slaughter in Salida
The Real Nightmare On Elm Street

For 51 days in the spring of 1993, the world intensely watched as detail after detail of abuse and cult mind control surfaced from the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas. Just a little less than a year earlier, in a courtroom in Oakland, California, graphic details quietly began to surface about a satanic cult compound that makes what was going on inside the Branch Davidian compound seem quite tame.

It was reported there were at least 55 known satanic cult members, stretching into a three-county area, and representing a variety of walks of life. There was a David Koresh-type, charismatic leader (high priest). There was extreme code-of-silence programming; humiliation and subjugation; torture, including electro-shock; sexual abuse; murder.

In other words, many of the same things satanic ritual abuse survivors have been reporting over, and over. What's more, as the story played itself out, there emerged a curious pattern of suppression around one of the key details. A pattern of suppression, one has to wonder, perhaps, has happened in other communities as well?

THE INVESTIGATION

It's late fall, 1984. A series of burglaries start to occur in Stanislaus County in central California. Each time a calling card is left, scrawled in blood: "WE'LL BE BACK TO KILL YOU!!!"

The notes are also illustrated with satanic symbols: pentagrams, upside-down crosses, 666's.

"You can imagine the trauma to the victims," said Randy Cerny, former Northern California coordinator of the California Ritual Crime Investigators Association. At the time of the burglaries, Cerny was a deputy and gang intelligence coordinator for the Stanislaus County Sheriff's Department.

Cerny is one of the officers assigned to investigate the burglaries, and in the process, starts to hear rumors of a satanic cult operating in the area. However, nothing more substantive initially emerges. The burglaries eventually stop. They go unsolved. However, Cerny continues to investigate.

Eventually, he comes across 17-year-old Mike Long (not his real name). Mike is heavily involved in the occult and satanism. However, he's trying to get out, and agrees to become an informant.

Yes, there is a satanic cult. Yes, they are carrying out ceremonial rituals, bizarre sex, drug running, prostitution... And the cult is headed up by a fanatical, but sophisticated leader, Gerald Cruz. With an iron fist, Cruz has the members following some of the teachings of high-profile satanist Aleister Crowley. (The same man Hitler was said to have followed.) And all members are required to wear satanic medallions underneath their clothes as a show of allegiance.

But Cerny is still unable to turn up any hard data links, or corroboration. What's more, he's having a hard time getting other people in the sheriff's office to listen.

No one listens, that is, until September 26, 1985, when Tamara Smith (pseudonym) surfaces. Smith is a topless dancer at the Cheyenne Social Club in the outskirts of Stanislaus County. She has come to the sheriff's department concerned for her safety. She is afraid she will be sacrificed by the group, said Cerny, if she refuses to participate in a ceremonial "Marriage to the Beast." That is, marrying high priest Cruz.

In exchange for protection, she identifies more than 50 people connected to the cult. Some were other dancers at the club, local rock group band members, bartenders, bouncers. But there's more. She also identifies people like a town dentist, as well as a Christian pastor at a non-denominational church, who was reported to clandestinely be another high priest in the cult.

Smith said the cult was stock-piling guns and explosives, and was heavily involved in drugs and prostitution. Smith also said Cruz was involved with physical and sexual abuse of his children. (This would also come out later in the trial, said Cerny.)

Cerny started an intelligence file on Cruz. The Federal Alcohol, Tobacco and Fire Arms Division (ATF) also started an investigation, because of the report of the inordinate amount of weapons the cult was storing.

Cerny started doing some inquiries around the social club and said he did elicit some decidedly paranoid reactions. Shortly after, he received an anonymous death threat warning him against looking into "satanic activity" in the area. This was early 1986.

There is no more apparent satanic activity until August of the same year. A graveyard in Denair, California, south Stanislaus County, is dug up and a body is removed. However, this also goes unsolved.

For the next couple years, nothing more surfaces. However, Cerny stays visible in his fight against ritual crime. He has retired from the sheriff's department and is lecturing throughout the county (and country) on the issue. He also accepts a spot on the committee for the U.S. Attorney General's first Ritual Crime Investigation Task Force.

In addition, he has developed a close friendship with San Juaquin County's ritual crime investigator, Dighton Little. (San Juaquin is the next county north of Stanislaus.) Little, in fact, is Cerny's best man when he remarries in 1988. Also, like Cerny, Little is quite visible in the fight against ritual crime.

In October of 1989, two days after the San Francisco earthquake, Little is shot and killed during a drug raid. The raid was at a drug dealer's residence behind Bob's Truck Stop in Rippon, California. Cerny said this dealer was selling drugs for a man who had been identified by Tamara Smith back in 1985 as being one of the satanic cult members.

A couple months later, Cerny is called to an abandoned warehouse by San Juaquin law enforcement to investigate a case of animal mutilations. At one point in the investigation, Cerny took an ABC news correspondent who wanted to report on the case into the warehouse. As they approached a makeshift stone altar where the sacrifices had taken place, Cerny froze. Next to the altar was a ripped newspaper headline — about his friend's death.

The following year, reports of the cult come up again. Law enforcement officials learn they have established a residential compound (homes and trailers) in Salida, California, just north of Modesto. What's more, they are set up right across the street from an elementary school.

Cerny said the group had evolved into a white supremacist/ militaristic, satanic cult. Every night, cult members would be posted as guards. Officials would later learn Cruz would not let anyone go off the compound grounds without permission. Like Waco's Branch Davidians who were constantly forced to read the Bible, these cult members were forced to study the teachings of Aleister Crowley and other occultic literature. Cruz was also using sleep deprivation, humiliation, and even electro-shock to keep cult members in line. The latter was referred to as the "orange cord" treatments.

That is, a Black & Decker extension cord, with the ends exposed, were wrapped around testicles, and other body parts, while Cruz operated a power switch.

What officials would also later learn, was though nothing tangible had surfaced in the last four years, the cult had continued to carry on the drug running, prostitution, rituals...

"They were very secretive," said Cerny. "A very close-knit, sophisticated group." However, that was about to change.

In the spring of 1990, several people break away from the cult. This incensed Cruz, said Cerny. And Cruz decided to make a lesson out of the defections.

The cult members who break away move into an apartment on the other side of town. According to Cerny, one night Cruz brings some of his "upper circle" people together. That night they play music by the heavy metal band Slayer, and pass out "mystical" weapons. Knives.

They then cross town and break into the Elm Street apartment. The defectors are beaten mercilessly with baseball bats, then bludgeoned to death. Cerny said the carnage scene that was left rivaled the infamous Charles Manson/Tate-Labianca murder scenes. Each ex-cult member was decapitated.

Several days after the quadruple murders, a trail leads back to the cult, and a number of cult members are arrested, including Cruz.

THE TRIAL

However, strange things start to happen during the trial. For one, Cerny said the sheriff's department could not seem to locate some of the back files on the cult, including Smith's 1985 deposition about the cult. (Again, Cerny had since retired from the department, and was running a ritual crime prevention consulting service.) What's more, the prosecuting attorney, James Brazelton, was staying away from any mention of cult aspects, said Cerny. So much so, that when an NBC producer flew a crew out from New York to do a story on the cult angle, Cerny said she was told by Brazelton the trial had nothing to do with the occult. (He was apparently convincing enough, the producer backed off.) And the local newspaper, the Modesto Bee, for the most part, referred to the satanic cult as merely a "group of people," said Cerny.

Cerny had several suppositions for why this was playing itself out the way it was. For one, he said the Stanislaus area prides itself on being a peaceful, "law and order" community. And for several years, it had the distinction of sending more people per capita to prison than anywhere else in the state said Cerny. There is even a town in the area, Turlock, that for years had the distinction of having more churches per capita than any other town in the nation. Also, said Cerny, this area was starting to see some substantial development as people moved farther and farther out from San Francisco.

Cerny said because of this development and the law and order reputation, he believed some of the "powers that be" were exerting pressure to downplay the fact that the town had an extremely active, extremely dangerous, satanic cult problem.

However, defense attorneys for some of the cult members were very interested in talking about the cult aspects, trying to prove that Cruz's power over their clients had led them to be involved in the murders. Also, when Cerny was called to testify, all of a sudden, Cerny said, the sheriff's department was able to locate the back files on the cult. Cerny testified at length about the cult activity in general, based on interviews with the cult members and a review of detailed cult member diaries. As one example, he talked about an initiation book where cult members had to sign their name in their own blood. Similar to the Mafia, this act signifies one is in the cult for life.

Defense attorneys also called noted cult expert and psychologist Daniel Goldstein, who interviewed cult members and read through the diaries and court transcripts. As reported in the December 16, 1992, edition of the Modesto Bee:

> He [Goldstein] called Cruz "evil and sadistic," yet considered him a "charismatic leader" of a religious, satanic cult that controlled followers by using fear tactics, sleep deprivation, humiliation, torture and in some cases, forced sexual acts such as sodomy.

Another curious component was Tamara Smith's absence at the trial. (Smith, again, was the one who extensively reported on the cult in 1985). Cerny contacted the sheriff's department about this, and was told they had not been able to find her. Cerny said he had a premonition they were not looking that hard: "...because they didn't want any of this [cult information] to come out," he said. "The pattern of suppression [about occultic aspects] on these types of cases sometimes drives me bananas," said Cerny.

A short while after the call to the department inquiring about Smith, Cerny was leafing through a newspaper and came across a picture of several fire-gutted buildings in a town about an hour north of Modesto. Carrying things out of one of the buildings was Tamara Smith. The same Tamara Smith.

Cerny called the sheriff's department again. Smith was eventually subpoenaed.

Cerny said the ritual evidence that came out during the trial definitely lends credence to what some adult ritual abuse survivors are now reporting around the world. "What if Cruz hadn't been caught?" said Cerny. "Let's project that 20 to 25 years down the road. Say someone walks into a police department, or therapist's office, and says: 'I'm starting to have memories that my dad was the leader of a satanic cult in California. And they would brainwash people, torture them with electro-shocks, sexually abuse me, sacrifice animals, kill people.'" Cerny wondered if that would all be passed off as merely a "false memory."

He also went on to say he is sure people with the same perpetrating personality traits were around years ago, as were the teachings of such people as Aleister Crowley. And if the cult activity is going on now, he said, why would it not have gone on then?

Another significant piece of information came from a private investigator hired by a defense attorney to look into Cruz's family. It turns out his sister and mother were heavily involved in occultic practices as well, indicating there was definitely some type of trans-generational influence, said Cerny.

The sentences: three of the Salida satanic cult members are sentenced to death, including Cruz. Two cult members get life.

With a substantial part of the "upper circle" put away, many feel assured the area will go back to its peaceful, pre-cult existence.

Then on October 27, 1992, Cerny gets a call. It is Tamara Smith's boyfriend. He has reason to believe Tamara is preparing to take his child to a ritual ceremony...

THE AFTERMATH

Shortly after the trial ended, Cerny appeared on NBC's national talk show A Closer Look, as part of a panel on the topic of ritual abuse in general. A film crew had taken some shots of the San Juaquin County warehouse where some animal sacrifices had taken place. This was shown at the beginning of the show.

That same year, on the evening of December 24, the 63,000-square-foot warehouse burned to the ground. Satanists have matching holidays for Christian holidays, and Christmas Eve is one of the most important. "They [the cult] knew by then we knew about the place," said Cerny. "What better time to burn it down."

THE DIARIES

A number of the satanic cult members in Stanislaus County kept diaries. Several were entered as evidence during the trial. The following are some of the excerpts from one convicted murderer's diary. As you will see, the occultic influence gets progressively, and insidiously, stronger with time. (Except for some censoring and clarification of language, the spelling and punctuation have been left unedited.)

9/16/88

I was assigned a new book. It's called: Mastering Witchcraft. I also got me a magical name: Cronos.

9/20/88

Tonight is a special night. I'm taking my first step toward mastering witchcraft. For the next three nights before I go to bed, I will chant the Lord's Prayer backwards. This will release me from my inhibitions... I wake up tomorrow knowing I'm someone different. I will be a young warlock.

Note: This cult member was 19 years old at the time of this entry. In satanism, many things are reversed. There is a backward alphabet, pain becomes pleasure, good is bad, and so on. This is symbolic of the satanic intention to overturn most everything in society.

10/3/88

He [high priest Gerald Cruz] showed us the crystal pyramid colors. When shown [shone] in your eyes, it looks like the light your 3rd eye sees.

10/15/88

...We also made our wheel of doom. A wheel of punishments. But these punishments can enlighten us and/or make us strong.

10/30/88

We were all talking about moving. We were also talking about different ways to take out Cindi and her mom. I don't care, but all I want is to be able to f— Cindi before we take her out. I love Cindi very much, and would not want a one night stand. But she knows this, and if she would not give me what I want before she died — I would take it.

10/31/88

...Today is Halloween. That means Harvest Festival... We honor the dead by eating with them, drinking with them, and smoking with them... We also talked about the Ancient Ones. They were demons who got through to this dimension, which were carnated [reincarnated] as dinosaurs.

11/3/88

We was going to pull a black Mass. We still might...

Note: Black Masses are one of the highest forms of worship in satanism. They sometimes call for human sacrifice.

11/5/88

I also had an interesting dream. Me and some others would sit in a certain spot and turn into demons...

11/12/88

...The next time I f— up, I have to f— Snooky, Steve's dog.

Note: This is one of the "punishments." Memories of forced bestiality are often reported by survivors of ritual abuse.

11/14/88

Then Gerald [Cruz] started getting [angry]. He told us we would not eat, sleep, drink, s— or p—...

Note: This cult member often talks about feeling overly tired throughout the diary. Sleep, and often other forms of deprivation are used consistently by perpetrators to break down the members' wills, making them more malleable. These techniques are also used with political dissidents, prisoners of war, and so on.

11/28/88
...Tonight is the beginning of the season of death.
